Carolyn Cain Ware was recently visited by Stephanie Ross's husband, Dallas. She and her husband are enjoying San Antonio, a city with small town flavor and all the amenities of a big city. Dale Woods Dingle gets the prize for keeping up with the most number of people—Alice Petree, Betsy Hoover Sexton and Betsy Gifford who now prefers to be called by her middle name, Melanie. Betsy G. is an art conservator at a museum and looks absolutely gorgeous. Dale is an interior designer but recently has been spending time with her child rather than hustling clients. She also saw Alison Hurst (AA '67) at a Junior League meeting.

The next news is hard to impart to you but I feel you all should know. Mary Kaphinney Elkins died August 19 from leukemia. Memorial Contributions can be made to National Leukemia Foundation, c/o Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Boston, MA.

Donald Weinberg's death from cancer was a shock to everyone of us. Since word of the tragedy came too late for much mention in the last Bulletin, I wanted to add to this time. As I reminisced about Don, quickly drew upon four full years of memories, and they all brought back quiet smiles. Although I saw Don only once since the he represented what time is a very rich part of our lives. Over the twelve years since graduation, Don continued to be involved in many fascinating endeavors, all of which lead him eventually to enter the Catholic University Law School in Washington prior to his death. He is survived by his wife Cathy. We will all miss him.

I asked Fred Peters, who attended the funeral along with David Bodine, to write a few words about Don. Fred sent the following, which unfortunately has to be excerpted due to space limitations . . . "Almost everyone you meet reminds you of someone else. Donald Weinberg however neither looked nor acted nor talked like anyone else. He was my friend for 16 years, during which time a lot happened . . . Donald had an unselfconscious charm, sharp wit and generosity of spirit that always distinguished him. There is no filling the gap left by his death."

The unfortunate news also prompted James Quinby to write about Don and their time together in Taylor Hall. I think Jim summed it up best with "Thanks for the memories, Don."

Details of a possible memorial fund will be forwarded when available.

Fred Peters lives on Central Park West with his wife Alexandra, and two children Melia and Jack. After many years of graduate work in music, and a good review of his string trio in The NY Times, he gave up the life of an academic and is now happily selling co-ops in Manhattan. James Quinby lives with his family in Mammoth Lakes, 5000 up in the California Sierras. He manages a condominium complex at the Mammoth Mountain ski resort.

Kip Sheeline paid a visit to New York this summer, assessing his opportunities in the communications consulting field. Kip received his doctorate from Stanford in computer Music and Psychoacoustics. Unfortunately there was not enough time to get together the other two-thirds of the pot Pourri's executive staff. Kip tells me that Mark Baldwin is a part-owner of the Buckee Hotel, which should be just off of route 80 in Truckee, CA. Jay Watkins is an aspiring partner with the McKinsey Consulting branch in San Francisco. Henry Finer is married, with two kids, and involved with a construction company which stores old victorians in the city. And another resident of the Bay Area is Grant Heinrich who now is one of four partners with venture capital concern called the Mansfield Fund.

Joanie and Tom Wattles have moved to Mexico City, and had a daughter Vanessa last March. Any visitors are invited to call Tom at 570-4241. Mr. and Mrs. Craig Ordean, of Cedar Falls, IA, also had a baby girl born last March. Dorinda, their second daughter, was also born with red hair (a note that Craig himself added). Tom Luby sends greetings from "beautiful, downtown, post-industrial Meriden, CT," where he is practicing law. Tom recently left the Attorney's office after 3 years as a prosecutor of assorted miscreants. Chris Boyen is now a lawyer with the North Palm Beach office of a New Jersey law firm. He has admitted to both the Florida and NJ bars after graduating from Seaton Hall. Chris got married to his wife Karen in 1980. Meanwhile, from Rochester George Forth writes that he also was recently married, and stays busy by windsurfing, skiing, and playing lawyer. While on lawyers, Don Longley has his own bustling practice in Lewistown, ME.

In Washington, D.C. Jamie Galbriath is working as the Executive Director of the Joint Economic Committee, US Congress. Jamie was married to Lucy Ferguson several years ago and recently earned his Ph.D. in Economics from Yale (home of James Tobin). Rob Christie is the Supervisor of Fabrication and drilling equipment plant of the Pemco National Supply Co. in Houston. This came after completing his MBA at UCLA and marrying his wife Deborah in December, 1981. Rob ran into John Korba in a Houston bar only to discover that they both worked for the same division of the same company.

Peter Fox sent a busy card outlining his activities since Stanford. He worked for the Continental Bank and Lehman Brothers in Chicago. In 1977, Pete became owner and operator of 7 Wendy's hamburger stores in Champaign, IL. In addition, he has served as a director in the Illinois Department of Commerce and as Chairman of the State Lottery. And, a final note is that Pete got married in September.

Bill Ury is finishing his thesis in social anthropology at Harvard. Bill is an associate director of the Harvard Negotiation Project and recently co-wrote a book on negotiation entitled Getting to Yes. Meanwhile, Grant Gibbons left Harvard after completing his doctorate in organic chemistry and moved to Princeton where he's working for Squibb in International Product Planning. Walter Snickenberger is reportedly working in Boston in the personnel department of the Commercial Union Insurance Co. He lives in Brookline and frequently visits his family in Hanover. Chip Boynton Vice-President of the Boynton Insurance Agency in Boston, moved with his family into their new home in North Andover over the Labor Day weekend.

Last year, John Logsdon and his wife bought a dairy farm in McGrady, NC, and is now enjoying himself as a full-time dairyman (How much are those milk lobby dues?). Prior to this change, John had graduated from Duke with a civil engineering degree and worked for the North Carolina Outward Bound School. Cathy Lee and Eric Ahrens live in Mount Clemens, MI, where Eric is an account manager with the Upgrade Food Products Corp. And more news from Washington is that Dan Craig is Senator Inouye's legislative assistant for foreign affairs, while also handling agricultural matters. He was married last year to Celia Nogales and they are expecting their first child in February. Dan, following Harvard, made other stops in Berkeley (social anthropology graduate program), Australia (working on the Aboriginal Reserve in Queensland), and Duke (postdoctoral fellow with the Round Table on Science and Public Affairs).

A final social note is that Mark Kelly is to be married to Kim Daly in Manhattan on December 18.

Greetings Class of 1970! Hope you had a great summer! Here's the news: First—a correction—Lisa Sweitzer wrote to say that contrary to previous articles, she is a reporter for NH Public TV and also anchors a weekly news magazine for the New Hampshire Journal. Lexi Anderson Strickland, husband, Ray and two year old son, Sasha, cruised down the Inter-Coastal Waterway to Palm Beach, FL this winter. Lisa Contarino is working at the First National Bank of Boston training people in the Loan Division. Melanie Rosen is still living in Manhattan and is working for the New York Times Company as a Manager, Strategic Planning. Marcie Rickenbacker and her family moved to Chalfont, PA, this summer. Her husband is working for Merck, Sharp, and Dohne Research Labs. Their daughter, Elizabeth, turned one last April. Unfortunately, that's all the news that's fit to print—except that I have now been moved to a new analgesic product that Richardson-Vicks recently bought from Dupont—it's called Percogesic. Look for it at your drugstore! Tim (my husband) was recently promoted at Pepsi—he's now a Director of Planning for the Food Service Division. Well --that's it.

Have a good fall—and write!

Most of the readers of this column are now over thirty and not to be trusted. However, new technology and Alumni contributions bring us what follows. Bill Belichick notes that he and Ernie Adams in their fourth season coaching for the New York Giants, have high hopes for the team this season given their playoff appearance last year. Let's hope for the best. Ed Burns (15635 Empanada Dr., Houston, TX, 77083) is running the office of Technical Aid, Inc. He was transferred to Houston from MA. Greg Butler married Lynn Johnson of Bay Village, OH, on July 10th. Greg works for Owens Corning Fiberglass in Toledo, and lives in Perrysburg. Webster Dove is alive and well and living in Somerville, MA, "All American City." He is getting his Ph.D. at MIT (just like the Mickey Mouse song: M-I-T, P-H-D, M-O-N-E-Y!). I no doubt will get a model plane through my window for the wise cracks: the more things change, the more things stay the same.

George Loring (9 Acorn Dr., Auburn, NH 03032) recently got a Master of Arts degree from the New England Conservatory of Music. He is teaching music at St. Paul's School. Peter Kelsey moved back to Boston to earn big $ as a repairman. Well, almost: He will be serving a three year stint at Mass. General Hospital, furthering his study of medicine. He hopes to get in touch with the rest of our Classmates in the Boston area. Dave Knights, former World Champion Moose Caller and wearer of wool underwear, has gotten involved in a rickety undertaking in Boston's South End. Seems that he and Peter Bensly are working together, renovating houses there. Dave deserted the Maine woods for Boston a few years ago. Linc Smith and wife Anne live and work at Northfield Mount Hermon School. Linc is teaching Science, Chemistry, and Biology. Steve Wiener bought a house in Andover in time for he and his wife to celebrate the birth of a son, Christopher! Chris will be one year old in January.

Writing this column has been very helpful to me in meeting all kinds of fascinating women. This, of course, greatly improved my love life and led to all sorts of wild experiences. Want to find out why? Then write, you old bucks, write!

Hi Folks!

Sorry about the missing classnotes in the last issue, but I do need news to report if I'm to psych myself to make the deadline. Sara Ingram writes from Manhattan (where else?) reporting on her new job at the Sheraton Centre. She's in marketing, which is what she studied in Business School; she acts as a liaison between tour and business groups and the hotel. Her other big news is a one-inch-all-over-hair cut (it's probably waist-length already.)

Shelby Salmon Hodgkins is now the mother of two—a daughter, Whitney, was born last May. She writes that Brownie Richards expected her first in July—no news yet from Brownie, whom I actually ran into in Manhattan last February. Shelby also reports on Ruth Raser Tembrell and her husband, Carey—they've moved back to San Francisco after a year in New York City. Ruth is also now a mother of two—their second, Clayton, was born last August.

Continuing our population explosion update, Cynthia Johnson Pense had a baby boy, Philip John Pense III, born Oct. 13, 1981. Cindy is "adjusting to farm and ranch life 28 miles from town" in South Dakota. Cindy Lund writes that she and Jon have built a home on Bass Lake, WI; they have a daughter, Kristina, 18 months old. Finally, Joel and I became the parents of Alexandra just a week ago (Sept. 2, 1982). Joel has decided to take a year off from his residency in Internal Medicine to bring up baby—I'm still plugging along as a resident in psychiatry at McLean Hospital, but enjoying some time off at home with Joel and the baby.

Tootie Wasilewski writes from Cambridge, England, where she's been promoted to supervisor of 6 wards at her hospital during the night shift. She toured New Zealand in February and March, then spent some time with her parents in Arizona, and is now once again back in Cambridge, she asks if anyone is headed her way.

Susan Pitts is working at American Satellite Company in between her first and second years at Stanford Business School. Luis Buhler (PA '71) was a year ahead of her; he's now graduated and working for Cummins Engine Company. Sue was married August 28 in the US Capitol to James H. Dykstra—Jim is legislative assistant to US Senator William Cohen, Republican of Maine.

I happened to read in The Boston Globe of Claudia Comins' recent marriage to Randall Barber. Claudia works with the fundraising division of the Democratic National Committee in Washington. Her husband is president of the Center for Economic Organization, also in D.C.

There are lots of people I'd like to hear from—I'll start naming names in the next issue! Send any and all news, complaints, or commentary to the above address.

Your outpouring of fan mail was somewhat less substantial this time, so brevity will be our Class' style this quarter. Hopefully some items for the Winter Edition will be waiting for me when I head back to Stanford next weekend. Grant Donovan is heading out there too.

Kevin Connolly kept me company for most of the summer at Morgan. Regarding Kevin, it is pleasing to note that, in a world of confusion, some things never change (much). Andy Hallberg has changed from being a mere mortal to MD. He, along with Dick Meyer, graduated from Tulane Med School last June. The next five years will apparently be spent in the Apple between Lenox Hill Hospital and Cornell's Special Surgery program. Ted Maynard, an aspiring lawyer is close by to console/defend him.

Paul McGarry, refreshingly, lived in Charlotte, NC, with his wife, Carver. Together they raise springer spaniels (he sells computer gear). All of them want to hear from you.

Lenny Moher is looking forward to another big hockey season at Notre Dame. By publication time, we should know whether Doug Greeff reached his goal of a 2:30 marathon. Kent Vogel would like us to contribute to the Courageous/Defender America's cup syndicate. Duncan Sage Pyle was married on June 12 to Polly Bergreen. Congratulations to both of us who bit the bullet on that same day.

I owe Tom Herwitz an apology for not calling him this summer, as promised. For those who are not so lazy, Tom is an attorney in D.C. Faye Marie Chotvacs/Albanese loves Steamboat Springs. Karyn Sikora produced a film in Florida after getting a M.A. from Columbia. Mark Peterson is temporarily building robots in Silicon Valley. Perhaps they will help him on his new farm. Steve Miller may soon join him with his own army of robots produced at Carnegie Mellon. Howard Carter, sans robots, grows strawberries in the Garden State.

Jim Briggs has two years left as a civil engineer in Germany. Steve Gleason gave up his nomadic ways and settled in Boston. Hoyt Connell kindly wrote to tell us he's now married and earning living as a stockbroker in D.C. Tom Mitchell, Hoyt reports is an unmarried attorney in Boston who will travel anywhere to display his "flawless golf."

Trueman Sharp is enjoying UVA Med School, while Alan Tyler "plays around" with explosives somewhere in New England (?). Even the firmest of resolutions sometimes are lost in that black hole called procrastination. Such was certainly the case with my hope to contact many of you this summer. Perhaps I was south of the border too long. You can, however demonstrate your forgiveness of my unintended slight by resuming my flow of mail/news.

'Tis a nightmare to organize a coherent column of news! Our class is distinguishing itself in so many different fields, places, a lot of you work for firms with impossibly long names and others at difficult to describe jobs. For example, Frank Skokan, our erstwhile leader of yesteryear is selling carpet and furniture in Jersey City and singing operetta in NYC, living happily with Teresa in Bergenfield, NJ. One day when home from my job sick in bed I was introduced to the phenomom of Richard Simmons and I was convinced that it was really Frank. I was disappointed with the truth.

The remainder of this column is going to be one giant paragraph covering unrelated people and places. Just remember when you think what a mess of writing it is that we all graduated from Competence and Phillips Academy! Betsy Atwater Connolly is married and in her second year at NYU Law School. Lisa MacFarlane is at the U. of Michigan working on her PhD in English—she may be transferred by now. Pete Wyman is in NYC or thereabouts with IBM. Carroll Coward is in bond portfolio management at the Bank of NY and gets four weeks of vacation. Lucky girl! Jay Finney is an account executive at Rosenfeld, etc. advertising agency. Jim Zech is married and in law school at Penn. Last news of Brad Marvin is that he won his wings in the Navy and is flying F-14s. Bert McGillivray is working in megabucks on Wall Street. Anne Rollings is an advertising sales assistant for The New Yorker and playing lots of tennis. Anne is also one of our seven Class Agents this year—who are the rest of you? David Vipond is in advertising at Ogilvy and Mathe working on the American Express account. Steve Bache is in grad school at Columbia. Lisa Doyle is still at Gillette in Boston and Zareen Mirza has moved to Boston. Brook Klimley is married to Laura Eimicke. Brooks studied law for two years at Oxford and is continuing in the states. Tom Chapi sent me the most unusual letter I have ever received: one third of it was written with stamps (rubber and ink) depicting snails stars, flipping out and so on. I am sorry I can't reproduce it right here. Last word Tom had graduated from Rutgers, was living in Brooklyn and playing with Lionel Hampton. A classic Tom, thanks. Nick Kimball is getting married in late Sept. to Lyn Cuthbert. They are both working for New England Telephone. Mary-Jo O'Reilly Smith a mom! Alissa is greater than 8 months old and occasionally lets her mom continue her nursing career in the neurosurgical unit. Childrens in Boston. Lenny Shaker is in med school at UVM. Susie Arnold is in Washington working for Senator Ted Stevens (AL). Paul Concannon is out of Ballston and headed for B-School. Cannon L. brie is a grad student in American studies at Brown. News of Dick King places him in Seattle working in a brokerage house, and Harry Flynn at UCSD doing I don't know what. Wink Harvey is at U of Texas School in Houston. Kurt Silverman and his wife Virginia are in Berkeley, CA, where Kurt has been working on developing new computer language. John Kingery married and Kurt reports that along with Brad Geier, those two are promoting personal neon—the latest. Alan Lintel is recently married to Elizabeth Fletcher in Pittsburgh. Kim Patton graduated from Harvard in 1980 majoring in Comparative Religion. She is now in Seattle doing freelance writing, working as a Christian activist and as a legal assistant for an environmental advocacy law firm. And she would still like to be a Greek archaeologist. And Craig is in NYC working for Prentice-Hall selling college textbooks. Michael Canni is in his third year of the Harvard-Medical program. Last news of Mark Godly was of his marriage in 1980 to Christine Forsman and his employment at Shof Aircraft in VA. Winn Gaynor is an ensign in the US Navy and working on laser research in Washington. Jan Johnston is pursuing medicine in her third year at the U. of Kansas. Todd Richman has escaped two years of Citibank in NYC for laid-back Stanford Business School. That's not what I've heard about MBA's, Todd. Priscilla Perry was married a year ago to Hillyard Danford and they are living in Marblehead. Priscilla is working for a management consulting firm in Boston. Sandy Smith is married to Hal McCartney and continues to work for French geophysical company here in Denver. I see Sandy most often sailing competitively in a 505 with her husband. Very successful too. (I do not swim out to get them, I race my Laser when time permits.) Cathy Chapman is at the U. of Miami medical school. Betsie Redman is marketing a PR coordinator for a Boston architectural firm. Connie Kurth is married to a med s

Nancy G. Rockwell '76

Perhaps it was only the privilege of our youth, but as yet we recognized no limits and saw nowhere an end.

Remarque

Nancy Rockwell, PA '76, who died at the age of 24 on July 19, 1982, was an extraordinary person. An idealist who practiced her beliefs, Nancy actively demonstrated her concerns for the downtrodden, whether the strife-torn Lebanese, the Italian earthquake victims, or American youth from disadvantaged backgrounds. Both in the Hurricane Island Outward Bound Program and in Philadelphia, where she worked in the winter, Nancy was a counselor for "adjudicated" youth—youngsters in trouble with the law who were sent to her by the courts. As a student of Professor Donald McNemar's at Dartmouth, Nancy was also one of the first Andover connections for the headmaster-to-be, and thus she became not only his student but also his teacher about the school she loved.

After her graduation from Dartmouth in 1980, Nancy spent the past three summers as an instructor in Outward Bound. In the spring of 1981 she married Matt Watkins, a medical student at the University of Pennsylvania whom she had met when he was her Outward Bound instructor. Their wedding took place out of doors, appropriately, in the Rachel Carson Preserve.

Death came to Nancy when she was in the outdoors that she loved, with people she loved, doing the work she loved. Nancy and her husband Matt, co-instructors of the course, were leading an Outward Bound group of ten students near Mount Lafayette in the White Mountains of New Hampshire. As a storm approached, she directed her group to descend from a ridge and she took up the rear, intending to be the last to leave. A single bolt of lightning struck and killed her instantly.

As Don McNemar said at her funeral, "In a world crazy with war and suffering, Nancy had her convictions clear and reached out to those in need of help . . . I learned from Nancy that the school motto—non sibi—'not for self'—was not a mere saying but a way of life."

As a memorial to Nancy, her parents have established a scholarship fund in her name to send to Andover underprivileged youth whom the school deems worthy of a second chance. Donations should be made out to Phillips Academy and addressed to The Nancy G. Rockwell Scholarship Fund, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

ident (there are a lot of doctors in this group!) and studying to become a medical assistant herself. Mac DeCamp is done with med school at the U. of Louisville and doing a residency in general surgery. Ben Steele has been selling industrial heating and ventilating equipment since 7/81 after determining that brick masonry and historical preservation were financially unrewarding. Will Clark and Rick Cotten reported to be in NYC at Kidder, Peabody and Merrill Lynch respectively. Kirk McDowell, where are you? Willy Liu is also working on an MBA at the U. of Chicago. Mike Galvin is in Palm Beach, maybe getting ready to leave to go back to grad school at West. He's been chairman of the science department and coaching at the Palm Beach Academy. John Alexander is married to Marydale Abernathy. Roger Strong is out of Wharton. Tony Nahas has spent more time on the other side of the Atlantic than in the states studying at the Sorbonne (Arabic and Islamic studies) and hoping to be in Cairo this year. Tom Briggs has finished his school at Michigan, clerked in Houston and is anticipating Wall Street with Graath, Swaine and Moore. George Letsou and Peter Kao are both pursuing medical careers at Columbia right now, Peter in a combined MD/PhD program. Tony Pucillo married to Christine Heidgard and is in his last year at Columbia B-school. Nancy Rose is getting a Masters of Education in counseling at UNH. Holly Sutton and I quote, "I'm not married. I'm not in medical or law school. I live in Los Angeles and work in the film industry." Matt Finnie and Paul Suslovic work (still) for US Gypsum. A year ago I called it National Gypsum and it provoked a letter! Frank Lee are you in Texas eating pecans? Don Rimsky is working for Irving Trust in NYC, and Mike Boldt is working in journalism in NJ. Scott Charbonneau is freezing and hungry in northern MN. Dennis Pratt has been subsisting on ideas and good looks trying to develop a more efficient computer software for the commodities market. Kate Rohrbach at last report was working in a PR agency in NYC after graduation from Barnard. Robin Chotzinoff does not want to see her name in print until it's on a published novel of her own. She is working towards that end in Denver. Lawrence Kemp was trading grain in Fairmont, MN, but that news predates the recession. Carlos Sanchez has been married for four years to Valjean Bell. They are living in L.A. where Carlos works for Security Pacific in corporate banking. Susan Lambiris was married in July to Martyn Wheeler, an Englishman. Louise Stites Conrad '76 was her matron of honor. Susan earned her M.S. and Master of Philosophy degrees at Trinity College, Cambridge, and is now visiting scientist at Cornell.

These notes are far from complete, but the typewriter is beginning to protest strenuously and I can imagine the groans in the Alumni Office when they see a column three times too long. It is appropriate to mention a few other items of interest however. I, too, have joined the ranks of the newlyweds in our class. My husband is Ned Timbel, a Colorado native and also a geologist. I hope that you all will forgive my delinquency in the last Bulletin—I was learning to windsurf in the warm waters off Guadaloupe, after months of pre-wedding chaos. Sorry.

And last, for those of you far from The New York Times or Newsweek, Peter Sellars is famous and turning the world of theater inside out. We hope that you will still read Winnie-the-Pooh to us at Reunions, Peter. Good luck to you, and all our Classmates in the future.

I must again inform those who have not already heard from me that we have lost another of our Classmates. Nancy Rockwell was struck by lightning while on an Outward Bound expedition in Vermont. She had been working with juveniles in Philadelphia—often employing outdoor group therapy based on the Outward Bound model. She was also quite recently married to Matthew W. Watkins.

Nancy's parents have decided to establish a memorial fund in the memory of their daughter—to provide a scholarship for underprivileged youth who deserve a second chance—the chance Nancy Rockwell gave so many before her untimely death.

Please help her family and friends to see this permanent reminder of Nancy's rich life and her selfless contribution to others become a reality. The Trustees of Phillips Academy will gladly accept your gifts to the Nancy Rockwell Fund.

Tim Draper has written—that he was married August 14th to Melissa Parker. Then it's off to Harvard Business School. He plans to expand and further develop his capitalist tendencies—which budded after graduation from Stanford when Mr. Draper marketed and made his first cool one on a Preppie Handbook type game he calls "Stanford, the Game."

Sarah McCormick Bates graduated from Smith in 1980, moved to New York, and began her specialization in the corporate profitability development program with Irving Trust, where millionaires are made of people just like you, and me. Just in case Irving can't make her the proud owner of a summer home in the Hamptons, she is working toward the so-dearly-coveted Masters Degree in—you guessed it—Business Administration! On the brighter side of Ms. Bates life—she did have the good sense to get married in August 1981.

Tom May reported faithfully the marriage of Marco Figus—at which Tom, Charlie Higginson, and Dick McIntire were in attendance. Charlie is with the fine brokerage house of Kidder, Peabody, making a fortune with other people's money. Dick McIntire is with IBM.

I finally received a Christmas card from Duncan Donahue—in August. The good doctor is also with that businesslike bastion of das kapital, International Business Machines.

Charlie Suisman writes often and very well of his career in New York City, just like I pictured it—skyscrapers and everything. He has worked on four Broadway shows, including the Mike Nichols production of Lunch Hour starring Gilda Radner, and the Michael Bennett production of Dreamgirls. I would love to know the names of the other two—which he told me never to ask him about. I trust Classmate ears will keep me up on these sought-after details. Jenny McCray, where are you?

Charlie also mentions running into nonillustrious members of other PA Classes—and having seen Thatcher Townsend recently—little did he know that Pam Eaton and I had been to Winston-Salem to visit this past spring. That was very soon after Pam and I were engaged, and quite some time before we were married, which was on September 18, in Kennebunkport, ME. In attendance were Jill Hartwell Geffron and Michael Krumpke—both in the wedding party. Stopping by on their way to Ipswich were Chris Mullen, Bobby McCabe, Danny Algrant and Clif Long. They enticed Jason Fish along with them—though he managed to find his way back to Maine before the reception was over early Sunday morning.

So, the cat is out of the bag, and Pam and I are enjoying life here in northern VA. I hope the news keeps coming in at the rate I have enjoyed during these past few months—it makes the fashioning of this tall tale all the easier. Please write to the above address—and never hesitate to call or visit.

Before I fill you in on what fellow Classmates have been up to, I want to bring to your attention that our 5th year reunion is coming up. The dates for our wild reunion are June 10-12, 1983. Set these days aside now so you participate in what should prove to be a fun and unforgettable event.

Saying as it was four years ago when we left Andover, many of us have now graduated from college and are venturing out into the "real world." Susan Prochniak graduated from Smith with a B.A. in Government and minored in Fine Arts. David Martin received a B.A. in Sociology and Anthropology from Haverford College in Philadelphia. Louis Terranova graduated from Villanova University with a Bachelor of Mechanical Engineering. Louis was a Dean's list student and served as secretary of the student chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. He is presently working as a mechanical engineer for Avco Systems Division in Wilmington, MA. Word got back to Dartmouth about Jamie Tilghman's wild graduation party at Tilghman's Neck in Maryland. Mary Buttrick and Jack Hogoboon were both present at the celebration.

A few people headed overseas after their graduation. Bob Van Cleve graduated from Princeton and was selected to row in the USA lightweight eight this year. Bob's boat represented the USA in the World Championships in Lucerne, Switzerland, August 22-29. Unfortunately I don't know the results of the races. George St. Laurent graduated with honors from Yale and travelled in Southeast Asia with Julian Chang. George is working in a bio research lab this fall. Tim Power graduated from Vanderbilt with a major in Russian and Economics. This fall Tim is studying Russian for a semester at the Lennigrad State University.

I received a really nice letter from Chris Lozinski this summer when he was working in basic Physics research at Bell Labs. This fall Chris is attending graduate school at MIT. He hopes to work in Artificial Intelligence, a science that teaches machines to play chess and mimic human activities in other ways. Besides being busy with academics, Chris was quite active athletically at college. He reports that Nick Strauss joined the track team and became a lover of Math while he was at MIT. Keith Perkins who was also at MIT took up Physics and joined ADP Fraternity.

In case you missed the write up on Chris Shaw on p. 8 in the summer Andover Bulletin, Chris is joining the PA staff as a Development Officer. He will be working closely with the Planned Giving Committee and various other projects relating to capital giving. Martha Viehmann, who has one year left at Dartmouth, received a citation in Greek and Roman Studies for her "extremely intelligent, original, and substantive work." Martha has been previously cited for academic excellence in Native American Studies. Arienne Dwyer was one of the two female park rangers working in the Belly River area in Montana this past summer. This fall "Dwee" is studying geology at the University of British Columbia in Vancouver. Jim Phelps, who's phelpo business is still thriving, will be working in the Chicago area this year. Word has Steve Bakalar opened a tennis club on Easter Island. He reports that attendance was low this summer, but he is optimistic that things will pick up this fall. Keep in touch Steve so we can know how things are going.

That's all for now. Remember to put those Reunion dates aside. Get psyched for a great weekend . . . it's guaranteed to be fun and memorable time.!

Hello all:

Many thanks to Sarah Moore who filled in for me in May when I was preoccupied with school, rowing, life, and all that stuff. A little variation is always good so if any one else is interested in trying their hand please be in touch with me. Along the same lines these columns could be more diverse if more of you could be in touch with me. Where have my millions of postcards gone to? Even if you don't want to read about yourself please tell me what friends are up to.

This summer I stayed in Ann Arbor so have been out of earshot of the New England/East Coast grape vine. Chris Coughlan and I were housemates for part of the summer. She is working there now and hopes to get to England sometime soon. Also in A—Spike Moore and Bill Miles are sharing a house during their senior year. The Macho Prep has given up his wild frat ways in favor of the life of a boring engineer and conservative family man. (Bill wanted to see his name in print.) At the Men's National Rowing Championships in Detroit I saw Anders Crofoot briefly; I was competing in lightweight events and did very well. Eliza Deery and I spent an afternoon windsurfing when we were both home at the end of the summer. Liza was at Harvard Summer School and is in Hanover this fall training for the ski season. I also got together with Beth Rokous once. She was in Maine for the summer after returning from England and is back at Smith now.

As captain of the Princeton Women's Tennis Team Robin Rosenberg had a very successful season. During the early summer she served as an intern in Senator Bradley's office; after that Robin travelled to Israel and Switzerland. Ken Oasis was guarding, instructing, and coaching a swim team in Sudbury during the summer. UVM he often seems Jack Whiting and John McCorvie. Ken also ran into Tom Munter in Montreal while travelling to Lauderdale (bizarre travel plans!). Jol Rogers will be singing with the Whiffpoofs at Yale this year. Sophia Savighi to last year off from school and worked before travelling to Europe. She is now back at school in New Orleans. Sophia said that Ruth Calhoun was in Florence for the spring, and Alice Brittin was in Madrid last year. Both Ruth and Alice returned to Newcomb this year. Hyla Flaks was working and acting at a theatre in Worcester, N over the summer. Kay McCabe is still dancing!

Mark Mulvaney worked as an assistant campaign manager in a congressional race at home. Geoff Proctor was student teaching at St. Paul's for the summer. Hugh Silbaugh also hit the prep school scene. Mark reported that Ozzy was off to work in Germany again, and John Livermore joined the oil rig crowd in OK but is back at UVA this fall. As always Peter LeCompte is full of tales and "amused curiosity." He says he has given up the farm and family life to return to Pomona, but plans to head for Sri Lanka "to study western exploitations and the beauty of Buddhism." While in Colorado Peter saw Ed Hill at a Dead concert . . . Tom Thurber remains on Mt. Hood. And finally Peter welcomes John Andrews to the revolution.

So that's all for now. I'm in Washington, D.C. this fall. Susan Palermo is supposed to be here and probably a few others also.

Please be in touch. My love to you all, Gretch.

Indeed, indeed, Repentance oft before I swore—but was I sober when I swore?

And then and then came Spring, and Rose-in-

My thread-bare Penitence apieces tore.

Rubaiyat, Omar Khayyam

Et Voilà—my only excuse for having missed the last couple of issues. I apologize. I haven't been in touch with many people over the past year as I've managed to be in all the right places at all the wrong times. I'm only going to include the most recent things that I've gotten and plead with everyone to send me news . . . I'll be good this time . . . PROMISE!

I bumped into Kathy Moss one day this summer in Cambridge. She was living in Boston for the summer, writing a lot, and enjoying it immensely. She is happy at Wellesley where she is majoring in English.

Molly Pyle spent most of her summer in Vermont at Norwich, where she was studying Russian. She returns to Yale this fall for her junior year as do Jon Dee and Mike Lee. Both of them spent the summer studying (?) at Berkeley. Jon Dee says that they managed to see at least a dozen Andover people in the first few days. He also managed not to say who they were. (Hello West Coast and yes it does still snow in New England.)

Speaking of snow, Kim Lilly hopes to spend some time studying in Siberia. She spent this summer studying Russian at Middlebury and plans to graduate from Bates this spring!

Ellen Soloway ('79) also spent the summer at Middlebury as did Pam Burdman who was busy immersing herself in Chinese.

Louis Elson, after spending a year in England at Eton College, enjoyed his freshman year at Harvard " . . . hanging about with such clever notables as Pancho Nahoe and Charlie Barber."

Guy Letourneau sent a whole resume of information which shows he must be an engineering student. Among other things he completed his hovercraft (70 mph), went to Romania with the U Mass. chorale society, is a member of the SCA (The Society for Creative Anachronism—a medieval society).

Abigail Jones took last year off from Syracuse University and was hoping to transfer to Vassar. She spent the year working at Museums and " . . . heard from various people such as Sarah Ehrlich, Elena Bowes, Paige Evans, and Susie Magnin; all sound in good shape."

Here at Penn this fall, the only people I've seen are Ilse DeVeer, who seemed in good spirits, and Robert Drucker who was enjoying a two hour move-in wait in 90 degree weather. He had a fun summer biking in the West.

Once again, I apologize (profusely even!) for missing the issues. Please write (I even have a file to store info in—no excuse now!) P.S. If you're ever in Phillie . . .

Hello everyone! I hope that you all had a good summer and are all settled at school, or at your new jobs, or whatever. I heard from a number of people this summer but have mostly heard a great deal of old, probably distorted gossip. My apologies for any incorrect information that I may be reporting.

There is a large PA contingent here in New York, from other classes as well as from '82. Two floors beneath me are two PAers sharing a suite—Margaret Van and Catherine Cook. Margaret traveled to China this summer and Catherine waitressed. Catherine was visited by Bill Shepardson in Boston on his way to England. Maya Greaves and Rosy Elliott are rooming together also. Rosy was in Italy with Hank Glassman for a bit. Raphael Moscarella was also in Italy and is now in a class of mine at Columbia. Art Small was in Iowa City, IA, "working in a lab killing rabbits." Nice. Bumped into Catherine Jordi who ran and worked this summer. In Columbia's dining institution I saw Keith Lowery and Jeff Arle, and in the gym I saw Ann Bernhardt who is living off-campus this semester. Liz Vinciguerra is in a dorm adjacent to Debbie Dzierzeski. Both of them seem to be having a good time. I saw Andy Ahn early orientation week, twisting to Chubby Checker, well recovered from his trip to Mexico. Roger Taylor and I, along with Catherine Monk '81, saw a concert together. He got into the Salt Lake City, UT, night-life scene this summer and is now in the same dorm as Jamie Anderson, and Pete Pedulla—who is rooming with Tom Luongo. 'Youth in Asia' members lived in Boston together and played a couple of times this summer, in addition to watching a lot of Twilight Zone. Tom told me that Scott Pierce worked in Texas doing—I can't remember? I saw Celia Imrey during Columbia orientation with Gordy Goldstein. Celia lived in New York and waitressed for a bit and Gordy "escaped from Outward Bound." Laura Lau '81 is taking this year off from Barnard and told me that Estelle Lau was staying another year in Spain, working in an art gallery.

Melissa Scharer did some printing and took art classes, using her Addison Gallery Art Grant. She reportedly saw Calista Woodbridge in NYC, was also in the booming town of Sewickley, PA, where she saw Lynn Snyder who worked in a bank and went to parties all summer. Lynn saw Jen Beirnes in Canada during August. I also saw Jen with Cathy Cotins at the World's Fair in TN. Cath spent the summer living and working with me in a research lab with a bunch of rats. Courtney Starratt was also at the Fair, working as a Kodak character. She dressed in a furry costume and took pictures with tourists. She saw Ruth Flanagan earlier in Boston. Ruth was trying to learn some Spanish before heading down to Panama for the year.

Courtney told me, that Ruth told her, that Scotti Parrish was working on Martha's Vineyard with Kirsten McKamy '83 at a type of summer theatre. Anne Northrup was also working in a theatre and taking voice in upstate NY. She discovered that Martha Brown was going to be her roommate at Oberlin this fall. Both of them were surprised but psyched. I heard from another distant source that Rob Rosy had a very successful summer acting and singing.

Now to jump to the West Coast. Mike Polonsky was bored, did construction, and learned Tae-Kwan-Do in Newport Beach. He reported that the cross country bike expedition of Chris Dean and Brooks Elder started in Washington, only to end in Montana—the next state over. Rob Tuller worked in San Francisco in the stock market and at a health club. (He worked out at one, that is.) Lily Hunter "came out" and was escorted by George Phipps. Jim Donnelly was at boot camp all summer.

Now to jump to the Midwest scene. Susan Toothaker was in Greece and came back to Ohio, ready to take off again to England. She told me that Nick Carter was in Haiti "trying to save the world." Phil Berney was in Eau Claire first, and then went on Outward Bound. He said that it was a great experience, he'd recommend it to anyone, but that he would never do it again. He saw Susan Philipp in MA before heading South. Sue spent the summer roughing it in the south of France. Ming Tsai worked in his mom's restaurant in Ohio, and visited Memphis in August. He was having fun but was eager to start Yale.

Thom Banchoff was also ready to start school but was doing well in D.C.. He worked as a waiter and in his senator's office. John Ketterer also worked in D.C. this past summer.

Now back to the New England scene again. Chad Rosenberger worked in the Harvard Coop and saw a lot of Stefan Wenik who worked at the summer session, and also Gerrit Zwart, who was doing construction. Burke Doar also did construction and failed his driver's license test two times. Phil Harrison traveled in Europe and so did Geoff Hunt; Mary-Ann Somers spent time abroad also, in Greece. I saw Patti Doykos in Rye, NH for a couple of days at the end of the summer. She had two jobs and was busy with her new baby sister. Kathy Lee and Jeri Ordway joined the ranks of the unemployed and spent most of their time this past summer at home. Kathy managed to go south with her family to Carolina in August however. She told me that Chris Peterson worked on Long Island and was having fun living with her relatives. Kathleen Kinsella worked at Burger King in Maine. Amy Starensier, Alice Banta, Ellen Nordburg and Mary Ogden all worked and lived together in a boarding house in Maine too. J.J. Pellegrino had some kind of office or store job, and Nancy Katz worked in Andover this summer.

That's all. Please write. Take care and have fun.

$1,000,000 Addison Challenge Fund Announced!

Frank Stella '54 and Headmaster Donald W. McNemar

At the preview of the Frank Stella exhibition on October 22, Trustee President Melville Chapin announced the creation of the ADDISON CHALLENGE FUND in the amount of $1,000,000. The Fund offers to match all new or increased pledges to the Addison Gallery Campaign on a one for two basis. (For example, for every thousand dollars pledged to the Campaign, five hundred dollars will be earned from the Challenge Fund.) Initiated by the Trustees and a small number of especially close friends of the Addison and of Andover, this Challenge Fund is applicable to new or increased gifts or pledges from individuals, foundations, or corporations effective October 22, 1982.

The "Freedom from Chemical Dependency" Week: a student's view

by Lisa Zuckerman

Freedom from Chemical Dependency instructor Nancy Paul charts human metabolism as it copes with alcohol

For one week in mid-October, life changed at Andover. Instead of sleeping, going to meals or to the library, or just talking to friends during daily free periods, all Andover students were attending a drug and alcohol program given by the Freedom from Chemical Dependency Foundation.

Andover's administration made special accommodations to compensate the students for this extra hour daily; to make the week's workload more bearable, the administration decided to shorten the academic day. Each day a different period was eliminated from Andover's master schedule, so that by the end of the week somewhere between 20 and 25 percent of all academic commitments had been eliminated. This arrangement marks a significant rise in importance of health issues in the eyes of the Andover administration.

"Drugs and alcohol are an issue in every high school in America," commented Mr. McNemar, "but I think that we as an educational community ought to be talking about it, and about the dangers and the choices involved with decisions about drugs and alcohol." Giving up class time "made it very clear," he said, "how important we all thought the issue was."

Although most faculty support the new emphasis on health issues, some disagree as to what is the appropriate emphasis: "It was certainly worthwhile," said Ted Harrison, a history instructor, "but I think it used up a little too much time in the academic week . . . It's a question of priorities . . ."

Most students seemed to appreciate the break from classes, regardless of their sentiments towards the seminars themselves. "I think the arrangement was really good," said a new Lower, "because people were more willing to go to the programs than if they had been just an extra commitment."

It has taken some two years, however, to accomplish this shift in Andover policies. About two years ago, under Mr. Sizer, a

Andover Parents Weekend 1982

by Terry Hoyt

It was a mellow scene that Friday afternoon when we arrived at Andover for a closer look at our son's new world. Open windows flooded the courtyards of the quads with music we hadn't heard for six weeks as the old brick-with-cream-trim building softened in the late afternoon sun of Indian summer. I saw several frisbees, soccer balls, and footballs being tossed and kicked around the spacious green lawns, under leafless elms; but my eyes were riveted by a few helmeted students on the balcony of the bell tower preparing to rappel straight down its 87-foot elevation. At such moments terror yields to fascination. Yet, wanting also to visit our son's late afternoon math class, we left those brave bodies almost suspended in mid-air.

Such soaring challenges are, apparently, a routine part of Andover life, but they are so far outside my experience that even when people say rappelling is fun, it's hard to take them seriously. I came to see the down-to-earth, nitty gritty details of our son's life—his board and room—and his arrangement of the basic bed and bureau, desk and chair.

During the three days of our visit, the bed was lined up along three different axes, and our delivery of his stereo system complicated matters by adding even more variables to the scene. As the Greek philosopher said, all is flux.

The stereo wires form a cat's cradle pattern now on the bare floor of his room, tripping him or his

The adolescent years can be such a perplexing time—physically, emotionally, socially—that we are not surprised if our PA students occasionally dedicate themselves to looking inward. Looking outward can be difficult.

Along those lines it is worth noting that on one November Monday in Bulfinch, about half of the English section we were presiding over had been involved in Andover's Special Olympics the day before. Ninety percent of the group had just joined the pre-Thanksgiving fast to donate money to Oxfam. And as we looked around the class that afternoon, we observed that six of our Seniors were wearing those modest red pins that denote blood donors. Glancing out of our Bulfinch window at the crimson-purple winter sunset we have become fond of, we realized that non sibi was doing very well indeed.

Then with stern countenance we turned to the class to resume discussion of Jonathan Swift's satires on mankind's vices and follies.

When the Most Loyal Alumnus stopped by our Bulfinch office a while back, he was fuming. "Listen here, AB"—he makes believe we are physically the Andover Bulletin—"There is just so much I can put up with. I guess it was genteel and the Right Thing To Do for Exeter's Bicentennial to have the AE game that had been scheduled for Brother's field actually played at Exeter in 1980, compelling us to wait four years to have an AE game at home. But what really did me in was watching that home game in 1982. Ethel (she's Abbot, you know) and I hadn't sat in the PA bleachers since November 1978, and in those four years the pine trees behind the stands had grown as tall as the Rocky Mountains. Before the kickoff, for heaven's sake, we were sitting in the Valley of the Shadow of Death, shivering like mad, while the Exies basked in sunlight across the way. When we were students at Abbot and PA—the day before yesterday—those dinky trees kept their place and served as a satisfactory windbreak. Now all they do is freeze the home crowd and remind us how old we have all become. For that I could walk in the cemetery."

We directed the MLA to the gym office across the way.

The sweeping view of Siberia from our Bulfinch window that faces south reminds us of a meditative moment out there last fall. We were refereeing a game for our distinguished cluster soccer team one afternoon when it struck us what a misnomer "Siberia" is for our fields beyond the football fields. Only its distance from the dorms could justify its hyperbolic nickname; in every other respect Siberia is one of the handsomest features of the campus, no matter what the season.

We used to take color photographs of the foliage out there in October, but we don't anymore because our photos don't capture the cool temperature and the dry air that distinguish an Andover autumn after a humid summer.

But then the other team scored a goal because in our daydreaming we had not seen a foul, and the looks from our team suggested that "Siberia" was precisely the right name after all.

Regional Association News

by Mary C. Stevens

Andover-West's Northern California group in San Francisco led off this fall with a picnic for old and new Andover Students from the Bay Area, attended by over a dozen families just before those students departed for the East Coast. At the annual luncheon meeting in early November, four 1982 grads led a panel discussion on life at Andover, and the new slate of officers was voted in. Faculty members Ed & Ruth Quattlebaum, on their way home from a year in Australia, were guests of honor at an informal Italian dinner in December, and shared their perspective on differences between the American and Australian independent schools. 1983 began on a high note for recent grads, with a wine and cheese party organized by the Berkeley contingent. More details below.

Arizona saw some of Andover's brightest and best this fall for a full weekend in November. Jack Greenway '42 hosted 125 alumni/ae and friends and 13 members of the faculty in an exciting, thought-provoking three days of seminars and discussions. See page 6 for the story.

Boston welcomed new Secretary of the Academy Joseph C. Mesics and his wife Sandi last December in a reception held at the spectacular Peabody Museum in Salem, MA.

Hawaiian alumni/ae, parents, and friends had an opportunity to see Josh Miner, Dean of Admissions, at a luncheon held in his honor in Honolulu.

Minneapolis threw a gala dinner when Don and Britta McNemar, Josh Miner, Joe and Sandi Mesics, and Pat Edmonds came to the Twin Cities. Plans are forming for a new Andover-Abbot Association in this region. Contact Randy Ross (612/475-3237) if you would like to help.

Montreal gave a warm welcome to the McNemars, the Mesicses, and Admissions Officer Rebecca Carr last October in a reception and dinner at the Mount Royal Club. The record turnout included a near perfect record from parents of current students at Andover.

Philadelphia is pleased to announce the formal birth (by-laws and all) of the Andover-Abbot Association of the Middle Atlantic. A sequence of meetings during recent months will culminate in a big spring dinner party.

New York's Andover-Abbot Alumni Association kicked off its season with a cocktail reception September 28 at the Princeton Club for Joe Mesics '53, new Secretary of the Academy. In November the group sponsored the annual Admissions Forum, to which prospective students and their parents were invited to hear Dean of Admissions Josh Miner and three current students talk about Andover today. Phonathons on November 30 and December 1 gave a boost to the Addison and Reunions efforts, and a good time to all phoners at the Williams Club. 1983 started off with the 1st Annual AAAA Tennis Party.

Washington, DC: This fall, Headmaster McNemar and the Addison Gallery Director Chris Cook were the guests of honor at a smashing reception at the Dumbarton Oaks Gallery, where Giles Constable '46 is Director. In December, the Association threw a Yuletide get-together—complete with Santa for young and old at the boyhood home of Robert E. Lee in Alexandria.

How to Get Started: a report from San Francisco on the beginnings of the "Andover-West Regional Association"

Bev Tuller, Tom Pollock '61, and Brad Geier '75

by Thomas E. Pollock III '61 and Mary C. Stevens

The Idea: Andover events in Northern California have, by and large, been outstandingly successful, at least to the outside observer. Putting them together, however, has always been a rough-and-ready process, frequently last minute and after lots of stress on those who by chance or by the design of the moment wound up organizing them.

On October 8, 1980, when Andover's Admissions team came to San Francisco accompanied by Alumni Relations Officer Mary Stevens, both Josh Miner and Mary suggested that we form an identifiable association to carry on the spirit of the Bicentennial Campaign and coordinate and stimulate other local activities. The natives mumbled something about

"not a bad idea." We've heard those mumblings before of course.

Mary gave us a copy of the how-to-do-it report of the August 1978 Alumni Visiting Committee on External Affairs and a copy of the initial notice to the Washington, DC-area alumni as well as a draft of that Association's organization report. The real catalyst, however, was the event scheduled for November 12 at which Ted Sizer would give his views on his years at Andover and what lies ahead: Malcolm ("Nappy") MacNaughton '57 organized this event pretty much single-handedly, but he encouraged Tom Pollock '61 to run with the idea of an Association. Pollock, a corporate finance attorney with previously suspected but heretofore unconfirmed megalomaniac tendencies, took advantage of MacNaughton's absence on a business trip in mid-October to add a few names to the original dinner committee list, and called a meeting to discuss the formation of such an association.

The Go-Ahead: Out of an original field of twenty-five people who had been active in past years both in admissions recruiting and in the Bicentennial Campaign, we were able to contact sixteen for the initial meeting—nine finally attended: Pat Cathcart '64, Brad Geier '75, Suzy Holland '59, Nappy MacNaughton '57, Debby

Paris '66, Tom Pollock '61, Hank Riggs '53, Bill Sherman '60, and Sidney Unobskey '54.

The beginning of the meeting was a wonderful example of what an association might hope to mitigate—namely, the considerable frustration of exceedingly busy people trying to organize an event on relatively short notice, without much advance planning, without a pre-established network of local communications and without any defined body of previous experience and shared goals in a group that was used to working together. From there the meeting brainstormed the association idea. There was unanimity, again, that an association would be "not a bad idea." We also agreed that its focus should not be purely social events (ice skating parties for the local alumni), which so many alumni groups seem to center around. Sidney Unobskey rendered sound advice that we should first do one thing well and not burst the bubble by overzealousness. Everyone seemed to agree that if Pollock wanted to go for it, everyone else would help with projects here and there. Brad Geier, showing exemplary young-grad energy and dedication, and Bev Tuller, following her well-known tradition of parental enthusiasm and schools orientation, agreed to be the other

The US and The USSR: our mutual nuclear predicament

by John Richards

Editor's note: With this article we begin the experiment of publishing occasional essays, written by members of the Andover family, that look beyond the school. Dean of the Faculty and History Instructor John Richards II delivered this lecture, in slightly expanded form, at the opening seminar of Andover-in-Arizona on 5 November 1982.

It's hard to identify just when the trouble started; human beings have been searching for new and better ways to kill each other for centuries upon centuries. But the trouble certainly entered a new phase in July 1945, when the first atomic weapon was exploded in the New Mexican desert. Even then, it inspired awe among those who had helped create it; we recall the eloquent Robert Oppenheimer quoting the Hindu Bhagavad Gita: "I am become death, destroyer of worlds," and his colleague George Kistiakowsky's statement to a reporter: "What the last human being on earth will see is what we have seen this morning." Chilling statements these, particularly since those men could not at the time foresee what would follow. What followed almost immediately, of course, was that two atomic bombs were dropped on two Japanese cities. The central sections of Hiroshima and Nagasaki were leveled, and nearly 200,000 people were killed; the psychological effects of those explosions have been incalculable, and still exist in Japan a generation and a half later.

From our vantage-point in November 1982, these two weapons, dropped in order to convince Japan to surrender so that millions of American lives could thus be saved, seem primitive. "Little Boy," the name given to the ugly device dropped from Enola Gay in August 1945, has given way to an array of weapons that boggles one's mind. There are tactical nuclear weapons which can be strapped on soldiers' backs; at the other extreme is the warhead on a Titan II missile, which possesses 700 times the destructiveness of the Hiroshima bomb or, to put it another way, carries greater explosive force than all the bombs dropped by all sides during World War II. Of course, we don't have just one of these weapons; at the moment, our "stable" of land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles has the potential to create devastation equivalent to 120,000 Hiroshimas, and they are but one of the three elements in our strategic nuclear weapon "triad." A second is the Poseidon submarine, of which we currently have 31; each Poseidon submarine contains 16 missiles, and each missile contains 10 or more warheads, each warhead equivalent to 3 Hiroshima bombs. A single such sub could, therefore, attack and largely destroy the ten biggest cities in the Soviet Union and still have 150 warheads left over for smaller cities, towns, and villages. And then there are our airborne missiles and bombs; altogether, our strategic nuclear arsenal includes about 9,500 warheads, with an average strength of 30 times the Hiroshima bomb. If we include tactical nuclear weapons in the total, we have between 25,000 and 30,000 nuclear warheads.

Of course, we are not alone; if we were, we presumably would not have such an arsenal. Britain, France, China, and India all have nuclear weapons, but not in great numbers, and for the moment they are not seen as threats. The Soviet Union is a different story, however. They have slightly fewer strategic warheads than we—7,800 to our 9,500—but their warheads tend to be larger, the largest being a 20-megaton bomb that in itself is equal to 1,600 Hiroshima "Big Boys." All together, the Soviets have the capacity to unleash approximately 360,000 Hiroshimas on the United States. Enough to really make the "rubble bounce," as the saying goes.

To try to envision such an eventuality, or even a small portion of it, is extremely difficult. We can learn from such compelling works as John Hershey's about the terrible results in Hiroshima, and we can multiply these in our minds, but the picture quickly becomes incomprehensible; this accounts, I believe, for the relative lack of attention given to the nuclear arms issue during the last four decades; having labeled nuclear conflict "unthinkable," we the public tend to retreat from discussion of it, since it tends to produce such negative reactions: helplessness and despair. Rather than face it, we deny what Robert Lifton, the pioneer in the psychology of the nuclear predicament, has called "an immersion in death." Still, in recent months, there have been attempts to conceive of and confront this horrifying prospect, ranging from the fictional diary of "Jenny" who survives a nuclear attack on England temporarily because she has joined a bomb shelter group, to the thoroughly researched efforts of The Office of Technology Assessment, just published under the title of The Day After Midnight. But the book which is largely responsible for my interest in this whole area, and which has perhaps the greatest impact, is one with which I'm sure many of you are familiar: Jonathan Schell's Fate of the Earth, originally appearing as a series in The New Yorker last winter. In his most powerful chapter, entitled "A Republic of Insects and Grass," Schell graphically describes the effect of a one-megaton bomb exploded at 8,500 feet directly over the Empire State Building; as a starter, he informs us that it "would gut or flatten almost every building between Battery Park and 125th St."; you can read the rest for yourselves. It is not a pleasant seven pages. Nor is his broader conclusion, that a full-scale nuclear holocaust would inevitably result in a republic inhabited only by "insects and grass." In a second chapter entitled "The Second Death," Schell notes that such a holocaust would not only kill the entire human population; as he puts it, "Death cuts off life, extinction cuts off birth . . .," a nuclear holocaust "in one stroke locks up in the nothingness before life all the people who have not yet been born."

There is, of course, not a human soul alive today who wants these things to happen. Not you or I, not the Committee on The Present Danger, not Ronald Reagan, not even—I submit—Leonid Brezhnev and his cronies. But while not wanting these results, our two societies have countenanced a growth of weapons that could produce these results, and there is no apparent end in sight. Despite the fact that each of the two superpowers currently has the means at its disposal to render the other not merely powerless, but extinct at least ten times over, the sabres are still being rattled on both sides. We are in the process of deploying the new cruise missiles, which have the advantage of being difficult to detect, and of developing the MX "supermissile," an ICBM less vulnerable to attack than our current "Minuteman." The Soviets, for their part, continue to deploy their SS-17s, 18s, 19s, and 20s, and to develop their own new weapons, such as the "Typhoon" class LRBMs submarine.

The whole business is not only dangerous and ludicrous, it is expensive. This year, the world will spend $100 billion dollars on nuclear weapons, more than enough money, incidentally, to provide sufficient supplementary food and health care to all developing countries for the next twenty years. Seemingly worthy programs, such as those in federal immunization and college loans, are cut, while the commitment is made to spend $1.6 trillion on arms over the next five years. Nor is the situation in Moscow any different; despite a sagging economy and a desperate need for more consumer goods, the Soviet Union continues to increase its military spending; in 1980, defense spending amounted to 18% of the Soviet GNP (as compared to 9% in 1960, and to 4% in the USA in 1980).

Whereas deploring this situation is relatively easy, finding appropriate solutions is less so.

While the arms race has been pretty constantly escalated during the past three decades, a relatively new phenomenon has crept into the picture: the emergence of an increasingly skeptical public opinion here in the United States. Since the original "Ban the Bomb" movement of the 1950s, there has been little mobilization of public opinion about the nuclear predicament, and as a result, the Washington policy-makers have enjoyed an ipso facto green light to continue the race. But it seems that the American public is beginning to take an interest in this matter, and the outcome of Tuesday's (Election Day) referenda is but the latest piece of evidence. What this will ultimately lead to is difficult to determine at this time, but it seems clear that already the anti-nuclear movement has had an impact: President Reagan has endorsed the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks, or START, and these are now proceeding in Geneva. In June, an impressive and orderly demonstration by three-quarters of a million Americans took place in New York City. Indeed, the movement some call "nuclear populism" seems well underway; whether or not one agrees with Administration policy on the nuclear issue, it seems heartening that the American public is involving itself, at long last, in this obviously vital matter; in a democracy such as ours, an informed and concerned electorate is an all-important factor. The thrust of the "nuclear populist" movement is to offer an option to the traditional policy of nuclear buildup interspersed with arms control agreements that don't really appear to control arms. The option is called "The Freeze." It is very simple: both sides simply agree to build and deploy no new nuclear weapons. No problem with numbers of missiles or warheads; just no more activity in any weapons program. No MXs, Trident II subs, or cruise missiles; no SS-20s, Typhoon subs, or Backfire bombers. Supporters of The Freeze argue the following points:

1. A freeze at the current armament level would be equitable, since American and Soviet strategic forces are essentially equivalent in size and destructive power—still plenty left for a more than adequate deterrent capability.
2. A freeze would prevent the deployment of new weapons which would seriously destabilize the situation by increasing a first strike capability, or decreasing the warning time, or both.
3. A freeze would also prevent the deployment of new, small weapons like the cruise missile, which would be very difficult to verify.
4. A freeze would halt plans to place nuclear weapons in outer space, a move which could drastically escalate the dangers involved.
5. A freeze would encompass a ban on all testing and hence development of all new weapons systems.

How does a freeze come to pass?

It would seem to require an initiative by one of the two superpowers, in the hope that the other would respond positively to such an initiative; obviously, the freeze must be a bilateral effort. The freeze proponents believe that such an initiative would be a proper one for the United States to make and that there is every reason to believe that the Soviets, eager to prevent US deployment of the MX, the Trident II, Pershing II, and cruise missiles, would follow suit. But would they? Opponents of the Freeze argue that it would seriously undermine our security by perpetuating the "window of vulnerability" and preventing deployment of a new generation of weapons that would increase that security; moreover, we could never trust the Russians to adhere to such an agreement because—well, because the Russians can't be trusted. Ex-President Nixon perhaps suggested this position most dramatically when he said, in 1980, "It may seem melodramatic to say that the US and Russia represent Good and Evil, Light and Darkness, God and the Devil. But if we think of it that way, it helps to clarify our perspective of the world struggle." President Reagan has referred to the Soviets as "godless liars and cheats." Clearly, the whole nuclear arms issue requires us ultimately to address the question "What about the Russians?" Are they godless liars and cheats, with whom it is impossible to deal? Does the Soviet Union want to conquer the world, as Paul Nitze would have it, or do they just want to be ranked No. 1? Or might they settle for a tie? Can they imagine a future in which we are a friendly rival, or will they always see us as a threat which must ultimately be destroyed? What basically motivates their foreign policy?

The historian Paul Winterton once remarked astutely that "there are no experts on the Soviet Union, only varying degrees of ignorance" and we remember well

Minuteman III is launched from Cape Kennedy

Winston Churchill's 1939 characterization of Soviet actions as "a riddle wrapped in a mystery inside an enigma." While our understanding of the USSR has doubtless increased somewhat since then, it still seems woefully lacking at times. This is of course due somewhat to the fact that the Soviet Union is a closed and highly secretive society, but I believe it is also due to a tendency on our part to view things simplistically, moralistically, and paranoically. Unfortunately, the Soviets, for their part, often seem unable to understand us, even though ours is such an open society. Both of us try to cope with the other through the lens of our own ideology, and the result is a distorted image. If the leadership in Washington, DC, and the American public, did as good a job of scouting the opposition as do, say, the Dallas Cowboys, I believe we'd be far better off.

George Kennan is one of those who over the years has "scouted" the Soviet Union more thoroughly than most. In 1947, he wrote an article entitled "The Sources of Soviet Conduct," which appeared in Foreign Affairs magazine and which provided the basis for the US approach to the Soviet Union for much of the Cold War period. Just a year ago, he wrote another article, this time published in The New Yorker, under the title "Two Views of the Soviet Problem." In this, Kennan argues that the foreign policy of the Soviet Union, which often appears so belligerent and aggressive, is motivated to a large extent by defensive considerations. He believes that the Soviets do indeed feel encircled and threatened by the United States and its allies. He believes that the Kremlin leaders are reluctant to use their armed might to expand their sphere of influence, yet are easily "frightened into taking actions that would seem to have this aim." He notes the Soviet eagerness to increase their influence in the Third World, but believes that eagerness to be not very different from our own. Not that Kennan sees the Soviets as pussycats; he considers them potentially very dangerous, displaying "certain disquieting tendencies," which oblige Western policymakers to exercise a sharp vigilance even as they pursue their efforts toward peace. "I believe," he continues, "that these tendencies reflect not so much any thirst for direct aggression as an oversuspiciousness, a fear of being tricked or outsmarted, an exaggerated sense of prestige, and an interpretation of Russia's defensive needs as so extreme—so extravagant and far-reaching—that it becomes in itself a threat, to the security of other nations."

Kennan acknowledges that there is another view of the Soviets, a view that is promoted by

Clockwise from the far end of the table: John Shumway, William Torrey '49, Susan Shumway, Henry Higdon '59, Erika Higdon, "Bill" Farley '28, B. Allen Rowland '28, Carol Torrey

Alumni, parents, and friends in the Southwest last November tried something new for a regional meeting. Instead of the more traditional gathering with one or two faculty members, they did it wholesale: importing thirteen representatives from PA, including faculty, administrators, and spouses for three days of lectures, seminars, panels, and socializing. Thanks to the imagination, initiative, and generosity of Jack Greenway '42, members of the Andover family living in the Southwest were invited to Tucson, where Jack made available his Arizona Inn for the entire weekend of 5-7 November. Jack was assisted by Bill Torrey '49 and Bill's wife Carol.

Invitations for the three-day weekend made it clear that participants were welcome for the entire three days or for any portion that was convenient for them. As word filtered out beyond the region, participants showed up from as far away as San Francisco, Denver, Chicago, and Andover itself (Al Rowland '28). Attendance varied from 35 for one lecture to 125 for the Saturday night poolside banquet. The PA staff were reinforced by Trustee Elizabeth Parker Powell '56, Chairman of the Board Melville ('36) and Lizanne Chapin, and Chairman Emeritus of the Math Department Dick and Norma Pieters. The guest of honor on Friday night was the Honorable Bruce Babbitt, Governor of Arizona.

And here we have our dilemma. So many loyal friends took the time, effort, and expense to travel to Tucson for the weekend that they deserve mention here. But such a list would make this longer than the longest Class Notes column, and we fear that our memory would betray us into inaccuracy because of the welcome fluidity of attendance.

The core of this academic weekend comprised three seminar-lectures under the general heading "Issues of the Eighties." History Instructor and Dean of Faculty John Richards II spoke on "The US and the USSR—Our Mutual Predicament," an assessment of Soviet foreign policy, East-West relations, and the problems involved in nuclear proliferation. English Instructor Tom Regan '51 spoke on "English as an Art Form" in a world that too often ignores or does violence to words: a study of the comic and satiric uses of language when we say something other than what we mean. The third seminar was "Exploring the Computer World," a joint presentation by Art Instructor Diz Bensley '43 and Math Instructor Diane Souvaine—an examination of how the computer works, and how it affects both the analytic and aesthetic parts of our lives—with some thoughts about its positive and negative implications. When that particular seminar was over, one realized that one had just been exposed to art, math, psychology, epistemology, ethics, and electrical circuits.

Besides the Discussion Groups led by the lecturers, there were two other panel presentations by the rest of the PA contingent, who spoke on their specialized perspectives of Andover: Wendy Richards for the Cluster Deans, Diane Souvaine's husband Rich Horne and Chris Shaw '78 for the House Counselors, Naut Bensley for the Art Department, Gerri Regan for the Admissions Office, Britta McNemar for College Counseling, Academy Secretary Joe Meisics '53 and his wife Sandi for the Office of Academy Resources, Mel Chapin '36 for the Trustees, and Headmaster Don McNemar for the whole show.

In the light of the favorable reactions from the participants, this kind of academic weekend offers tempting possibilities as a model for other regional meetings.

Since the seminar that dominated discussions during the weekend was Jack Richards' lecture on the US and USSR, we have presented a shortened version of that paper in the accompanying article.

such men as Norman Podhoretz, of Commentary magazine, Paul Nitze, of the Committee on The Present Danger, and White House adviser and Harvard professor Richard Pipes. For these people, Soviet behavior today is still directly attributable to Communist doctrine; the leaders in the Kremlin are ideologically motivated to expand their power, even when this might threaten international peace. In their view, the buildup of Soviet military forces can only be explained as the result of aggressive intentions, which manifest themselves in Eastern Europe, Afghanistan, Angola, Cuba and elsewhere.

Here, then, are the two views. There are intelligent people in both camps, and this makes it difficult to formulate one's own opinion; it may also be the reason why American policy toward the Soviets seems to have wavered back and forth between strategies over the years; why, in fact, we could negotiate a SALT II treaty while furiously developing new weapons at the same time. But perhaps some further examination of the matter can help us see a little light. For one thing, there are some characteristics of the Soviet Union on which all can agree: 1) Over the centuries, Russia has been invaded many times, most often by "Western" powers, and the Soviet leaders are extremely sensitive to this danger; 2) The Soviets lost almost 20 million lives in World War II, compared to our 350,000, and suffered tremendous destruction. The memory of this is kept alive by many different means, including impressive memorials in every city and town, and the purpose is clear: This must never be allowed to happen again. 3) The Soviet feeling of encirclement has some legitimacy: every other nation with nuclear weapons points those weapons at the USSR. 4) The Soviets feel very alone in the world, "apart" from the other nations, an attitude that goes far back in Russian history, and in part this stems from their seeing themselves as the vanguard of the proletarian revolution. 5) The USSR is an autocratic society, and Russia has always been so, long before the Communist takeover. We cannot expect them to have the same political ideals as we do. 6) The military plays a very important role in Soviet society, in part because it is the military that has "saved" the nation in the past, ever since the days of Alexander Nevsky.

At the heart of the issue, perhaps, is the trustworthiness of the Soviets, and Averill Harriman may have answered this best when he said that although we can't trust the Russians to act in our interest, we can trust them to act in the Russian interest. As long as we make noises and take actions that make the Soviet leadership jittery, their interest will be to bolster their defenses. In the realm of theatre nuclear forces, we have made the offer to withhold the deployment of 572 Pershing II missiles and cruise missiles in Europe if the Soviets will remove their medium-range SS-20s. We may feel this an equal trade, but the fact is that the SS-20 can reach only western Europe, while our missiles can reach Moscow and other western Soviet cities from bases in Germany in about five minutes—and we know how we felt when Khrushchev tried to put missiles that close to our cities in 1962. This threat must seem very real to the Soviets, and it may have been a junior high school student in Massachusetts who best expressed the resultant concern: "I feel sorry for the Russians," said twelve-year-old Karen Zacarias. "We both have nuclear bombs, but we are the only country in the whole wide world who's actually dropped one and killed all those people. We are scared of Russia, but they must be super-scared of us."

After what I hope was appropriate thought, on Tuesday I voted "Yes" on Question 5 on my ballot, indicating my wish that "The Secretary of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts inform the President and Congress of the United States that it is the desire of the people of Massachusetts to have the government of the United States work vigorously to negotiate a mutual nuclear weapons moratorium and reduction, with appropriate verification, with the Soviet Union and other nations." I was pleased to be participating in the largest referendum in our nation's history, in which almost one-third of the entire American electorate voted overwhelmingly to pass this same message on to Washington. I do not see this move as a weakening of American resolve, but rather a redirection of that resolve, to make the world a safer place not just for ourselves, but for generations still to come. I think it is incumbent upon us to demonstrate to the Soviets that we really are interested, seriously interested, in exploring ways out of the nuclear predicament, and then trusting them to act in their interest by joining us in that endeavor. Perhaps we can't yet be optimistic about the outcome, but as William Sloane Coffin told the PA community on Monday evening, we can be persistent and we can be hopeful. The alternative has been brilliantly stated in a sardonic poem by Alia Johnson, quoted in Lifton and Falk's Indefensible Weapons:

"Why We Should Drop the Bombs"

It would be so exciting

we would finally have done it better than Raskolnikov it would release our anger in the ultimate tantrum
Then we could rest.

group of faculty had begun to feel concerned about drinking, drugs, and Andover students. Incidents involving drugs and alcohol were dealt with in a purely disciplinary manner; yet the cluster deans responsible for such discipline felt that drugs and alcohol were really affecting the lives of some Andover students. Since the Academy had as yet no formal educational program to address the issues of drugs and alcohol, concerned faculty members joined to form Phillips Academy's Health Team as a means of coping with the problem.

Until recently, health issues have remained a secondary curriculum. Now, such issues have been raised to primary importance with the appointment of Cilla Bellizia as Assistant Dean of Residence in charge of Health Issues. "There was a real feeling" said Mr. McNemar, "that in order for the Health Team to carry out some of the programs they had in mind, there needed to be someone with responsibility for organizing and implementing these programs. . . ."

When Mr. McNemar announced Mrs. Bellizia's appointment, he stressed the importance of the Andover community in dealing with personal matters. Mrs. Bellizia's responsibility, he said, is to "monitor, facilitate, and encourage" programs such as drug and alcohol seminars. The significance in the appointment is that Andover has now made the health of its students an actual administrative commitment, rather than an extra-curricular matter.

The Health Team, under Mrs. Bellizia's leadership, lost no time in calling the Freedom from Chemical Dependency Foundation. They had conducted an evening seminar at Andover last year, but the Health Team felt a more extensive program would be far more useful this year. Mrs. Bellizia said that the idea behind an extensive seminar was to "saturate the campus with knowledgeable people"; the purpose of these seminars would be to inform, not to preach.

The Freedom from Chemical Dependency Foundation is an ideal organization to fulfill these goals; it is a well-known nonprofit organization made up entirely of reformed alcoholics and drug abusers. The Foundation conducts extensive programs at some 150 schools around New England and across the United States; their success is probably due to their special approach to the problem of chemical dependency. The staff has had firsthand experience both in being chemically dependent and in overcoming dependency; they represent a confidential and neutral resource that students can go to without fear of either moral or disciplinary judgment.

The program at Andover consisted of four one-hour discussion group classes. The first class was usually devoted to an autobiographical history given by the instructor, telling honestly of his or her involvement with drugs or alcohol. During the following three days the instructor discussed drugs and alcohol, both on a scientific level in terms of their effect on humans, and on a more emotional level dealing with chemically dependent people.

The Freedom from Chemical Dependency Foundation, in its seminar, attempts to accomplish four goals: to help students make intelligent decisions regarding drugs and alcohol, to recognize early signs of chemical dependency, to understand chemical addiction and the available treatments, and to generally highlight the rewards of a drug-free and alcohol-free life. "Drugs and alcohol," said one of the FCDF instructors, "are a way of escaping and being untrue to yourself." He feels he owes a debt to society for the burden he placed on society as a heroin addict; one of his personal aims is to help people to be honest with themselves, because he feels this would "make the world a little better."

The students themselves responded to the seminars positively, although to many the information was not new. "I thought the seminars were potentially very useful for less informed people," said Henry Dorn, a senior from South Carolina. "However, I had previously heard a majority of the material. All it did was reinforce the ideas I had already had." These sentiments seem to be the pervading feelings of old students, who had already attended the shorter Freedom from Chemical Dependency program last year.

The difference between this year's program and the previous one, aside from the greater time commitment, is that this added time was directed towards group discussions. The overall success of these discussions varied; some groups had fluid, comfortable discussions in which many students asked pertinent questions, whereas in other groups the silence was uncomfortable as it became evident that no one was willing or curious enough to ask questions. One student I spoke with felt that the groups of twenty-six were too "big and impersonal" to encourage students to open up with their ideas and questions.

Did the seminars actually change people's views on drugs and alcohol? This is difficult to determine in a short time. It seems, however, that the sessions were more useful and meaningful to younger students; for the most part, upperclassmen have fairly set attitudes towards drugs and alcohol, based on several years of decision-making. "It was pretty interesting," said one Senior, "but it's not going to change my attitudes towards partying." "I'm glad I went to them," said another Senior, "because they gave me a little more knowledge about each drug and about mixing drugs . . . It didn't change my attitude but I do know more . . . It makes me think."

Although the drug seminar may have been old hat for Seniors and Uppers, they seemed on the whole to be enlightening and helpful for younger and newer students. It seems essential, at a potentially intimidating institution such as Andover, to provide students with such valuable resources. For many students, living away from home is a new experience; they must learn to deal with peer pressure and start making important decisions. The Freedom from Chemical Dependency Foundation was called in to help guide students through these issues, so they can make informed, thoughtful choices that they will not regret in later life.

roommate if they are not alert. Worse, I know that floor feels like ice to bare feet on chilly mornings.

On the other hand, we know now what he's talking about when he says he doesn't want to miss Sunday brunch. We also shared his pleasure in the squirrel that visits him occasionally on the fire escape outside his room, trading her cute manners for a little gorp and winter security.

Thus, pain and pleasure go together at Andover; simple, Spartan living, close to nature, seems an appropriate context for high thinking. There is something transcendental in all this.

Still, I'm Mom—more pragmatic than philosophical—and I shall buy him a rug.

Andover parents, step-parents, and even a few grandparents—an astonishing total of over 700 families came from all over the country for Parents Weekend, October 29-31, 1982. We came from California and Maine, Florida and Chicago, as well as the cities of the eastern seaboard. We came in our station wagons decorated with pre-Election Day bumper stickers, and some of us brought the family dog. Some families came and left with precision timing—combining Andover events with prep school tours for younger siblings or a long weekend at home. One of us even came on crutches.

Wearing soft fall colors in tweeds, plaids, bulky knits, and suedes, which we peeled off gradually as the early morning chill melted in Indian summer, we waited our turn to speak with our children's academic advisers, house counselors, and cluster deans. We cheered the soccer and football teams in their annual meet with Deerfield. And on Saturday, at least, we filled the auditorium of George Washington Hall for a Theatre Department production of Jules Feiffer's Little Murders.

Of all the New England prep schools, Andover has the power to dazzle people who never went to school there and who only recently joined the roster of parents. (I'm not suggesting that Andover does not also impress alumnae/i, because it does that, too.) That Andover aura has so far resisted accurate definition, but it is suggested by the early '50s graduate, an old friend, who said the other night that he had learned more in two years at Andover than in four years at Harvard. Just exactly what he meant he never explained, but such comments presumably keep Andover coffers full and parents like us subliminally responsive to a 15-year-old son's wish for an Andover education.

So at last here was Parents Weekend and a chance to analyze and demystify Andover: to find out, as our son put it, partly in jest, before one class period, "what I have to put up with"; to meet with teachers, advisers, and friends; and, with a little luck, to meet the parents of our son's friends.

Sitting on the window sills of the math classroom late that Friday afternoon, we got our first glimpse of what Andover teaching is all about.

"I must have had a softening of the brain to give such an easy test," said the handsome, white-haired Mr. Hammond as he greeted the class. But as he wrote the test results on the blackboard, I recognized a classic bell curve, only slightly skewed, if there ever was one. I didn't have time to ponder what a "hard" test might look like, for Hammond, moving on quickly, demonstrated his particular style of precalculus math instruction through word problems. He says students must learn the guiding principles of Boolean algebra, which are based on the symbolic logic of a British mathematician, a kind of patron saint of the Andover math department. In this way, our son can learn how to arrive at the truth and certainty independent of opinion.

Hammond, I decided, knows what he is doing.

The following morning, thanks to the map provided at registration, we found the chemistry wing of the science building at 8:30 A.M. In Chemistry 30 Ms. Ballard asks her student "to accept ambiguity" and "to tolerate a certain level of frustration, which lasts all year." These comments, spoken so early in the morning, woke me up with a jolt. I thought, this must be Andover. They suggest not only the sensitivity of our son's teachers but also the elevated pitch of this course, which uses a college text.

"It's hard to teach people how to think," Ms. Ballard went on. But she said that even with students working on very abstract concepts, like atomic structure and wave length, she has never had a problem at Andover with student motivation.

This, indeed, is Andover.

"Parents take crash courses over the weekend," headlined the Parents Weekend edition of The Phillippian; the article then went on to suggest that students clean up their rooms, and get a haircut for the occasion. Never aware of such maneuvers in our family, we arrived at Andover with some more realistic expectations: he would be very happy to see us (he was); and he would be just as happy to see his hi fi system, posters, a box of homemade cookies, and his mail (he was).

In theory, Saturday concentrated a student's full day program into the morning hours, giving parents 20 minutes to meet each of their child's teachers in sequence and get information about their courses, with 10 minutes to get to the next classroom. Actually, Saturday felt more like the action of a 16 frames-per-second movie screened by a 24 frames-per-second projector. Parental action, in other words, was scheduled to slightly faster than students'—on unfamiliar territory. There was some inevitable confusion as some parents got lost going from building to building or found themselves in the wrong classroom with the wrong teacher.

Miraculously, we found Mr. Dix, the Spanish 40 teacher in the basement of Sam Phil. This course offers our son no more chance to doze off in class than math or chemistry. Using contemporary reading from newspapers and magazines, Dix asks his students to form an opinion in Spanish on a variety of subjects, and then to get up in front of the class and give a little "charla."

Moving right along, like an old Laurel and Hardy movie, we rushed over to beautiful Cochran Chapel, already packed with parents to hear Headmaster McNemar, tutors, house counselors, student leaders, and the Search and Rescue coach speak. There we were duly reminded of our parental responsibilities to accept the bad news along with the good, and to continue doing so by accepting collect telephone calls.

Moving on again to the art center, we met Mr. and Mrs. Bensley, teachers of the basic design course, and designers along with Charles Eames and Buckminster Fuller and others, of the prototype visual studies course. If our son has to pull things apart in math class through analysis, here in art class he must try to put them together, in an original way, through synthesis. In this class he becomes more visually aware of color, texture, shape, rhythm, composition; in one exercise, for example, students note how purple can look blue in one color context, and red in another.

The last class before lunch was Mr. Bardo's English Competence, which interested me because it is the foundation writing course required of all Lower and new Up-pers. It reminded me once again about the element of surprise in good writing and "hooking" the reader. If you've gotten this far, either I've succeeded or you're a loyal Andover Bulletin reader.

The Steering Committee met on November 4, and made some executive decisions on the organizing effort. They decided to prepare a notice to hand to those attending the Sizer reception and to mail to all alumni/ae, parents, and friends in Northern California, inviting all interested persons to join in a Founding Committee and attend a work meeting at Bev and Bob Tuller's house on 12/4/80. All remaining decisions, were relegated to that 12/4 meeting.

On November 12, Ted Sizer came (delayed by Pan Am and without luggage), spoke (perceptively, warmly, with humor and his classic humility), and left behind a wake of enthusiasm, nostalgia, and high hopes for the future.

The Founding: The initial notice was handed out at Ted Sizer's speech and at the same time was mailed to over seven hundred Abbot and Andover alumni/ae, parents, and friends. A broad base of support surfaced. With only ten days to two weeks notice (after mail delivery time), thirty-nine people responded by volunteering to be on the Founding Committee, even against the threat that this really would be a working effort, and another forty responded that they would be members, or would be interested, once the association was formed.

On December 4, at the home of Bob and Bev Tuller (parents of Robert '82, Geoffrey '83, and Alexandra '85), eighteen members of the Founding Committee gathered to make some historic decisions about the shape of things to come.

The first order of business was to select the name. We agreed that "Andover-West" had zest and could expand into a broader West Coast organization with chapters (i.e., in such places as Seattle, Los Angeles, and Truth or Consequences, New Mexico).

The Purpose: The Founding Committee decided on three paramount missions: KID WORK, PR WORK, and MONEY WORK. There was consensus support for raising funds for financial assistance for local students; one thought that drew general excitement was to establish travel scholarships.

The Structure: The Founding Committee also decided to incorporate as a non-profit charitable corporation, so that donations, dues, and other moneys raised would be tax deductible. Hobey Birmingham '62 agreed to donate the services of his law firm, Bronsen, Bronsen and McKinnon, to put together the articles of association and bylaws and to perform the necessary legal tasks to achieve tax-exempt organization status. The Founding Committee agreed to establish a Board of Directors of twelve persons, with president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, drawn from the board, and three committees to accomplish the work in all three areas of purpose. Memberships to be all-inclusive: regular members will consist of all persons residing in the geographical area of Northern California and who are on Andover's mailing lists; they would receive the Newsletter. Active memberships, to include voting privileges and Andover-West mailings, would require dues of $10 for alumni/ae ten years out or more and all parents, and $5 for all alumni/ae less than ten years away from the Hill.

The Winnings: We are now a non-profit corporation with "501 (c) (3)" status pending under the Internal Revenue Code and formally bear the name ANDOVER-WEST: THE ANDOVER/ABBOT ASSOCIATION OF NORTHERN CALIFORNIA. Our active membership numbers some 128 alumni/ae and parents. Activity in identifying, interviewing, and admitting candidates from Northern California has been dramatic in the last two years. Following a policy decision made in 1981, the Admissions Team no longer conducts actual interviews out here. Local interviews are now conducted exclusively by our Alumni Representatives. Of course the option of travelling to Andover for the interview is still available. We now have forty-five Representatives who have been trained to do the local interviewing. About one fourth of these are actively involved with local school counselors, principals, and youth leaders. We have our own set of slides to take into school sites and other locations where we can gather young people and those who work with them to hear the Andover story. Bill Sherman '60 handles the coordination of all interviewing. In the 1981-1982 interview season, 175 candidates applied from all of California; thirty-eight were admitted, twenty-two of whom were Northern Californians.

In addition, we have held numerous meetings of our three standing committees and a dozen or so "events" ranging from formal receptions for two Headmasters to picnics for new and returning students, and a wine-and-cheese party given by and for PA grads attending Stanford and Berkeley (see p. 3 for more news of recent and upcoming events). We are offering perks for our folks including the possibility of block tickets to spectator sports events, and help with planning travel (to Andover or anywhere else!). Our momentum is building steadily as more and more people join in—we are having a great time!

To summarize, the key ingredients are a small group of committed workaholics (lawyers are especially suitable), and momentum. Someone must have a compulsive desire to see the organization happen, have the time to do it, have the support available in the form of typing services, mailing services, and perhaps a little seed money. If two or three people coalesce to be the originators, they need to be close at their places of work or residence and must agree to constantly be calling, visiting, and pushing each other. For example, within the three months between mid-October 1980, and mid-February 1981, the San Francisco group had six separate meetings and three complete constituency-wide mailings. Part of the key in San Francisco was the succession of two major events within five weeks, the annual Admissions Office visit, and Ted Sizer's visit and dinner. Part of the trick is to get a number of egos sufficiently involved that the ego-bruise potential from failure is beyond the limits of acceptable risk. A single initiator understanding this must also be willing to create around himself or herself that exact kind of web of risk. Once this is accomplished, the thrill of achievement and the joy of anticipating a flow of future successes is more than enough to draw the concrete reality out of the abstract potential.

CAMPUS NEWS

Special Olympics at PA

These are good times for student activity in the arts. Of course what comes out of the PA Art Center is so consistently impressive that we almost blush at featuring it so often. Theatre thrives more than ever, with both departmental and student-run productions in a crowded Fall Term: plays by Edward Albee, Langford Wilson, Samuel Beckett, Sam Shepard, and Wendy Wasserstein, whose Uncommon Women and Others was honored by the presence of the playwright herself.

On December 5, the final Sunday of the term, the Music Department and the School Chaplains offered a Festival of Lessons and Carols, designed after the Christmas Eve service at the Chapel of King's College at Cambridge University. Those who were familiar with that service were not disappointed, especially with the singing of "Once in Royal David's City," or at such moments as when the 100-voice choir sang descants above the congregation's melody on "O Come, All Ye Faithful" and "Hark! the Herald Angels Sing." The Cochran Chapel was packed. And as the congregation left the Chapel in December darkness, the Brass Choir played on the steps of the Addison Gallery.

The Trustees have given new life to our almost defunct FM radio station WPPA. As a 10-watt station, its existence was threatened last year when the FCC issued a directive that such stations had to broadcast at 100 watts or go off the air entirely. The station received a special waiver, allowing it to transmit at 25 watts, and the Trustees supported the continuation of the station as an educational facility, provided that the student staff can offer assurances of continued responsible programming and administration.

For the second year in a row, PA students hosted our regional Special Olympics. There were two hundred participants who used our athletic facilities on November 7th—the hockey rink, the cage, and both gyms. Three hundred PA students coached, refereed, instructed, and cheered, as they voluntarily gave up an entire Sunday to serve others.

As Thanksgiving approached, the school's OxFam committee arranged not only the now-traditional fast for twenty-four hours (raising $1660 to combat hunger), but also a week of seminars and speakers, a dance marathon, and even a poetry contest on the theme of world hunger.

The exhibit at the Addison during November and December, "Frank Stella: From Start to Finish," was a phenomenal success, praised by the The New York Times, The Boston Globe, The Christian Science Monitor, and every visitor to the Gallery. On one Sunday there were over one hundred people on line waiting to see the exhibit.

On his annual visit to PA last November, Reverend William Sloane Coffin '42 addressed the entire student body on "Nuclear Holocaust or Survival." Bill's ability to capture his audience's attention has not diminished since his year as School Minister in 1956-57.

Our three students from the People's Republic of China had just arrived two days before that school meeting. The standing ovation the student body accorded them at first perplexed the new members of our family—twelve hundred cheering teenagers could scare the living daylights out of anyone. But the smiles on the faces of Yiang, Ren, and Liung showed that they quickly and deeply appreciated the warm and unexpected welcome.

The Student Council, our new form of student government, is off to an auspicious start, winning handsomely their first major proposal to the faculty on senior privileges.

And finally, we welcome on the scene a thrice-yearly magazine, The Andover Scoreboard, a journal published by the student Press Club which surveys all athletics at the Academy, including a regular feature called "Alumni Spotlight." Modestly priced at $6.00 a year, the publication is a 24-page glossy magazine; subscriptions should be addressed to the Athletic Office. We ourselves are particularly indebted to the Press Club, whose members traditionally write our own Athletics column with an accuracy and promptness that fill us with admiration and gratitude.

Athletics for All

The Trustees of Phillips Academy are happy to announce the publication of Athletics for All—a history of athletics and physical education at PA—by Fred ("Ted") H. Harrison '38, Instructor in History and former Director of Athletics. Although the publication price will be $30.00, orders received by 15 May will qualify for the pre-publication price of $25.00, plus mailing charge and (for residents of Massachusetts only) Massachusetts sales tax of 5%. Checks should be made out to "Trustees of Phillips Academy" and orders sent to the Treasurer's Office, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

Andover athletics capped off a fine 43-18-7 record for Fall Term by winning three contests while losing two and tying one against Exeter.

The biggest victory was the football team's thrashing of the Red Tide, 17-6. Winless in their first six games, the Blue gridsters were determined to end the season on a positive note. They were successful in their endeavor, largely the result of fine performances by wingback Kevin Doherty (7 rushes for 130 yards, including a game-breaking touchdown run of 76 yards) and fullback Rufus Jones (30 rushes for 124 yards and one

ALUMNI MISCELLANY

Reunion Planning

The Reunion Chairmen for all Andover and Abbot classes ending in 3 and 8 convened in the Phillips Room of the Andover Inn on Saturday, January 15. The meeting was co-chaired by Cally Butler Lisle '61 and Ken McDonald '50, and nearly every reuning class was represented, some chairmen well flanked by committee members. The group reviewed all of the logistics of planning for the upcoming Reunion Weekend (June 10-12, 1983) before lunch.

There will be a Friday evening reception in the Addison Gallery for the McNemars. Then on Saturday, between the traditional alumni/ae parade in the morning and class parties in the evening, reuners will have a choice of seminars, athletics, and musical offerings throughout the day. The festivities will go on all weekend. Plan to attend!

Two new trips offered

Last year it was the Mediterranean; the year before that the Red Sea. In January, we joined our northern rivals for a ski week in St. Moritz. This spring (April 25-May 6), Andover and Exeter join forces again on the yacht Argonaut for a ten-day odyssey through the Greek Isles, with visits to a variety of mainland sites and fascinating islands, as well as the ancient city of Athens.

Then, after Commencement and Reunions, a special trip to the Soviet Union is offered to alumni/ae, families of students, and friends—June 17 to July 1. Sandra Urie Thorpe '70, Associate Secretary of the Academy, and Alanson P. Stevens, instructor in the Russian Department, will join the group, which will explore Moscow, Leningrad, and Novgorod, during the height of the Festival of the Mid-night Sun. Brochures will be mailed out shortly.

It goes beyond mere Class Notes for us to announce that Peter M. Sellars '75 was one of the twenty recipients in January of this year's MacArthur Awards to "exceptionally talented individuals." Each recipient receives a tax-free fixed sum (ranging from $24,000 to $60,000, depending on age) each year for five years, to be used as he or she sees fit.

Peter Sellars '75

No one can apply for the award; candidates' names are proposed by 100 "nominators" to the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation in Chicago. Among his many achievements, Mr. Sellars has particularly distinguished himself as a director of operas and plays. In the Fall of 1981 he was a visiting instructor in English at PA.

Positions Available

DIRECTOR OF ANNUAL GIVING. The position includes overall responsibility for the $1.5 million program, involving 25,000 donors, 500 volunteers, volunteer recruitment, supervision of staff, assisting in other related alumni activities, as well as school responsibilities. Salary and benefits negotiable. Experience a requirement. For additional information prior to submission of application, call Joseph Mesics, Secretary of the Academy, (617) 475-3400 ext. 139.

DATA PROCESSING MANAGER. Expertise in broad computer management as it applies to educational and administrative applications is desired. Management talent and experience in systems analysis are required. Salary and benefits negotiable.

Applications and resumes for either of these two positions should be sent to the Dean of Faculty, Mr. K. Kelly Wise, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810. Phillips Academy is an affirmative action/equal opportunity employer.

touchdown). The 1500 damp fans at Brother's Field went away happy—or at least those on the Blue side of the field.

The Boys Soccer squad also manhandled the Exies, shutting them out 2-0. Striker Denny Wright got the game-winner thirty minutes into the contest off a Rick Apgar cross, and Zack Apgar added an insurance goal just before the half off a perfect pass from halfback Scott Bothfield. At the other end of the field, Co-captains Greg Simon and Angelo Iasiello led the stingy Andover defense, and goalies Adam Wise, Eric Thieringer, and Chris Wilson took care of any shots that came in their direction.

The Boys Cross-Country team was the third Andover squad to notch a victory over Exeter, and theirs was the closest. Led by Jim Moore (first place, with a time of 15:36), Chris Schille (fourth place), strong finisher Bruce Trask (fifth place), and Jim Bracken and John Floyd (eighth and ninth place respectively), the runners came away with a skin-of-their-teeth 27-28 victory.

The Girls Field Hockey squad emerged from their contest semi-successful, knotting a 1-1 tie with the Red. After a scoreless first half, Exeter quickly scored on a penalty shot. Less than a minute later, however, upper Janine Coleman launched a shot past the Red goalkeeper to tie the contest at one. The Squad could not capitalize on any further scoring opportunities, and Andover defensive standouts Laurie Nash and Jenny Tessier made sure Exeter did not, either.

Probably the most heart-breaking of contests was the Girls Soccer team's overtime loss, 4-3. The defeat ended the squad's twenty-one game winning streak. The two squads battled ferociously for eighty minutes, matching each other's goals with a retaliatory air. Goals by Beth Egan, Sara Poinier, and Electa Sevier held up for Andover in regulation, but overtime injuries to stars Poinier and Katie McBride spelled doom for the Blue. The Exies soon penetrated the Andover defense, and came away with an emotional 4-3 victory.

The Girls Cross-Country squad was beset with injuries as they headed into their competition with the Red, and bowed out 20-41. Five best, albeit losing, times were posted by Captain Jennifer Mosse (second place, with a time of 19:14), Lower Stephanie Meket (sixth place, and a 20:20 time), and Lower Ayo Heinegg (tenth place, with time of 21:11). Clearly, things would have been different if Upper runners Anne Stout and Patricia McQuade had not been out with injuries.

It is safe to assume that Exeter is counting their blessings that they did not have to face the powerful, undefeated Girls Volleyball team. It most certainly would have meant another victory for the Blue.

The final day of Andover-Exeter Weekend highlighted the second annual Girls Varsity Soccer tournament. Choate-Rosemary Hall captured the tournament trophy, edging Andover in the final. Andover opened by beating Pingree 1-0; Inner Katie McBride booted home the sole goal. In the semi-finals the Blue captured a 3-0 win over Buckingham Browne and Nichols as inner Sarah Poinier, halfback Electa Sevier, and halfback Cameron Kenny connected for the scores. The final pitted Andover against Choate-Rosemary Hall. Both teams exchanged goals. Poinier scored all three of the goals for the Blue. With two minutes remaining in the game, the score was tied 3-3 and Coaches Sherman Drake and Shirley Ritchie began to prepare a list of girls to take the overtime penalty kicks. However, Choate continued to attack the Blue's defense and scored to win the championship.

Seniors Stephen D. Guschov and James A. Cohan are on the editorial boards of both the The Phillipian and The Andover Scoreboard.

THE ANDOVER BULLETIN is published four times a year in summer, fall, winter and spring by Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. Editorial and business offices at Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, where change of address notifications should be sent.

We spend what moments we can in the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library—five minutes here, ten minutes there, checking out a footnote or some pedantic detail that will please us far more than it will our students. And because of those visits, we are privy to that fact that there is a perpetual reunion in the Library.

The reunion is of ghosts, for we speak of the signatures on the cards in each book. Only those who have opened a book, to discover on its card the handwriting of an old friend or teacher almost forgotten, can understand the experience. And there they are, book after book, over 100,000 of them. The PA library system has endowed all our past generations with a modest form of immortality.

We discover that some undistinguished students had scholarly curiosity that they concealed from us. Faculty members long gone are here, with their reading habits quietly chronicled. Alumni who died before their time retain a kind of life in their teenage signatures here.

There are other ghosts around campus, detected more by visiting alumni than by those of us who spend our lives here. When a building changes its function, it still harbors its entire history, the way a bank book records significant moments of our past. When Abbot alumnae visit the Child Care Center in Draper Hall, they frequently muse on the hours they spent near a sunny window in that handsome library. Its atmosphere lingers.

And so it is with Hardy House on Salem Street, our Admissions

Office. Alumni bringing their children for an interview sometimes recall its days as a dormitory, and we overhear such remarks as, "This waiting room used to be the Bentons' dining room, and that office was Porky's study." Younger alumni recall, "That back room where the computer is humming used to be Deke's garage where he kept his convertible."

If change is inevitable, the sign of life and vigor, we can nevertheless be forgiven if we are fond of such memories and ghosts. But the ghosts that we have the most trouble with are the ones from buildings that have disappeared by way of the bulldozer. What does one say about the grass plots where once stood Cheever House or Peabody House, as if those buildings had never existed? We dare muse no further, because we are uncomfortably close to the human condition.

Last week during the intermission of a concert in Graves Hall we were admiring the refurbished building the Music Department deserves so much, when we began to reminisce about the different uses the building has had in years past—soccer dressing room, wrestling, fencing, lacrosse. And that gigantic stair well, where students mastered the use of fire-escape ropes.

Suddenly we experienced an uncomfortable epiphany. On the very spot where we were standing, in the record library, we realized that we had stood there once before, several decades ago. On that earlier occasion on a dreary autumn day we had worn little more than a smile and half a dozen four-inch needles. They were taped to our upper vertebrae, protruding so that in profile we looked like an anemic, prehistoric dimetrodon whose dorsal spines had lost their webbed skin—a broken umbrella with only the spoked ribs, declaring itself a comic misfit in an otherwise orderly world. In a word, someone in the Athletic Department in that long-gone era had been obsessed with posture, and subjected every new student to a humbling posture photo session in Graves Hall.

Just before the concert resumed, the most unsettling thought of all occurred to us. Where are those photographs now? Awkward adolescent nakedness in all its clumsiness; hundreds of pictures of people who would later become ambassadors, trustees, corporation presidents, lawyers, scientists, artists, even teachers and editors. Where were they indeed. The potential for blackmail by our many enemies seemed impressive.

After a night of indifferent sleep, we sought out the Academy's Archivist, and in the most tactful, circumlocutious fashion indicated our scholarly interest in the posture-photographs. She informed us that the pictures had been filed in our medical folders, which apparently had been destroyed many years ago. Though we were relieved, we also have a healthy respect for adverbs like "apparently," and we sorely wish that she had said "infallibly" instead. □

Two Decades of Andover Coeducation

by Frederick A. Peterson '34

On the tenth anniversary of the signing of the merger between Abbot and PA, English Instructor Emeritus Frederick A. Peterson '34 reviews coeducation at Andover.

Coeducation at Andover? Are you serious? Who wants it? Whose idea is that? What's wrong with things as they are? Anyway there are no dormitory, athletic, and other facilities suitable for girls at Andover. Besides, the boys and girls are perfectly happy in their segregated schools. Why rock the boat? Girls at Andover would destroy its high academic standards. Girls would be a distraction. A lot of teachers would feel uncomfortable with girls in their classes. If the girls took up half the space in the school, our math and science enrollments would drop (girls don't like these subjects), and our athletic teams would no longer be competitive, with fewer boys to draw from. The alumni wouldn't stand for it. The Alumni Fund and endowment would suffer. Andover knows how to educate boys but doesn't know what to do with girls. Let's stick to what we do best.

Such, as best I recollect it, was the climate of opinion at PA in 1934 when Harold Owen, English teacher and then Director of Summer Session, began suggesting to a number of colleagues that the Summer Session should become coeducational. The response was less than enthusiastic; but undaunted, Owen in the fall of 1964 proposed to Headmaster John Kemper that the Summer Session try the experiment of coeducation in the summer of 1965. John Kemper was a fair and open-minded man who well knew that was ill advised to throttle enthusiasm and innovation amongst the faculty. He also shared, I am sure, many—if not all—of the attitudes toward coeducation at Andover expressed in the first paragraph. I did, too, and at that time was beginning a tour as Holly Owen's Assistant Director. Holly was fully aware of the attitudes, questions, and reservations of his colleagues, at least of those few who had ever thought of the possibility of coeducation at Andover. On the other hand, he had answers for all the questions, a persuasive enthusiasm, and few questioned his powers of judgement.

Owen pointed out that residential girls and their house counselors could be comfortably housed in what were at the time "the new dorms" by Rabbit Pond—Stearns, and Stevens—happily separated geographically from the boys' dormitories and the town streets, thus making it easily possible to provide security. Further, Holly said, the introduction of girls would not force us to reduce the number of boys, since in 1963 the Summer Session had had only some 350 students, leaving most dormitory space unused. Athletics were no problem, since at the Summer Session they were entirely intramural, low keyed, and not highly competitive. Since at least half the Summer Session teachers, coaches, and house counselors came from outside the Andover faculty, appointment of women to the faculty and administration would not be difficult. Holly also offered convincing evidence that summer academic opportunities for girls elsewhere were limited. Since the boys and girls would be together for only six weeks, the risk of strong, distracting boy-girl relationships was minimal. The alumni were certainly not likely to be overly disturbed at what happened during the summer. And besides, he suggested, boys and girls, teachers and students might well have a more enjoyable summer and thus do better academically. Why not give it a try? What do we have to lose, he asked John Kemper. At first taken considerably aback, the headmaster felt the force of Owen's arguments, but didn't think it proper to make the decision himself. Take it to the faculty, he said. If they approved, he would approve. Well, it was quite a battle, the outcome in doubt till the last vote was counted. Opponents asserted (with considerable prescience) that Owen's proposal was an opening wedge to coeducation year round. Finally, though, the ayes had it in a squeaker. Thanks to painstaking advance preparation, and the quality and enthusiasm of the boys, the girls, and the faculty who oversubscribed the places made available, the 1965 coeducation Summer Session was a rip-roaring success in every way. To their horror, however, the directors of the two ensuing sessions had to seek faculty approval each year. Finally in 1967 coeducation was accepted as a permanent feature of the summer. In the meantime the Summer Session grew in numbers, enthusiasm, and achievements, until by 1970 it was using nearly all available classroom and dormitory space.

It was about that time that coeducation for the winter session began to be an issue. To many at PA, the Summer Session experience was conclusive evidence that coeducation could be good for the whole school year. The faculty and students were largely persuaded, but now the alumni had to be consulted. At the same time an attempt was made to "coordinate" Andover and Abbot; that is, students of either school could take courses for credit in the other, schedule permitting. In this experience Abbot found that the link with PA was of some value in attracting large numbers of able applicants. But it soon became clear that coordination was essentially not coeducation. Simultaneously the proponents of coeducation were forced to answer the question, what happens to Abbot if Phillips becomes coeducational? The answer was all too clear: if Phillips became coeducational without Abbot, Abbot could not survive. But how could Abbot be included?

By 1971 it became clear that strong majorities of the PA alumni, faculty, and trustees were in favor of coeducation, but John Kemper was disabled and the interregnum of Simeon Hyde could not take decisive action. It was the election of Theodore Sizer, committed to the idea of coeducation and determined to find a way to bring it about, that broke the log jam. In 1973, Abbot agreed to merge its identity with Andover's and coeducation became a reality, with a student population of approximately 950 boys, 300 former Abbot students, and 50 girls admitted directly to PA. Harold Owen's dream of 1963 had become a reality for the whole community ten years later.

But what was the nature of that reality? What were the feelings, perceptions, and attitudes of the boys and girls, men and women who made up the New Andover?

Ted Sizer and the Abbot Association asked the PA Office of Research and Evaluation to undertake an in-depth study of the reality of the first year of coeducation. Its major conclusions were 1) that the great majority of both students and faculty perceived coeducation as a great success, but the boys and men were substantially more enthusiastic than the girls and women, 2) that some wounded feelings, unfairness, discrimination, and disappointment existed, principally experienced by the women students and faculty, and most strongly by those who had come from Abbot.

When the New England Committee of Accreditation visited Andover in 1977, it strongly endorsed the school as a whole and in particular its success in the coeducational venture. It noted that both sexes, whether students, teachers or administrators, overwhelmingly felt comfortable in the coeducational school, in spite of occasional grievances. But the sensation of the committee's report was its use of the word androgynous to describe the quality of life in the school, particularly among the students. Androgynous is defined as "having both feminine and masculine characteristics," but no one was sure whether the committee used it in a laudatory or in a derogatory sense. Did it mean, as some thought, that the women students, teachers, and administrators were forced to abandon their feminine ways to become essentially masculine? Did it mean that each sex found full scope to achieve its own potential in a neutral setting? Did it mean that both men and women were somehow neuters? Did it mean that women were not making, to the proper degree, their contribution to the school as women? Well, the committee never did explain exactly what it meant by the word. At least the explanation never reached me. In spite of that mystery, though, coeducation at Andover appeared to have come through the first five years in a most satisfactory way. Perhaps the biggest difference was that Andover had become a happier school since 1973. It was fun to be there, fun to teach and fun to learn. Academic standards had become higher rather than lower since 1973.

In 1978, the year of Andover's 200th birthday and Abbot's 150th, after two years of preparation the school cancelled final examinations in June, and to the pleasure and often joy of its over 10,000 visitors—parents, alumni and alumnae, their families, and the townspeople of Andover—focused its energies to demonstrate to the whole Andover-Abbot family what the new Andover had become. Students and faculty joined together for five heady days to display their talents in musical, academic, athletic, theatrical, photographic, artistic, and dancing performances that overwhelmingly attested to the vitality and excellence of the new Andover.

And what is to be said five years later in 1983? My belief is that the school is even better than in 1978 and is still continuing to improve. I should like to offer some comments about various aspects of Andover life today after ten years of full coeducation, twenty years since it was only a gleam in Harold Owen's eye, comments that relate to those Andover attitudes of 1960 toward coeducation at PA.

The academic program has benefited enormously by coeducation. In the classrooms the work is as intense as ever, perhaps more so, but the pleasure is far greater for both teachers and students. Much of the warmth, humanity, and joy in learning that characterized Abbot now appears in abundance in the Andover classrooms. Students of the sixties and earlier will find it hard to believe that birthdays and other special occasions are now often observed in the classroom with a song and a cake. It is true that women students are disproportionately few in most of the advanced math and science electives, though a number of girls are performing brilliantly in those areas. In general, in the various departments, the girls are at least a match for the boys. Not infrequently they are the intellectual leaders of a class, able and unafraid to speak out and stand out.

In the dormitories and the clusters, the girls are still in a minority (about 40% to 60%), but seem to be moving toward parity. Housed in their own dormitories, often with a married couple sharing the counseling and supervision, they take an active role in all cluster activities. Girls are less frequently than boys selected to the top leadership position, but most years one or two clusters of the six will have a female president. In only one year since the creation of that office has the school president been a girl. It is also true that the top leadership position in most school activities is usually filled by a boy. But there have been two girl Phillipian heads. It is not at all unusual for a girl to be the manager of a boys' varsity team, and boys manage girls' varsity teams to about the same extent.

Over the full ten-year period, the girls have been at the greatest disadvantage in athletics. At first the girls' gym facilities were remote and inadequate, a situation now fully cured. Until very recently the boys' teams have always had the best fields, courts, boats, equipment, uniforms, and coaching. That is less true now. The best male coaches have discovered that there is a special pleasure in coaching a girls' team, for their dedication, spirit, and willingness to learn are impressive. The interscholastic records of the girls' teams are astonishingly good, and the level of skill and performance is steadily increasing. The feeling still persists schoolwide, however, that boys' sports are intrinsically more important than girls'.

It is perhaps the performing arts that have benefited the most from coeducation. Amidst the brilliant musical, theatrical, and dance enterprises of the new Andover it is hard to remember how bare the cupboard used to be.

Andover girls are of course subject to the same rules and disciplinary procedures as the boys. Attendance is required at classes and athletics. Campus and cluster rules are the same for all. Girls run afoul of the disciplinary system as often as the boys do, but their cut record is on the whole better than the boys', especially in the classroom, perhaps less so in athletics. They are generally more amenable than boys to the dorm, cluster, and campus rules.

In the faculty and administration, women are still proportionately fewer in number and prominence than men, but they are gaining. Several cluster deans are women, as are the heads of several major academic departments and the academic dean. Women make a strong contribution to faculty meetings, and faculty men and women respect and esteem each other.

How to summarize? Undoubtedly Andover co-education is a success, though still not perfect. It appears to me that the doubts, fears, and questions that appeared in the 1960s have been put to rest or answered. Some new questions have arisen, though. Will the able and admirable girls whom Andover now attracts eventually outshine and dominate the boys? How androgynous will Andover be? And how to pronounce alumnae? □

Athletics for All: synoptic sketches

by E.H. Harrison '38

*Editor's note: To celebrate the publication of Ted Harrison's book Athletics for All, the Andover Bulletin has invited the author to write an anecdotal overview of the PA athletic program.*

For the first hundred years the curriculum of Phillips Academy included very little time for fun and games. It had been shaped by its founder, Samuel Phillips, and was followed undeviatingly by the Puritan Principals, Eliphalet Pearson, John Adams, and Samuel Harvey Taylor. The "Great End and Real Business of Living" was the advancement of Calvinist theology and classical scholarship. The pursuit of true piety and virtue left no time for frivolous games or the lewd and lascivious practice of dancing the "Valse" or the "Fandango." Scant attention was paid to the health of either the "Cads" or the "Theologues," despite the ravages of pneumonia and tuberculosis, among other debilitating sicknesses, on Zion's Hill. The bitter weather of New England winters, inadequate living quarters, and the punishing academic schedule took their heavy toll in this citadel of orthodoxy. There were no medical facilities, and sick or injured students were confined to their own quarters and curative devices. William Bartlet, a benefactor to the Theological Seminary and a vigorous, successful man, was the first to recognize the relationship between exercise and health. In 1828 he had built a stone shell of a building as a carpenter shop and equipped it with the necessary tools and lumber; through their carpentry endeavors, the students were supposed to get their exercise. The program of physical rehabilitation was launched. Mrs. Robbins, the daughter of a Seminary professor, describes it in detail:

You will hardly believe me when I assure you that they were set to making—coffins! There you have a theological consistency worthy of John Calvin himself.

Despite the lack of a formal exercise program, for the more enterprising and energetic there were many things to do of a physical nature. There were swimming excursions to Poms Pond and the "Shashine" River. Walking was very popular in the spring, summer and fall. The favorite jaunts were to the "mighty Merrimack," Indiar Ridge, or Den Rock. In the winter the preferable pastimes were snowballing and skating, or sleighing and bobsledding down Main, School, or Phillips Streets. The Philo Mirror commented on these activities:

For sport and exercise, old winter has favored us to an unwonted degree, with excellent skating. Th dignified professors, the thoughtful "Theologue," the fun-loving Academy boy and—last but not least—the gleeful damsels, have, each, taken their share of the healthy and pleasing exercise. Women's Rights have been nobly asserted upon the ice and, when under the influence of a fair breeze, with a full spread crinoline, she fairly put "Young America" into the shade.

Except for an occasional icy bath, skating was far less dangerous than "coasting." The "bobs" were heavy vehicles sitting fairly high on two double-runner sleds. The front one controlled the steering; braking was accomplished by the simple but dangerous device of dragging one's feet or jamming one's heels into the icy snow to slow down the monster. The only way to stop it immediately while in full flight was to tip it over deliberately and take one's chances. There were so many accidents and injuries to both students and townspeople that an ordinance was passed by the local authorities forbidding "sliding." The loss of their favorite winter sport was keenly felt in the Phillipian:

Our gallant double-runners have rivalled the cars in speed as we went downward o'er the shining snow. We enjoyed those moonlight evenings, and the thought of the morrow's hard lesson was lost amid the smiles of the Fem Sems. But the edict was passed forbidding us the pleasure of coasting. We submitted as gracefully as the law-abiding "Phillipians" always do to those decrees which they cannot alter.

The first team sport played at Phillips Academy was baseball. This developed from "batball," "one old cat," "two old cat," "cricket," "rounder," or a combination of two or all of these. Some form of ball game was being played at Andover in the 18th century. Young Josiah Quincy, of the first entering class in 1778, wrote, "I was an incorrigible lover of sports of every kind. My heart was in ball and marbles." Batball was popular at Exeter in 1811, and there is evidence that both baseball and cricket were being played at Andover as early as 1858: "In regard to games, fellows generally concede that football exploded, base is low, and even cricket's beginning to get out of fashion." The first interscholastic contest in PA history was a baseball game between Andover and Tufts, played in Medford in 1866; Andover won handily. The first Exeter contest ever was a baseball game at Exeter in the spring of 1878.

Some kind of round-ball football (soccer) was being played at PA as early as 1805. Rugby football came to the campus in 1874, when Thomas Nickerson, who had learned the game in Cambridge, Massachusetts, entered the school. A year later the first interscholastic game of Rugby football was played at Quincy, Massachusetts, between Phillips Academy and Adams Academy. The first Andover-Exeter game was played at Andover in the fall of 1878. The game started at 2:05, Mr. Belnap, PA, and Mr. Parrish, PEA, acting as umpires, and Mr. Riley, PA, as referee. The rather bizarre conditions under which the game was played are indicated by the fact that at one point during the tussle, proceedings were interrupted by a "cane-rush" between two Andover classes (Middlers, 1880, and Lower-Middlers, 1881). The game was played in two periods of forty-five minutes called quarters. Andover won by a score of five touchdowns and one goal to nothing.

Track athletics lagged behind football and baseball on the hill, but were kept alive by the Athletic Association, which fostered inter-class competition, capped by the Fall and Winter Tournaments. Because of a lack of facilities at both schools, the first Andover-Exeter meet did not take place until 1889. By that time the format consisted of nine events, including a bicycle race, the winner of each event being awarded one point. Andover won by a score of 6 to 3. The third major rivalry had started. Within three years the competitive enthusiasm between the two schools had been fanned to white heat by the Phillipian and the Exonian, both published for the first time in 1878. The honor of each institution was at stake and a defeat was a slur on its reputation. As the rivalry intensified, both schools resorted to "shady" recruiting practices, which, in turn, forced the cancellation of the A-E contests twice in the 1890s.

The expansion of the athletic program at PA began with the appearance of Alfred E. Stearns (1897) and Peirson S. Page (1902) on the Andover scene. From 1902, with the completion of the Borden Gymnasium, until Dr. Page's death in 1939, the athletic offerings at the school had expanded to sixteen competitive team sports and a compulsory physical education requirement. The outstanding events of the era were the coaching exploits of Ray Shepard in track, Jim Ryley in soccer, and "Cy" Carlson in wrestling. One of Shep's proteges, Maurie Gould, broad jumped 24 feet 1½ inches in 1939 to shatter Prescott's mark made in 1914; Gould's record still stands.

The beginning of the modern era began with the construction of the Sumner Smith Hockey Rink in 1950, and the completion of the Memorial Gymnasium in 1952. Ice hockey was first played at the school in 1898, but for 52 years it had struggled to survive the perverse quixotisms of New England winners, and the record was marred by many more losses than wins. Thanks to the generosity of Mr. Smith, who not only provided the artificial surface but roofed it over seven years later, Andover hockey came into its own in the 1950s and 1960s. With the inclusion of squash courts in the Memorial Gym, competitive squash was added to the program in 1953 and prospered thereafter.

This period of Andover's athletic history includes the directorship of Shepard, Shea, Peck, Harrison, and Wennik, and the evolution of the crew programs, a new physical education requirement, the completion of the Abbot Wing to the Gymnasium complex, and the renovation of the Case Memorial Cage, as well as coeducation. With the advent of the girls in 1973 came the new additions to the athletic program of field hockey, ballet, modern dance, gymnastics, and softball. During this period the Andover ice hockey team played abroad in Scandinavia twice, marking another first in the school's athletic history.

This synopsis must best finish with an anecdote. As all the old male graduates know, the Andover-

Exeter football relationship has been dotted with various pre-game nocturnal raids. So it was with the "Andover 29," a group of prominent female athletes of the PA student body who did not take long to enter into the spirit of the A-E rivalry. Endeavoring to paint the Exeter stadium at Plimpton Field blue on the Wednesday night before the football game in 1975, they were apprehended after the fact at a "pit stop," while awaiting the return of one of their members who had to use nature's facilities. The school administration was shocked the girls were punished—not too severely—and the Athletic Director secretly applauded their mettle. Indeed, the young ladies have added a large dimension to an Andover education.

Fred H. Harrison, Instructor in History and the Social Sciences on the Samuel Harvey Taylor Foundation, was Chairman of the Athletic Department from 1955 to 1977. He retires from the PA faculty this June.

Black Arts Weekend

by Louis M. Bernieri

Andover's ideal of educating youth from every quarter is far from realization in 1983. One sees far too few Black and Hispanic students and teachers on our campus, and racism, on the rise in America, is also disturbingly prevalent at PA. The minority community's response to these harsh realities, however, has been powerful and effective over the years; one such response was the creation of Black Arts Weekend. A celebration of the vitality and richness of black culture, Black Arts Weekend has also been an attempt to educate the majority about the gifts black people can offer and have already given to American society. With the knowledge of this culture and these gifts, the hope is that a clearer and deeper understanding can be fostered.

This year, thanks to the hard work and planning of Music Department Chairman William Thomas, George Smith, the president of the Af-Lat-Am Society, and members of that society, with funding provided by the Minority Life Committee's Abbot Association grant, the 1983 Weekend was a great success. On Friday night, 18 February, the weekend opened with an inspiring lecture by Mel King, currently running for mayor of Boston and the Director of the Community Fellows program at MIT. A poignant preface to the weekend festivities, King's speech called for the need to build community in America, community welded by the bonds of justice, respect, and love among all peoples.

Indeed, the call for justice, respect, and love was the very fabric with which the Weekend was woven. Interspersed throughout the three days were films and slideshows featuring historical black figures, a photography exhibit of "150 Years of Black People at Andover," and the full length films Cry the Beloved Country, Boy of Two Worlds, The Man, Gone Are The Days, Black Like Me, and Black Orpheus. On Saturday there were performances by the Faculty Dixieland Band, the School Chamber Music group, a professional dance and music ensemble, and a student theatre troupe. Throughout the afternoon Brother Blue, the renowned poet and storyteller, enthralled audiences in the Underwood Room. Complementing the performing arts were two fine Boston artists, Ellen Banks and Robert Freeman, who opened a special exhibition of their work at the Addison Gallery. And if you could find the time, you could attend a workshop on the ancient art of mask making, or slip into the darkness of a mysterious booth to have your palm read.

The climax of the weekend came Sunday morning at the Ecumenical Service in Cochran Chapel. Led by a rousing sermon by Exeter's Reverend David Daniels, and the prayers of Reverend Zaeder and Father Gross, and inspired by the moving choruses of the Academy Gospel and Cantata Choirs and the brilliant solo singing of Terry Robinson '79, the congregation gathered to celebrate their hope for racial harmony and equality. For a few magic moments while the people sang and prayed and held hands, the community that Mel King called for on Friday night, that community united by justice, respect, and love, was realized in our little corner of the world.

Louis M. Bernieri, a member of the Committee on Minority Life, has been Instructor in English at PA since 1977.

Learners as Leaders

by Robert Lloyd

There's nothing like becoming a student again to refresh one's sense of how problematic the educational venture is. From the first days of coping with registrars, bursars, reluctant dispensers of catalogues, and elusive advisers, all the way through wordy, ambitious lectures, unshelved library books, obscurantist reading lists, and faltering seminars to exam-cramming, paper deadlines, and delayed grades, I was reminded last year that the experience of school is structured by many plans and accidents which have little to do with significant learning. By the end of the first term, I even began again to have the old school nightmare, a dream in which one suddenly confronts the necessity of taking an exam in a course one has forgotten to attend all term—and can't find the exam room. But despite these reminders that a student lives at the bottom of the hierarchical heap, it was intensely pleasing to join battle with the panoply of academia and achieve a modest victory. I was able to learn a great deal, due in large part to the circumstances of being a Klingenstein Fellow.

Started in 1977, the Klingenstein Fellowship Program brings a small group of teachers and administrators to Teacher's College, Columbia, for a year of study. The originators of the program had several objectives in mind: 1) to gather a group of independent school educators in an institution historically committed to public education; 2) to set this very small group up in such a way as to be visible—and audible—in the context of Teacher's College, with its 5000 students; 3) to expose the Fellows to a variety of perspectives on current educational problems, partly in the hope that the leadership ambitions of some, at least, would rise to the challenge of seeking solutions; and 4) to allow each Fellow to pursue a project with the full support of the resources of Teacher's College, Columbia, and Barnard, a project which will be of value to his or her school.

In addition to a stipend provided jointly by the Klingenstein Foundation and each Fellow's school, the program offers up to $5000 in tuition, inexpensive housing for those from boarding schools, and considerable leeway in planning a program. A Fellow may either concentrate on accumulating credits toward an advanced degree or—as I chose—focus on courses related to his or her project.

And, of course, the chance to live in New York City for eight months. For some, this last opportunity was the greatest. To be within easy distance of Broadway, Lincoln Center, and many famed museums, as well as the less visible ferment of New York City culture in all its varieties of yeast, is an extraordinary experience, and an education in itself.

So much for the brochure. What did I learn about the Klingenstein Theme, leadership in a world of educational problems?

John Dewey's ghost still walks the halls of Teacher's College, not as a conscious eminence or informing spirit, but as a radical vibration, echoing his basic dictum, "respect the child." At first subliminal, the answer to the question of leadership slowly resolved itself, in my mind, to an image which inverts the traditional hierarchical picture: the basic educational leaders are students. The resonance of a school comes from the energy with which students grow, create their learning, and seek truth, if only because in these bodies and brains is the energy to learn concentrated. Without energetic study-ers, a school tends toward a condition of dormancy in which, as in a dreary course, time is marked and passed, rather than urgently savored in intellectual and aesthetic adventure.

Once one sees the hierarchy turned on its head in this particular way, one sees that a school depends for renewal on yearly injections of new youth—or even, as in my case last year, of imitation youth. Teachers, administrators, and school systems feed on discrete chunks of student initiative, and hereby demonstrate their followership. If educational leadership comes from the bottom up, what adjustment is suggested to our more habitual perceptions of how schools become effective? Closer to home, from this perspective we can see Andover's policy of admitting significant numbers of students at every grade level—fully a third of the students are new each year—is contributing to the school's intellectual vitality. In what further ways might we modify our view of Andover to take advantage of this potential leadership?

Administrative fashions come and go. In the early '70s many schools deliberately sought to engage students in designing the structure of their education, not only in the reer selection of their courses but also in running the non-academic side of things—governance, discipline, social functions. In more recent years, administrative fashion has tended to be more restrictive and directive, especially in the academic program, with fewer electives, more requirements, and tougher advice, hammered home with heightened anxiety concerning college admissions and career plans. Granted that these fashions have in some part responded to perceived changes in student desires, neither has been primarily directed toward recognizing and fostering student leadership in learning.

Reverting to my experience of being a student last year, I offer a list of some of the ways in which I believe a student can exert learning leadership, with the thought that we who say we lead might foster them:

1) The bulk of one's learning occurs when one is alone—away from class, away from friends, away from distractions—confronting and constructing one's future mind. This is a concentrated, solitary occupation. The issue is to follow through, in whatever directions suggest themselves.

2) The modes of this solitary construction are various: memorizing, understanding relationships, reading and notetaking, drawing, writing, revising, and many others. By learning how and when to change modes, and how to find completion, one asserts one's independence.

3) The stuff of learning remains perceptual: all one's senses are required to define what is problematic in the world and worth investigating. Learning is, finally, a synthesis of intellectual and aesthetic experiences, which can be made honestly only by the individual.

4) A little anxiety motivates, a lot deceives. One should distrust pomposity, arrogance, obscurity, and threats of force.

5) The formal structure of a school's requirements has only a peripheral function in learning: it can sometimes be a support, sometimes a distraction, and one should choose which.

6) Starting with avoidance of self-deceit and a commitment to honesty, a student will learn more from a teacher who thinks of him or her as a good student—a good study-er—than from one who doesn't. Human nature being what it is, a teacher will think of one as a good student if he is thought of as a good teacher.

Although this list has a conclusive sound, it raises for me—as a teacher once more—many questions, which resolve into one: on the face of it, the school expects me to “lead” my classes; how shall I translate this injunction so that students will, as I did last year, lead their own education?

Robert Lloyd, Instructor in Art on the Independence Teaching Foundation, has been a member of the PA faculty since 1962, and served as Chairman of the Art Department from 1973 to 1981. He neglects to mention that the Klingenstein Fellowship Program is highly selective, and to be chosen is a considerable honor. The result of his Fellowship is a 258-page book of essays on architecture.

Alex at Andover

Writer Alexander Theroux reflects on his first five years at PA.

I was appointed to the Roger Murray Chair as writer-in-residence at Phillips Academy in 1978 where in the process of five years of teaching—my God, sixteen years in front of the classroom!—I discovered what it was like to be a teenager again. I found once more what long I thought I'd lost in the compromises and catastrophes of real life and in a way reclaimed in the tiny trusts and gentle generosity of spirit, whether in the written composition or rugged competition of prep school life, the miracle of youth. How high the highs! How low the lows!

Theirs nevertheless is a perpetual Spring—even on those bleak winter mornings when, filing into rooms colder than Pluto's hell, they sit bunched in the astonishment of being asked for that paper on Smollett's Peregrine Pickle or Greek irregular verbs or that set of quadratic equations they never got to finish for leaving their book on the Trombly 11:05 long on its way to Methuen. "And what should I grade you, Stratford?" "Whatever you think right, sir." "Will this happen again?" "Oh no, sir," says he, pressing his big light-shelled glasses to his nose, and a smile comes out of the center of him able to warm Bulfinch itself.

I love my students. They have taught me. I've seen geniuses and jokers, sloth and splendor, and in the trivial exchanges of stage and stooge I've often wondered which role was mine. I learned their language, which in its working vocabulary includes words like "dweeb" and "choice" and "lumbo." I've been often overpowered by more spontaneous energy than the zany climax of an Uncle Wiggily. I've had more reassurances of promised homework, oaths and excuses of Stygian density, than ever I could count. And yet I've had the privilege of seeing in their pink cheeks, clear eyes, and bright faces and heads with hair rising in wings above their ears the best by far of what's to be.

A special study, which I do not propose to conduct, would reveal in the papers and stories and assignments I've read over the years some of the dearest responses to what it means to be alive than all the sociological surveys and psychiatric profiles in America. And for all the misspellings, crossed-out words, and ungrammatical howlers in papers come my way—ragged, wrinkled, ink-blotted, and looking often for the life of them as if they'd been run through a crimping machine—I've also come to see that, more than academic "punching in," they are often the heartfelt expression of sensitive people who with the power of taking seven mile steps live much closer to their dreams than their deficiencies. It has what in fact so often redeemed the time for me when staying up long after my cat's retired, squinting under my gooselamp at things like "The Adventures of A Penny" or "Mud Imagery in Wordsworth's The Prelude" or "My Summer in Chin-coteague." And I proceed to reflect that while others of my age are whiling away their lives running steam shovels or working a micro-computer at Computron or managin Safeways or taking tolls at Perth Amboy, I can get a heart transplan every morning of my life teaching Yeats to girls whose radiance out-shines the blushes of dawn, and to boys, their collarpoints sticking up like the sails of Mediterranean felucas, who surely must grow up to be President!

There's madness and measure. My pen is sharp, and I have the jeweler's eye for a dangling modifier and split infinitive. And God knows we have here at Andover no end of reports, advisers, probation slips, attendance reports, cluster meetings

DC's, and the like. We size up, estimate, rule, and take measurements every hour on the hour with geometric trim, never fear. At times, however, too often, I worry about madness—don't misunderstand me, I'm for it. No, I'm not talking about encouraging drugs or experimental marriage or drinking absinthe on a lost weekend in Marbelle. But teaching isn't species classification. It's a mission, not a trade. And sometimes I feel, especially in this day and age, an era too often of accumulating inhumanity, that too many teachers—the type who see education as a “tag, you're it!” expedition—insist on the utilitarian aspect of the curriculum and tend, in failing to cultivate the life of the imagination, to dismiss it as being beyond the province, never mind the right, of the teenage boy and girl when it is their chiefest faculty. We must educate is my point, not train, and if that means a sudden flowering of writers, painters, nuns, and monks—well, so be it. We've a surfeit of CPA's and lawyers and systems analysts, haven't we?

I'm only talking of vision! There are Paul Gauguins here, Pachelbels, Oliviers, Mother Teresas, Jeffersons, incipient Ghandis!

Be consoled? I'm not advocating the adoption of finger-painting over Latin. I'm only saying that in these beautiful girls and boys with their Izod shirts, sweet dispositions, and copper-bingled heads beat hearts as big as Boston, and the dreams and possibilities of all they could be can neither be regulated nor riddled away by sine curve of sextant or square. Ventilation always goes hand in hand with insulation. The tendency we all have is never to take teenagers seriously. I remember at that age constantly being told where to go, how to go, and when—that addition was thrift, subtraction spending, and multiplication a condition hinting darkly at the sexual excesses with which my mind was supposedly teeming. I percolated through the Medford Public Schools hiding my secret dreams and with dwindling destiny and bum hand went on to learn the conjugation of timeo and the dates of Pepin the Short and what a ziggurat was, but I never realized, was never taught, that inside me was a special little creature with its own weight, tempo, tint, timbre, and scent waving to get out—that school was as much a process of shedding as putting on, a rite de passage often best taken by examining the nakedness of who I was as opposed to donning layer upon layer of the lead-mantled mackinaws too many people see as required academic trappings.

Schooling can never be only cognitive—there are vigor and vision, prayer and piety involved as well. Students are not simply pinatas to be filled with commodity and then bashed to see what spills out. I believe in the claim to equity between the subject and the person putting on the shoe. There's a lesson for us all in the “Lee Shore” chapter of Moby-Dick which warns us all of the dangers in safety.

Over these last few years I myself have attended Phillips Academy as a youth. And I have got a second chance in life every time when looking across the playing fields, under the Bell Tower, and in the classrooms I have found students opening The Divine Comedy for the first time or scoring a goal against Exeter or walking arm in arm along the elm-shaded walls in appreciation of all they have, for this is testament to the purity of free thought and the chance, in winning the esteem of themselves, of knowing what the wonderful, dangerous, soul-disturbing elevation of true education means, the opportunity—as Robert Lowell once beautifully put it —“to april.”

Alexander Theroux is a member of the PA English Department. From 1978 to 1982 he was the Roger F. Murray Instructor in English and Writer in Residence. His fiction includes Three Wogs and Darconville's Cat.

RETIREMENTS

Fred H. Harrison '38

Ted Harrison came to Andover as a lower middler day student in 1935. This June, close to fifty years later, he will retire after a distinguished thirty-one year career on the Phillips Academy faculty. During this time, Ted has dedicated his life to working for Phillips Academy. He has prided himself on his "triple threat" status as a teacher, housemaster, and coach for all of his years here. He believes strongly in the triple threat and its importance for the school today. Ted's loyalty to the institution and to the students has always guided him. On each of his sabbaticals, Ted remained an integral part of the community. In 1965-66 he coached hockey while attending Harvard, and in 1977-78 he organized the Bicentennial Campaign in the Southeastern United States while in Florida. Phillips Academy is a stronger institution because of his work and support.

Ted has always been an academician first. He believes in the need for quality teaching and the importance of the teacher/student relationship. He taught English for nine years before moving over to the History Department in 1960. Having earlier taught the senior courses English 4 and History 4, in more recent years he has focused on the History of Victorian England and sections of American History. To all of his teaching, he has brought an encyclopedic knowledge and a lively wit. He demanded a great deal from himself, for he respected the material and the students. He was always ready to explain the intricacies of Thomas Hardy or Alexander Hamilton and eager to advise students to explore the questions fully. Most recently, he has been a constant source of information for colleagues in the History Department. Whether it be a question about the "death sentence" clause of the Public Utilities Act or the details of Marbury v. Madison, Ted has been able to supply perspective and insight. He relishes the role of helping both his students and his colleagues.

He brought this same dedication to housecounseling. In all of his years here, he was a dorm master.

He enjoyed this relationship, for it provided him with a better opportunity to know his students. In the large dorms when the "smoking lamp" was lit, the students were welcomed into his home. Most recently in Newman House, Ted's six residents have always been treated as an extended family. His directness and concern have made Ted a well-respected and well-liked house counselor. Ted can remember his dorm residents and their years with uncanny accuracy. Many of his earlier students now number as parents of recent Newman House residents. Newman House has been a special dorm since the Harrisons moved in.

Ted shaped the Athletic Department more than any other individual in Andover history. He served as Athletic Director from 1955 to 1977, and during this time he incorporated his philosophy of 100% student participation into the athletic program. He helped introduce many non-athletes to the rewards of exercise and team play. He also modernized the athletic and physical education program and facilities. He oversaw the introduction of girls' athletics and coeducational sports. He helped plan the Cage renovation and the gymnasium renovation, which now give Phillips Academy the most effective athletic complex in secondary education.

Most students and alumni know Ted through his coaching role. Ted coached football, hockey, and baseball—with the dedication and expertise of a truly superior athlete. Ted brought to coaching the athletic skills which earned him eight varsity letters at Yale—a real love of athletics. He taught the importance of fundamentals and the need to work on individual weaknesses. Ted was a taskmaster who demanded and got total commitment from each of his players. It was a rare individual who escaped Ted's critical eye and verbal admonition, "You've got to be a donkey!" However, he always pointed out the path that led away from continued long-eared status. The honors accorded Ted testify to his coaching success, but the love and respect his players have for him are the true measures of his effectiveness. Every year the Alumni Hockey Game attracts a loyal group of ex-players who come back to skate and renew their ties with Ted. He gave them more than expertise and success; he gave them an understanding of their ability and of themselves. He made the effort to keep in contact with them and offered help whenever possible. Ted was much more than a coach to his players. He provided a model of leadership and a sense of integrity to his role on the athletic fields. Everyone who played for him knew that Ted gave himself totally to the team. Ted made his athletes earn his respect, for he rarely passed out compliments. However, when you did receive one you knew you had deserved it. A direct "Good job" was enough.

Marge and Ted will live for a year in Westport, Massachusetts, before moving to North Carolina. The energy lavished on Phillips Academy for so many years will be redirected towards more personal goals. Both will continue their athletic interests—golf, tennis, and bicycling; and they will be researching a book on John C. Calhoun's wife, Floride, and her role in history. Both will stay active and enrich any community where they settle, and their efforts for education will not cease. Ted is a consultant for Connecticut College's drive to build an athletic complex.

I for one will miss my daily association with Marge and Ted. Ted has been my coach, mentor, colleague, and friend for as long as I can remember. He is a special person who has given so much of himself and enriched so many people's lives that Andover is fortunate to count him as an alumnus, and I feel fortunate to count him as a friend.

—Christopher J. Gurry '66

Marjorie A. Harrison

A kaleidoscope best describes Marge: coach, mother, hostess, housemaster's wife, and the shivering hockey coach's wife seen huddled in a corner of the hockey rink nervously cheering the PA boys. Marge is a "people" person who doesn't need them, as the song goes, as much as she serves them. One cannot think of Marge without images of her working with and entertaining alumni, students, and their parents. Serving has not been a conscious effort on her part, but her main interest and love. The bright red bike Marge rides around campus today and her blue coaching jacket initialed MAH are expressions of the warm affection held for her by "her girls."

In 1968, when the Harrisons' three daughters, Midge, Nancy, and Beth, were tucked in the Andover public schools during the day, Marge started work at Abbot Academy. After a short stint behind a desk and typewriter she moved to the athletic department to assume coaching duties in field hockey, softball, and basketball and to conduct exercise classes. The merger found her coaching varsity field hockey and softball and JV basketball for our Andover girls. Two of her most outstanding field hockey teams were those of '72, captained by Liz Roberts; and '75, captained by Pam Lord. Going into their last game against Exeter, the '72 team had an undefeated season, so hopes were high for a complete sweep. As the tense game progressed, one player wearing Exeter red stood out as the star, shooting two of the three Exeter goals against PA's two—Marge and Ted's daughter Beth had saved the day for her school, Exeter, and sent Andover down in narrow defeat.

A few years ago a worried Andover Administration watched operational costs rising rapidly; a small part of the solution was an all-school Student Work Program. Marge took over the tremendous responsibility of organization, assigning each student to a duty covering such tasks as cleaning dormitories, office work, and mail delivery. As head of this program she was in close contact with Cluster custodians and staff members who supervised student work. With a student body of over 1200, imagine the absences to be checked and the conflicts to be resolved.

Alumni hockey game time, graduation and reunions, Alumni Council and Trustee weekends, invariably found Marge and Ted acting as hosts in their home. Over the years their welcoming spirit has drawn many alumni and parents back to Andover and generated substantial and important support for the school during the Bicentennial Campaign.

When asked to describe his wife in just one word, Ted responded "immaculate." "She keeps the house so neat I have to hang onto or hide my morning newspaper so she doesn't throw it away before I've finished." Right, Ted. Several of us have tried to keep our kitchens as spic and span as Marge's. Not possible. Hats off and many thanks to an energetic and well organized woman!

Thomas Rees

Thomas Rees joined the faculty of Phillips Academy as a chemistry instructor in the fall of 1960. He has taught chemistry at all levels, and his coaching assignments have included club soccer, the rifle team, and the pole vault. In 1969 and 1970 Tom organized the Phillips Academy delegation to the march on Washington to protest the Vietnam War. He was also a resident director of the Washington Intern program. For many years Tom protected the welfare and safety of the school in doing an outstanding job as the school fire marshall.

Tom was born and raised in Omaha, Nebraska, where he graduated from Central High School. He then earned his bachelor's degree in chemical engineering at Yale.

During World War II he served overseas in the Army Chemical Corps in India. After the war he returned to Yale University to earn his doctor's degree in organic chemistry. There he met his wife Caroline.

They have four children, who have all graduated from Abbot or Phillips Academies. Tom, Jr. '67 is married and practicing law in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. Dorothea '69 is living and working in Somerville, Massachusetts. William '71 is married and living and working in New Britain, Connecticut. Jonathan '81 is a sophomore at Brown University.

When asked what he had enjoyed the most during his years at Andover, Tom readily answered, "my classroom teaching." Tom has made a strong contribution to improving the quality of the chemistry laboratory experience of Andover students. He has devised original experiments of his own, but he has also spent hours improving the instructions and techniques of experiments to make them "student proof," thus insuring good laboratory experience.

Tom's knowledge and technique of chemistry have found a practical outlet in his hobbies of making dandelion wine and pecan pralines. Tom and Caroline Rees will be missed on Andover hill. They have been professional colleagues, good friends, and on more than one occasion, a goad to our conscience.

—Ronn N. Minne

'Twas on a brisk November morn
In Omaha our Tom was born.
As he matured at Central High
The realm of Science caught his eye.

At dear old Yale 'twas Chemistry
That soon became his dish of tea.
With tutelage from Mosey King
Tom shone in Eli's boxing ring.
In World War Two his expertise
In India stalled the Japanese.
Now Cupid's arrows smote his heart
Dear Caroline became a part
Of Tom's rich life, and soon a brood
Three sons, a daughter, all ensued.
True—industry, development
And research were his element,
But teaching was his strongest suit,
And at PA to its pursuit
He gladly turned, though oft distraught

By left-hand crystals Pasteur caught
As Fire Marshal, Intern Host,
Exchange Professor, and the most Effective maker of fine wine
From flowers of the dandelion
He merits now our warmest praise
And to him now we glasses raise
And wish him well—that he may thrive

Well past his present sixty-five.

Richard Stockton MacNeish

It may seem of only modest importance to the layman, but Richard Stockton ("Scotty") MacNeish's discovery of what is, so far, evidence of the earliest corn in the New World has proved to be one of the more significant events in modern archaeology. In 1949 he found three tiny corn cobs tied with agave string in La Perra Cave in Mexico; carbon-dating identified them as being 4445 years old (plus or minus 280 years) —and the discovery changed his life. It won him instant recognition in the profession, and gave a direction to his entire career.

No wonder, then, that his chief interest as an archeologist has been The Origins of Agriculture and Settled Life— the title of his newest book, to be published shortly by Oklahoma Press. His thesis is simply that the earliest village life could not begin without the mastery of agriculture.

Scotty MacNeish has been Director of PA's Robert S. Peabody Foundation for Archaeology since 1969, becoming Senior Research Associate a year ago when he relinquished the directorship to become Professor of Archaeology at Boston University. Ever since he earned his B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. at the University of Chicago, Scotty has published literally hundreds of articles, monographs, reviews, and books. All of this publishing has been a wonder in itself, since Scotty spends a large portion of every year on expeditions, usually to Mexico and Central America. So far he has spent 5935 days on expedition sites, which works out to more than sixteen years away from home.

Those sixteen years have had their share of lighter moments— like Scotty trying to explain to the U.S. Customs inspector at Miami International Airport that the peculiar contents of that little plastic bag were desiccated human feces over four thousand years old, found in a Mexican cave, and of immense importance to science and scholarship.

As Scotty officially retires from the PA faculty, he continues his role as Professor of Archaeology at Boston University. And already he is making plans for the two grants he has pending: the National Science Foundation grant for work in Belize, Central America, and a National Endowment for the Humanities grant to write four volumes about that work. As we go to press, that is just where he has been for three months. Some retirement!

CAMPUS NEWS

Winter Dreams

If the New England winter has any disadvantages, one hardly has time to notice in the richness and busyness of Andover's cultural offerings. Four days after the opening of the winter term the Music Department hosted its Chamber Music Weekend, with students coming from all over New England to practice and perform. The result was a three-hour concert on Sunday, 9 January, presenting twenty-two chamber ensembles on a brilliant winter afternoon. For the rest of the term the Music Department continued offering at least one concert a week by chamber groups, the orchestra, the concert band, the jazz band, the Music Faculty, or sundry choral groups. One of the most impressive, in mid-February, was the selection from Haydn's oratorio The Four Seasons, with choreography added.

On 14 January at an all-school assembly the Academy celebrated Martin Luther King's birthday with a moving speech by English Instructor Elwyn Sykes, who stressed King's principles of love and nonviolence. One month later the Af-Lat-Am Society presented Black Arts Weekend, three days of magnificent performances; we urge you to read Lou Bernieri's account elsewhere in this issue which met on Sunday and Wednesday evenings in the winter. Focusing on "Nuclear Holocaust or Survival," the Symposium featured four lectures, three movies, and weekly small-group discussions with faculty.

In February the adult women of Phillips Academy presented their own art show at the Addison Gallery called "A Show of Hands"—all the works designed and executed by the artists. The works included photography and painting, quilts and rugs and furniture, wall hangings, professional graphics, drawings, calligraphy, and even a diary of extraordinary literary and historical merit.

Greg Luke as Hamlet

Hamlet

It is a peculiar phenomenon of many Shakespeare productions—professional as well as amateur—that they provide a deeper experience for those on stage than for those in the audience. It is no one's fault in particular; Shakespeare simply offers a challenge which is difficult to do justice to.

We are happy to report, however, that whatever joys the cast had on GW stage last 25-26 February, the audience of Hamlet knew that they had seen acting so memorable that it will probably become legend at PA. The entire cast was of high quality, but the directing (by Theatre Department Chairman Harold Owen '43, assisted by English Department Chairman Jean St.

Pierre and English Instructor Ann Harper) was inspired; and the lead—senior Greg Luke from Aurora, Colorado—was simply brilliant. Instead of conveying the usual signal that the greatest struggle has been memorizing the lines, the PA cast gave that professional illusion of spontaneity—lines thoroughly mastered, scenes played with feeling and affection. Since Hal Owen had the perspicacity to record the entire dress rehearsal on video tape, we hope alumni will be able to judge for themselves when they return to Andover.

Faculty

As some department chairmen rotate off their five-year terms, Headmaster Donald McNemar has announced the following appointments: Douglas Crabtree replaces John Richard Lux as chairman of the Math Department; Hale Sturges replaces Vincent Pascucci as Division Chairman of Languages; Natalie Schorr follows Catherine Kirkland as head of the French Department; Rebecca McCann replaces Angel Rubio in Spanish; and English Instructor Paul Kalkstein becomes Assistant Director of Athletics, to succeed Joseph Wennik as Director in the fall of 1984. Carl Krumpke and his wife Elizabeth become Dean and Associate Dean of the Abbot Cluster, replacing Carroll and Elaine Bailey, who move to Newman House.

Mathematics Instructor George Best has been made chairman of the committee that develops the math achievement tests for the College Boards. History and Social Sciences Department Chairman Thomas L. Lyons has been selected for a committee of thirteen teachers of U.S. history (eight from secondary schools, five from universities) who will design and develop sample instructional materials for eleventh and twelfth grade courses in constitutional history. The program, funded by NEH, is called the American Historical Association's Constitutional History in the Schools Project.

Kelly Wise, who a year ago finished his five-year term as chairman of the English Department, and who this year is serving as Dean of Faculty during John Richards' sabbatical, still has made time to pursue his career as photographer. He has just had another one-man show at the Andover Art Gallery in town, writes a weekly review of photography shows in the Boston Globe, and has just this winter won another signal honor. A volume called Contemporary Photographers, published by the London firm of St. Martin's Press, has listed him as one of the top 650 photographers in the world, as selected by a panel of international scholars in photography. The book includes at least one picture by each honoree photographer, with a list of all his major shows and collections, and an extended biography.

Dr. John Doykos '55 addresses the Merrimack Valley Parents

Business

The Trustees have set tuition and fees for 1983-84 boarding students at $8900, up only 8.5% as opposed to 14% for each of the last two years. Day students will pay $6750.

To underscore the importance of house counseling, the school will pay all house counselors a stipend above their normal salary, beginning next September. The size of the stipend will depend on the size of the dorm.

At the end of January a group of PA parents from the Merrimack Valley area organized the Merrimack Valley Andover-Abbot Association, with an initial meeting of over one hundred participants in PA's Underwood Room. The steering committee of Joanna and Jack Doykos '55, Pauline and Bob Kellan, Susanne and Arthur Neyman '54, Mimi Ganem Reeder '57 and Larry Reeder, and Barbara and Jerry Winer will be in touch with all residents of the region.

Just as the Andover Bulletin goes to press, the 83-year-old Argentinian author Jorge Luis Borges will visit PA for three days beginning on 1 May, thanks to the persuasive skills of Spanish Department Chairman Angel Rubio. Borges is one of the most distinguished and most honored writers alive today. We shall report to you in the summer edition. □

by James Cohan '83

For the winter term Andover athletics finished with a record of 72-60-1. The greatest contributors to this record were the Alpine and Nordic boys and girls ski teams with their combined record of 9-0.

The girls swimming team won the Interschols by edging out Exeter in the 400-yard free-style relay. This win over Exeter capped off another fantastic season for the girl swimmers with their 8-1 record.

The girls gymnastics team had a fine season at 6-1. Boys track finished their 6-2 season by outscoring Exeter at the Exeter gym for the first time since 1959. The girls hockey team finished their season at 8-3. The fleet-footed girls outskated the Exeter girls twice, 4-0 and 3-1.

Squash star Scott Gwozdz, with his 8-2 record including a clutch come-from-behind victory against his St. Paul's opponent, gave the Blue one of its seven wins. Unfortunately the Blue lost five to very tough college JV teams

The boys gymnastic team had a 3-3 record. Co-captains Matt Gilligan and Chip Gonsalves, Vinnie Walker and Steve Shrestinian all broke school records.

The girls squash team finished at 4-7 as Whitney Stewart, the number three girls squash player in

Alicia Levin '84 wins her Exeter squash match 3-0

New England, led the team. The boys hockey team finished their season at 9-11-1. Greg Diffley and Joey Ross were integral in two wins over Exeter.

Blaise Zerega, two-year wrestling captain, overshadowed the disappointing 2-6 record with his own 8-0-1 record. Zerega capped his excellent season by winning the Interschols.

Although they started out the season strongly, injuries doomed the boys basketball season to a 4-10 record, and girls basketball finished 2-8. □

VOLUNTEER WEEKEND

The Office of Academy Resources is planning a Volunteer Weekend. It is scheduled for Friday, 30 September, and Saturday, 1 October 1983, here on campus. You will receive information by mail in early summer, together with an invitation and a format for the weekend. This meeting will expand the former Class Agent weekend, and will include, together with the Class Agents, Class Secretaries, Reunion Chairmen, Regional Association officers, Planned Giving Committee members, Corporate Committee members, and Addison Campaign volunteers (Major Gift Committee, Special Gift Committee, and Regional Chairmen) among others. So, if you are an Andover volunteer in any of the above categories, you can look forward to receiving information in early summer. We hope that you will make every effort to attend and make plans to do so now.

We are excited about the prospects of this meeting, giving all volunteers an opportunity to meet and work together, as well as to plan within their individual committees for 1983-84.

DEATHS

Henry W. Hobson '10*

The Right Reverend Henry W. Hobson '10 died in Cincinnati, Ohio, on 9 February at the age of 91. He was Bishop Emeritus of the Episcopal Church for the Diocese of Southern Ohio, and for nineteen years he had served as the President of the Board of Trustees of Phillips Academy.

Following Andover, he attended Yale, from which he received a B.A. degree in 1914 and Episcopal Theological School (Cambridge, Massachusetts), from which he received a B.D. degree in 1920. In the years between attendance at those institutions, he served as an infantry major in World War I, winning the Distinguished Service Cross in 1918.

Throughout his long career in the church, he served well both his school and his college. At Yale he was a long-time leader in the Alumni fund as well as Class Agent of his class of 1914.

His contributions to Andover were many. He was elected to the Board of Trustees in 1937 and ten years later was elected its President, succeeding Henry L. Stimson in that important post. From 1947 until becoming Trustee Emeritus in 1966, he led the Trustees with balanced judgement and wisdom. He was equally helpful to the school's new young headmaster, John M. Kemper, who at Bishop Hobson's retirement party said in part:

When he became President of the Board, he was instrumental in establishing the first formal salary scale for the faculty. He also very promptly eliminated Sunday meetings of the Board. He has always preached at least once a year to the school and has always directed a few well-chosen words to each graduating class as he has presented them their diplomas. He was at his best the year his grandson graduated. He was as aware of Henry Hobson III's nature and exploits as were any of the boy's teachers. After his grandfather got through with him on Commencement Day, the youngest Henry paid for his sins many times over amidst the laughter of his entire class. Those who have attended Trustee meetings with him will never forget his opening prayers or his extraordinary gift of knowing the moment—never too soon and never too late—when the discussion had run its course and it was time for a decision.

Unspoken in those remarks, but of equal importance, were the personal counsel and friendship which he gave to Headmaster Kemper. The leader of a school or college has few people in whom he can confide and from whom he will receive objective advice. Henry Hobson filled that role for John Kemper, and he filled it well both for the Headmaster and for the school.

It is fitting, therefore, that one week before Bishop Hobson died, he received a letter from R.L. Ireland III '38 and written from the Trustee Room. Wrote Ireland,

It is mid-afternoon on January 21st, and we are sitting on the third floor of George Washington Hall in the hallowed Trustees' Board Room. The sun's late afternoon rays are slanting through the west windows on either side of the portrait of Tom Cochran. I am in my usual chair, at the intersection of the long table and the shorter table that makes the "T." Your successor twice removed, Mel Chapin, is seated in your former chair to my right, and today's Johnnie Kemper, Don McNemar, is beside him at the head of the table.

So the ladies are new, but the agenda is much the same as always ...

When I achieved enough seniority to pick my own more or less "regular" seat, I purposely sat with my back to the fireplace so that I look almost directly at the excellent portrait of you. If the staff forgets to turn on the light over the frame, I rectify the mistake and sit there looking at you and having you keep your watchful eyes on me. Samuel Phillips Hall almost fills the window to the left of you, and I have a beautiful view of Bulfinch through the window to the right of you. The campus is as lovely as ever today, covered with a pristine blanket of snow.

It was also typical, and fitting, to learn that Hobson replied to Ireland's letter just two days before he died.

Present at the funeral service in Cincinnati on 12 February were Melville Chapin '36, President of the Board; Donald W. McNemar, Headmaster; and Frederic A. Stott '36, Advisor to the Headmaster. Present also in the packed church were many Cincinnati citizens paying tribute to a man whose record of community service matched that for the church or for his school or college. He was also well recognized with honorary degrees from Kenyon College, Yale University, Miami University (Ohio), Ohio State University, Marietta College (Ohio), and Xavier University (Ohio).

He is survived by his wife Edmonia; a son, Henry W., Jr. '39; two daughters, Margery H. Thomas and Katherine H. Sturtevant; and several grandchildren.

Upon graduation he worked for the investment firms of Liggett, Hichborn, and Company; Redmond and Company; and Wellington and Company, which he joined one year after its founding in 1925. During World War I he was attached to the Fourth French Army as an inspector of French artillery, and he attained the rank of captain. After the War he attended Trinity College in Cambridge, England, under a program for qualified American soldiers. He was a member of the Century Association, the Down Town Association, the Grolier Club, and the Edgartown Yacht Club. Mr. Haynes was a fellow of the Pierpont Morgan Library and served as past-president of the Huguenot Society. As treasurer and trustee, he was active in the Presbyterian church on a local and national level. His wife, Edith (Williams) Haynes, died in 1978. He is survived by his children, Elizabeth Haynes, 1040 Park Avenue, New York, NY 10028, and Mr. Robert B. Haynes, 300 West End Avenue, New York, NY.

Raymond F. Snell, La Jolla, CA; November 15, 1982. While at PA Mr. Snell played on the baseball, soccer, and basketball teams and was a class officer. Upon graduation he entered Yale University, receiving his degree in 1918. He was self-employed on Wall Street as a financial consultant until his retirement. His military service was with the 301st field artillery as a 2nd Lieutenant. Mr. Snell always maintained close contact with PA and his class as an Alumni Council Member, Class Agent, and Class Secretary. He was also a trustee of the Robert Sterling Clark Foundation, Inc. and the C.A.L. Foundation, Incorporated. His son, Parker '38, predeceased him. He is survived by his wife, Valerie Dade Snell, 733 Kline Street, La Jolla, CA 92037.

1917 George Storer Baldwin, Chestnut Hill, MA; February 7, 1983. Mr. Baldwin began his business career after his graduation from Harvard in 1921, with the brokerage firm of Burr Gannett & Co. in Boston, becoming a partner. In 1942 he joined the firm of Tucker Anthony & Co., Boston, and the following year he moved to C.H.

Sprague & Son Inc., where he became director and secretary for the company until his retirement in 1963.

Mr. Baldwin was associated with many charitable organizations including trusteeship of the Family Service Association of Greater Boston, Director of the United Community Services of Greater Boston, as well as serving as Member of Corporation, Massachusetts General Hospital. He was parks commissioner and playgrounds commissioner for the town of Brookline from 1937 until 1955. Mr. Baldwin was a treasurer of the Harvard Alumni Association from 1936 until 1954, and was a former president of the Alumni Association of Phillips Academy, also serving Andover as alumni Trustee and alumni Council Member.

A former director of Rockland Atlas National Bank of Boston, he subsequently became a member of the Directors Advisory Board of the State Street Bank and Trust Co. and Honorary Trustee, Brookline Savings Bank.

His interest in sports included sailing (in 1978 he sailed from Nantucket to Europe on his yawl Boomerang) and curling. He was elected president of the Seignory Curling Club of Montebello Province, Quebec, and he was doyen (captain) of the Curling Brotherhood of the Royal Montreal club and of The Country Club, Brookline. He leaves his wife, Mollie (Cromwell); four sons, George S. Jr., PA '45; Robert H. PA '48; Todd; Wendell; and eleven grandchildren.

Robert T. Stevens, Edison, NJ; January 31, 1983. After graduation from Andover, Mr. Stevens attended Yale University. While still enrolled at Yale, he was sent to Jackson, NC, where he served as 2nd Lieutenant in the field artillery during World War I, training newly drafted recruits. This began sixty years of service to the U.S. Army, a service which began even before his graduation from Andover where he was a uniformed cadet "digging trenches and practicing in them, shooting at a rifle range set up over in Fry Village," he remembered recently. Armistice was declared before he could be sent to Europe, and he returned to New Haven, graduating with an M.A. degree in 1921. He entered the family textile firm, The J.P. Stevens Co. immediately after graduation. He was elected company president in 1929 upon the death of his father, John P. Stevens, Sr., and served as president until 1969, during which time the company became one of the largest and most diversified industrial firms in the world.

After the bombing of Pearl Harbor, Mr. Stevens left the textile business to become a colonel in the Quartermaster Corp, and for the last two years of the war he was Deputy Director of Purchases. He was awarded the Legion of Merit and the Distinguished Service Medal. In 1945 he returned to J.P. Stevens as Chairman of the board.

President Dwight Eisenhower appointed Robert Stevens his Secretary of the Army in 1953 (a position he held during the Korean War and during the McCarthy era when he was called upon to fend off attacks made on U.S. Army officers) until 1955, at which time he was awarded the Exceptional civilian Service Medal of the U.S. Air Force, the Navy's Distinguished Public Service Award, and the Medal of Freedom. He was Civilian Aide-at-Large to the Secretary of the Army and served from 1961 through 1963 as a Member of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy. Mr. Stevens received the Military Academy's Sylvanus Thayer Award ... "As a distinguished public servant and industrial leader, the Honorable Robert T. Stevens has rendered a lifetime of outstanding service to the United States and its citizens... and has exemplified, through his accomplishments in the national interest and manner of achievement, the ideals of West Point expressed in the motto, 'Duty, Honor, Country.'" Dwight Eisenhower, Douglas MacArthur, John Foster Dulles are among other former recipients of the Thayer Award.

Besides his distinguished record of service to his country, Robert Stevens served as Chairman of the Laymen's Committee of Religion in American Life, and as Chairman of the Non-Secretarian Committee of the United Jewish Appeal of Greater New York. He was a trustee of the George C. Marshall Research Foundation, a member of the Directors Advisory Council of the Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, a Director Emeritus of the General Electric Company and served as a trustee of the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Kentucky. He was a director and past president of the American Textile Manufacturers Institute, Inc. In addition to his A.B. and honorary M.A. degrees from Yale, Mr. Stevens held many other degrees and awards. He is survived by his wife Dorothy Goodwin Whitney Stevens and their four sons, Robert T. Jr. '42; Whitney '44; William G. and Thomas E. His burial was at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

1918 Mitchell Gratwick, M.D., Philadelphia, PA; October 20, 1982. After Phillips he attended Harvard, where he was on the varsity football, hockey, and track teams, and was a champion boxer. After graduation in 1922 he was an assistant dean for freshmen at Harvard, leaving there in 1928 to become headmaster at Nichols School in Buffalo, NY. In 1936 Dr. Gratwick earned a medical degree at John Hopkins University. After four years at various hospitals he became the headmaster of the Hackley School in Tarrytown, NY. In 1950 he became headmaster of the Horace Mann Country Day School for Boys and remained in that position until his retirement in 1968. While at Horace Mann he started a summer session nature program of outdoor living and survival techniques. Other innovations Dr. Gratwick introduced were Russian, navigation, communications, and meteorology as electives for juniors and seniors. Dr. Gratwick was married to Katherine Perkins, who died in 1930. He is survived by his second wife, Barbara Burnett, 9500 Marstan Road, Philadelphia, PA 19118; three sons, Harry, Joel, and Geoffrey PA '61; two daughters, Katherine Baker and Jane Bryden, and eleven grandchildren.

After PA he went Harvard, graduating in 1925 and then on to Harvard Business School, where he received his degree in 1927.

He went to work for the Old Colony Trust Company, where he helped to develop the concept of bank holding companies. For a year he served in Washington, DC, as a Special Assistant to the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. From 1943 to 1946 he served in the U.S. Army Signal Corps separating with the rank of Lt. Colonel. In 1948 until his retirement in 1969 he was president and Chairman of the Baystate Corporation. Mr. Eiseman served on the boards of United Way in Boston and Cambridge as well as the boards of the Combined Jewish Appeal, Planned Parenthood, and the Cambridge Civic Association. He was incorporator of Mt. Auburn Hospital and Chairman of its Finance Committee. As a member of the boards and finance committees of the Boston Young Audiences and the Longy School of Music he maintained his contact with the musical arts. Mr. Eiseman was always very active in the planned giving program at PA. His social memberships included the Harvard Club of Boston, the Union Club, and the Belmont Country Club. He is survived by his wife, Marion (Becker) Eiseman, of 142 Brattle Street, Cambridge, MA 02138, a daughter, Anne Walker of Manchester and three grandchildren. (See Class Notes)

Sumner M. Crosby, Woodbridge, CT; November 16, 1982. After Andover, Mr. Crosby attended Yale, graduating in 1932 and receiving his Ph.D. in History of Art in 1937. From 1934 to 1936 he studied at the Ecole De Chartres in Paris. In 1936 he began his teaching career at Yale, being named a full professor of History of Art in 1952 and retiring in 1978. During his term at Yale he served as Chairman of the Art History Department and Director of the Audio-Visual Center since its founding in 1950. Mr. Crosby also served his alma mater by being on the Yale Alumni Council.

He was an author and editor of works on medieval art and architecture; he was working on a major study of the Abbey of St. Denis at the time of his death. During World War II he worked as the executive secretary for the American Commission for the Protection and Salvage of Artistic and Historic Monuments in War Areas. He supervised the preparation of maps and lists of cities and regions where art and architecture needed protection. In 1944 he went to Europe to help personally with the work. The government of France made him a Chevalier in the Legion of Honor in 1950 and later made him an Officer in the Order of Arts and Letters. John P. Wright, Reno, NV; September 11, 1982

John Wright and his wife Barbara were killed instantly after his F-51 Mustang fighter which he was piloting, crashed near Elko, NV about a mile from the airport. At the time, the Wrights were demonstrating aerobatics over the Harris-Elko Airport during a Chamber of Commerce-sponsored Elko Festival of Planes open house. Mr. Wright, in 1971, was the first pilot to fly a F-51 Mustang (a WW II single engine fighter) across the North Pacific. He won two third places and a first place in the National Championship Air Races in Reno, NV.

He received his BS in 1956 and his MBA in 1962 from Stanford University. Mr. Wright had been a real estate broker and a pilot for Pan American Airlines; he was co-owner and operator of Marys River Ranch, a cattle ranch in North Eastern Nevada, where since 1950, after a program was set up with Andover, over 400 Phillips Academy Students have worked during the summer months. Mr. and Mrs. Wright had been residents of the Newport Beach, CA area and also of West Germany for the last few years after spending most of their lives in Nevada. They leave their three children, Kimberly Ann, Deborah Lynn and Eric Preston, all of Reno as well as Mr. Wright's mother Linda and a brother William Wright, Jr. PA '50, both of Elko.

ABBOT

1904 Mary Byers Smith, Boston, MA; February 1, 1983. Her death at age 97 ended a life of civic and community leadership and creative endeavors. Miss Smith was, for many years, connected with the New England Hospital for Women and Children as Vice President and then Trustee; she was President of the Orchard Home School for Girls, a school for the re-education of emotionally troubled adolescents; she worked for the Division of Public Libraries of the Massachusetts Department of Education organizing libraries in state hospitals and prisons. Out of this work came her publication in October of 1931, "Girls' Reading in Correctional Institutions" in which she compiled a suggested reading list of some 300 books. She also composed a booklet published in 1943 on the founding of Andover's Memorial Hall Library in 1873 by her grandfather, John Smith, who came to this country from Scotland in 1816.

In 1916 Miss Smith along with Marion Dodd founded the Hampshire Bookshop, a Smith College co-operative, in Northampton, MA which was owned and staffed by women. The bookstore held lectures, readings and discussions with and by authors such as Robert Frost.

A native of Andover, she lived there much of her life, restoring the old John Abbot home on 57 School Street. In the 1920s she was elected to the Andover School Committee, the first woman to serve on that board in its history.

Her background in English—her major at Smith and later as she took a year to study English at Radcliffe College—shows strongly in her poetry and prose. A book of poetry, titled Minor Parts, was published in 1924. From "At Tewksbury":

This northwest wind means whitecaps on the Bay—

Two hundred miles to summer and a sea

Blue-green intense and unforgettable!

... And from her essay, "At Night On Grandfather's Piazza": "...How strange the trees are at night and how hard they are to recognize! The elms are the queerest of all. They look like sprays of giant seaweed festooned against the sky, while the telegraph poles are the masts of great, square-rigged ships."

Both her mother and sister attended Abbot, and her family donated the John-Ester Gallery at Abbot. Miss Smith was recognized for her work as Chairman of the Alumnae Committee for a memorial to Miss Means in the form of needed changes in housing for the Library.

She leaves a niece, Barbara S. Hilty of Rowayton, CT and three nephews, Stephen Stackpole, George F. Smith, and

W. Donald Smith.

1926 M. Suzanne Loizeaux, Plymouth, NH, November 28, 1982. After graduating from Abbot, she was educated at the Prince School and Simmons College in Boston. A resident of Plymouth, NH for fifty-seven years of her life, Miss Loizeaux had a distinguished career of service to her state and community. After twelve years as owner-editor-publisher of the PLYMOUTH RECORD, in 1949 she became Plymouth's first woman representative to the State Legislature, serving five terms. She became a State Senator in 1951, and was State Chairman of the Senate Education Committee; she was also an appointee to President Eisenhower's White House conference on Education, and was an elected member of three state constitutional conventions. Deciding to give up the balance of her two-year term in 1954 to serve as secretary to the new Republican Senator from NH, Robert W. Upton, in Washington, DC, she remarked at that time, "I took to politics like a duck to water—it is and I suppose always will be, my first love." The New Hampshire press speculated then that she might "...have her eye on a seat in the U.S. Senate."

Miss Loizeaux also enjoyed an enviable reputation as a realtor, entering that profession in 1949, and retiring only six years ago. She was honored in 1976 as Realtor of the Year; at that time she had sold well over 500 properties. She was a member of the Lakes Region Board of Realtors and the Women's Council of Realtors.

She was active in numerous community activities, including the New Hampshire Audubon and Historical Societies; she incorporated and was a Trustee of the Spaulding Youth Center; a Trustee for the Woodside Home for the Aged; and a member of the State Senate Association as well as Vice Chairman of the Republican State Committee. In 1969 she was named a director and Chairman of the New Hampshire Heart Association. As a former member of the Plymouth Congregational Church, she served that church as a trustee. She later joined the Baker River Bible Church of Wentworth, NH, and recently spoke of it as "a wonderful church."

She is survived by her sister, Margaret I. Loizeaux of Plymouth. (See Class Notes) Anstiss Bowser Wagner, Naguabo, Puerto Rico; March 20, 1982 (See Class Notes)

1927 Pauline Humeston Carter, Englewood, NJ; June 16, 1982. Mrs. Carter graduated from Wellesley College in 1931. Before her marriage to Attorney Herbert P. Carter in 1936, she worked as a secretary for Harper & Brothers. The mother of three children, she was active in her community as a Deacon and Elder of the First Presbyterian Church; a member of the Women's Club, the Junior League and the Garden Club of Englewood; Chairman of Home Service of the Northern Valley Chapter of the American Red Cross; member of the PTA of the Englewood School for Boys and Franklin School; and trustee of Elizabeth Morrow School. Mrs. Carter was a member of the New York Abbot Club and a Trustee of Abbot School from 1954 until 1960. In a letter to her classmates in the fall of 1955 she wrote, "In Chapel it occurred to me that no one has to live very long before he experiences the satisfaction of knowing he can count on some things. I felt an Abbot girl knows she can count on Abbot. In these days of stress and uncertainty it seems to me that a school which can make that contribution to its time is of incalculable value." She is survived by her children, Miss Susan P. Carter, 142 Lyman Place, Englewood, NJ 07631, and Andrew M. Carter, 71 Claybrook Road, Dover, MA 02030; two grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. James M. Brittain of Carmel, CA; and Mrs. James Rogers II of Glen Falls, NY; and a brother, Dr. Edward J. Humeston, Jr. of Barrington, RI.

Good news. There is another reader of these notes in Spain. I have received a welcome letter from Friedel Laaf Manresa, Abbot '64. She writes the following encouraging words: "I just thought you might like to know that there are at least four readers of your Andover Bulletin notes—the anonymous lady telephone caller from Concord, the editor of the Bulletin, your new friend, Mark Carnevale, and me! I get the Bulletin a little late, living here in Spain, but I always read the 1910 notes. I think it's wonderful that you're still so interested in and loyal to Andover."

More good news. A cheerful letter from Rad Abbot reports that he and his wife are in good health and still living in their much loved home in Andover. Both of them will have their 90th birthdays this year.

Keith F. Warren, long-time Secretary for the Class of 1910 and life-long Andover loyalist was feted at his 90th birthday by a surprise party which included every living descendant of the Warren family. Shown here (left to right) are Keith Warren, his sister, Mrs. Fordham Kimball, and his son Timothy.

Fred Smith's son Peter reports that Fred is in a nursing home in South Yarmouth, MA. Peter visits him daily but unfortunately Fred is too confused to understand. What a blessing to us old survivors to have a son like Peter. Fred's father and his grandfather went to Andover and his great-grandfather was one of the founders of Abbot Academy. Len Gard is another fortunate survivor to have a devoted son to care for him.

Your secretary had his 90th birthday the day before Christmas. His family had a luncheon to celebrate the event at the pre-revolutionary inn in Sudbury where Longfellow wrote his famous Tales of the Wayside Inn. All of the direct descendants of Keith and Barbara Warren were present—four generations including three great grandchildren.

I am very sorry to have to report the death of two more classmates. Russell Tree died on May 5. He was a longtime resident of Montclair, NJ. After leaving Andover, Russell went to Cornell. He became an early pioneer in the air conditioning industry and was associated for many years with the Carrier Corp. On retirement Russell moved to Brookville, FL with his second wife Marguerite.

I have received a letter from Evelyn Hale telling of the death of Edward Kinsman Hale on November 10, 1982. Edward, went on to Harvard and during his active life, was an executive of the U.S. (shipping) Lines in New York. On retirement he moved with his wife to Heritage Village in Southbury, CT. A short time ago they moved to the Pine Run Community in Doylestown, PA where Mrs. Hale plans to remain.

I was pressured, in 1970, into writing this by a colleague of mine. The draft lay buried for ten years. When I then came across it, I decided I had done a lot of research on a subject never before touched upon, and it ought to have some value for a legal publication. I luckily got a very able girl to assist me in turning it into an article for publication in a law review. To my amazement the American Journal took it.

Apologies are in order to the Class of 1919 for not being represented in the Fall Bulletin. Last spring your scribe had a hip replacement, and it took a little time to get back in the groove. However, at this writing, we are fine.

Rowlie Banister writes: "Greetings from Florida. The folks down here wonder how I stay so active and maintain a much younger look than my 82 years."

Joe Chatman regrets not being at our last reunion or two, but there has been a conflict of time with those at Williams, where he is very much involved.

Pete Jones writes: "All going along—good summer and hope for good winter, south! Very best to Temp Brown and thanks for all you do! Also best wishes to all at the school—Good Old Andover."

Henry and Henrietta Penfield had a trip planned for last August to England and the Greek Island Cruise, but Henry had a heart attack and was fortunate to be at home when it happened. They tell us he has recovered nicely, which is good news.

Leo and Mary Margaret Poor report "An active but unspectacular year" in their "adult community." They graduated two more grandchildren, Karen Selden from the University of The South (Phi Beta Kappa) and Jeffrey Poor from Amherst (Magna Cum Laude). All this took place in May and in the same month they became great-grandparents for the first time. Leo says: "We took a Bermuda cruise in October to recuperate."

Jim Serven writes: "I am retired now, at 83, and living in a scenic residence in Tucson. Still ride horseback and am married to a delightful wife. Have a few minor ailments, but nothing that prevents my enjoying life." We have had a phone conversation with Tim Durant; it was cut short, but he still seems very much with it, and expressed affection for Old PA.

Stu Otis died quite a few months ago. We do not have full details about his career, but do know he went to Yale after Andover and was a commercial banker in Chicago before retirement. We will try to get more details. From the Yale Alumni Magazine, we learn that Henry Schaul died August 30, 1982. He graduated from Yale in 1922 and also went into the banking business with Guaranty Trust Co. He retired to Florida, and his widow lives at 3946 St. John's Avenue, Apt. 161, Jacksonville, FL 32205.

Dr. Harry Reiff, a retired (1966) professor of Government and History at St. Lawrence University and a Doctor of Humane Letters, was recently honored as a distinguished emeritus faculty member, and his portrait was unveiled at a dedication program. Harry had been a Fulbright lecturer in Cairo, Egypt from 1953-54 and a State Dept. lecturer in Korea and the Far East, 1960-61. In fact back in the '40s he had served with the State Dept. participating in the formation and establishment of the United Nations. When I inquired, he said he and Jane would enjoy another stint in Egypt but in San Salvador, no thanks! In recent years they have spent ten winters in Mexico, "the safest place south of the Rio Grande." Also sundry periods in Middle Europe and in and out of the Iron Curtain countries. But alas, Harry says, time has caught up with him (and his gold) in the shape of cataracts and arthritis in the knees. He'll be 85 by the time you read this! Harry is particularly pleased with his sons' progress and what Andover has meant to them all: Jonathan, '56, a tax expert and Daniel, '59, a professor of art history.

And speaking of "ART," Bart Hayes, '22 has authored a book, Tradition Becomes Innovation, which is being published by Pilgrim Press, NY. The book is about Modern Religious Architecture, with 176 pages, sixteen of which are full-color photographs and over 150 black and white photos. All the churches are American except one in Mexico just across the Rio Grande. It took Bart about six years to research and write this and it will be a source of information and pleasure for anyone interested in architecture and of particular help to Church members planning a new building or the redesign of their present one. It comes in cloth at $27.50, or paper, $12.95. Bart said that by coincidence another book is coming out simultaneously called American Churches by a Roger Kennedy which lists a price of $50. Bart himself is well and kicking but not kicking very high and travels on foot instead of driving his car. He had a hip replacement a couple of years ago (before reunion) and that was OK, but later in reaching down for something, he threw the joint out of whack and had to go back to the hospital. An infection of some sort dragged it along, so it has been about two years of pretty much staying around home. He did visit about twenty of the churches but spent quite a bit of time in Washington viewing some 4000 slides while researching. I gather that Pilgrim Press conned Bart into writing this book going back some years ago, and it was not the easiest thing to tackle.

Lloyd Brace writes that his health is OK and he is retired from all business and charitable connections but his energy is not what it used to be. So he says he spends too much time reading and disagreeing with trends in government! But he does enjoy the ability to spend more time in their second home in Maine.

Ted Booth et ux, on a trip East last October, joined with Dave Williams, John Cushman, and spouses, for a dinner party at the latter's New London, NH home. All were in good fettle and enjoyed a real reunion of sorts. Independently, Dave sent me a picture of himself and Mary Lou in their bass boat which, sadly, they have put up for sale at Orleans, MA. Dave's prize catch was a 17 inch flounder just before the fishing stopped.

Very sadly we report the sudden death of Phil Eiseman in London, England on 1 October 1982. Phil and Marion were en route to Athens to join a Smith College-sponsored cruise. They always loved to spend a few extra days in London but on the fourth day Phil did not feel well. They saw a doctor who was superb. That evening Phil went to Guy's hospital and five hours later his heart just stopped! Phil was an old friend from PA days and so was Marion when at Smith in '27 and before. One of the joys of reunions was seeing them both at Andover. Phil was a banking innovator and until he retired he was head of Bay Banks, a large bank holding company in Massachusetts. He started this after a career with Old Colony Trust Co. Phil was very well known in financial circles as well as philanthropic and civil activities in Cambridge. He was an active participant in PA's campaign and a staunch alumnus.

Mohler Witwer passed away on 29 November 1981 apparently in South Bend.

Also received a notice that Russ Damon died last fall, probably in NJ. Russ had graduated from M.I.T. in 1926 and had lived and worked in NYC and/or NJ as of 1939 when he sold out his NJ Type Founders Co. and "sick of the city," was looking for "a place in a reasonably small town." At that time he had a daughter and a son, Paul, the latter living in East Brunswick, NJ.

Alma Underwood Udall writes that she and her husband, Dick Udall, Dartmouth '23, spend five months at their summer home in New London, NH and seven months in Largo, FL. They celebrated their 55th wedding anniversary last April.

Elizabeth Thompson Winslow: "My husband and I enjoy our life in Meadow Lakes retirement home near Princeton. My sister, Henry, lives here too. Our summers are still spent in Connecticut and winters in Florida, but this is a good spot to come back to! More power to you on collecting for the Alumni Fund."

Mary Williams Cochran reports, "My trip to China was a remarkable experience last May 10-17. I met with two Chinese doctors in Peking, former associates of my husband. I found my old home in Nanking, which I had left in 1918. The house is now used as a Law Library on the campus of Nanking University."

Edith Page Bennett writes, "Hill Towns of Italy this fall—shades of Matt Howie. What a course that was!"

Katherine Knight Fassett writes that she is the mother of a grandmother. She has two great-grandchildren, both in Florida, also six grandchildren. Kay lives in Gardiner, ME.

"Grand Junction, CO is a lovely place to live," writes Charlotte Baldwin Frohock, "mild winters but plenty of snow in the mountains for skiing. I keep busy and feel well. I do church work, AARP (news letter), RSVP and visiting the sick." She has eight grandchildren and two greats.

"I can't complain too much about my aches and pains at 81," writes Marion Parker Paulson, "I want to stay in my own home as long as possible. I have part-time help. My only brother and wife are way down in SC. Glad that the combination of schools is working out well."

Eunice Meigs Pease "Went to Paris and Vienna in May. My granddaughter is at the Sorbonne so it will be an added inducement to go again. Was at Lake Placid in August. About to drive to Penn State-Syracuse football game—I got my B.S. in Business Administration at Syracuse. I always go to Charlottesville, VA for Thanksgiving and Christmas."

For several years, Jerry Holbrook has served as a mentor for students in the Student Employment and Educational Program of the Hewlett-Packard Co., Medical Products Division in Waltham, MA. At Jerry's home in nearby Lexington, these students have found a "home away from home" and have enjoyed Jerry's warm hospitality. He has become their friend and advisor. Jerry, a widower, retired some years ago but still remains active as a technical writer.

Don Carr reports the birth of his first great-granddaughter. In the spring of 1982 Don published his eighth book since retiring from the oil industry in 1964. Another book, his first novel, is in the works.

Harry Brandman writes that failing eyesight has caused him to give up his woodworking shop and that he now devotes his energies to the challenges of duplicate bridge.

Wally Booth writes of a trip to Washington, DC to visit his daughter, Sally, and her husband, James R. Lilley, who has recently returned from Taiwan where he has been head of the United States Mission. Wally's grandson, Mike Lilley, was a starting tight end on the Princeton football team this past fall.

Whitney Connor Lewis died at the Delta Hospital, Vancouver, BC on November 26th. He had been hospitalized for a couple of weeks after a heart attack but had improved so much that he was told he could go home on 26 November. While dressed and waiting for his wife, Nellie, to pick him up, he collapsed and died. Whit entered Andover in 1918 and was a prominent member of our class throughout his four years on the Hill. He was a graduate of Princeton and had lived in Delta, (near Vancouver) British Columbia, Canada for some years.

1922 Class Agent Hoddy Cole's 80th birthday was celebrated on 25 January at a dinner at the Country Club in Chestnut Hill. Many close friends and admirers were on hand and arrived with verse appropriate to the occasion. Hoddy's children presented him with a gift of an endowment fund at Andover in his honor.

I hope you will forgive me for not sending any items for the Fall Bulletin. My summer and early fall were very busy and we had covered the class so well for the Reunion issue that I let it ride. Rather unexpectedly, on November 27th, I moved to Wells, ME to a retirement complex where I am near four of my families. I found it rather traumatic and am not fully settled yet. The cards that I received from several of you pleased me very much, for a couple had not sent word for ages. Each one sent their love and best wishes.

It was great to hear from Jane Baldwin who feels as I do about reunions that aren't on the old Abbot campus. She had an unhappy reason for not coming last May, for she suffered a severe heart attack at that time. It took nearly six months to recover but she is now in Florida where she has spent five months of the year since retiring, and the rest of the time in Essex, CT. Before her illness Jane enjoyed much of her time on the golf course. That is a no-no at present!

Kay Gage (Sister Mary Anselm) gave news I'll pass along verbatim: "I broke my hip walking my usual daily two-mile stroll, slipping on gravel. Had weeks in the hospital but am now home with a walker and wheelchair. Am being spoiled to death and having a lot of fun (?) learning to walk again. I feel a bit like the centipede who couldn't remember which foot to put forth first, the good or the bad." With her splendid courage Kay will be all right in no time. Good luck!

Juliet Haskell Carrington had not sent any news for a very long time but this card made up for it! She lives in a retirement apartment that has a certified nursing home. Unfortunately, between operations and a broken leg, she has spent months there. Her daughter is married, a geologist who graduated from Middlebury, received her M.S. from Bryn Mawr, and is curator of the mineral collection there. Her grandson, David, lives in Wayne, PA and works in graphic arts near Philadelphia. George, Julie's son, went to Haverford, got his M.A. at Harvard and Ph.D. at Ohio State. He is a professor in the English Department at Northern Illinois University in DeKalb, and also writes books about American authors. His son, John, graduated from Dartmouth last June with innumerable honors in computer science and math. As an afterthought Julie tells me she is a retired entomologist and travels a lot. Happy days Julie; don't wait so long to write again!

Florence Phillips Cooke sounds very happy but claims her life is not exciting. She and her husband love living on the shores of Lake Sunapee with a view of the mountain. Their children are fine, happy and busy. Two grandsons are graduate engineers, one with a master's degree and the other on his way. A granddaughter graduated from Middlebury last spring with honors in music, cum laude; spent the summer at Tanglewood and is now back at Middlebury with a part-time job teaching and studying the flute. A third grandson is graduating from the University of Vermont next spring—another engineer. The fourth is a junior at Dartmouth, an English major heading for the law, he hopes. That is not all, there is a fifth grandson in the freshman class at Colby College in Maine. Flip also has three granddaughters a little young for college. Certainly life cannot be at all boring for the grandparents!

Marian Rugg Cayward wishes she were living near her children, but her daughter and two granddaughters all live on the west coast. She says she has no news but I appreciate having a reply. I wish you would all do the same; at least it shows us you are still interested in your classmates!

Marian Saunders Cheesborough keeps hoping her eyesight will improve but no such luck as yet. Consequently keeping in touch is arduous and frustrating! We are so glad she does send word. She hopes to engage help in this field after Christmas so I'll have more news later. Along with her love comes the admonition to "keep the faith." Seems to me the class of '22 has done very well in that field!

I had a fine letter from Bubbles Hutchinson Matthews just after Christmas and she seems to be occupying her time with care of her husband who is not very well, and handwork. She had not seen Anne Whinery for some time, but I received notice this morning that she recently met Anne in Fredricksburg for luncheon. We should find a place for the northern and southern members of '22 to meet half-way. Any ideas?

Those of you who generally return for our class reunions know how warmly we have always been welcomed in Helen Knight Wilkinson's home in North Andover. Her husband Wikie's hospitality matches hers and it was especially pleasant to see him this year, for Betty Ohnemus Hick's husband Clyde, came with her from Florida. We thoroughly enjoyed ourselves and feel both men should be considered members of the class. Wikie's health had been deteriorating for some time but he attended the cocktail hour at the Andover Inn before the reunion dinner and enjoyed mingling with the men of the PA class of '22. In September Helen called to tell me that Wikie had died on August 11th. We all send our loving sympathy to Helen and share her loss.

Alice Tower Kirkby, wife of Norman W. Kirkby, of Lincoln City Road, Lakeville, CT died on January 9th. Altho' speaking and writing had been very difficult for her since a serious automobile accident ten years ago, she has kept in touch with me every year, with her husband's assistance. We extend our sincere sympathy to you, Norman. As always, Olivia

There is great news to report. Leo Daley will be the Chairman of our 60th Reunion. Let's all show our enthusiasm and come back in force. Save the second weekend in June; details will reach you soon. Most likely you have it now.

Don McCord reveals his youth; last April he was married to Florine S. Smith. Another youngster, Earl Merrill, wedded the former Dorothy Price last September. For the class, wish both these newlyweds many years of happiness and beseech them to bring their brides to our 60th! Earl will winter (3 months) at Hillsboro Beach, FL, and in March will take a honeymoon cruise.

Harry and Mary Remington visit the Bahamas in late January. He expects to reunite with us. Johnny Westcott has a new grandson that should be good Andover material. Also your Secretary hopes to see his great-nephew at PA in a year or two. Malcolm and Carol Burtor spent half the summer in George Mills, NH. They celebrated 52 years of marriage, worked on the cottage on Lake Sunapee, and enjoyed rowing and canoeing. Charlie Long has three addresses—permanent in Framingham, MA winter in Sarasota, FL; and Wolfboro, NH in the summer. The best of all worlds, say we. Their grandchildren (they have a son and a daughter) are spread through Harvard, Cornell

U. of Arizona, Hobart, Dana Hall, and Vermont Academy.

Al Buttrick, a perennial volunteer, gives four days a week of his time to St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Ridgefield as a switch-board operator, envelope stuffer, and general "Gofer". You've earned your wings Al!

Frank Newman plans to attend our 60th. The dates are June 10-12, Frank. He and Betty enjoyed a 61-day trip around the world—a month each in India and China. They lived and worked in China in the 30's and 40's, and were welcomed back in three cities. Perhaps at our 60th he will tell us of the miraculous progress this vast but little known country has made in overcoming poverty and many terrible diseases. Ed Wolfe's wife Doris has written of a painful fall by Ed last August that injured his ribs and back. Frequent therapy helps. Let's hope he can return to his favorite hobbies, fishing and hunting.

Otto Alcaide and I have exchanged letters of understanding of the trauma of losing a beloved wife of over a half a century. I find his philosophy very compatible with mine, especially with respect to the comfort and fellowship of one's church. Otto also plans to be at our 60th Reunion.

After I had sent in my Class Notes for the last Bulletin, I had to delete, via phone call, some news about Edson B. Hitchcock, whose wife Helen had died on 7 June 1982. Ed (I believe we knew him as Beck) had been ill, and unconfirmed reports of his death prevented me from including the sad news until his daughter, Eleanor H. Walker, wrote to me last Fall. In addition to Eleanor, who lives in Los Altos, CA, he is survived by his son, Bryan, PA '51, of Boothbay Harbor, ME and four grandchildren. Belatedly the sympathy of the Class of 1923 is extended to his family.

ABBOT

Latest, Betty Walcott Leighton called me from New London, CT, where she has spent the summer. The first of October she will leave for her Delray Beach, FL, home where she has lived since 1930. After she left Abbot she eventually took a secretarial course and subsequently worked for the Dean of Yale Medical School. She has one son, three daughters—Peter, Amanda, Linda and Jennifer—and seven grandsons. Her husband died ten years ago. She was pleased to hear from Abbot and to talk about our days there, and would be glad to hear from any Abbot people nearby.

Still later this morning I received a card from Peggy Scudder Marshall saying that when my card arrived she was on a "fabulous trip to Alberta, Canada; Jasper, Banff, etc." which I know is true for I have been there too, and it is glorious. Peggy and Larry used to come to camps near here and I used to join them for breakfast, which I thoroughly enjoyed—it was great to see Peggy and her nice husband. Now the place is closed so they can't come any more, and she ends by saying they are "trying to grow old gracefully," and I am sure they are doing that!

Our trip West this year was the best ever. We saw or contacted plenty of classmates, wives, widows and children of 1924. Our trip was reported in full in our 1924 Newsletter.

Les Hicks said it was beautiful in Jefferson, NH this fall. The foliage was perfect and he and Florence could look from their porch to the Presidential Range in all its glory. Bunny and I have witnessed it too. The Hicks left NH too late for us to see them in their Florida winter home in Bradenton. Les says they feel the trip seems longer each time but the mileage is the same. He thinks the new Pastor in Green Valley, named Hicks, must be a distant cousin and he hopes he measures up. I'm sure he will!

Dick Chace and Mary took in 8-2/3 shows in six days while on a trip to New York sponsored by the Old Globe Theatre. Hardy Phippen, PA '64 sat next to them at one show. He was one of their guides during the trip. He was written up on P. 39 of the last Bulletin. The Chaces felt the trip a great success!

Morgan Grace's Christmas card mentioned his receiving the Distinguished Service Cross for his six years as a vestryman at his church on Great Neck, LI. Morgan's daughter and grandson, Eddie, came to visit us in Newton in September and we were pleased to meet them. We were sorry to have missed Roy and Bettie Slagle while in Florida, but they had to postpone their trip. They had Thanksgiving with their daughter in Washington, DC, a week in Chapel Hill, NC, and a few days at Myrtle Beach, SC.

Another classmate we had hoped to see was Art Schulte, but Art and Vivian arrived too late for us although we were in Palm Beach near their home with Nancy Johnstone just before they arrived. Art says his golf continues to deteriorate. He was sorry to hear of the eight deaths of classmates in 1980.

Bud Mordock and Nancy took a trip on the Mississippi Queen for eleven days from New Orleans to St. Louis. "Lazy life—stopped at Natchez, Vicksburg, etc. Dixieland music, booze, food—good trip." Bud is working on his 55th at Cornell.

Gardie Brown says he doesn't feel any different on his 76th birthday but he can't hit the golf ball as far. "Betty and I are going places, which when we were in school, seemed beyond the end of the world." They have a granddaughter in Andover. They took a cruise to Denmark, Sweden, Finland, and three places in Russia. Why not Norway, Gardie? We hope to see them in Santa Barbara in March.

Richard Boyle O'Reilly Hocking wrote regarding a picture of the O'Reilly statue I sent him which was being removed due to some road work in Boston. Dick says he'll inspect the situation when he gets to Boston to see if they put it back properly. While in North Conway we always give Kay and Dick a ring.

Jack Basham thinks their efforts to reverse the eutrophication of Lake Waramaug, if successful, will draw the attention of many areas throughout the country that have the problem. Jack's job was to raise the half-million dollar cost. Jack has always been a money raiser but he feels he must leave town (New Preston) if it fails. (I had to look up "eutrophication.")

Keith Smith reports that during the hunting season around his area in Wyoming they close the schools and the mines and people work without pay. The state has the lowest unemployment in the nation. The boy who helped Keith build his cabin got both an elk and a deer for the third season, and his mother says he is "absolutely insufferable." "People out there use this for recognition," says Keith. "We were sorry Mutt Jennings and Buntly couldn't come to Green Valley due to the altitude. They even tried Lake Placid, only 1700 ft., and it was too much."

I'm sure the Jennings will be sorry to hear the news of the death of Martha Van Peski. Fred sent us the funeral service program. She had been sick for six months. I was also sorry to have Fred write he would never visit the U.S.A. again. "My life has changed so much." Bunny, our granddaughter, and I visited with them in Holland in 1974.

Bob Leylan wonders if we would recognize each other after so long. Bob at 75 is amazed that he is so well, since so many have fallen by the wayside. Says he's not married and semi-active in the consulting business. He did attend his 50th at Yale. Bob, our 60th at Andover will be different!

Peggy and Louie Wienecke had over fifty friends at their open house at Christmas. Their daughter, Gretchen, represented the U.S. at an international conference on animal welfare in Bordeaux, France—quite an honor! She recently was on "The New Odd Couples" TV show.

George Stevenson writes that he hasn't been to any exotic places lately except Lake Forest, IL and saw Gardie Brown. George says he's taking a long, distant look at our 60th which we hope means he'll be there. When we saw Bill Jones in Gulfport in November, he looked the prince of fashion. He was all dressed in Yale Blue which we couldn't understand for a Harvard man, but maybe it made us feel at home. Bill writes that he talked to Van Johnstone in West Palm Beach, which I'm sure was appreciated by his baseball team mate.

And "Grogan" O'Connell wrote to Van. It was Van who gave the name "Grogan" and it has surely stuck. "He'll think he's hearing from a ghost." Grogan reports, "I'm reasonably warm and vertical."

I sent Ed Wells' address to his Andover roommate, Bev Thompson, and Bev immediately wrote to Tiburon, CA as Bev will travel in that direction some day. Bev was sorry to hear of so many deaths in the class, but even his college class he says, are going like flies in a windstorm.

Marge and John Lockett went to Padre Island in December. Last year they were disappointed with the weather but do enjoy the beach, the seafood, and the salt air. The Locketts, Art Tait's, and George Larsons all had dinner at the new Marriott in El Paso in December. Both Johnny and Art are Army men.

While in Sarasota we looked up Len and Maja James, who are now in Sun City. We had lunch at their dining hall and were given a tour of the city—a very interesting place, and much money has been invested in it. The Jameses were both fine. Len always gives us one of his books that has been published. He was head of the History Department at PA.

Another retired teacher was Red Sanborn who reports putting his garden to bed for the winter and has cut enough wood to last (Fonty says for next winter, too). The Sandborns take many trips: Bermuda in early spring, The Farne Islands in the North Sea, and the Outer Hebrides. (All for birding, of course.) This winter it will be the Outer Bank and favorite sites in Florida. This last summer they had a house full—eighteen one weekend. They are involved in much activity to raise money for conservation projects. Fonty volunteers as a docent, and in the gift shop.

Our Jack Barss misquotes Horace Poynter he says, when "he hopes our respective healths sagashuate well." He liked the Exeter game result and, being Harvard '22, liked the slaughter of Yale which made up for the time Yale put their manager in the game, which was unsporting, he thinks.

Amy Howe, Dikes' widow, was in Houston for three days visiting her children and was back in time to greet us in Conroe. The Howe estate is the stopping off place for PA '24. The Charlie Sawyers and the Eddie Jacksons are recipients of Howe cordiality. We missed Dike this year. "During his many years in construction, his leadership contributed skill, responsibility, and integrity to the industry. A first-rate pioneer construction man and, through his many years of hard work, established an impeccable reputation as a competent master builder." So writes the Construction Association. Dike remained active in business as Chairman of the Board until he died on 27 August.

And I refer to Bob Redpath's letter for some very fine sentiments about Jim Kern. "I admired his and Grace's concept of spiritual relations, shown in their superb family life, in their religious participation, and in their attitude toward Andover."

Our agile Secretary has spent Christmas with her family at her son's in Belmont, CA and will return via Mobile and Atlanta—"Tra-la," she writes. Her invitation to you last 16 October to gather in Andover to hear Alumni Council reports, brought news from fifteen of you on return postals (thanks!) and produced an attendance of three. But it happened. Unexpectedly invited to join the closing buffet lunch of the Council, Laura Scudder Williamson and Kay Hart Mitchell met and were charmed by Headmaster McNemar, then later toured the campus with Council member Polly Bullard Holden who, as they strolled, reported Alumni discussions on "Long Range Planning for Andover." Watch for Trustee action. A thrill froze the three as they discovered a plaque on the Abbot Wing of the gym: "The Abbot Academy Wing Given by Abbot Academy on the 150th Anniversary of the first class, in recognition of Abbot Academy and its heritage and strengths which live today. May 5, 1979." Because future Abbot Campus use was on the Council Agenda, the three AA '24 alumnae viewed Abbot Hall, Draper, and McKeen from the circle lawn with admiration and nostalgia. Pride and happiness glows from all three faces photographed on the spot.

Because we know you care and have helped, here is a 3 December 1982 front page story from the PA weekly the Phillipian: "The Abbot Academy Association granted $71,424 to various members of the PA community at their last board meeting..." Ted Sizer called it "an internal foundation for the development of new ideas." Dean of Studies Powell adds: "It ranges from helping a faculty member develop a new course to bringing the Freedom From Chemical Dependency people to help students, and to even granting money for playground equipment for faculty children." It is appreciated.

Now for news of you 15 AA '24s who responded to our Class Secretary in September: Jane Allen Kilby sent you her best, Ruth Beach Newsom traveling 16 October but claims two great-granddaughters. Betty Bragg King gives greetings, said she had lunch with Peggy MacDonald Vester, and is taking a World Cruise in '83. Katharine Boyce Hepbron with six great-grandchildren breathlessly calls "Hello!" Harriet Cheney Hughes is reported by her step-daughter to have circulatory problems, Dorothy Converse, semi-retired, works part-time at a NH hospital in Concord, Priscilla Draper Mansfield travels yearly to Florida and Maine from Canton, Kay Hart Mitchell enjoyed Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island in September, Mary Harvey Kindel began watching windsurfing from the windows of her new apartment after spending 52 years in the same house—or is it ice fishermen out there now, Mary? Elsie Phillips Marshall is fine after two summer months in Daytona with her daughter. Sue Smith Lockhart is looking for excitement, Caroline Strachley Reede widowed since July '79, we regret to report, boasts two great-grandsons; Victorine Warner Knox with husband leads a blissful existence in the beautiful Catskill Mountains and sends "Greetings to old Schoolmates." In answer to our Christmas message to Peggy MacDonald Vester, her daughter-in-law responded that Peg, who had written Laura Scudder Williamson in September, "I've been in hospital trying to find out why I feel rotten," had died of cancer November 2 and was taken to the family site in Duluth, Minnesota. Alas. Our brave and dynamic Senior Class President is gone. Her son, Gerhard, survives as well as several grandchildren. Polly Bullard Holden, Secretary Pro-tem.

Welcomed season's greetings came from Al and Ada Keedy from B.W.I.; Charlie and Pat Arnt, from their ranch on Orcas Is., WA; Gil Cheney from the Cape, and Dorothy Partridge from Andover. A phone call from a chipper sounding Bill Curtis—they're flying from their coop in Southport, CT for the warmth of Tucson.

Pres Breed is doing nicely with his hip replacement of last July. It has diminished his savings, but improved his disposition and golf. Word from Fred Harlow, expresses his appreciation of Chuck Eeles' personal notes over the years as Class Co-agent. A card from Clare Barnes sent soon after returning from a summer at Chappaquidick... "where Kennedy sank." "I'm in good shape — cut brush and grass; spend too much time at the Yale Club in NY in winter. I've been lucky. Knock! Knock! Best to all '25ers."

Hugh McCandless reports running into Roger Makepeace, his wife and son on the train to NY. They were on their way to hear Mahler's 8th Symphony, sung by the Canterbury Choral Society (to which Roger's son belongs), along with a number of church choirs, school glee clubs, with a symphony orchestra. "It must have been a gorgeous din," Hugh observes.

A cordial note from Johnny Graetzer, stating they'll be spending the winter in their home in Antigua, Guatemala and inviting any classmates who might be passing through to give them a call.

Farrand Flowers is still serving as a substitute teacher at Lee High School in Houston. He awaits with pride, May, 1983, when his son Jamie becomes an M.D. at the University of Texas Medical School in Houston.

A marvelous letter from Frank Foster, which space limitations compel me to edit. He's had, at PA, a son in '60 and grandsons in '79 and '85. He and wife "Petey" saw something of the McNemars before Dartmouth lost them to PA. They watch over two grandchildren as Dartmouth students, live close to the campus, and enjoy cultural events and athletics. Spend nearly five months on the Maine coast (Christmas Cove.) "I still doctor rather gently several days per week as a consultant in internal medicine. Had thirty great years in Boston with the Lahey Clinic in the Dept. of Internal Medicine. I share an almost universally held conviction that PA has been the dominant influence of my entire life. With so many others, I'm sure that's where I grew up. After that the rest has been easy, be it Army (four years in WW II), profession, marriage, church, or what you will. When I leave this world, I'll have had far more from PA than I could ever return!"

John Paul Dickson writes that we're living the retired life in Bethesda, MD. Last fall he attended a reception at the home of the Director of the Center for Byzantine Studies where he had spent six years. Paul says he's been ill with a boring series of problems.

Unhappily, I record the loss of Samuel L. Galland in 1982, Hugh M. Southgate on August 7, and James D. Dudley on November 16, 1982. Sam, unfortunately, lost touch with the class. Hugh went to Princeton and Williams, and Harvard Business School. He was an investment banker before entering the Navy during WW II. He was active in developing Portola, CA, where he had lived since 1940; and hotels in Tahiti and in French Polynesia, South Pacific. Jim Dudley went to Harvard and B.U., taught for forty-one years in the Cambridge Schools, loved the outdoors and did thirty-two years of playground work. Jim got back for reunions, adding to their pleasure. We will miss these members. To their families, the class extends its deep felt sympathy in their bereavement.

Unhappily I have bad arthritis and don't do anything newsworthy. But looking forward to your class notes, hoping the rest of '26 does better than I can."

Helen Larson, still in the dog business which has been her entire life endeavor, hopes to produce a future champion Kerry Blue Terrier. No children of her own, she takes great pride in her nephews, Dana Larson, deep-sea diver; and Dr. Ronal Larson, electrical engineer with SERI, about to spend two years in Khartoum, Sudan, as sole U.S. contact there.

From her sister comes news that Saye Hirooka Murakami was hospitalized in March, '81 for spinal fracture. She has since been moved to a nursing home where she gets the necessary care. She is physically much better now. Sibyl Kidder Paris writes: "Still dabbling in water color and enjoying the effort, not always the result. May have a one-man show some day if I can gather together enough good results." "Not much news" from Carol Bridgham Ricard. "I have a very patient, retired husband; am quite arthritic, in a wheelchair most of the time. Have two sons: Gilbert Jr. lives in Orlando, FL with wife and daughter, #2 son lives near Wilmington, DL and is a glassblower. I keep in touch with Alice Perry, and through her hear about Ruth Katzmann."

Frances (Fonty) Flagg Sanborn had a household of children, grandchildren, and guests all summer at Kennebunkport. She and her husband are active in Maine Audubon Society. They plan a birding trip south via the Outer Banks to the Everglades, then home again for skiing. Fonty has worked as an Historical Society docent, and in a giftshop in a lovely old house left to the Society. They raise vegetables and do lots of canning and freezing. Also trying to save an island from the developers.

Katherine Clay Sawyer and her husband took a 23-day trip inside China in May '81 which prevented their attending Reunion. Kay's sister, Barbara Clay Crampton, '23, died November 16, 1982. Our warmest sympathy to Kay, and to Barbara's husband, children, and grandchildren.

"Last winter I did twenty-two pastel portraits of couples who were movers and shakers of the Northville Historical Society Historic Village. It was my gift to them in recognition of their efforts to save the heritage of the community," writes Marion Burr Sober. "These people have donated many hours restoring old houses at the Village, raising money to pay for the maintenance of this now famous small restoration."

A fine, long, newsy letter from Gretchen Vanderschmidt part of which reads, "I retired (at least three-quarters) in 1979 after fifty years. It did seem a long time but had been so much fun and satisfaction that it didn't seem half that long. I am still President-Treasurer of the school's Corporation (Miss Vanderschmidt's Secretarial School) which is a non-profit one, I.R.S. approved. This means that I am still to a great extent responsible for the fiscal health of the school and correspondingly continue to raise funds from our corporate and foundation friends." Gretchen also serves on several boards of directors and still manages to get away to Europe almost every year. She hopes we'll all make it to Reunion '86.

A sad little note from one Felix Flores in Naguabo, Puerto Rico, that Anstiss Bowser Wagner had died on March 20, 1982, of a pulmonary edema. There must be many of us who remember the lovable good humor with which our Annie could be persuaded to sing her own very special monotone version of "Who" while we crowded around the hall radiator, laughing till our sides ached, forgetting all our troubles. May you rest in peace, dear Annie.

The Alumni Office has just informed me of the death of Suzanne Loizeaux on 18 November. I received a letter from her dated 15 November in which she wrote, "... I have been ill, but have recovered and am feeling fine again." Sue had a superb sense of humor. We were both on the Class Book Board and had great fun working together. Although I hadn't seen her in decades, I had continued to think of her as a good friend. The saddest thing about growing old is seeing dear friends die.

Barbara Bloomfield Wood writes from Osprey, FL: "All is well—like our move to Florida. Have been coming to this area for a few years, and now Florida will be our home. The girls visit and our son has a house within walking distance."

My affectionate good wishes and thanks to all of you who answered my request for news. After an extraordinarily lively Christmas week with my children and grandchildren here in my home on Stanford Campus, it's a special treat to sit quietly and remember what the children call "the olden days" when we were growing up at Abbot. Do continue to share your news whenever you are in the mood. Edda Renouf Gould, your '26 Class Secretary.

Bob Crowell has fulfilled a lifelong dream by writing a book, The Lore & Legends of Flow-ers, published, of course, by T.Y. Crowell, now a division of Harper & Row. Beautifully illustrated with full-color prints, the book, as a reviewer notes, relates Bob's peregrinations: "In a deserted Vermont garden, he discovered Harrison's yellow rose that followed the 49ers out west to California. In Mexico, where the French or African marigold originated, a peasant woman carefully explained that the flower's true name is cempasuchil—the old Aztec word... Research also took him to early English herbals, old French encyclopedias, Greek lexicons, and even Latin religious poetry of the Middle Ages." A must for your family and as a gift.

Another legal victory for Bob Nordhaus: The U.S. Supreme Court, by a 6-3 vote, ruled that the Jicarilla Apache tribe can impose taxes on natural resources taken from its reservation. Said Bob, "This will allow the tribal government to continue its activities such as police and fire protection, road maintenance, and community services."

Coly Hardy reports two new books out early in 1983: The Annual Dun and Bradstreet's Guide to Your Investment, and if you have any money left over, a new one: Your Guide To a Financially Secure Retirement (Harper & Row). It destroys many myths of the poor, frail, elderly, but he comments, "too late for you old codgers but worthwhile for your children." The Hardys had a great trip to Europe and Coly is busy trying to catch up with all the projects that he has on the fire.

A bit of sound advice from Charlie Miller: "Keep going straight down the road of private enterprise, and individual initiative. It's the only way. Don't contract the disease of Socialism."

The following note from Buck Huxley: "Fishing season over—well, almost over—goose shooting in full swing. Off to the Pacific, Australia and New Zealand in February."

The following Andover classmates were in attendance at the Yale-Princeton football game on November 13, 1982: Luke Fichthorn, Bennett Fisher, Coly Hardy, Jack Keogh, Marc Mason and Jim Munro.

Regretfully we report the death of Theodore Hawley, Jr. on April 27, 1982. He is survived by his son, Theodore Hawley III of 30 Aldwyn Lane, Villanova, PA 19085. Also, regretfully, we note the passing of Deane Bassett's wife on September 22, 1982.

A note received from R. Clarke Smith reads, "On 4 March, 1982, I became Executive VP of Rutland Savings Bank and continued until 29 October. On 15 May I married Mercie Cunningham Tully; it has been a memorable year."

As predicted, Bulletin Ed. Regan, T.J., exhibited admirable mastery of his craft in his discerning opus re the many stellar accomplishments and attributes of Tom Mendenhall. Of the mildly errant references in the '28 Class Notes to the "hard-oiled" Adriance Admissions Administration, and to Pen Pendleton as being "busy-tailed" (as well as bright-eyed) at his Eli 50th, Old Friend Regan has been gently reminded that the letters "b" and "h" sometimes play an important role in the alphabetical scheme of things. One of the pluses of Class Secretary status is receipt of occasional communiques from the rare non-'28 readers who, by accident or unfathomable design, scan these notes.

A recent exchange with the 1960 Class Secretary, a one-time Samaritan House proctor and valued friend, spoke of his receiving "grossly exaggerated rumors from obviously unreliable sources" to the effect that his erstwhile housemaster had gone to His Reward. As of the opening stages of 1983 this does seem to be a bit of an exaggeration; the Old Codger continues to Hang in There, after a fashion. By this time you have doubtless heard from Al Rowland (who racked up another outstanding Alum-Fund extractionary effort) re planned activities on Andover Hill, 10-12 June, IMPORTANT DATES FOR THE CLASS OF '28!

Bill Adams reports attending PA luncheon while on vacation in Honolulu. "Very enjoyable group of some 25, honoring Josh Miner, Director of Admissions. ('Oh, says he, you're one of that crazy Adriance bunch!') Bill failed to mention his response to such dubious commentary, and he continues to elude John Cole's efforts to "uncover" him in San Diego during the annual Cole trips to nearby Rancho Santa Fe.

Bill Farley waxed well-nigh ecstatic in describing the "Andover-in-Arizona" gathering sponsored by Jack Greenway '42 at his Arizona Inn in Tucson, and attended by assorted top PA administrative and faculty Brass, who "put on a terrific show" for alumni and parental constituents from a wide surrounding area. Bill came over from LA, and Al Rowland dropped out of the skies to represent the Civilian Branch of The Effete East. Bill and Louise continue to do much to further PA's interest in the LA area.

Yule greeting from Frank Schroeder and Ginny bring photo of their handsome new Sewickley home and hope of their gracing another '28 convocation.

As thoughtful follow-up to earlier report on Sunny Sundown, Grahame Enthoven '29 sent press account of "some years ago" of Sunny's teaching at Dobbs Ferry's St. Christopher's School, and his background as descendant of a white girl settler in pre-Revolutionary War days who was captured by the Seneca Indians, refused to return to her own people, and married into the Seneca Tribe.

After earlier report on the "amazing progress" of Egg Lewis's son Pete toward recovery from cancer, it is particularly saddening to have to report that Pete's courageous fight ended in early November, three days short of his 50th birthday, at the peak of a distinguished career as an internationally recognized composer, and as Professor of Music and Director of the Electronic Music Studios at the University of Iowa. As his father so aptly put it, "So Nature sends us into this marvelous world, but then senselessly as it sometimes seems, yanks us out too soon."

Death also claimed two of '28's finest members in the fall of 1982, Sum Crosby and Charlie Ganson. Sum failed to survive the last of a series of strokes, but had the pride and satisfaction of having completed his work on St. Denis, as previously reported. Charlie died very suddenly during a golf match with one of his sons in Woodstock, VT, just after sinking a putt for a par—a happy exit for a devoted linksman. In reply to a letter to Gard Perrin, the sole remaining partner of Taylor Ganson and Perrin, Gard wrote: "I was honored and proud to be his partner since 1935, not to mention being a close friend since 1925. Phemie (Gard's wife and Charlie's sister) and I hope to be with you at PA next spring." These two represented all that Andover is proud to claim in its graduates.

Margaret Nivison (Nivvy) Chase and husband plan to attend his 50th at Amherst, 1-4 June. "As church organist (Little Falls Presbyterian) and cellist with a chamber music group which meets every week, I have enough to keep me busy from morning 'til night, not to mention preparing three good meals a day, attending concerts, serving as an active church elder and as directors of Community Chest and Cerebral Palsy Boards. We see far too little of our two grandchildren, but hope they will come to Andover some day! My husband, Auston, PA '29 and I hope to travel. No time for that up to the present."

Gwen Cochran, from new address—Carolina Village, Box 137, Hendersonville, NC 28739, writes, "I am still suffering from transplanting to this retirement home. It is a great place and everything about it is perfectly lovely, but it is awfully far from New England."

Mary Piper Sears—"Still living in the same house for forty-five years. Both children and four grandchildren live in the next town, two boys, two girls—oldest nineteen, youngest five—so I see all of them often which is great. I'm having the family Thanksgiving dinner this year—fourteen to come so far."

Kay Ross Brooks—"We had a busy June this year: Bill's 50th Reunion at Harvard and my 50th at Radcliffe, plus two graduations of grandchildren. August, travels in Ireland, Scotland and England."

Bunny Bliss Billings summers in Vermont and winters in Connecticut having lost taste for Florida. Now has a six-months-old grandson.

Betty Whitney Binkley is busy with Hospice Care and performing arts activities which bring classical music to the Lake County. Good wishes to all the class.

Eleanor Thompson is glad elder son and family have returned to California from the East and that younger son lives in San Diego.

Eleanor Leech Williamson's younger son Bob died very unexpectedly on 18 October, leaving a dear wife and son. A hard cross to bear. She and Pat are both well.

Louise Hyde Reilly left 15 November on a three-week trip to the Orient, Manila, Mainland China, and Hawaii. Sounds great!

Carrie Simods Alexander plans for '83 June barge trip in France with some friends.

Winnie Dudley Burnham fell 10 February 1982, smashed her ankle, requiring two screws and three pins to put it back together. Is pleased to be back working at North Yarmouth Academy Library.

Betty Jackson Kennedy now somewhat limited in driving because of eye trouble, has enjoyed helping classmates to locate those who graduated in the Pratt Institute Dietics Class in 1930. Also has been active with the American Public Welfare Association voicing objection to Reagan's cutbacks for the people whom she used to help in her work.

Laddie Dunn Morse is still wondering what to do about a 55th Reunion as very few seem able to come. Shall work it out with the Academy and keep you posted. She had a great time at her 50th Reunion at Wellesley last June.

Best of wishes to you one and all.

Dear Abbot '29ers,

I hope by the time you read this you will ALL have sent in your response to our Class Fund Agent, Barbara Folk Howe. She does a good job and reminds us that the school is doing a great job in leading "prep" school education and needs our support.

I also hope you added lots of bits of news of your doings. It makes getting the Andover Bulletin much more fun. We have one sad note to report, Peg Esty Seamans passed away on 27 October 1982. Her beautiful contralto voice dueting with Louise Tobey's lovely soprano used to delight the whole corridor and will long be remembered. We send our sympathy to husband Robert who lives in Amherst, NH. Jane Linn Gale always makes my day when she sends her news. She says, "With four married children and nine grandchildren, we visit from California to Connecticut and include Colorado when West. One daughter and family live near us. Periodically, all return to Zanesville for a reunion—we number 19!"

Life here in Hancock keeps buzzing along, with volunteering at the hospital, Meals-On-Wheels, exercise class at the nursing home, and church activities—but I wonder sometimes just what I DO with myself!

I'd love to hear from more of you—how about Betty Mac-Gilly, Peg Neville, Kay Bowden, Gwen Jones, Bobbie Kendall, Deppy—Where are you all?

Happy New Year everyone! I hope that 1983 will live up to all your expectations.

Elizabeth Sharpe de Sieyes writes that she has little to report, especially after reading the extraordinary messages of some alumnae. I think we all feel this way, but believe me I know the whole class is interested in everything our classmates do or have done. She does say that in the past she has done "quite a bit of fund raising." Sounds important to me!

Marian Stewart Williams writes that her son, Jeremy, is a geophysicist with Nartex, an oil company in Denver, CO. She relates the sad news that her husband, Joe, died of cancer last September. Our deepest sympathy, Marian.

Helen Richardson Coughlin graduated from Simmons the year after she graduated from Abbot and married in 1975. She and her husband, Vern, enjoyed many hobbies together. Her principle interest was painting. Vern was a Senior Engineer in Aircraft Gas Turbine Manufacturing and also a manager with General Electric in Lynn, MA. Gertrude Van Peurse Bell had a pre-Christmas visit from her daughter, Peggy, and granddaughter from San Diego. Great fun, she reports.

Evelyn Folk Ramsdell has enjoyed her association with the Trustees of Reservation this year, finding it a nice break from educational consultation. A couple of weeks with grandchildren was "a hectic but rewarding experience, especially with eight-month-old Page Evelyn." The young teens in the family were a great help, however. She was looking forward to happy holidays and catching up with neglected friends.

A trip to Switzerland last October for Marcia Rudd Keil and her husband found them "taking a close look at the Jungfrau and the Matterhorn. We had a fearful grip on the railing of the chair lift, but it was worth the effort."

Ginny Lillard Collins says that since Van has retired they are leading a quiet and peaceful life. They spend their summers in New Hampshire and the rest of the year in Marblehead. Caught short again, with not enough time to write everyone, but I had a few notes from last spring and got a few more this week, so the cupboard won't be as bare as last time.

Betty Holihan Giblin, in Florida, continued our 50th gossip with her sister Marie, Clare O'Connell Sullivan, and Jane Sullivan '31 for a week in January, and also said (in September) that she was still looking for a Class Agent. Maybe by now one of us has volunteered?

Isabel Arms, who was to have been on a fabulous trip to the far east when we were in Andover, suffered a disappointment at the last minute (along with a broken toe) because the lady she was to have visited in Jakarta was ill and there wasn't any way Isabel could fill in those 2½ weeks.

Among those of us not retired is Susan Johnstone Milliken who is still teaching for the New York Board of Education; her outside activities include being co-chairman of the House Committee for the Abigail Adams Smith Museum.

After reading Harriet Wright Hight's card, I feel as though I were in a six-foot rut: she and Don had a great fishing trip to Iceland this summer and although the fish were elusive, Don caught a 15 lb. salmon, and Harriet a more modest one—only 8 lbs. Last spring she wrote a series of articles for their local paper on "Growing Up in the Twenties" and as a board member for the Music Guild in Worcester, her job is to promote the Worcester Orchestra. Last fall they put on a Viennese Ball, following a concert by the Vienna Symphony, and in January, Joseph Silverstein, concert master for the Boston Symphony, Orchestra, conducted the first of a series of concerts.

Dorothy Rockwell Clark is trying to retire next September from teaching the LSAT courses at the University of Maryland—difficult to accomplish because she has to interview applicants, then train a successor.

And that's all, except to let you know that my Bill, after almost a year of hospital visits and surgery several times, died on October 16th in Hanover. Fortunately, our youngest son is staying with me this winter, and in mid-January we had visits from Bill's two sons and their families—not a spare inch of space when all the beds were made up at night, but so much fun to have them all here, ages fifteen months to forty nine years.

We sit here somewhere between disbelief and euphoria—must have made a wrong turn somewhere—gazing at a heap (for '33 that is) of notes from kind-hearted classmates. Foregoing the temptation just to sit and run our fingers through the notes and sprinkle them over our head, we pass them on forthwith to our vast and not-often-heard-from audience.

Best treat in many a moon was a letter from John Fuller. It's been a long time, John—and we all are interested in the windmills our classmates have tilted against. John was stricken by the picture, suggested by our last effort, of your Kindly Old Editor sitting at his typewriter surrounded by kitty litter and staring at a raven. "Non Salubrious," he pronounced it. Hadn't thought of it that way before. We rushed to scrub our hands and pop a Vitamin C pill before continuing. He is now retired, in Seattle, after a career settling insurance claims ranging "from airplane crashes to hangnails caused by improper cosmetics." After University of Wyoming, John headed for the Pacific Northwest to enjoy its wild open spaces and outdoor life. He has since been joined by three children and eight grandchildren whom we gather are following his path, or his wake, depending on the season. We remember Jack as one of a small, select group led by George Sanborn, as we recall, who from time to time, would disappear into the snow country with those long, narrow bits of lumber which have become known, as skis. Jack is still at it. He tells of his hobby of many years in a school district ski program. With PSIA certification in both Alpine and cross country skiing, he estimates that he has helped to teach over 20,000 skiers. Surely his bust occupies a prominent niche in the Ski Resort Owner's Hall of Fame. Our confidence in Jack's instruction precludes any allusion to the American Medical Supplies Association. We hated to reach the end of the letter. Please don't wait for our 100th reunion year for the next one, John!

And there is MORE! Word from Stu Maher that he retired a year ago as a vice president of The Travelers, after more than forty-one years. He also tells of his fortieth wedding anniversary last May in Bermuda, attended by "three daughters, two sons-in-law, and five grandchildren—two in high chairs." (Who was in the pear tree, Stu?) We can look forward to more details next June.

And from John Hewitt, another long-lost. Most important, he is looking forward to reunion. In the meantime, his time appears to be well accounted for. In addition to his work for the Appalachian Mountain Club, and as a book publisher (first book published authored by a Princetonian '27, bears the intriguing title An Armful of Warm Girl—we are sure John will autograph your copy at reunion), he also is a volunteer worker at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and the Boston Museum of Science. All of which should keep him out of mischief until June. Nice, but too brief a visit with Murray Sanders and Lucy just before Christmas. Murray is still propping up Martin Marietta with one hand while serving (on loan from MM) on the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control with the other. Murray promised full details in June at Andover. A brief note from Art Saklad with those words we love to read: "Looking forward to our 50th." And from Royal Victor: "Retired as a partner of Cravath, Swain and Moore, a NY law firm, two years ago. Now living happily with my wife, Isabel, of forty-five years. Children have long since flown the coop." Now about your plans for 10-12 June, Royal... Dave Haviland writes, "Peter '65, Bill '66, four daughters, two sons-in-law, three grandchildren, wife and I are alive, well, and eating regularly." We can vouch for that. We see Dave frequently at church, a walking advertisement of the joys of retirement. For full details, see Dave and Bobby on the Hill in June.

By the time you read this deathless prose you will have received all information and the registration forms, etc. for our reunion. And we hope you will have filled them out and rushed them right back. Don't miss this one—the next fifty years are going to be tougher! Details are not settled at this date, January, but we can promise you those green lawns, the elm arch, the bells in the Memorial Tower, just for openers. Please don't miss.

Peg Black Manz (Ocala, FL) continues to find retirement "great and ever busy." Her husband and she travel a great deal—visiting children and grandchildren. They golf and swim. Peg plans to be back for our 50th.

Lib Burnham Gazlay (Hingham, MA) still leads "a quiet but contented" life. A seven year old granddaughter lives a mile away, and six and four year old granddaughters in San Rafael, CA, where Lib spent five weeks this past October-November.

Olive French Sherman (Naples, FL) writes, "never a dull moment." She is planning a trip to Eugene, OR and Hawaii in May. A second great-grandchild is expected in March, and her older son will be married in June. She continues to care for her "wonderful 98-year-old mother who lives at Shell Point Village. Olive remarks that "mentally she can take anyone on." It would be interesting to know who has a living parent, and who has a great-grandchild or more.

Louise McClary (Malone, NY) continues to volunteer in church activities and does publicity for the Historical Society. Her travels are limited to visiting relatives in the Portsmouth, NH, and Ottawa, Ontario areas because of responsibilities as "land-lady—sometimes there are rewards, and sometimes headaches." Her dog, Erik, is "great company," and keeps her physically fit by a walk three times a day (or even four) in sunshine, rain, or snow. She and Lib Burnham Gazlay plan to "team up together" for our 50th Reunion.

Congratulations, Martha Whipple Davis, for making a "hole-in-one" at the Nashua, NH Country Club. You not only got over that body of water, but achieved recognition. Let's have a report on other members of our class who have ever made a hole-in-one or more. Martha saw Betty Snyder Cady in Pocasset, MA, and reports that she looked "great."

Surprise me with mail: great-grandchildren, living parents, hole-in-ones, 50th Reunion, etc.

Fifty years is a medium-long period in anybody's life, and it will be fifty for us in June of 1984. Ou' sont les neiges d'avant-hier? Fran Belcher, Tom Campion, Bill Harding, John Woolsey, and I have met informally a couple of times and have hatched some pretty dazzling plans for the Fiftieth. Our main plank is that we're going to work hard—and get everyone else working—for a 100% reunion attendance. The first step is to form the Reunion Committee, which will be a large one a/c many hands make light work. If you haven't been asked and would like to serve, you're IN. Just let me know.

Did you know that the Class of 1934—which I think numbered 234 in June 1934—has added a few from other classes and lost a few in various ways, and now numbers 167 active members, of whom 101 have contributed time and/or money to Andover in recent years? We expect 170 to be there in June, 1984. If you can find a 1984 calendar, put it on now. In the meantime you're probably dying of curiosity to learn what Straw Sanders, Soapy Chamberlin, Trev Cushman, Rocky Keeney, Howie Johnson, and Joe Stevens had to say when we all met in New Haven at the Princeton game. It was better than what any Eli's had to say the following week at Cambridge. Earle Newton is semi-retired in Vermont, where he started in 1942, as Adjunct Professor at Norwich University. Steve Abbey reports an interesting visit in Portland, OR, with Cleveland Cory, PA '36 whose father graduated from PA in 1902 with Steve's. Dave Sargent, in Hartford, CT, retired some dozen years ago after 32 years with the Travelers Insurance Co. He keeps busy with tennis, volunteer work, and with writing the Alumni Notes for the Yale Class of 1938. In closing, I'm including excerpts from an exotic letter that arrived from Athens (the Athens) from Walter Snell, long-time classical buff:

"I get paid to do some of the things that I like best to do. Even before Andover I had immersed myself somewhat in the classical Greek and Roman world. Andover studies added to it. Then this opportunity arose, at a time when I was "semi-retired" anyway. Here, I can look out the windows of the Egypt office and see the pyramids, and, before the February '81 earthquake, all I had to do to see the Parthenon from our Athens office was to just raise my eyes from my desk and look straight ahead. It still gives me a lift to see it from any vantage point. After the quake we moved north of the city, so that now I walk to work and even home for lunch, taken from April through October on the balcony, with Mt. Penteli in the background, still showing the scars of the quarry from which the Parthenon stone was taken. You mention reading Gibbon. That and Pausanias are my guides for exploring the antiquities. That has been my chief interest here, other than watching mermaids on the Greek beaches, where bathing suits are more or less optional. An interesting sidelight on Gibbon was a mention by the columnist Russell Baker a while back, reviewing Henry Kissinger's book. He said that Gibbon had told the whole story of the ancient world in something like 990 pages, while Kissinger took over 1,000 talking about himself, and further said that he would bet that not over ten people in the world were currently reading Gibbon. He made his point, but I knew several at the time who were reading it. What is more my edition is six volumes of 600-700 pages each. Andover Latin and my trifle of demotic Greek have made the more salacious footnotes quite enjoyable. (Try reading those about Theodora.) Athens has turned out to be the best possible headquarters for traveling. We have poked around Greek and Roman ruin from Merida (Spain) to Ephesus (Turkey) Rome, Istanbul, and Cairo are only two hours away, and most of the Greek islands only 35 minutes by air."

Your Class Secretary is happy with the many items he has to report, but he is also frustrated because his space allotment is being cut back. Sorry, Classmates, but I'll have to do a lot of condensing.

First, our thanks to Stew Leonard for his hard work as Class Agent. We had two Non Sibi Association donors ($1000 or more) and 55 donors to the Alumni Fund. We had a total of 55 donors, but only a 35% participation. Of the 55 donors 32 have contributed five years in a row. We must have greater participation. I remind you of Stew Leonard's challenge: Anyone who has not given for the last five years should write him a letter about his life, NOW, and Leonard will send in $10 in his name. Let's take him up, Classmates. Stew Leonard also reports that he has had a Christmas card from Jack Stubbs from London. Stubbs has had a fabulous career with Bechtel and will probably retire after three more years.

Here's a nice note I received from Jim Swihart. "In a burst of grandfatherly pride I am writing you for a possible item in our Class Notes: My granddaughter is a Junior this year. She is the fourth direct-line generation to attend the school. Her great-grandfather graduated in 1910, her father, James W. Jr. was graduated in 1964. The latter is a Foreign Service Officer as was I until my retirement."

And also I have had a nice long letter from Bob Gammons, whom we haven't heard from in a long time. With apologies to Bob, I'll try to give you a synopsis. After Harvard Bob went to work for the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. In World War II Bob was a Naval Aviator and after the War he rejoined Goodyear briefly, then left to go with the Industrial Division of the Fuller Brush Co. Bob has worked in various cities for Fuller Brush and is now tapering off. In 1983 Bob and his wife Helen are planning to spend a month in England and Scotland.

Here's a nice Christmas note from the Fred Griffins: "It's been a fine year for all the Griffins. Ruth is still teaching first grade. Fred merged his business in January '82 with Kendall Insurance of Rochester, NH; the agency is now the largest and the best (!) in New England. He agreed to work in 'the manner to which he has become accustomed' for a couple of more years."

Al Johnson reports, "At 65 I'm entering phased retirement at Amherst College. Spending this year in Owl's Head, ME, building, and watching the geese in the sky."

A note from Norm Cross says that Norm, Jr. was married to Cynthia Wooden in Woodstock, VT, 25 September, and they are currently living in New Haven. Norm also reports that Al Adams married Jean Burnie on 20 December. That's good news.

Monny Cochran has written that he hopes to be with us at our 50th in 1985. Classmates, let's all plan to be there. Joe Dana says he is still working, as his daughter is still in school at the University of Maine. He hopes to ski in the Dolomites this winter, and he plans to see us in 1985 at our 50th, or earlier in Florida.

The grapevine tells me that Pete Carey, our retired airline pilot, lives in Marblehead, MA, and raises long-haired dachshunds.

Now for the sad news. On 6 September, we lost Stuart Allbright. We have no details but Mrs. Carolyn Allbright may be reached at 40 Armstrong Avenue, Lisbon, NH 03585.

On 5 December, Jack Ginsberg died after a long illness. He leaves a wife Norma and two children, Nina and Hilary. Norma's address is 435 East 57th Street, New York, NY 10022.

You will recall that in the most recent issue of the Andover Bulletin, I quoted parts of a long letter from Ward Wickwire. I am unhappy to tell you that Wickwire passed away on 26 December. You might want to write his wife Jean a note of condolence at 714 Irwin Drive, Sewickley, PA 15143.

A note from Katharine Scudder Fraser, too late for the last entry, told of her acting as director for three child development clinics, Bridgeport, Danbury, and Shelton, for the CT State Dept. of Health Services. That is a thirty mile radius at least! She now has a teenage grandson and can hardly believe it.

Ellie Johnson DuToit while visiting her daughter in San Francisco, CA, had lunch with Helen McDonald at Pt. Lobos. Helen told her of her travels, etc. This prompted me to follow-up with a request to Helen to bring us all up-to-date. This was her prompt reply: "1982 has been a wonderful year for me. I retired as Secretary-Treasurer of the CA Redwood Association, I am on the Board of directors of our Mutual Corporation at Rossmoor, and am thoroughly enjoying my new life—playing golf again, bridge to keep my 'mind' working, gardening, reading, just completed a knit suit, and have taken up square dancing. In August Kaye and I had a delightful tour of the British Isles. We flew from NY to Shannon, were in Ireland a week, then as far north as Gleneagles in Scotland, down through England to Bath and Stonehenge, and up to London. Our plans for 1983 are still a little vague, but we feel it's important to keep going while we're still 'young'."

Speaking of lunches, I wrote to Betty Clough Davis hoping to see her this January, but our proposed trip to Florida didn't materialize. In her reply Betty said three dogs, yard work, and cooking keep her busy. Her oldest son and family (four children) live in Clayton, CA, so she doesn't see them often. Second son and family (one child) live in Portsmouth, NH and are visiting in January. Daughter Betsy lives nearby.

Eleanor Johnson DuToit's Christmas letter mentioned travels to visit family in San Francisco and Florida. Her house was bursting at Christmas with all of her family around her, eleven or twelve altogether. Ellie commented on the PA Christmas concert as being "superb, very moving, and beautiful," and recommends this annual event to anyone who lives close enough to attend.

Lib Murphy Garrison wrote that husband Herb is "crouched and ready for 1 February retirement." Not at a loss for keeping busy, they are helping their son market his pottery, called "Spodjie."

Frances McTernan and Pres Coan made the trip to Indianapolis to spend Christmas with daughter Hillary and her family at Hillary's in-laws. It is hard for Frannie to get away these days as her mother (now 96, I think) is in a nursing home and counts on seeing Frannie every day.

Living near her grandchildren, Barbara Chamberlain MacCready spends happy times with them besides working two afternoons for the Newton Taxpayers' Association, bowling with two clubs, playing bridge on Saturdays, and participating in church activities.

"If this is retirement, I think I'm going to like it," Ann Cutler Brecheen writes. She retired as librarian at Fort Huachuca, AZ in November. She has taken up tennis again, joined a walking group, and keeps in close touch with her daughters whose careers are very impressive. Daughter Laurie visits eight states in her capacity as Marketing Director for a chain of restaurants, and daughter Leigh, an attorney, does things like going to Alaska to close oil leases.

Something happened to me the other day that hasn't happened in ages—I ran out of gas, the car, that is! Hope this isn't a sign of age! It happened on the thruway. Fortunately I was able to get from the outside lane to the emergency safely.

Please let me hear from you with your news for the next column.

These notes cover a lot of geography. On a motor trip this fall through the heartland of Dixie, I made a conscious effort to contact classmates, but there are very few of us in the South; if you subtract or otherwise eliminate Florida, they are Ed Stephens (Reidsville, NC), Charles Sargent (Charlottesville, NC), Steve Morehead (Brevard, NC), and Burns Borough (Charlotte, NC). For one reason or another I reached none with the exception of Bob Rinehart (Montgomery, AL). Bob has been living there contentedly since retiring from the Army and has trouble getting North—too cold and he doesn't like to fly.

Big geographical news, however, in an article, "Pick of the Prep Schools" appearing in, of all places, Travel & Leisure magazine with this quotation, "Andover is Chicago, Exeter is Philadelphia, Groton is Newport, Deerfield is Warrenton, Virginia." Exeter's linkage must come from W.C. Fields, "I'd rather be dead." As for the Andover/Chicago connection, here is Hank Wood's comment, "I think the statement is asinine." Jack Snyder begged off: "I don't know how Andover is now." Hank and Jack supplied Chicago news: party for Ted Ballard's 65th, and that Jack himself was in France for two weeks in September, and is now in night school "at the bottom of the ladder of computer knowledge." Judge Richard Merrick reports, "a new experience for me was to testify before the subcommittee, which I did on 10 November, as President of the National Conference of Bankruptcy Judges. Things are busy, but if favored legislation is enacted in the lame duck session, I shall be seeking a lifetime appointment either to the Bankruptcy Court or the District Court."

From Cal MacCracken, "I've just finished a book for Scribner's, A Handbook for Inventors: How to Protect, Patent, Finance, Develop, Manufacture and Market Your Ideas. Should be out in March. My company, Calmac Mfg. Corp., manufactures my inventions, most recently ice storage for shifting commercial air conditioning loads from day to night. Won the National 60-plus Squash Championship two years, and am ranked #1 in 60-plus Eastern Tennis. I have ten grandchildren. (Class Secretary's note: the leader for the class by a factor of two.) My wife, Mary, is a successful author of books on troubled children. Two were made into TV specials."

Mush Room has the best of two geographs: from October to June he's at the Belleview Biltmore Hotel, Bellair, FL "with the golf course on one side and the water on the other." He spends the rest of the year in Northbrook, IL. Mush retired in late '81.

The News Media Division of Bethlehem Steel advises that Ned Brightwell has retired after concluding forty-two years of service, thirty-six of which had been in their Cincinnati District. How's that for one piece of geography? Ned dropped a line saying, "probably not a bad move in view of the desperate plight of our steel industry." He is currently considering whether to continue to work.

And we have some who are working, two of whom are in our Nation's Capital. Wes Oler very proudly told me he was a Governor of the American College of Physicians and Denni Coursen is still on the "Hill" as a consultant on government affairs as he has been for the last thirty years. He has his own firm specializing in Far East mining interests. And that ends the class of '36's geography for now.

I am learning all too soon that class news includes the sad as well as the happy. Jim Nelson passed away on 1 May 1981. He is survived by his wife, Anne, who may be reached at South Lewis Lane, RR #8, Godfrey, IL 62035. Cape Burnham, who lives on 317 Lancaster Avenue, Richmond, KY 40475, lost his wife, Sophy Mason, on 8 April last year. I note that our football captain still lives in the same town he did when he led our team to victory against Exeter in 1936. The class extends its heartfelt sympathy and prayers to Cape and to Jim's widow, Anne.

Jack Ware reports from Vineyard Haven: "Ready to receive guests at our new home on 23 Hatch Road, R.F.D. Box 149." Acting executive director of the Martha's Vineyard Community Services, he is also now the treasurer! It should be noted that Jack does part-time work at the M.V.'s National Bank and also serves as vice-chairman of the finance committee of the Town of Tisbury. Have money problems? See Ware.

Wally Chessman, our historian from Denison University, whose retirement became effective this past summer, has been teaching American History to students learning to teach English as a second language at the University of Rome—a magistero no less—I had to look that one up! Wally's son, Alec, is a third year medical student.

Tom Church writes, "I'm about to retire from Bethlehem Steel (12/31/82) after 41 years. They've treated me well but I'm looking forward to the change."

Dick Hamilton retired from The Babcock and Wilcox Company's Alliance Research Center, Alliance, OH, effective 1 September 1982, after thirty-five years of service with the company in a variety of positions in many departments. Dick was president of our Musical Club and now plans to continue his work in community theatre.

Bob Bower retired from the Bureau of Social Science in Washington; he is working on up-dating a book he authored some years back on television.

Horace Poynter is anticipating retirement in December, 1983 from his work at General Electric, Aircraft Engines Business Group, in Lynn, MA, as production engineer. Betty and Horace toured the Scandinavian countries in 1981 and planned a trip to Portugal (fall '82). Their granddaughter, Betsey, age fourteen, has started at Exeter.

"Retirement is like going on an open-ended vacation" was the assessment of our local "Halliburton," Bill Quimby, after he and Conny brought a fifty-one-foot vessel to the Cape from Bermuda, cruised in Maine waters for three weeks, ("saw Jock Kiley up there") in September hiked in Germany and Austria, and finally in October rafted through the Grand Canyon with son, Ed PA '63 in tow. Can anyone match that 'royal road'? But you really should see their Christmas card depicting a jogging member of the class doing a double-take as he passes a—well, if you really must know, I will send a copy, provided you send me some news. "May all your Christmas dreams come true!"

Here are some gatherings from our Class Agent and other sources for which I am most grateful:

Jack Powelson has been at Harvard this year working on what he believes will be a three or four volume history of economic development.

Jack MacDonald: "On 15 September I took Mary to Rome for three glorious weeks of vacation ... a mini pilgrimage from which we returned with great peace of mind..." I wish I could include Jack's most interesting observations and reflections but space won't permit. Jack, we missed you both at reunions! Remember, 1987 isn't far ahead!

Joe Machell's wife, Miriam, writes Winnie-Lou that their tour through NH and VT after reunion was "super!"

And from Pat Deming is this news of his family: Son John PA '70 is a builder in Grafton, VT; Hunt PA '68 is a city attorney in Washington, DC; George is busy at home; and wife, Anna, is working hard in the anti-nuclear movement. Pat himself is currently trying to save the Lincoln Theatre (New Haven) from "the wrecker's ball." This was of interest to me. I suggested he contact my daughter, Andrea Louise, Princeton '77, who has been the executive Secretary for the League of Historic American Theatres, a Washington-based outfit, which, among other things, encourages, promotes, and aids in the preservation of historic American theatres. Do you have a favorite theatre, about to be demolished, you want saved? If so, contact me now!

Mary Emily Pettengill Smith-Petersen, "Pett," has graciously agreed to be Chairman of our forthcoming 50th Reunion in 1987! —and, has persuaded me to be her Co-Chairman. We both tried very hard to get new faces to head up the Committee, but, it seems that everyone is planning to come to the 50th, but no one is anxious to take over the responsibility of planning and organizing it; however, as the time draws near, we hope to have everyone in the class actively participating on the various Reunion Committees. Pett left on her annual trek South in October via Cincinnati to visit a son in Roanoke, VA and to see two daughters. She has moved to a new Condo in Naples, FL at 220 Gulf Shore Blvd. N., and will spend the winter there.

Anne Sawyer Green and her husband Jack were in Africa during the month of August last summer and later visited on Long Island. She is planning to attend the 50th if she can arrange to be away from her heavy schedule of activities in Dayton, OH.

Kay Forbush Bass and her husband George have moved from their Condo at 1501 Shipmaster to a new home at Moss Creek, Hilton Head, SC and are still unpacking and hanging pictures. They spent last summer in Maine as usual.

Bar Randolph Bowman expects to retire in March. She and Gus are considering a move to the Bay area on the Gulf of Mexico, but they are still living at their Houston address at 4219 Whitman. Children and grandchildren are all doing well.

Had a nice letter from Lil Seiler Willins just before her annual trip South to Ormond Beach, FL. Lil has been in the hospital twice during the past year, but seemed in good spirits. She and her husband spend the summer in Bridgton, ME.

Cyn Holbrook Sumner writes from Cooper City, FL that she and Warren drove north last August to visit son Steve in Ohio and relatives in North Carolina and Chicago. They expected to return to Ohio again at Christmastime.

Martha Ransom Tucker and Art are tripping to Hawaii in February! Their permanent base is now New Castle, NH.

Corinne Brooks Cornish has been made Office Manager of Hospice of San Francisco. Another classmate Dottie Hamilton Gammon recently moved to San Francisco from Limestone, ME.

Tune in to TV Channel 11, Durham, NH and you will be treated to the familiar, melodious voice of Pri Richards Phenix who does an excellent job of announcing future programs and events for that station. Pri may also be seen on fund raising nights manning the telephones in her usual efficient manner. Ran into Pri briefly just before Christmas at the annual Strawberry Banke Christmas house tour in Portsmouth, NH.

All class secretaries, especially those with thirty years of office, are known for their efficiency, finger-tip access to information, timely solicitation of news, and early informative blurbs on upcoming reunions. Except '38s: (1) my "records" are a mess; (2) I forgot to send out my usual round of moving pleas for news (but see below); and (3) the Forty-fifth Reunion planning is progressing, but as of today, 10 January, I still haven't sent out an announcement of the Reunion. You will have it before this reaches you (I think).

The Reunion stationery has been printed up by Ace Pike, who is also Reunion Fund Chairman. We have a big group and that will make life easier for Ace. I think I mentioned the early involvement of Meador, Fred Kent, Harrison Adams and Davis. THE DATE IS FRIDAY 10 JUNE 1983.

What I did do by way of soliciting news was to call six men from whom, with one exception, I have heard nothing, directly, in thirty years: three I missed, Finch, Stein, and Esty three I got, Weinberg, Costello, and Jones, and this was fun (for me), even if I took Art W away from the football game.

For a guy who has sent two sons to Andover and has been so loyal a supporter of the AAF, don't know how Art Weinberg and I seem to have missed connections. He is a partner of Hess, Segall, Guterman, Pelz & Steiner of New York City, and Art specializes in motion picture business law. The Weinbergs lost a son last spring, but otherwise he is well. I urged his return in June and hope he can do it.

Casey Costello, living in Poughkeepsie, describes himself as a semi-retired, free-lance writer. While he bemoans the financial aspect of this as of now, he said his work did put five kids through college, so no complaint. It was great talking to these two guys after forty-five years. Casey went to Rochester University, then flew Kingfishers off the U.S.S. Marblehead and thence to publishing.

Dean Jones I had seen at one reunion, the thirtieth, I think. He's one of the few unmarrieds of the class, and he too is in publishing, with Matthew Bender in New York. Interestingly, he left another publisher in 1967, then traveled, returning to work in 1979. He reports seeing Ireland, and, sadly, the death of Pat Stevenson, Jack's wife. Pat had been sick for many years, but in my brief encounters with her, found her charming, bright and warm-hearted.

Spink Davis ran into Sumner Kates and Harrison at a football game, reporting that Sumner may not be with us at the Reunion, and that Ted's book on PA athletics is done. I had a postcard from Hank Williams in Salzburg. This was part of a trip I reported on in the last Bulletin.

Dex Richards and I missed each other at the Yale-Dartmouth game in the fall (Yale won), but he writes of moving to New London, NH from a larger house at Fisher's Bay, Lake Sunapee. He enrolled in a language course at Dartmouth, studying spoken French in anticipation of a trip to France in the spring.

Anyone interested in chartering a boat to see England from the Thames should contact Harry Adriance, 184 Greenacre Avenue, Longmeadow, MA 01106 (413) 567-5475. (Advt.) Please make the 45th.

Those of us who attended colleges that hold to a cycle of reunions every five years have a fortieth coming up next spring. The Yale Class of 1943 jumped the gun (none of us in New Haven add very well) and had our reunion last November. By my count, there are 65 PA '39ers listed in the latest Yale 1943 Class Directory. Of this number, 22 attended the reunion. They included: Pete Anderson, Dick Besse, Jack Castles, Bill Coughlin, Oz Day, Dave Ferguson, Tom Flournoy, John Kebabian, Ed Kendrick, Jim Kittredge, John Makepeace, Jack Northrop, Bill Pugh, John Reid, Bob Sherwood, Pete Strauss, Hank Terrie, Dick Thompson, Jack Vreeland, Jack Walsh, Art Williams and myself. There is nothing newsworthy in a list of names, other than the fact that we all made it and survived three days of partying. I have, however, a reason for making this information public—it is my hope that this group of declared reunioners will constitute a nucleus for our forty-fifth at Andover in June, 1984.

The Yale officials underestimated the size of the turnout and scheduled most of the events in rooms too small to accommodate the crowds, making it difficult to move about and see everyone. I am able to offer only a few quick impressions: Jack Walsh is in good enough shape to pitch nine innings; Oz Day's sense of humor is still intact; John Reid is twenty-five pounds below his Andover playing weight and looks great; and Bob Sherwood has a double pass for being happy—he is enjoying retirement from the State Department and is no longer a widower. Congratulations to Bob and his new wife Peggy!

I had the privilege of chairing a panel of children of the Class of 1943" talking informally about their experiences as students at Yale. Two of the five panelists had PA fathers: Ann Day, daughter of Oz Day, and Sally Strauss, daughter of Pete Strauss. They were a delight—sharp, informative, witty and charming. I sing their praises, while still smarting from the beating they gave me when I suggested that the University was making a maximum effort to correct the imbalance between women and men on the faculty.

No implication was intended by the above that those who did not attend the reunion were too infirm to do so. A number of us had a visit with Bish Hobson earlier in the fall when he was east to arrange for renovations of the family summer home on Fishers Island. His schedule could not take a return trip with so little turn-around time in Cincinnati. Likewise, Frank Campion came through New Haven a week before the reunion, visiting colleges with his daughter Kate. On the weekend following the reunion, Annie and I visited Barney and Cherry Rafferty at their home in Farmington. Barney had been crippled for the better part of the year with an infection in his ankle. Several operations, plus ample dosages of antibiotics and other familiar potables, however, have aided the healing process, and full recovery is now in sight. A recent, three-week visit of their first grandchild, a daughter of their daughter Kathleen, also helped. On Saturday, the four of us journeyed up to Cambridge for the Harvard-Yale football game which was a total disaster for us Yale fans. Things picked up, however, as we moved down to the summer home of Pete Anderson and his delightful sister-in-law, Doris, in Hyannisport for the balance of the weekend. Jim Kittredge joined us there, and excellent weather, food, drink, and conversation guaranteed a good time for all.

Several classmates promised on their return home from the reunion to send news of themselves and their families. So far, Ed Kendrick is the only one to make good on his promise. It appears that he and his wife, Ottsie, have found the formula for the perfect vacation. In his own words: "I am still holding down the fort as the most senior VP at Fiduciary Trust Company in Boston. Ottsie's and my major annual event is our six-week cruise aboard our 33' sloop Penobscot in European and Middle Eastern waters. Over an eleven-year period we have cruised from England to Cyprus and Turkey via France, Corsica, Sardinia, Sicily, Malta, Italy, Yugoslavia, and Greece leaving our vessel in a different country each winter. Now she is awaiting our return at Kusadasi, Turkey. Ned (PA '66) is practicing law in Santa Fe, NM and Mel (PA '67) is engaged in sculpture in the Soho area of New York City. We enjoy seeing each summer Bill and Jackie Binnian who have a house near us on Deer Isle, ME."

Herb Fletcher writes that he is now head of Foreign Sales for Crown International Pictures Inc., while at the same time doing independent consulting work under the name, Fletcher Film Enterprises. Herb is a natural to be chairman of the entertainment committee at the forty-fifth.

There will be other college reunions in June. May I recruit a reporter at each to collect news of classmates?

Can you imagine that "Bellows" is now Class Secretary! Now that we all are almost 60 we must be doing something great, so let me know what it is.

This Christmas I was co-chairman of a group growing 10,000 poinsettias for sale by FAME Charities where we raised $30,000. Our daughter, Anne, was home from Washington, DC where she is in American University graduate school and teaches. Our son, Marty, and his family were also here for the holidays. He is executive sports editor of the Chicago Sun-Times, and his wife, Jo-Anne, is associate editor of a trade magazine. Bill and I had a busy, time but most of all with our 18-month old grandson, Wike.

Virginia Rice Kneller writes that she is enjoying her townhouse in Fort Lauderdale where she is in real estate sales, and exercises every other day at a near-by health spa. She spends summers in East Orleans on Cape Cod where she has a chance to see her children and first grandchild, Rebecca, born in February, 1981.

Talked recently with Audrey Rugg Shanaberg. She and her husband, Frank, live on Longboat Key overlooking the Gulf, a half hour's drive from Siesta Key.

The daughter-in-law of Carol Parker Olson writes that Carol died last spring in Washington, D.C. She is survived by three sons and a daughter. The sympathy of the class is extended to her family.

Come on '39 please send in your news. We would love to hear from you.

In late fall, we had the opportunity to entertain Charles and Lane Gabeler. "Child" has now retired after many arduous years of foreign service with U.S.A.I.D., but keeps active designing ocean-going catamarans. Now resident in McLean, VA, Child and Lane, who has to be the most attractive member of the Washington Bar, hope to see more of Classmates than his travails permitted in the past.

PA Alumni office advises that Robert Anderson has been appointed U.S. Ambassador to the Dominican Republic. I am sure "Andy" is delighted to have been removed from the firing line that he once occupied. We all remember—"State Department spokesman, Robert Anderson advised today ..." Well done, Bob, and best wishes in your new post.

Tim Hoopes' brother, Dave, in Bermuda for Christmas, says Tim is as busy as ever as President of the American Association of Book Publishers, and was spending Christmas with Anne and family in Barbuda.

Jack Malo reported in September that he was looking forward to a visit from "Butts" Macomber who was to be guest speaker at the Mile High Club in Denver, of which Jack is a charter member. In addition to the "lamb chop and green peas" luncheon circuit, Butts can take time off from his busy Metropolitan Museum prexyship to run his fortieth Reunion—Class of '44 at Yale.

Dave Gile, incidentally, now Chief Executive Officer and Senior Vice-President of Marine Midland, is Chairman of the Yale Alumni Fund, Secretary of the Class of '44, and Trustee and Chairman of the Finance Committee of Berkely Divinity School. Dave says good-bye to Patsy every morning with his dulcet version of, "I'm off to New Haven and Yale!" A very perfect Mr. Eli!

A delightful Christmas Card from Walt and Taitzie Curley "et toute Famille." When photo was taken in September, only one grandchild. An addendum notes that since then, two more have arrived, making Walt our leading grandsire, by my reckoning. Any challengers, please advise.

A mutual friend saw Larry Lee at a company meeting in Nassau in June, and by all accounts he was looking as fit as ever. Norm Bemis is performing good work as a volunteer at Bryn Mawr Hospital with time off for an occasional round of golf. Norm wants Tom Lewis to know that he recently shot 89 on an easy course! Blake Flint was recently elected President of The Materials Handling Institute Inc., a trade association of 330 manufacturers of materials handling equipment.

Last March, Bill and Toni Hayler journeyed to Pascagoula, MI to watch Bill's daughter, Margot, christen the new destroyer, U.S.S. Hayler, named for Bill's father, Admiral Hayler, a redoubtable cruiser division commander in World War II.

When at Andover in 1939, my war started, I shared a common lot with Pat Grove-White and Bob Clifford, who we all remember as exchange scholars from the United Kingdom. It was most pleasant to hear from Bob via Alumni Office. After a long and distinguished career as Musical Advisor to the County of Gloucestershire's Education Committee, Bob looks forward to retirement and becoming a performing musician again with the possibility of tours to Canada and the U.S.A. and the renewing of old friendships. Many years ago in the environment of Cheltenham, I spent some futile hours searching the Cotswolds for Bob. I hope he makes his tour, and we will greet him with as much enthusiasm as our children did the Beatles!

The passing of any classmate is sad to record, particularly when the news is delayed. John Reynolds followed his distinguished academic career at PA with an equal record of excellence at Harvard and an Honours degree in Government. His ability was early recognized. At the time of his death in 1978 and for some years before, John was, and had been, a Governor of the Federal Reserve. Following his father and three uncles at Andover, John in his far too short a life, brought honour to his family and school. We remember him so well at our 35th Reunion, where, despite a debilitating illness, he was the soul of courage and cheerfulness. To his family, our belated and heartfelt sympathies.

Correspondence to these small Islands, unless foreign air-posted, might well be sent 'slow whale'. Just before the deadline, I received a Christmas Card from Jack and Marjorie Cuthbertson which would show that they are grandparental equals of Walt and Taisie Curley—although I would say ahead on seniority! Also a pleasant card from our dear friend and one-time mentor "Spike" Adrian ('28), whose class notes are still "sine qua non," noting that Adair Gans Lobdell was a summer neighbor in New Hampshire.

Now the old year passes. Susan and I wish you and yours our sincere wishes for 1983. An eternal optimist, from my view, in Bermuda, I remind you: "Westward look, the land is bright."

As Marnie Martin writes, "We have a feeling that no big news is really good news. Next spring we hope to announce the arrival of our first grandchild."

Agreed, no big news is good news, but little news will do—any news, really. Please let me hear from you.

From Mimi Calder Dunn: "In September we had dinner in Barrington, IL with Dorie Jones Hannegan and her husband Bob, and also in Danville, VA with Judy Nelson Williams and her husband Red. I had seen Dorie two years ago but Judy and I hadn't seen each other since we graduated forty-one years ago. Wonderful seeing them."

Mimi and Jim were in our area again at Christmas time to be with their daughter and family. Bob and I met them for dinner and had a wonderful evening together. It's a miracle that we can pick up where we left off a hundred years ago and still giggle over ridiculous things, which we did. It was great.

A note from Emily Mills Courtice saying she and Nancy Kelley Park had a get-together in Oregon last November.

We're expecting our third grandchild to arrive late February in Bangkok, Thailand where daughter Judy and family are living. Do wish they were closer for such grand happenings. In the "idiot grandmother department" I'm sure I take first prize!

Not much more to report except to send my best wishes to all and hope I may hear from you before too long.

Over the Christmas holidays I had lunch with our new class agent, Nate Cartmell, who is living in Manchester, NH and doing hospital development work. Nate is performing a thankless but most important job with great enthusiasm and tremendous endeavor. Together we reviewed the "giving" record of the class of '42 and, in all honesty, it is a mixed bag. A small, too small, group of stalwarts have been contributing steadily and generously. The record of some others is, very honestly, abysmal. Having worked most of the yearly phonathons, I was able to offer up many of the reasons (excuses) for failure to support Andover. It boils down to this: No one has said, "I don't give to any charities." That would be a somewhat understandable reason. The reason most often given is one of "priorities"—the "I-have-many-other-demands-for-giving" reason, or when it comes down to schools and colleges, the "I-have-other-demands-such-as-my-college-or-my-son-or-daughter's-school." Think it over. That is their school. Andover was your school. It's one of two deductible expenses, college being the other, where the institution in question has actually benefited you personally. All charities benefit someone—very few have benefited you personally. Andover did. Your college did. And that raises the question of why Andover should come first. I'd like to offer three reasons. First, colleges have a larger alumni body to call on for support. Second, most colleges receive some government support and very heavy foundation support. Third, and most important, are you convinced that you would have been able to go to the college you are now supporting without the Andover education you received? Memory has it that most of us went to Andover in order to get into the college of our choice. Next time you get a letter from Nate, please ask yourself one question: "Would I have gotten into the college I am supporting without the education and opportunities that Andover gave me?" If you can answer with an unequivocal "yes" to that question, throw Nate's letter away. Otherwise, please join the group that is helping to make an Andover education a reality for people like you.

News has been sparse in the last few months. From Tom Huser comes the information that "For the past 21 years, I have been helping run one of the largest water management agencies in the country—the South Florida Water Management District. It covers an area of 17,000 square miles, from Orlando to Key West. My title is Administrator. In my spare time I have been a regular weekly columnist for the Miami Herald since 1969." Our records indicate that Tom lives at 528 Driftwood Road in North Palm Beach, FL. He has three grown children, the oldest daughter is head nurse in the emergency room at St. Mary's Hospital. Tom also has a twin son and daughter, the son in business in Jupiter, FL, the girl running an art studio in Tampa.

A note from John MacIntyre indicates that for the last 22 years he has been following the western snows as a skier. Currently, he is living in Sandy, UT, but in May will be moving to Dillon, CO so that he can follow a whole new area of trails and mountains. When I called John about our 40th reunion he told me he had a conflicting commitment in Europe as a member of the U.S. Olympic Ski Committee. Many years ago John's family set up a scholarship at Andover to help needy students. The fund has grown considerably in the intervening years.

A Christmas card from Vern Midgley advised me that he had already gone into training for the 45th reunion. Spoke to Bob Seaver a few days ago and found that he missed the reunion because his daughter was graduating Phi Beta Kappa from Amherst that week-end. He had called to get Bob Siegel's address, whom he had run into in a New York restaurant. Seaver is still enjoying the good life in Coopers-town, NY.

Please write, call or send news some way. While I move around a lot, chances are I won't run into too many of you at bars or restaurants before the next notes are due.

As your new Class Secretary, I am eagerly awaiting news from you.

The holidays are over and we are fast approaching, as we call it here in the country, the winter blah period. I hear from Jean McKay Cleveland and Charlotte Eaton Burr each year but that is about it. Where are the rest of you?

Completely at a loss as to what to write about, I will intrigue you (?) with a few words about myself. Poor dears!

Hank and I retired to Warner, NH, ten years ago, a sort of early retirement for both of us. This is my/our second marriage. Hank retired from the Marine Corps in 1967; we were married in 1968. He continued to work with the Government for five years after that to put his two children, from his first marriage, through college... I had no children, so, his children duly educated, we decided, poor or not, to retire in 1972.

I came from Maine, and Hank from Vermont inasmuch as we could not accept either of those states, we compromised on New Hampshire.

We bought the first house that we saw. It is a small Cape (not old) with just enough room for two people and our cat, Tina, a Siamese. We love it more each year. We have made a Deer Park (no deer yet) out of a forest adjoining the house and have added a gazebo. It is an old elevator for 1100 Beacon Street in Boston. I was the logo for an antique shop in the area and something on which I had had my eye for three or four years. It came up at auction and we bought it. Strangely enough, it was owned by another Abbot girl from the class of '37.

Hank keeps busy by being a Trustee of the library, is on the school board of our regional school district and has researched all of our old town roads going back to 1783. I am the lazy one of the family. I make weekly visits to the local nursing home, recruit for Westbrook College in the New Hampshire area, AND work in my gardens, both flower and vegetable, from early April until Thanksgiving. No boss, no phones—it is utter bliss. Having worked for thirty years in personnel, legal administrative work, etc., I find this a delightful way to live.

I have seven nieces and nephews, the youngest is a junior at Gould Academy, and the oldest graduated from Dartmouth in '81. They all visit frequently and provide us with their youth, their ideas and their aspirations. It is a tremendously rewarding as well as a fun experience for all of us. Indeed, our cup runneth over.

I do hope the above will move some of you to take pen in hand and let us all share some of your experiences in life after these forty plus years.

Highlight of Jim's year was being able to walk away, with son Tom, from an auto accident which sheared a telephone pole while totaling the family station wagon. As this is dictated on the 27th of December, we seem to be in for a spell of cold weather. It was only 64° here in Chicago on Christmas day and, so far as I know, has not gotten into the 70's anytime in the last week. Surprising for Chicago!

Dick Harrington reports from Providence that he has at last completed the laborious ten-month move of himself, 40,000 volumes, 60,000 prints, drawings, and paintings; and 500 model soldiers into a completely renovated building on the Brown University campus. If memory serves, he has been curator of this collection for thirty-five years or more now. Sumner Milender belatedly reports that, having liquidated his family's tanning business in 1980, he is looking for "constructive activity." He's seen, from time to time, Lester Grant who apparently owns some double-decker buses in Boston, and would welcome hearing from or seeing other members of the class of '44. His address is Stonehedge, Lincoln, NH 01773.

George Niebank retired as senior vice president of Sante Fe Industries and has moved "for good" to Green Lake, WI. His "retirement" includes arbitration, teaching, and will probably expand to include work for the Wisconsin State Public Defender's office. His ex-roommate, Bob Percy, craftily sent the Bulls a Christmas card with no return address and the message "Hey! When are you coming east?" Another cheery note for those of us who are still chained to the oar comes from Bill Adams who has retired as senior vice president of Citibank after thirty-two years, returned from Switzerland, and is now studying photography at the Rhode Island School of Design.

Former Fuller Brush man, Judge Thomas R. Morse, Jr., continues to be the darling of the New England press. The most recent clipping I have is from the Boston Globe which describes him as "low key, reasoned, cautious, and innovative." (There was no case involving the Globe pending before the Judge at the time the article was printed.)

Fun loving, fund raising, class agent for '44, Peter B. Baker, has at last decided to mend his ways and get into the paper business. He has bought the sheet gummed and pressure sensitive paper division from Dennison, which he has named "Convertech" and of which he serves as president at 124 Heritage Drive, P.O. Box 569, Portsmouth, NH 03801.

Tucker Anthony is pleased to announce the appointment of John P. Garvey as vice president and syndicate manager. If you have any syndicates that need to be managed, by all means, call John.

Former ping-pong great, Victor Kiam II, otherwise known as "Hector Hiam," got some more badly needed publicity in the 20 September issue of the Wall Street Journal. The parts of the article Vic liked best were free plugs for Remington shavers. He also got a spread in People magazine in the section called "In the Money!"

Roger Strong recently dined with Elmer Ward who, he says, with one minor exception, is the spitting image of '43's Jack Lemmon. Joe Reisler reports running into Corey Allen at the Yale Club the day before Corey was to leave for Hong Kong. Joe reports that Gus Deming is still with Newsweek.

Wheelock Whitney was the Republican candidate for Governor of Minnesota last fall but, unfortunately, along with lots of other members of the Grand Old Party, had a bit of trouble in November. Next time will be different, Mr. Whitney.

While these notes were being typed, a late bulletin from Pete Stevens arrived. He is currently on the staff of the Public Interest Law Center of Philadelphia as Director of Development. Of his seven children, one is a Ph.D. in psychology, one is a Buddhist monk living in a monastery in Bangkok, three are pre-college students, and the two youngest, boys ten and seven, keep Pete and his bride flexible. Currently, Pete is working on our 40th reunion in June of 1984. Mark your calendars.

Happy Days. My November mailing was very productive.

Cubby Lyons Hickcox still has money for a stamp with three in college! Wellesley, Vassar and Rensselaer. The empty nest is "fun."

Gil Ferguson Rich has moved to Cambridge, MA and is enrolled in the School of Landscape Design at Radcliffe. She is very much "the student" and would love to hear from anyone in the Cambridge area. Her address is 154 Foster Street, 02138.

Ruth Goodall Pitstick has her first grandchild, Ryan Goodall Pitstick, and the cornerstone has been laid in their new house in Boca Raton.

Marg Travis Atwood has received her Master's Degree in American Studies. She became very "women's lib-y" on campus and regrets that Abbot has lost much of her identity. She is now working in the archives of the local museum. Marg says she still weighs the same although its in different places! Much of this due to tennis. She is also a part-time artist—current craze, monoprints. Would like "just one" grandchild.

Frannie MacDonald Thompson and her retired husband Don, have become freighter enthusiasts. Last June a 100-day trip started in Brooklyn and took them to Mozambique, Kenya, Tanzania, and Somalia. Fran sees John Sweeney ('45) who winters in Arizona. (Where is NH cottage, Amie?)

Edie Walker Filliettaz will have reason to attend our 40th. Her youngest daughter and son-in-law are moving to Andover, he to work for Hewlett Packard.

The "old goose" of the Crafty Goose writes from New London of her new shop which carries only handcrafted items, and includes the work of local and regional craftspeople as well as that of the mentally and physically handicapped. So writes Betty Buzby of her new life. All but Nancy at Syracuse are out of college and in business: John working for Channel 7 in Boston, Sandy at a Psychiatric Hospital in Denver, and Dave at Chase-Manhattan in New York.

Ellie Cahill Georgopolo is increasing her private practice of family, couples, and individual therapy in anticipation of her up-coming empty nest when Katina leaves for college next fall.

Betty Frank Abeles is a Certified Travel Consultant which qualifies her for a very active agent life. She has three grandchildren, ages seven, five and four, named Jennifer, Jeffrey and Jeremy.

Alma Mastrangelo Strabala writes "Children grown, gone and into careers, though none are married. One a banker in NYC, one a CPA in Los Angeles, and one a food distributor in Las Vegas... My own life is busy, varied and fun. I run the local branch of U.S. Tennis Association... learning calligraphy... house decorating ... But most of all, however, I've come to know the Lord and to trust and rely on Him; that's been my biggest blessing."

Ricki Hinrichsen Stambaugh contributes time as well as money to alumni affairs. She and her husband operate a Ground Round Restaurant in Waltham and are now spending some vacation time in Arizona.

Edgar and I look forward to seeing them several times a year. The freakish, snowless winter allowed us to keep the cow outside and sowed to account for the continuing fresh eggs from the Banties who usually dry up in these short days. Malcolm is now a junior at Hanover High, so we will only have him around for one more year to carry in the wood. Plan ahead for June '84. We could all make it a special reunion. amie.

We're in the midst of the warmest January seen in Connecticut in years. It's been so mild that the annual urge to head for the islands hasn't hit us yet.

The travel bug did bite last fall, however, and Genie and I took a two week Parillo tour of Italy. Aside from the fact that it was absolutely the best bargain we've ever enjoyed, we had a marvelous two weeks visiting Rome, Venice, and Florence with side trips to Bologna, Perugia, and Assisi as well. I've always wanted to see Italy since studying Latin with Woolsey and Peterkin, and ancient history with Minard at PA. It was awe inspiring to visit the antiquities and to see the art and sculpture close at hand and it was delightfully fattening to enjoy the food and vino! I'd recommend Parillo Tours to anyone thinking of Italia.

Jack Bishop has joined Christ Church (Episcopal) in Greenwich, CT as its rector after eleven years at St. Thomas Church in Rochester, NY. Jack and Jo Ann are the parents of four sons. For those in the area, his services are carried on station WGCH (1490) at eleven a.m. on Sundays.

Received a note from J. J. Ryan as follows: "Still living in Geneva with Florence and two children, Marion ten and Vanessa seven. The other children are Victoria age twenty-five, in London; John twenty-four, in law school at Pepperdine, CA; Caroline, twenty-two, in New York, and Alin, twenty, at Boston College. Hardly see anyone from Andover '45." I, for one, will drop in, John, if I'm in the area! How about thinking about the 40th which is only a couple of years down the road, old buddy?

John Blake is looking forward to three graduations this year: "Daughter Hillary '83 from Andover, Daughter Whitney PA '79 from Northwestern, and me (PA '45) from thirteen years as class agent! Daughter Sarah, Connecticut College '79, was married in September to Richard Cates of Wilmington, Delaware.

Lenny and Wilma Lunder are regular visitors to North Carolina where they have three grandsons. He says that mild NC climate looks better and better to an Old New Englander as the years go by.

Bill Prior is now a died-in-the-wool North Carolinian at Raleigh. Since the sale of his company, Aerotron, to Siemens A.G., he and Carol have become semi-retired while he is deciding what to do next. Caneel Bay, Munich, (Carol's hometown) St. Moritz, and Aspen have been on the agenda recently. In Addition, the Priors are diligently supporting those college bursars taking up the slack we left: Stephanie at Harvard pre-med nights; Alex at Simmons; Rob at Tufts; and Eleanor taking a year off from Harvard. Mike and Jeff are in third and first grades respectively. Bill may be semi-retired but he sure isn't taking it easy!

It was great to hear from the above guys. Now there are only 238 I haven't heard from! How about you?

Our son-in-law, John Ready has just been promoted and moved from Detroit to Boston by the Wall St. Journal. With John, daughter Betsey and the eighth wonder of the world in the area, we hope to get back to the Hill more often.

I hope you'll put a little extra in the sock for the alumni fund to show how much the class appreciates John's efforts over the thirteen years.

1982 was a sad year for '46. We lost Cory Sperry and Lindsay Bradford, two unique, charming, and wonderful characters. Too young to go, much too young. They brought so much light and pleasure to all of us who were fortunate to have known them well. Cy Heard reminded me that he and Cory (and perhaps others) actually received sheepskins from Lawrenceville, an olde Andover connection. Sheila and I missed Cy at the Rock Ctr. tuba blas over Christmas that was such a smash in '81.

Kim Whitney, our Royal and Ancient Connection, writes that the twin city gang had a wonderful dinner way back in September for Britta and Don. Excellent turnout too—75-100 grads and parents! Dammit Whitney, we will play a round one time, OK? How about an outing with Lynch in Sharon, Mellor in Phoenix, or Bege in Brookline? Alas, Kim's brother's (Wheels '44) shot at the Governorship fell slightly short but we all followed his drive with great enthusiasm.

For years you all have received a neat little form from PA soliciting "jingle" for the Annual Alumni Fund Drive. You got it from Pinky, Jimbo, and recently, from Martin. On the reverse is a section "use this space for news... etc." Take heed of this request and we will all benefit from the fascinating saga of your individual lives and adventures. Friendly fodder is what keeps these things going, don't you know?

Ron Tarbor, the cross country commuter and Cora have effected their second retirement. They maintain a flat in San Diego and a family farm on Westport Island, ME. At this reading they are first time grandparents. Congratulations.

I am not altogether certain how many of us still have kids at PA but Lee Nutt and I do. Lee, and Julie's daughter Jane, (gymnastics/lacrosse) will be an '83 grad as will Peter Thomes who is P.G. senior (varsity basketball). Needless to say, Sheila and I still manage a number of trips up to the old stomping grounds—always an adventure.

Giles Constable was in the NT Times once again as his dumbarton Oaks made headlines for unloading some impressionist biggies in order to secure an exquisite icon. Giles is a giant in our host of '46 outsized success stories.

The Exeter game at PA last fall was such a ball. An upset victory, catching up with all those who are actually still there, including would you believe, Deke, among others and Duer McLanahan on the 50 yard line.

Speaking of Duer, he reports (1/11/83) that the Addison Fund in Lindsay's memory (see below) has reached $4,000. It is still open and if you would like to give to that fabulous institution and think of Bradford in a small way at the same time, just mark your check to the Addison for Lindsay Bradford.

I would go on and on... however, most would be pure figments and our new editor, Mr. T.J. Regan, will keep this tight (as they say). Regards to all.

I regret to report another Classmate's passing. Lindsay Bradford died suddenly on 23 September in Stonington, CT. A fund in Lindsay's name for Andover has been established. If you care to participate, please send your contribution to: Duer McLanahan, 215 E. 72nd St., New York, NY 10028.

Sandy Trowbridge included the following comments together with his alumni fund contribution: "In ending a four year term as Alumni Trustee in May, I feel even more confident that Andover is totally unique in offering the highest quality of secondary education. Beginning my fourth year in 1983 as President of the National Association of Manufacturers in Washington, I find the political-economic world fascinating if also troubling and confused. Serving on the National Commission on Social Security Reform in the last year has provided a chance to witness the complexity and depth of one of our major national dilemmas. All in all, a busy and rewarding experience in each case." Sandy's experience on the National Commission on Social Security demonstrates the difficulty of reaching a consensus among intelligent and sincere people about the solution to serious problems facing the nation. A HAPPY NEW YEAR TO YOU ALL!

As you know by now Carol McLean Bly is our new Class Agent. According to Carol, our class did very well this past year in contributions. In a very nice letter I received from her she writes: "Our class has been good this year and I'm proud of us! Sometime I wish I could be near enough to other '47 people to see how they feel about supporting prep school vs supporting college. A few years ago I was a Andover for three days of a 'Visiting Committee on Communications, and had an interesting talk with Jim McCaffrey, an Andover graduate of about our time, maybe a class or two earlier. He said he felt much closer to Andover than to his college because he did all his idea getting and growing while at school. Well, had the same experience, but hadn't met any one else who had. It made me feel better about the non-support of my college. I wonder often if there are others of us feeling that way." If any of you have ideas on this matter, it would be interesting to hear from you. I know my husband feels more loyalty toward Andover than his college.

A Christmas card from Lois Derby Taylor "Sorry I missed the reunion, but we were in Louisville at the time. I'm going to make one of them before I die! Scott is living in Boston running the Derby Co., so we are delighted. He and his Dad are great buddies, playing tennis tournaments, fishing, and hunting. Sandy is getting married to a young physician on January so it has been a bit hectic around here. They will live in Chicago for 2½ years while he finishes his residency. I'm still playing competitive tennis with the girls and trying to keep three domiciles together."

Corallie Hanly Murray writes: "Son David is an enthusiastic junior at Harvard, in Lowe House, busy sailing and taking pre-architecture courses. He's earned two scholarships and this writing is still Dean's List despite delight of Cambridge living! Katie, also with a nice scholarship, is playing varsity soccer as a junior at Westover, which is much like our "old" Abbot. I had a marvelous Parents' Weekend there recently. I loved having her home and dreaded letting her go this year, but am glad I did. I am still a Reading Specialist in Evanston, but have a new house in Kenilworth. I'm finally getting organized!"

A Christmas card from Mackie Hall Kernan: "Son, Leslie, is with a law firm in Rochester and likes it very much. Connie still Continuity Director at a local radio station. Doug is still in California at Lockheed, but hopes to go to law school next fall. Martha just received early admission to Hartwich College—a nice early Christmas present for all of us. Sorry I couldn't make the reunion—had planned to, but couldn't get away. Hopefully, next time."

Margot Meyer Richter writes: "Good letter from Carol. Have recovered from my fall in April but still can't smell anything, though; but I can play tennis and jog. Am up to my eyeballs in art—painting, showing; President (and co-founder) of art Association which runs a gallery, had a newsletter, and workshops. Also belong to an art guild which meets monthly to critique each other's work. Involved with a new enterprise—a city gallery for Raleigh, NC."

Carol McLean Bly writes: "writing a thirty-two page pamphlet for American Association of Colleges project on why high school seniors should very seriously consider liberal arts colleges. All ideas would be gratefully received. The pamphlet will go to seniors, their parents, and high school counsellors."

I received the following from Jane Lewis Gleason: "I just received the Bulletin and realize I should pass some news on to you. I regret to tell my class that my husband passed away on 11 November 1982. He came to several reunions way back when we met at Abbot and always enjoyed my good times seeing old friends. I am blessed with four fine children and a beautiful new grandson. I will be opening my craft shop in Center Lovell, ME in June for my seventh season and would love to see anyone visiting or passing through the Kezar Lake Area. I will surely make our next reunion."

By the time this appears in print, nearly everybody will have received unconscionable amounts of mail with reference to the upcoming 35th Reunion which takes place on the weekend of 0-12 June. A Reunion committee consisting of Dick Rubin, Phil Aronso, Bill Engstrom, Mike Hurwitz, Roger Hunt, Dan Tucker, Art Contas, Dick Conway, Terry Buchannan, and myself and hopefully others as time goes on, will have milled about sufficiently to cook up something enjoyable, stimulating, and even nostalgic.

During a family junket to Sun Valley this winter I had the good fortune to meet up with Terry and Fran Buchannan which is a yearly winter vacation spot for them. Terry, I think, has been declared an environmental hazard by dint of size, and long skis which do a better job of sweeping the slopes than the ski patrol. The Buchannans' delightful intermittent excursions to here and there, too numerous to detail, would be the envy of all of us.

Terry is in the commercial and industrial real estate business in Glendale, CA where his wife, Fran, is also very active and successful in the residential real estate field. Terry reports that his former roommate Austin Graff is about to end chronic bachelorhood and is to be married in Washington, DC where he lives, by the time this Bulletin comes out. At a recent Yale West Coast 30th reunion, Terry reports having seen Jim Mason who is practicing cardiology in Ft. Lauderdale. Dave Fenton who is sales manager with Kaiser Aluminum in Oakland was also present at the same event.

Dan Tucker reports seeing Pete Selleck who has retired from the army and is now living in Wellesley and currently working for Stone & Webster in Boston. Despite being a Professor of English, Richard Reis recently published an article in combinatorial mathematics and is currently working on three books simultaneously although he despairs of ever finishing any of them at the moment.

Bob Harding is back at work teaching anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania after an eight month's stint in Sierra Leone where he and his wife were carrying out a survey of large animals in an area to be designated as the country's first National Park.

Art Contas continues to be active professionally with the Boston Consulting Group and charitably with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as an overseer, while trying to keep up with his lively and attractive daughters.

Dr. Ken Ganem has the very expensive distinction of currently having three children at Harvard, one in the Graduate School of Design and the other two as undergraduates.

Bob Brace continues to be very active in the fund raising department for Dartmouth. Bob has been chairman and director of various fund raising efforts and trusteeship responsibilities for more institutions for more time than almost anybody I know.

Carl Saltsman writes that his son Peter graduated from Dartmouth in June of last year. In addition to his regular position as Vice President of Raymond Engineering, Carl has moved into wood mosaic sculpture. He recently won the Society of Connecticut Craftsmen 1982 annual award for wood, has had articles in the Middletown Press, Hartford Courant and Technology Review, and has a commission for the renovated Middletown Library.

We rather belatedly, but nonetheless sadly, have learned that John Madden III apparently died some time in the '70s but we have no other information concerning him at this time.

Marty Ball Clayton's Christmas card included a family picture which sent me scurrying for my magnifying glass. "Which one is your classmate?" asked my puzzled husband. It turns out she's the third kid from the left. The others in the line-up are: son Stacy with his wife Lucy; daughter, Paris; son, Brooks; husband; Dick; and Dick's daughter, Jan. They are a handsome tribe! Marty writes that she saw Marty Barber Lowrance last fall in Virginia.

Katrina, daughter of Tootie Sinclair Morris, was married 9 October, 1982 to Dennis Harry Bauer.

Mary Marton Davenport's Christmas letter relates the high points of a busy year. Her many activities include singing in the Civic Chorus, working in Boy Scout and Cub Scout programs, and extensive traveling.

I hope to see you all at reunion. Please plan to attend. If you do it will be a gala affair.

Derwood Chase continues as the head of Chase Investment Counsel Corp. in Charlottesville, VA. His "Prescription for Success," as related in a recent address to the Virginia Junior Achievers Conference, includes, among other things, "Good health, sound objectives, do what you enjoy, avoid hang-ups, be efficient, choose a compatible partner," etc.

A recent Associated Press dispatch reported on a new survey of eleven widely used U.S. history textbooks, including The Americans: The History of a People and a Nation by Winthrop Jordan et al. At last report, Win was Professor of History at the University of California. The survey, published by the Council on Interracial Books for Children, condemned all eleven texts for "gloss(ing) over the honors of nuclear war and fail(ing) to critically examine war as an instrument of foreign policy." I'm sure that Win has an appropriate response. If he'll send it to me and if it's printable, I'll include it in the next issue.

Democrat Neil Rolde ran unopposed for the first time in a largely Republican district for a seat in the Maine House of Representatives. Presumably he was re-elected. Neil has been in the state government for fourteen years, and has held the position of House Majority Leader.

Under a photograph of Sammy Davis, Jr.; the President of Atlanta University, and Professor John Spencer, there appeared in a recent publication the following most impressive tribute to "Bones": "President Dennard, in awarding the honorary degree (Doctor of Literature), said of Professor Spencer: 'True friend, scholar, teacher, administrator and knowledgeable interpreter of Africa, generous and valued supporter of Atlanta University, you have demonstrated through your work with the problems of developing countries, that improving the quality of life in Third World countries must be the nation's work, and that your concern for a responsible foreign policy of support for emerging nations must become the concern of us all.'" Bones is associate professor of history and a former Dean of The college of Middlebury.

The mail has been a little thin of late. Let's hear from you.

According to the Los Angeles Times the contest between Rep. Anthony C. Beilenson (D. Calif.) and former Rand Corporation analyst David Armor opened up "as an oasis of academic civility" in a world of aggressive campaigns. Tony's professorial image, the paper reported, "comes from his issue-oriented approach to politics, his scholarly newsletters to his constituents and his avoidance of razzle-dazzle campaigns." In response to his opponent's support for President Reagan's policies, Tony observed, "I'm in total disagreement with respect to his (Reagan's) positions on virtually every issue." Campaigning hard in his reappointed 23rd district, which stretches from Beverly Hills to the southern San Fernando Valley, Tony won again in November, and has been returned to Washington for his fourth term.

A crisply xeroxed Christmas letter from diplomatists Robert and Joanna Martin noted that they were both promoted by the 1982 Foreign Service Selection Boards. In early September Bob finished a tour as Director of the a mere biologist, but...

When John Kimball was named a Finalist in the Westinghouse Science Talent Search competition back in 1949, the rest of us looked with awe upon him, as if he had just earned his Ph.D. He did, of course, go on to earn his Ph.D., after thirteen years (1956-69) of distinguished teaching in PA's Biology Department. Andover made the mistake of letting him go off on a year's sabbatical in 1967-68 to work with the Italian researcher and pathologist Dr. Carlo Baroni at Dr. Jonas Salk's laboratory in La Jolla, and that did it. A year later John was enrolled again at Harvard, his alma mater, where in 1972 he was awarded his doctorate in biology with a thesis on immunochemistry. From 1972 till 1981 John taught at Tufts University and earned tenure; but in 1981 he decided to retire from Tufts in order to devote himself full time to his publications and research.

Though John Kimball considers himself a mere biologist, the rest of us also look upon him as a writer of some of the finest, clearest expository prose around—which is one reason why his 1965 textbook Biology (Addison-Wesley), a standard text across the nation, goes into its fifth edition this spring. The text has been translated into both Spanish and Polish. The shorter version, Cell Biology (1970), has been translated into German and Japanese. Just recently John received an invitation from one of the ten Korean translators to write a foreword to the Korean edition—something of a surprise to John, since the translation is unauthorized. Apparently such piracy is possible because Korea does not subscribe to the usual international copyright conventions. John admits that the warm invitation from a pirate is a bit disarming.

Kimball's students at both Andover and Tufts recall their shock when they discovered that their biology teacher insisted that their own prose be clear and grammatical. A scientist with the humanist's affection for the language: if there is any such thing as a renaissance teacher in the twentieth century, John Kimball is it.

Only someone with John's self-discipline could work as hard as he does instead of gazing at the horizon from his study window in the remodeled barn. John and his wife Margaret live on Andover's Holt Hill, the highest point in Essex County, in a farmhouse built in the reign of Queen Anne. On clear days one can see Boston and planes landing at Logan Airport twenty-five miles to the south. In 1940 John's grandmother deeded a portion of that farm—bought by her husband in 1917—to the Trustees of Reservations as a memorial to her late husband: hence the name, "The Charles W. Ward Reservation." The Trustees of Reservations is a private Massachusetts charitable corporation dedicated to acquiring and maintaining green areas and wetlands for public use. Grandmother Ward added to the original 150 acres over the years, bringing it to 275 acres by the time John took over the management in 1956, his first year on the PA faculty. Following his grandmother's wishes, John himself has added to the Reservation so that it now comprises 640 acres. Here is a permanent green area, an exact square mile, half in Andover and half in North Andover, dominated by three hills, with trails and vegetation that are laboriously cared for by John Kimball as Trustee. Since there had never been a decent map of the area, a few years ago John taught himself surveying and produced an accurate map of the Reservation showing all its contours, elevations, and trails. The renaissance man continues to acquire new skills.

As we could have predicted, John Kimball is unable to stay out of the classroom. This year he is a member of the Biology Department at Harvard, teaching part of the Introductory Biology course this spring. In the fall semester he taught the General Immunology course. Just a few years ago there was no such course, immunology having been a division of microbiology usually taught only in medical school. But John's doctoral thesis supervisor, Professor A.M. Tappenheimer, pioneered the establishment of the course; and now that Professor Tappenheimer is retired, John takes special pleasure in teaching the course his mentor created, the focus of John's own thesis, and the subject of his newest textbook, which is being published by MacMillan of New York this month: Introduction to Immunology.

A tolerant perfectionist, John Kimball does everything well: teacher, writer, scholar, perpetual student, friend (fortunate are those many who have leaned on the Kimballs' friendship over the years), conservationist, public servant and a man so modest that he is embarrassed by such a description.

politico-military office in the State Department's intelligence bureau, and then attended the Federal Executive Institute's three-week Executive Leadership and Management Program. Joanna went to the autumn session of the Conference on Security & Cooperation in Europe as Executive Secretary of the U.S. delegation, returning from Madrid in time for the holidays. The Martins will remain in Washington well into 1983.

Miller Day Malcolm reports that his son, Scott Russell Malcolm '82, as captain of Andover's boys varisty swimming team last spring, set a new record of 59.06 in winning the 100 yard breaststroke championship at the New England Prep School interscholastics. Jim, who was a first-rate swimmer for PA in our day, also notes that Scott was selected as a prep school All-American.

Ferdinand I. Collins, captain USN (Ret.), writes that last year he became Director of the Thousand Islands Shipyard Museum. Bo invites all antique boat lovers to visit him at Clayton, ME, among the 1000 islands.

I am sorry to have to report that after a long illness Paul Richard Wells Boeth died at his home in Dallas, TX, on 5 June 1982. Ricky Boeth was one of the liveliest and most imaginative members of our class. Late in our senior year I can recall John Kemper once asking, with some concern as he surveyed the silent generation in the classes behind us, "Where are their Ricky Boeths?" A man of enormous wit, energy and talent, Rick imposed his unpredictable personality on our class and time at Andover. At PA he played tennis, sang, acted, debated, and most of all, wrote—as he wrote or the rest of his life. After Princeton he joined Newsweek in 1954 as a contributing editor, and then mostly alternated between posts there and on Newsweek, where as a senior writer for The Nation section in 1977, he wrote the prize-winning article, "Is America Turning Right?" Over his career he wrote many cover stories, not only for Time and Newsweek, but for other journals such as Atlantic Monthly, New York, and Cosmopolitan. Rick leaves his wife, Jennifer Polch Boeth, in Dallas, and their three children a New York. We can assure them all that Ricky Boeth's classmates will long remember him gratefully.

After Christmas I spoke to Lois Lovejoy Johnson and found them still in West Groton, MA. Lois recognized my name right off, and her voice was just the same as it was in school! Their eldest, Ann, is now a sophomore at the University of Rhode Island, majoring in H.S.E.—Human Services—and she is on the Deans staff! Their other child, Peter, is a freshman at St. Andrews in Barrington, RI. Lois is working in Marlborough in an educational collaborative in the field of special needs. She has twelve school districts and about 200 students. Another activity is her work for the Episcopal Diocese. Lois mentioned that she is the senior warden in her church. Wish I had asked her the name of the church since we are Episcopalians, and my husband is now the junior warden of the Cathedral. It sure is interesting to see how we have all gone out into the world, and have such wide interests.

Cora-Alice St. John Gebhardt and family are back from France. I did not know they were there from 1972-75. Her husband, Ron, now working for Ryan Homes, a name that is familiar to us here in Syracuse. They live in Sewickley, PA. Their son, a junior at Hobart, is now with a group from Hamilton College studying in France. Joy, is now 10. Their eldest is a senior at Hollands College. Cora-Alice said that she is one of three partners of a mens' clothing store in Sewickley. I am sorry that I did not ask the name of her store.

Our youngest, Sara, is now a sophomore at Dana Hall, which she just loves! The first of December, Dave and I went to see our daughter in Beaufort, SC. What fun it was to be with our sixteen-month-old grandson Daniel, who began to walk before he was a year old. Our three daughters and two sons-in-law were here for our Christmas dinner. What a treat for us. This week we are going South for our vacation—a ten-day sailing trip which we have been looking forward to for some time. Another couple is joining us on our Virgin Islands trip. I wonder if any of our classmates have land down there?

Over the winter I hope you will take a little time and drop me a note about your family, work, or any ideas. My best to you all, and a happy New Year. Nancy Bentley Ridings.

ATTENTION: Do not read these notes unless you are a member of the Class of 1953. (The above notice should keep our Reunion plans out of the hands of other classes, but it's up to you not to mention them outside your immediate family.)

If anyone needs a lift back to Palm Springs, Frank will be leaving right after his performance at our Saturday night Class Dinner. The champagne breakfast has been moved to Sunday; the quartet could not change its schedule. The class film will be taken on the steps of the old gym following Martina's exhibition. We will not be selling books at the reading. Those of you who want Norman to autograph his works should be sure to bring books with you. A final word from Brooke and Cheryl to remind you that the party after the dinner will definitely be informal. Does anyone know if Cooley House has room for six hot tubs? More to follow.

Speaking about the Reunion, Gerry Golden who is on the Souvenir Committee, mentioned that her daughter is at Governor Dummer; her youngest son at Mass. Maritime, and her eldest son at Stone and Webster in Louisiana (near our Classmate, Skip Kimball). She also told me that her husband, the great dentist, Dick Golden, was very much into painting maritime scenes. (Don't look now but there's plaque on the forecandle!)

Tim Draper, who plans to make it all the way back from Spokane, WA, took time to write about the cover piece in the last issue of the Bulletin. "A Celebration for Patrick", by Denny Hatch, in the Fall '82 Andover Bulletin, was one of the most provocative and positive eulogies I have ever read. I had misplaced Denny Hatch over the years, and his surfacing with the brilliant article about a fine teacher and human recalls vividly the type of character Denny was as a classmate. To me it is refreshing to witness the kindness and good thoughts people have towards others!" (When not writing for the Bulletin, Denny is one of this country's outstanding direct mail copy-writers.)

When Al Korschun comes back for the 30th, he'll be touting the virtues of Miami, FL. Even on the darkest days at PA, Al was able to see the sun shining somewhere. Now, as one of the top realtors in the Miami area, it should be that much easier for him.

Zeus Stevens visited Joe Mesics during a recent trip to PA. Zeus, a hospital administrator in upstate New York, was down looking at schools in the area for one of his children.

"June seems like a decade away," writes Gordon Mackenzie, "but I'll try to be there along with my wife, Sally; Scotty, eight; Robbie, five; and my latest entry for 'Class Baby,' Timmy, eight months."

From Neal Robinson comes this note: "Planning to come to the 30th to 'show off' wife Beverly to classmates and the Academy—and vice-versa."

"As I was reading my REGULAR MONTHLY ISSUE OF THE NATIONAL LAMPOON," writes Nancy Segal, "I was surprised but delighted to come across a familiar face—John Scranton. There he was in an example of a ballot designed for illiterate voters. See page 20, December issue." Is this true? Does it matter? You can ask John or Nancy yourself when you see them at our 30th Reunion, 10-12 June.

Final dress for the Class Reunion Concert will be held on Friday, 30 June, at noon. Lenny wants to know if we can find accommodations for the orchestra. Incidentally, it's the brandy we've ordered that's 1812, not the overture. Does anyone know if Cooley House is insured against flooding?

Will Ted Gamble make it all the way back from Portland, OR? His wife, the TV producer, says, "Yes!" Will Floor Kist return from his current diplomatic post in San Francisco? Bet on it. Will Dave Craton cross the channel? Cross the Atlantic? Cross route 28?(!) Bit of all right! Will you be there?

30th REUNION, June 10-12

Hopefully you will be reading this well before June—at any rate, you should have been getting pleas from me during the spring in hopes of luring you back by rekindling your Abbot spirit and fond memories. Our 25th was an incredible success—over half of our class returned! Let's have a repeat this June.

Ruth Sidon Fleishmann graduated magna cum laude last spring with a degree in Business Administration from Nazareth College in Rochester. Congratulations! Dr. Sidon, now 80, was at her graduation. Ruth is presently the Executive Director of the Wilson Foundation in Rochester and keeping up with her singing engagements. Son Karl is a senior at St. Lawrence and son Peter is a senior in high school as well as working towards his private pilot's license.

Though still in Houston, Audie Taylor MacLean maintains strong ties with the East. She and Bob have a house in NH where their oldest daughter, Pam, was married in September. Pam is now back living in Houston, but Lynn, twenty, is at Colby College in Maine. Audie's two youngest are in high school in Texas.

Pam Bushnell Ellis and Bill are "surviving the mid-west manufacturing recession and housing depression"—relating to both their sources of income. Their oldest daughter, Kim, is working in San Francisco in advertising for a company which makes wind surfers, water toys, etc... and which just purchased WAMMO, the Frisbee giant. Bo is at Colorado State enjoying all the snow, Linda is at Lacrosse majoring in Recreation and Dan is in the eighth grade providing company in Pam and Bill's emptying home.

Polly Jackson Townsend has two in college—Jay is a senior at Kenyon and Sally a junior at Princeton. Peter is a senior at Deerfield Academy and William a seventh grader at Brookwood School where Polly is a trustee. Polly also has time for the Republican Town Committee, hospital aid, and the Essex Institute. "Overcommitted" says Gerry!

Natalie L. Starr's note informs she received an MBA and a CFP in '82 May, and is working with Lauder and Associates in Washington, DC as a personal financial planner.

The brown ground in the East is great for ease of getting to work each day but depressing when it extends into the mountain ski areas. Looking at a ski area from a distance is certainly strange—one white line from top to bottom where there is man-made snow! Haven't even put the skis on yet and it is mid-January! SEE YOU IN JUNE.

She has started her own business, Peggy Yoars Associates, which acts as a manufacturers representative in gifts and jewelry for shops in the New England area. She travels a lot, so you may find her on your doorstep.

Cemmy and I seem to be following in one another's footsteps—both with a child at Andover and another at Hamilton college. This year Cemmy's Kyle is in the Abbot Cluster, whereas my Geoffrey is in Stearns House where, lo and behold, can be found Betsy Parker Powell's son, Parker. Cemmy still directs the Essex Pre-School, serves on the school board, and chairs the Child's Family Agency of S.E. Connecticut.

Peppy Rothwell Klein remains in West Boylston, MA. Her husband Deiter teaches management at Worcester Polytechnic Institute, and Peppy serves on the local school committee and on the boards of several organizations involved in education/child welfare issues. The Kleins have one son who is a high school senior and another in eighth grade.

Boat Rulon-Miller York is crazy about Maine (Prout's Neck) where she moved two years ago. Sounds like all that sea air and lobster agrees with her! Boat works for the Children's Museum in Portland and was looking forward to a trip to the Galapagos Islands in February.

Vidi Dakin Scott has moved to San Mateo, CA. Now divorced, Vidi has a fifteen-year old daughter who attends Crystal Springs, a day school in San Mateo.

Gail Turner Slover in Glastonbury, CT, has been working on a chronobiology project (has to do with your internal clock) for some time now—work which she can do at home and combine with her family life. Gail's oldest child, Cheryl, is a freshman at Yale.

Marilyn Emsley Pollard was remarried in January of last year to Norman W. Pollard. Marilyn graduated from George Mason University Law School in '81 June and subsequently passed the Virginia Bar Exam. She practices under the name of Marilyn Betts.

Finally, our artist, Mardie Roth Brown, has now done some postcards of dinosaurs which are available at the Natural History Shop at the Smithsonian. I haven't seen them yet, but if they are as fetching as her drawings of hippopotami, also for the Smithsonian, they are well worth a stop.

Hello everyone.

Many thanks go to John McConnell for sending the article in the New York Times about Bob Darnton. Evidently, from the article, Bob, who is a professor of history at Princeton, won a five year award from the MacArthur Foundation for being one of nineteen geniuses in this country. Bob is conducting research on communication networks in 18th century France. The list of people mentioned was extremely impressive, and I am delighted that Bob Darnton was one of them.... Jim Blackmon dropped a line to say that he really enjoyed the 25th Reunion and hopes to get back to PA more often in the future. Jim says that he is doing the same old thing: Scouts and soccer with his boys, as well as designing a solar observatory for the Solar I Pilot Plant in Doggett, CA.... George Breed wrote to let us know that he is running the Medical Products Program for a new company, Lifeline Systems, Inc. Even though it is a lot of work, George still has time to have fun with his five kids who range in age from three to eighteen.... Fred Shuman said that he has been in a much better frame of mind, since the market has made its move from last August. I would be too, but I don't own any.... Thanks so much for the nice Holiday cards from many of you. It is nice to see that so many of our children tower over us.... I took my three, expensive offspring duck hunting between Christmas and New Years and had a super time. I might as well have left my shotgun in Houston, for the kids didn't leave me much to shoot at, and when I did, it was in vain. That's what bad eyes and slow reflexes will do for you.... I also spent a week in Honduras, and recommend it highly. Great people, food, accommodations, and I plan to lose twenty pounds—whenever.

Sorry the article is short, so please write. GEE

I wish I could recount the entire, very long letter I got from Marcia Colby Frame. A letter such as yours, Marcia, makes this notewriting worth it for another ten years. Marcia's style and excitement, against many odds, are instant material for a book! She and Hank moved to Littleton, CO, and, after purchasing a hair-cutting franchise in the greater Denver region and setting up four stores, things were booming for awhile, until the franchisor declared Chapter 11 (bankruptcy) and they had to sell out. They live on a ranch that is part of 10,000 acres owned by Johns-Manville Co. (with a 180° view that includes mountains one mile west, downtown Denver, 18 miles north, and Kansas to infinity in the east). The expansive soils have wreaked havoc on the foundations of their house which are now being removed and rebuilt for the second time, after a two-year lawsuit. In spite of all, they and their children Michael and Melissa are tackling the world, schools, and foreign travels. Melissa's sixteenth birthday was spent floating down the Nile as part of a school-sponsored trip to study the antiquities of Egypt and Jordan. Melissa was at Andover Summer School in 1982 where she met several Chinese students with whom she could share and compare experiences she'd had on an earlier trip to China with nineteen students from Denver. She adored Andover and Marcia spent some time at the school as well. I quote: "How proud I was to see again that magnificent campus and the very fine work that is accomplished there. It meant a lot to me to just be able to stroll the campus at twilight with lovely sunsets over the Cochran Chapel. Those visits renewed my love affair with Andover and reemphasized how much I miss that part of the world, for I am truly New England born and bred."

Nancy Ruhlin Skala was in touch. She coordinated a Junior High Sunday School class this past fall and does volunteer teaching in third grade science two mornings a week. George and Argo are fine. They were all in Maine following Christmas.

Karen Jones Anderson wrote a bouncy card from Illinois. She still does private nursing two or three days a week, tennis and skiing too. She accumulated twenty-six hours of flying time toward her pilot's license before having to give it up due to no bargains on flying lessons. Quite courageous while it lasted, Karen.

I'm sorry for the short notice on news contributions, folks, but the New Year has come in with a bang and too much else to concentrate on. My work at Yale's Center for International Studies is always challenging. We are running several big conferences this spring and a five-part series on "Nuclear Weapons and the Democratic Process" for Connecticut teachers, students, and parents. The profound questions about nuclear arms control are being dealt with on many levels at Yale and I think that listening and understanding as much as possible is the only way out of helplessness and popular lethargy.

I know there is much more I could crank out about those of you classmates that I see and talk to occasionally, like Jody and Emily. Helen Guthrie Miller called me from Montana (bless her) to say she had not forgotten my plea for news. Time, and being too cheap on the phone bills, means I don't have her latest news. Lulu Sulzbacher Cutler sent a Christmas card exclaiming that she was embarrassed about her "impromptu" personal remarks in the 25th Reunion questionnaires. She's doing much "worthier" things than her report says. Thanks go to Mimi Reeder and her committee for sending that Reunion booklet to all of us.

So long for now, Dinah.

REUNION #25 10-12 JUNE. Plans are under way for a gala weekend—cocktails and buffet supper on Friday, parade and picnic on Saturday with class dinners culminating the evening, and brunch as the finale on Sunday! Andover chairman, Steve Mochary, and I are working together to make the 1958 class reunion the "best." Plan now to share the weekend with your friends. Carol Greene Donnelly and Sandra Castle Hull have agreed to help on the reunion committee—any other volunteers are most welcome. Contact me, please. The response this time has been better than usual, and a few of our classmates have already expressed their plans to attend reunion: Doris Ward Lawson will come from Phoenix, Sandra Castle Hull from Illinois, Carol Greene Donnelly and Faith White Hyde from Concord by. How about you?

Now the news: Joyce Finger Evers was remarried in June, 1981 to Martin Beckwith. She now lives in New York City where Martin is an international banker and Joyce is Chairman of Foreign Languages at a private secondary school. "My fifteen-year-old son is in one of my classes! (Interesting experience.)"

Our class fund raiser, Sandra Castle Hull, continues to do her excellent job. She is looking for 100% participation this year and would welcome any contribution to the Andover Alumni Fund. Sandra is a member of the Quincy Preservation Commission, which is "trying to get a preservation ordinance passed for local control for designation of historic districts, landmarks, etc." Additionally, she serves as President of the Board of Family Service Agency, a family/youth counseling, private agency. Daughter Cathi, is a sophomore at Smith, and son Alfred, is an upper at Andover. Sandra suggests that we should have one "get together" in Draper Hall!

"I must confess Abbot seems farther and farther away," writes Joan Foedisch Adibi from Pittsburgh. "The only Abbot rabbit I still see is Vickie Kohler, in between her tour directing around the world. My family continues to gravitate to NE: Martha's Vineyard in the summer, and now my eldest daughter is a senior at the Putney School in Vermont. My career has evolved from social work to government to profit-making. I have two small businesses: one in pre-retirement planning and the other in house consulting. It's interesting and challenging."

Faith White Hyde writes, "I do plan to attend the reunion in June. It will be just wonderful to see everyone again." Peter, Faith's oldest son, is a freshman at Southern Connecticut State College, where he is an art major. Mark is a senior in high school and is college hunting, and Matt's in third grade and loves all sports. Husband Bob teaches English at Hamden Hall, and Faith is still a self-employed artist. She saw Lee Pelton Morrison '56 while skiing in Canada during Christmas week. "Such fun to talk about Abbot after all these years! Looking forward to the reunion!"

From Phoenix comes word from Doris Ward Lawson. "I am planning to come back for the reunion—I just hope there's some Abbot left. It will be fun to see the people again—I just remembered my first Abbot walk; two miles on a Sunday afternoon ... I've been keeping busy in many ways, learning computerese and training my horse for fun. I plan to waste the spring in the desert observing cacti bloom. Sounds decadent, I know, but few have the privilege and time."

Betsy Gardner Riley's daughter, Lynn, graduates from Wilton, CT High School in June. Her oldest son, Bart, is a sophomore at Middlebury with a physics/geology major. Betsy continues "to work with senior citizens through the RSVP program finding volunteer work for people over sixty years of age in three towns—Wilton, Weston, and Westport. I also find myself chairing a committee that brought David Toma, a nationally known, captivating speaker on drugs and alcohol, to Wilton for two days. We raised $15,000 in donations and 5,000 people (of all ages) heard him speak. He was dynamic, and his impact has helped our follow-up programs. One thousand people participated in our program a week after he was in Wilton. "Safe Rides" begins this Friday. This is a late night safe transportation service run by the kids to insure them a safe ride home from a party. Hopefully it will save some lives."

The MacDonald family is back in the Schenectady area after a three-and-one-half year hiatus in Cleveland—moved in 13 December—and looking for some good skiing; but, where is the snow? Jerry continues with G.E., and I am too rapidly becoming re-involved with some local volunteer groups. Our children, Kathy 13, and Chris 12, have made the adjustment well and are enjoying the opportunity to renew some earlier friendships. We are looking forward to reunion on 10-12 June and hope to see all of you there.

Since I am exhausted sorting through my junk mail in triplicate to "Mr. K. Flather," or "Current Resident," "Rural Patron," "Mrs. Sweepstakes Winner," and occasionally, "Kitty Flasher," I have agreed to write the '59 Class News Notes in the eager anticipation that all your latest goings-on will at least edge out the invaders of my mailbox. So please give me some defense.

Gale Barton Hartch's twins, Greg and Tim, thirteen, are in seventh grade at Brunswick Day School and Greenwich Country Day, respectively. Tod, fifteen, is in the tenth at Brunswick. Gale's father died last summer and we all extend our sympathies to her. Day students will especially remember Mr. Barton's cheerful willingness to drive us everywhere we needed to be before we finally got our licenses.

Mary Louise Lockwood Rustin and family moved to Raleigh, NC from Gastonia, NC in 1981. Husband Bill is an executive with the NC Merchants Association, and Mary Louise is a fashion artist in the advertising department of a large local department store. Their two sons are at Ravenscroft School in Raleigh. Billy has been accepted at the University of NC and John is playing varsity football as a sophomore. They all enjoy Raleigh tremendously and are busy and involved with church and the community; however, they manage to get back to Vermont annually to straighten out that southern accent.

Winkie Ward Kieth writes that Lucy is a senior at Kent Place School and looking at New England colleges, and Lesley is a freshman at Kent Place. Winkie and Allan suddenly have a wonderful 3rd grade Brownie as their daughter, (Allan's brother Cary's child) Coral Dawn, who also sings in the choir. Her parents were killed last summer and Winkie and Allan wanted her to join their family. She is from Hawaii, so New Jersey is a big change for her and a lovely addition for the Keith family.

Elsie Kellogg Morse and family are back on the East side of Providence after a year in Uppsala, Sweden, for Doug's sabbatical from Brown. Perry, fourteen, is full of interesting information no one else has ever stumbled across, and Juliet, eleven, floods the house with piano music. Elsie directs childrens' tours at the RI School of Design Museum, and takes courses at the community College of RI.

The Flathers are back and forth between Andover and Concord since Kate is a Lower and on the JV Field Hockey and Varsity Ice Hockey Team and Charlie is Treasurer of the Abbot Academy Association. Char, thirteen and his grandfather, Robert Sides '34, each won his class championship in Marblehead Race Week last summer. Lucie, nine, is our ice skater and Freddie, two, keeps us very young. I chair a statewide public policy committee for the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and run a $3 million capital campaign drive for that agency. Happy New Year! Kitty.

Reaction to negative consideration of the Andover experience circa 1956-60 has exceeded, in quantity of response, quality of thought and interest, curiosity, and general agreement, that of any narrative herein of the past ten years. While instinct suggests that a good bit of our collective interest in re-examination coincides with the natural reflection involved in turning forty, it is interesting to note that most of the Class's general response is directed not toward echoing bitterness or remembered fears but toward the placing, in a seemingly mature, bemused and doggedly detached manner, our few Andover years in the perspective of a whole life, or at least a life lived through forty years. One creative classmate's struggle with the meaning of Andover's education to him, included, in letter response to the column immediately past, the following quotation from Shaw: "The reasonable man adapts himself to the world: the unreasonable one persists in trying to adapt the world to himself. (Therefore all progress depends on the unreasonable man.)" [parentheses added.] The lesson of reasonableness, to whatever extent and however painfully learned, is apparently part of Mr. Samuel Phillips' now slightly trite goal, at least in our repetition of its expression, of learning us the great end and real business of living.

The sharing, over a period of time, of our experiences, thoughts, and selected sensitivities is perhaps the principal purpose of alumni magazines, and occasionally there's an outpouring of attempts to share. One common agreement concerns our mutually appreciated "painful recollection of adolescence in many cases," what one class member calls the "distorted and narrow concept of success" which presumably was generated from the experience—an adaptation, through the accumulation of failures probably, of the reasonable man to the world. One response to the last Bulletin: "For many, and probably most of us, parts of our stories are painful or awkward to tell ... I do have some thoughts about marriage and I would be fascinated to see what others have learned." "Why not invite comments from us on a variety of topics such as children, jobs, marriage, money, 'success', politics, leisure and (horror of horrors) middle age? We could respond in name or anonymously, whichever we feel most comfortable with." Why not? Please do.

Our 25th class anniversary is two years away, and there is a common apprehension, curiosity, and perhaps tingling about that landmark, together with what seems to be a consensus that, in Woody Wickham's words, we're not likely to "get much excitement up for a blazer-and-beanie, ol'-fashioned reunion." Woody has suggested a pre-reunion, low-budget congress to try airing the variety of feelings we have about PA, a kind of pre-reunion retreat to compare notes. Rick Seifert suggests much the same thing, writing, "Let's ask the questions we would ask of each other after three or four days in the mountains and a couple of stiff ones.... By the time that 25th reunion is upon us we would have a much better idea of who the Class of '60 really is. Why, people like me might even be tempted to scrape together the money to show up." Jerry Wood and Dave Dumas have, in different ways, been considering and writing about the reunion and its preliminaries for years. Ed Quattlebaum, who by proximity and charisma will share in leading it, has been applying his considerable energy for years to the figuring out how to avoid official responsibilities. Nick Kip is patching his canoe.

Quattlebaum. He seeks, attains, and probably even deserves some of the publicity he gets. In 1982, he, Ruth, Gus, and Hughie spent the entire year in Sydney, Australia on a teaching exchange program with the Cranbrook School. The Quattlebaums made stops in California of several days duration both going to and returning from Australia, and alert alumni leaders immediately set up alumni dinners to "honor" Edwin's presence, perhaps generate a few funds, and create an excuse for a party. The bash in December, at a second rate, noisy Italian restaurant in the north beach area of San Francisco, produced what Edwin could perhaps best describe as more class members than the Class's 20th reunion at Andover. Jack Rodnick appeared from Sonoma County sporting a handsome beard and huge smile. Chris McKee, a physics professor at U. C. Berkeley, sported an equally large smile and a beautiful, engaging, obviously happy wife, Suzanne. Thom Chirurg, at whose apartment the Quattlebaums stayed, modelled some garish orange and black striped suspenders over an otherwise staid business outfit. Bill Sherman made a dramatic, last minute entrance, muttering sotto voce about business pressures. Alan Fox appeared but tried to stay out of the limelight. Quats spoke about the quality of the Australian school system, comparisons with Andover, caning, sex, and related matters, and a good time was had. Quats, incidentally, fully supports the concept of a pre-reunion alternative, "Congress" as he puts it: "Even Ruth would go for it ... No blazers, no beanies. But alcohol and Beach Boys, Chuck Berry, Eddie Matthews materials are acceptable." Remember Quats? Reactions to a pre-reunion get-together at the School?

Whit Foster, who has spent fourteen years in Africa, is now the UNDP administrator for the Southern Sudan in Juba. He works in connection with the development of agriculture, education, the engineers for Jonglei (?) canal, and the technology for road development. He welcomes any PA graduates who might be in the southern Sudan area.

Larry Gillis, after a decade of criminal law in New Hampshire, writes that he is returning to Nahant, MA, "to ply his trade. Watch this space." Jim Turchik is still living in Syracuse and is Director of Infectious Diseases at Crouse Irving Memorial Hospital, and Associate Clinical Professor of Medicine at State University of New York (Upstate Medical Center). Jim is running 2-3 miles daily, and was planning to a visit to Andover in the fall of 1982 to interest Kirsten, age eleven, and Jason and Rebecca, age nine.

Woody Wickham is a faculty member and administrator at Hampshire College, "a vessel of some progressive educational experiments launched in the early 1970s." Woody writes that, "In that sense, I feel myself to be exploring alternatives to the assumptions and forms at PA. At the same time, as director of development at Hampshire (hardly my aspiration in 1960) I know how much alumni/ae support (moral and monetary) means to an institution.

And, my occasional contacts with PA leave me feeling that it is supremely well run and good at what it does. I wish there were a more progressive impulse at work there, but even as it is, PA deserves support."

Numerous letters have arrived containing classmates' (and non classmates') very personal reactions to their Andover experience, not all of which can be reprinted. Please feel free to correspond. Sensitivity to public versus private news still exists.

It is with sadness and a sense of life that I report to you the death of Richard F. Mott, II. Peter died on 20 November 1982 of cancer. He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth, and four children. I remember Peter from our last reunion; he was bright, vibrant and full of energy. I enjoyed being with him those few days. Should anyone wish to reach Peter's wife, her address is 14 Louisburg Square, Boston, MA 02108.

More news from the greatest writer to your correspondent: Jim Durston writes faithfully of himself and others. Our connection is so great that I ran into Jim on a sidewalk in New York this fall and we had dinner together and exchanged our life stories. Jim is still with the New York Cosmos and does a fine job promoting that organization. He reports that Joby Stevens is now at the Meadowlands Racetrack in New Jersey. Jim also reports that Ross Driver is an Assistant Secretary with Manufacturers Hanover Trust with responsibility for bank business in Japan and New York. Dennis Cross, who I think is doing a great job as Class Agent, remains at Kidder, Peabody and Co. in New York, where Roger Pyle also works.

Mike Rosati went all the way to Melbourne, Australia to marry Kitty O'Brien. When he's not singing in the shower, Mike is a special Vice President in charge of overseas subsidiaries for Manufacturers Hanover Leasing.

David Murphy is again working close to Andover as a manager of Clark Leasing, an automotive leasing company.

Jim Barnes, with his wife Margaret, continues to reside in Minneapolis/St. Paul, and continues to invite classmates to drop in on him when you are in the neighborhood.

Speaking of neighborhoods, E. Gibson Lanpher has been transferred from the American Embassy in London to the American Embassy in Zimbabwe.

Jack Schmedeman has traveled from Florida to Georgia to Los Angeles to Colorado to Texas in the last two years, settling most recently with PB-KBB, Inc. as Vice President, Operations in Houston. He complains that the travel is too much. I wonder why?

Dan Halcomb is Associate Creative Director with Doyle-McKenna Advertising in Reno, NV. His interests are "cleaner air and more skiing." He is the organizer of the Sierra Ski Counsel and a member of the organizing committee to bring the 2000 Olympics to Squaw Valley in time to celebrate the 40th Anniversary of the 1960 Winter Games.

After reading about himself in this column, Steve Hurlbut wrote and asked me to assure you all that Steve is "involved in mainstream evangelical Christianity, not anything exotic." Steve is concerned lest anyone misunderstand his religious involvement and think he is involved with any unusual or harmful religious group. Fear not, Steve, we are with you! Steve reports that Andy Johnson is in charge of a section of the main library at the University of Washington. Both wonder what Bill Fay is up to.

Tom Evslin is ending his stint as Secretary of Transportation for the state of Vermont and going back to Solutions, Inc., his well-respected computer company. I understand that there are no longer any potholes in Vermont. Thanks, Tom.

Finally, I got a letter from Duncan Bremer, who, I discovered, lives down the road in Colorado Springs. Dunc is a lawyer specializing in real estate, securities and construction litigation and, like Jim Sprague, is raising horses. Dunc raises Morgans, while Jim raises quarter horses. Dunc helped brand 260 calves this past summer. Now that's what I call Western living.

As always, I remain interested in who you are and what you are doing. Many others have the same interest. In some way, Peter Mott's death has intensified my commitment to serving you all. Please help me do that by writing to me.

Eileen Keegan Pakstis writes that after living in Michigan, Denver, and Charlottesville, VA, she and her family are now in Amherst, MA while her husband John completes and internship in psychology as part of a Ph.D. program. Eileen is a supervisor of social work at Springfield Hospital, Baystate Medical Center. Eileen and John have two children, Joshua (eight) and Sarah (five) "who are both creative and clever and often challenge whatever parenting skill we have available. Eileen is also planning to attend our next reunion—#25!!

From Miami, Florida, Andrea Lynch Cole reports that she has started chairing the Community Research/Program Development committee for the Junior League. She also formed a Cub Scout den for her older son Andrew and is the den leader. In September she will join her husband's business.

Sue Fox Reepmeyer has a house full—four sons to keep her hopping! Her "other" life includes taking a course in computer programming. One could do well by a computer in managing the activities of four sons!! Ann Tevepaugh Mitchell is involved with computers as well, working with a computer programming agenda for second graders. Ann is also in charge of a cultural enrichment program and bookbinding project at her children's school.

Sarah (Tinky) Knight Erlj reports that her daughter Rebecca attended PA summer school last summer to study Chinese. Her husband David's research in psychology continues at Downstate Medical Center in Maine where they spend part of their summers. Sarah has worked five years for United Cerebral Palsy Association of New York State and is now the Director of a clinical team providing health services for a community residence program of 100 apartments with 330 developmentally disabled people.

From Northamptonshire England, Marianne Hale Farrow writes that her three children Sarah, Emma and Stephen—five, three and eighteen-months respectively keep her busy. They live "out in the sticks" in a registered ancient, stone farmhouse. Husband Michael enjoys foxhunting, and Marianne hopes to start riding side saddle when it isn't so "corned up for hunting.

In another note from abroad, Ginny Cadbury Reekie replied to my inquiry for news—"no that my three children are all teenagers, am trying to become a solicitor." She passed her exams last summer and she is now working in a solicitor's office. The Reekies live in Malborough, Wilshire where her husband Andrew is a medical practitioner. "We would be delighted to see anyone from Abbot who is in England."

The saga of my eclectic career continues. After working several months for the New England Journal of Medicine, I began a job at Harvard Medical School working with Student Activities. My boss is Dr. Carola Eisenberg, a well known psychiatrist and a truly inspiring person. As I write this column, I find myself thinking of our days at Andover, the fun, the work, the sports, the dorms, and how the past twenty years have gone by with such speed. Plan now for the reunion. Bruce Cleverly and Henry Filmer are doing a lot of work to make this a success for us all.

In a September issue of the Wall Street Journal, Richard Pechter was quoted as an expert on stock market ordering problems. He currently serves as the Chief Executive Officer of the Pershing Division of Donaldson, Lufkin and Jenrette and was responsible for a $20 billion modernization effort of that firm's data processing capacities.

John Foster is spending the 1982-83 academic year as a Mellon Fellow in Comparative Literature at Harvard University. His research on Vladimir Nabokov will lead to another book. He and his wife are living in Adams House, an experience he fails to describe. But, John, after serving as resident directors for four years, my wife and I have a fairly good idea how much fun that can be. Paul Doherty is being posted to the embassy in Ottawa in May of 1983. He is the proud father of Megan born in

'82 November.

For those of us who have read and enjoyed Tracy Kidder's Soul of A New Machine, it was a delight to see his picture, with full beard, in some of the recent literary journals. I have put this book on several reading lists for management training programs; reaction most positive. Bill Hartman called recently and we had a most informative reunion via Ma Bell. He now works for CIGNA Corporation, a merged venture of INA and Connecticut General. Although "commuting to Philly," posed some problems, things are GREAT. His wife is active in the New York Junior League. Bill reports that Dave Posner lives in Georgia, teaching pottery and creating new designs. Is this rumor true?

Jon Peirce took pity on me because of last Fall's short column and wrote a lengthy catch-up letter. Excerpts document his changes and moves: remarried in 1978 to Pat Garneau, a Montessori teacher. They are the recent parents (December 13, 1982) of Lauren Caroline. In the past few years, Jon has accepted teaching appointments at Susquehanna University in Pennsylvania, Central College in Iowa, and now Queen's University in Kingston, Canada. Jon's area of expertise lies in Canadian literature, expository writing and 18th century literature. One comment struck home: how little we in the U.S. know, or bother to learn, about our Canadian neighbors. I agree, based on my own experiences.

Jeff Grant practices dermatology in Arizona (where?) and hopes to be a "success before the government and the insurance companies take over medical care." John Kane of Marblehead, MA is now a partner with a prominent Boston law firm in its litigation section. While active in the Yale Club of Boston (an Eli on Crimson turf!) as its president and a member of the corporation of the Mass Eye and Ear Infirmary, his wife Susan works tirelessly with Caroline, age five, and Christopher, two. James Frenzel has "added Charles, PA 1999" and does plan to come to reunion. Let's all follow his lead.

My proposal to each of you is two fold: one, plan to attend the reunion. It becomes geometrically more successful as each of us attends. Two, in lieu of that, send me a letter to take to Andover to share; include pictures, writings, poetry, reflections of days gone by, hopes for the years ahead. These letters can become a nice way to reconnect with each other if travel, work or other obligations prevent attending our twentieth. Mark 10-12 June 1983 on your calendars. Write On.

HEAR YE! HEAR YE! Our 20th reunion (can you believe it), although when I think about it, it does seem a long time ago that we were dressing for dinner in Draper or going to Tiffin. I have to admit to being sentimental about the Abbot Campus and sad that Abbot is now a part of Andover. Some of you may feel quite differently but whatever your feeling or reason, our 20th reunion is 10-12 June. The more friends and classmates who come, the more fun it will be. If you would like to help plan or work on the reunion, let me know; you can still help if you are far away. I appreciate all who have already volunteered.

There will be newsletters coming with all the details about activities reservations and arrangements. Look for them and plan to come if you can. If you have questions about reservations, transportation, or anything in general, the alumnae office can answer them for you, or feel free to call me 617/749-2366 and I'll be glad to help or try.

If you can't come or don't want to, drop Ann Harris Furgerson, 9321 Chapman Avenue, Garden Grove, CA 92641 a line and let us know how you are, where you are and what you are doing. Ann has offered a challenge to everyone in our class to get 100% communication. That means we'd like to communicate with every classmate in some way, so we can pass on the news at the reunion and just generally say we care about you and what has happened to you. Sounds like a fun idea so be sure and write to Ann. There are four months to write if you are a procrastinator!

News? There isn't much! Do respond to my notes so I will be able to write something. Another PA class secretary in his column makes up news and comical bits about what various classmates might be doing when he has no news. That's pretty original and funny too.

Maria Pastoriza Bonetti writes that she'll be coming to our reunion and would like to bring her daughter to show her the school. I look forward to seeing you Maria and others too. If you are wondering about the reunion, plan to come, we'd love to see you!

Bob Marshall

Bronxville, NY 10708

A good time, seemingly, was had by all, at a Friday night soiree chez Bill Matassoni, just off New York's fashionable Fifth Avenue on a dimly lit side street that might worry the unaccustomed visitor. The guests, together with the three co-hosts, added up to fourteen members of the PA Class of '64, in an assortment never before seen in any neighborhood.

Looking statistically, we noted only three wives present, although some of the classmates had been married before or would be shortly, and others were married. Even sparser were fathers. And the rarest was the partygoer who stayed past eleven.

Steve Dabney, as predicted was the first to arrive, scarcely denting the expanse of Matassoni's sleekly American-antiqued loft. He bore tidings of the folding of C.I. Pond, his private investment venture quaintly named after a local Long Island topographical feature. Instead, he was tying his search for a regular paycheck to the upturning economy, and we wish luck to both.

Pat Fry was the first wife to arrive alone, but as luck would have it, Tim arrived shortly thereafter, a standard performance for that typical Manhattan phenomenon, the two-lawyer family. More unusual was the duo of Bill Stowe teaching English at Wesleyan University in Middletown, CT, and wife Karen, a librarian at NYU. They split weekends between the two homes, and we were glad that this weekend they were in New York and could recommend Henry James's Beast in the Jungle to us.

The highlight of the evening, which, standing with Tom Seligson while Fran Crowley regaled us and their two alluring dates with dirty jokes I missed, may have been the discovery of Chinese as the second language of the gathering by Didi Pei, Hardy Phippen, Mary Wadsworth, co-host Peter Schandorff and Bob Wei. Of this little circle that apparently stood around swapping tales of Chairman Mao, one is a newcomer to this space: Mary Wadsworth was then a fiancée, and on 8 January in Boston became the wife of Larry Darby. She is charming and forthright and seems a perfect match for Larry, which we hope will prove true. The only disadvantage is her job selling for Allis-Chalmers, that takes her on frequent trips to China, a passion of hers since the age of thirteen.

Didi Pei was also just back from a multi-month stint in Beijing, where he worked feverishly to prepare the acclaimed I.M. Pei hotel for its opening ceremonies. Back in English, Didi engaged in lengthy conversation, presumably on the arts, with Ray Liddell, now the assistant director of the fine Brooklyn Museum, and the rest of the day a commuter to upper Westchester County.

The fourth language represented was French, as in Bill, who brought a smile unfaded by the years of statistical market research he has performed, first for brokerage houses and now in his own firm. We were sorry others could not attend, especially John McCullough, who initiated the party by calling the bluff I placed in the Bulletin two issues ago. We also appreciated the phone calls from Randy Hobler, Eric Wallach and John Townsend's secretary.

In from the left coast, Pat Cathcart stopped by my office for a brief but very enjoyable chat. He remarried in '81 May and he and wife Joan are expecting their first child while these notes are off at the printers. Pat mentioned one sad note, which I had missed, the death of Thor Wilcox in Nevada three years ago.

From Burlington, VT comes a news clip that Peter Smith swamped his opponent by a two-to-one margin to win the Republican lieutenant governor nomination. Although the office is "largely ceremonial... it is seen by some as a steppingstone to higher office." That's if you win it, and no one has sent me a clip from the general election in November. Peter narrowly lost the same election back in '78 and has been a state senator since 1981. One newspaper profile described him as "outgoing, eager, articulate, and personable... the way he gestures and contorts while he converses, conveys to the listener a feeling of almost hyperactivity." Yup. Sounds like Pete.

Going to the slips, we see that Rob Dieter was named Acting Director of the Legal Aid and Defender Program at the University of Colorado Law School. Rich Bissel is now Director of Program Development for the U.S. Information Agency in Washington, which explains why he missed my trip to Philly last fall. Laurent Alpert is still working on international investments, etc., in the Brussels office of Cleary Gottlieb. Finally, John Dewey has added to his practice and teaching of T. M., commercial pilot's wings.

On a secretarial field trip this fall to the nation's capital we were given a tour of the new offices of Covington & Burling by the newest partner of that powerful law firm, Jeffery Huvelle. We lunched as well at a nearby Chinese restaurant with Bill or Nat Semple, who introduced us to the Washington Opera, for which he is now fundraising. He also spoke highly of his brother.

We started this column with a social note, so it is fitting to end it on a literary one—the Andover review of Tom Seligson's newest Dell novel, Doubles. Anyone allergic to either tennis or sex should stay away, for the most of the 382 pages are rife with both. I was particularly interested in the reference on page 49 to "Phippen, that loud-mouthed associate in the Litigation Department" who was jilted in the partnership rat race at Sherman & Stone; and the mention on page 373 of "Almquist from Nebraska" who rose "from the foxhole to take a Nazi bullet square in the chest." More centrally, among the four men who comprise the title foursome, we find Stan Harris, who seems to be a short, pudgy, Jewish television producer, except that he's described as having been on the Andover tennis team before going to Yale, and his first name is supposed to make us think of Smith. In a world, let alone a book of stereotypes, these images jar in my unimaginative brain and I never got a fix on Stan. The other three, including Ric Ruggiero, a cross, if necessary, between the author and Al Pacino, are more memorably drawn. Despite the catchy but misleading title—and the outrageous hype on the paperback cover—this is really a book about the battle of the sexes. And next to the game of love, the game of tennis has very little to teach us.

Once more I am faced with very little news of our class. To prod you along, I will send out cards so you'll have no excuses. I am secretary for our claims department Quality Commitment team on a companywide effort to "work smarter." This has been an interesting project which will continue through 1983.

Susan Localio writes that she is still living in Burlington but adds a cryptic note that a new address will be coming in May (a move to parts unknown?). She is working in school services department at Shelburne Museum where she is learning much about tools, quilts and the difference between horns and antlers.

Kit Jones Prager and I did not get to see each other over the holidays, but I hope to see her shortly for lunch and get news on some of our class. HELP!!

The new year has brought a plethora of news: Bruce Ganem is an organic chemistry professor at Cornell and was part of a team that successfully synthesized an acid used on the development of non-toxic herbicides.

Dave Roe is regional counsel for the environmental Defense Fund in Berkeley, where he has been successful in proving to companies (particularly utilities) that pollution is actually unprofitable. Knowing how utilities think, that is a large accomplishment.

Dan Warren has been appointed rector of Grace Episcopal Church in Providence after three years in New York.

Pat O'Hern married Patricia Brady last October in San Francisco. Ralph Swanson served as best man. (Those Iowans sure stick together!)

Rick Boydston and his wife Susan had a baby boy (their second child) last August. Dick is practicing law in Cincinnati.

After ten years of teaching German, Herb Ogden has entered Boston College Law School.

Robin Batteau writes: "The world of pop music is sadly depressed, so I got a real job writing for a newspaper. It feels like camp." Maybe so, but I hope the first story Robin writes is about the violin lesson he gave Rudolf Nureyev.

Jack Griffin recently became a partner in the law firm of Dickstein, Shapiro & Morin in Washington, DC.

I am sure you all applauded the return of Jeff MacNelly's talented pen to the editorial page. As Jeff has said, "When it comes to humour, there is no substitute for reality and politicians."

Welcome back.

Brian Haley has been named head librarian at Deerfield.

Nick Marble married Nancy May last May. Nick is with the trust department of First National Bank in Boulder.

American Bell, the new AT&T subsidiary, counts Vaho Rebasso among its employees. Vaho has left Bell Labs and moved to Seattle where he is Staff Manager for Technical Support in the Northwest. Vaho and Maura have a son, Finn.

Mike Hudner is still in the world shipping business in New York, where he, wife Hope and son Rip, send all the class of '65 best wishes for the new year.

Winning travel awards is Tom Allen, who is now in London after three years in Hong Kong. Tom is with Chemical Bank involved in ship financing. He and wife Mandy are expecting their first child in June.

Andy Marks is Vice President, Marketing for Hardaway Co. in Columbus, GA, and proud father of Buffy, nine, and twins Andy and Ashley, six. And how 'bout them Dawgs?

Finally, word from Gene Indjic who writes that he and his wife have a year-old daughter Juliette, and they are now living just north of Paris in Barbary.

Dave Goldstein is a medical staff fellow at the National Heart Lung and Blood Institute in Bethesda, MD, doing research on high blood pressure. He and his wife Minka and four (count 'em, 4) kids would love to see any classmate in the DC area.

Bob Ehrhart is completing a fellowship in Rheumatology at Walter Reed Army Medical Center. Bob recently saw Tom Weil who is lawyer and Tom Kinsolving who is selling computers. Also in Washington, John Cooney has been appointed Assistant General Counsel of the Office of Management and Budget, an counsel to the President's Property Review Board. John also authored a book, The Legal and Political History of the California Wire Industry to be published in 1983 by the University of California Press.

Peter Franchot is an administrative assistant to Rep. Ed Markey, (D. Mass.)

Ben Gardner has been appointed Executive Vice President of Hawk Mountain Corporation, builders and managers of five communities of leisure homes in Vermont. As you can see, fellow classmates, I'm resettled back in Louisville now that my internship at Duke is completed. But I have been up to Boston a couple of times, where I've seen Nancy Porosky Harris and her family of three boys, Christopher, Ethan, and Reed. One more try for a girl?

When I was last in Boston, I literally bumped into Marij Kaplan on Boylston Street (as pedestrians, that is). We had a great afternoon together jogging and then reminiscing along with Nancy. Marij has happily settled into her own home—a condominium in Cambridge near the Orson Wells cinema. She is teaching deaf adolescents in the Boston Public Schools.

From my Boston contacts, I've learned that Sean Haley Hogan and husband, Tom, had a son, Matthew, who is now a little over a year old. Congratulations, Mom and Dad!

I've also learned that Margie Goldman has launched into a new business in Denver, CO. She and a partner have started a firm called "Good Show." It's a consulting business whose purpose is to develop and set up exhibits for business or non-profit organizations. Margie's had some good experience in the field, since she wrote grants and developed several major exhibits for the Denver Children's Museum prior to striking out on her own. Best of luck, Margie.

That's it for now, folks. Drop me a line sometime, and you, too, will have the opportunity to see your name in print!

In writing this just after New Year's and am reminded of the story of the chef who carefully spooned some sauce from the double boiler into a hubcap. Why did he do this, you ask? Because there's no place like chrome for the hollandaise.

It seems nearly everyone was in hibernation this winter. The Alumni Office received news from only three people, though it was a representative cross section of the class: two lawyers and a doctor. I received just one letter this time around.

Hank O'Neill is working for the IRS in Hawaii, where his wife, Carol Muranaka, is an assistant US attorney. They have a son and a daughter. Sid Pertnoy remains in the state-side sunny climes of Miami Beach, where he has a new wife Nadine, and in December was about to bring to trial a class action he had been working on for five years. Bob Rice also has found a Southern home. He, wife Chris and son Eric moved from Vermont to Austin, TX where he will work the legal department of Southern Union Gas Co.

Dr. Sam Craft reports that he's closing in on his second residency (OB-GYN) after finishing family practice residency and a year's emergency room work. To get out of beeper range, he has learned to fly. (I assume that is in an airplane.)

Through my own intrepid reporting, I have learned that Peter Evans is now a lawyer. He plays the role of a defense attorney in a new play Outrage, which opened in Washington. It's about a man who murders the guy who raped his daughter after the rapist was acquitted on a "technicality." Peter's mug appeared in the New York Times in a series of pictures called "The Year's Best Theater." He was described as part of an outstanding ensemble in the play, Amisus.

I also discovered that George Billings was recently named vice president for corporate development of Comsat.

This late news in from the Alumni Office. While Peter has become a lawyer, attorney Bruce Hearey has become an actor. Bruce played the lead in the Gates Mill's Players production of Love, Sex and the IRS. That was w-a-a-a-y off Broadway. "Loved it," Bruce says. "Great therapy."

The Alumni Office also reports that Sumner Smith received an M.B.A. from Cornell in 1981, married Denise Anne Desesa a year later, and now is Mid-Atlantic sales rep for his family business.

I think I figured out why there was so little news. Everyone is saving his choicest morsel to deliver it in person at our 15th reunion 10-12 June. You probably already have received some news about it—and will receive more. The good news about it is that this year we get to stay in a dorm on campus. The bad news is that this year we get to stay in a dorm on campus.

Do try to make it. It is the people that make a reunion great, as the 10th was. Also, we're trying to drum up support for a larger than normal class gift for this year. That shouldn't be hard for our class, considering our giving record. Even a modest sum will help PA through a frightening cost squeeze. If you have given before, please try to give a little more. If you haven't given before, you probably finally are in a financial position where you not only can give, but need the tax break.

Aren't you glad you won't see another edition of class notes like this for five years?

We do have some industrious classmates but most of us are going through life enjoying its simple pleasures. Next issue I'd like to see a list of the people who are existing happily, unhappily or otherwise!

Madelon Curtis Finnegan is going strong. She's teaching dance at the University of Lowell. She is dancing in the North Atlantic Ballet's production of the Nutcracker for ten performances. She makes me feel as though I'm 92! Joan S. Kelley graduated from Babson in '78 with an MBA. She is working for Blue Cross and Blue Shield as manager of Financial Planning and Contracts. She and Philip Mosgraber live outside of Harvard Square in Cambridge.

Betsy Hoover Sexton and her husband, Dr. Carlton Sexton, are in New Zealand for a year. Dr. Sexton is a practicing radiologist.

Got a Christmas card from Jessie Leunberger Butler who is the cool, calm, mother of three busy boys. Jessie and Pete live in Winnetka, IL. Barb Allen writes that she is assistant director of the Council for the Arts at MIT. She will be working to raise money to support arts programs at MIT. Barb saw Carol Nimick this summer. Carol is teaching at the Waldorf School which uses the Rudolf Steiner philosophy of education.

Diana C. Brainerd is living in Manhattan and works for Metromedia, Inc. as Vice-President, Financial Services and Communications. A reliable source says that "she looks great and seems to be in good spirits."

May all your impossible dreams come true in 1983—Sandra. (Thanks Barb.)

The National Affairs Bureau is still operating here in New York but this column comes composed from the dock at the 90th and Broadway State Employment Insurance Office. This is a city of contrasts, for just a few weeks ago I was on the other side of town, at the Church of St. Thomas More, for Kim and Mark Kelly's wedding.

It was a dazzling affair. At the ensuing reception, the liquor flowed freely to the ballroomful of guests who seemed to be heaving a collective sigh of relief that the months of anticipation and planning were finally concluding. (One of our classmates, who will be protected here, said it was the most expensive wedding in history.) However, it must be reported that two widely felt criticisms did develop. First, it was impossible to find a glass of beer without having set up a private cache. (A contingency astutely planned for by the Boston family of guests.) Secondly, it was difficult to put together a solid meal from the selection of hor d'oeuvres. But in all fairness, a towering plate of juicy roast beef did appear in the later stages. (For a second I thought that Bob Leete had been called in as emergency caterer for, after all, it was Saturday.)

Now the guest list. Dressed in morning coats were Kevin Doyle, Don Celotto, Owen Hearty, and Mark Swanson. The second tier of guests included Jim Shea, Leca and Chip Boynton, and your humble narrator. Working backwards, I'm unemployed, and Chip of course is in the insurance business (but apparently not the kind mentioned at the start of the notes). The Sheas rode the train up from Baltimore, where Jim is now an assistant in the Maryland Attorney General's office. Bill Roth is a prospective partner with Milbank, Tweed in NYC, and Mark Swanson was recently elected county attorney in Red Oak, IA. Mark, who was supposed to stay with the Roths, committed several faux pas, including not showing up at all the first night, and then, incredibly, not wearing a collar with his morning coat! Even Jerry Ford had the top half of this costume right. When Mark was finally sworn into office a few days later, following a quick trip to Iowa's bid at the Peach Bowl (you owe me another $1!), the judge said to him, "Mark, I've seen you look better." Meanwhile, completing the guest list, Owen is a trader of fed funds and Eurodollars, as well as seeming part-owner of Rathbone's on the upper east side. Don is a general practitioner of law in New Haven, and parliamentarian of the local Republican party. And Kevin is the editorial director and creative genius of Menswear magazine.

Following the reception, Kim and Mark left for a skiing honeymoon in Switzerland while we went to get some beer.

Unfortunately, Elmer Rynne could not make it to New York, for his sporting goods business did very well over the holiday season. Other news from Boston is that Ted Thorndike is still in the commercial real estate business with the firm R. M. Bradley. Frank Mondano was spotted on the local news as the lawyer for the defendant in what has become known as the "Red Rose Case", and which involves a crime of passion committed in the North End. Tom Treadwell is a doctor in Boston and Burr Tweedy continues to work in Judge Nelson's chambers, while now living in Newton.

Chip Bates writes he is practising medicine in Monterey, CA. After Andover, he attended UC at Santa Cruz, then spent a year "jeeping" through Iran and Afghanistan, followed by medical school at Emory in Atlanta, and internship in Portland.

Dan Oliver is in the carpentry business in Charleston, SC. This past summer he delivered a yacht across to Portsmouth, England, so he continues his world class sailing.

Bruce Stewart has his own consulting and investment business in Athens, Greece. He had worked previously for several middle-eastern shipping concerns both in Athens and Jeddah. Bruce was married in 1977 and has a five-year-old daughter. Peter Fox was married to Kim Blackwell in September. He is the director of the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs. It has been harder to keep up with Tom Wattles, who has moved from Mexico City to New York where he now works for a real estate company.

Norm Selby and wife Melissa are the proud parents of a son, Luke, born last fall. Norm is on the verge of making the final cut to partner at McKinsey consulting. He reported that Mr. and Mrs. John Curley are also new parents of a daughter born in November. John writes for the Wall Street Journal in Chicago.

We close with some more unfortunate news. Robert Wierenga was killed in an auto accident last September. He is survived by his wife Eileen and their five-year-old son. Bob had a special fondness for Andover and his death is another tragic loss for our class. Memorial contribution may be sent to: Mt. Hermon Associates, c/o "Book of Remembrance", Mt. Hermon, CA 95044.

Happy New Year Class of 1970!

Holiday cards brought the following news: Amy Baldwin Bratten and husband, John, are now the proud parents of a daughter, Tyler. She's apparently alert and active and promises to give Amy as much of a challenge as brother Paul. Meanwhile, Amy plans to return to work three days a week beginning in January.

Maura Markley Pollak and husband, Michael, became parents for the second time on 29 August 1982 with the arrival of Joseph Duffy Pollak. Brother Zack is now three, and after reading humorous stories about his activities, hearing reports of his winning an art award, and seeing an example of his artwork, I am indeed convinced that Zack may indeed be an artist like his mother. World, watch out!

Marian Boynton wrote that she had traveled to England, Brittany, Paris, and Rome this past summer. Teaching first grade continues to agree with her; she's loving it!

Melanie Rosen also wrote to say she's still living in New York city working as Manager, Business Planning, for the New York Times Company. At the time of writing she was on her way to California to visit D.D. Rudolph in Santa Barbara. D.D. recently opened her own "downtown" studio, "Andrea Rudolph Design."

Sandy Urie Thorpe and Ron had a baby girl in July. Katie is big, healthy, and beautiful. She commutes between West Hartford and Andover, as Sandy continues to work at Andover while Ron has begun his new job as Dean of the Faculty at Kingswood Oxford School in West Hartford.

And last but not least, Chris Steele wrote to say she's still playing games at work—she's now Product Manager on Video Cartridges at Parker Brothers.

Well, that's it for the first letter of the new year. Happy '83 to all.

Had a telephone conversation with Dave Kukielski. After completing a Master's degree in Architecture, Dave's religious convictions led him to a new occupation. After several years of study, he is now a Catholic priest, with his own parish near Atlanta.

Tom Olivier spent the past summer in the Office of Trustees for Alaska, an environmental protection agency. He is completing law school at Northeastern University in Boston, and "now know all about musk oxen and snow geese." Presumably, he is also familiar with Yukon Jack, Moosehead, and the rarest of flowers, Wild Irish Rose.

Those of you who have read Youth From Every Quarter, the school's bicentennial history, may recall the tale of Clinton Lagorce Mamoruski, III, the fictitious high school student from Moose Factory, Saskatchewan, who was accepted to the Andover Summer Session through the efforts of two unnamed conspirators. She married Cyrus Edward Hornsby III, PA '61, on New Year's day.

Debra Pope McCall writes from North Carolina where she owns a gift shop on Ocean Isle Beach. She and husband Robert have a two year old son, Chasen Hamilton, and are expecting another child imminently. She adds "If any class members are down this way, please come by!" Ruth Raser Timbrell is "up to two kids now, Margaret 3, and Clayton, 1. We all love San Francisco." Ruth is campaigning for a worthy cause—the Addison Gallery—and makes a plea for donations.

Gayle Ridd Wells and her family recently toured the old Abbot campus and she writes "Abbot Academy still exists!" She's working four days a week as a bookkeeper and is "Mom" to their four year old and her fifteen and sixteen year old stepchildren.

Finally, Abby Johnson reports in from Reno NV, where she continues to work on citizen actions—the MX, The Freeze, and nuclear waste.

Class of '73, that "someday" ... is today. This spring is our 10th reunion. We have been holding on to our sweet and bitter memories for ten years. We have grown taller, wiser, and wider. Now, to all of you who commenced Andover, you are invited to a celebration—celebration just for us, our families, our memories of Andover, and our ten years since 10, 11, 12, June 1983 are the dates. Please be sure to note them on your calendar.

On to business. David Downs is still working for ABC sports. Peter Morin is running for the Massachusetts House of Representatives—Mark Loo is a second year resident in general surgery at the New York Hospital, Cornell Medical Center. Joe Coner was married in September. He is now working for Bay State Battery, Canton, MA. Rumor has it that H. Attention Class of '73!!! Lately ... have you had unexplainable cravings for creamed chip beef on toast? Had the urge to take a quickie refresher course in Latin? Suddenly re-read (for no apparent reason) A Separate Peace and Catcher in the Rye? Felt paranoid everytime you walked into a liquor store??? Well girls ... don't panic! There is a logical explanation for this erratic behavior. Your mind and body are just letting you know that this spring is our 10th reunion! I'm sure you've already received literature from the Alumnae Office about it, but this Gala Celebration will happen the week-end of 10-12 June

I know how tight money is right now for all of us, but please try to come if you possibly can. It'll start off the summer of '83 with a bang!

If you have any questions about accommodations or anything don't hesitate to call the Alumnae Office, (617-475-3400 ext 257). Noreen Markley and I will definitely be there to chronicle the event and to get everyone's activities up to date for a (hopefully) very newsy fall column.

The Northern California fogs must have been particularly disruptive to the mails during the final quarter of 1982. At best that is the only rational explanation I can find for the class of 1974's near total news blackout. Such an amazingly talented, fun-loving and exciting collection of individuals as the ones I graduated with, must be doing something noteworthy. Modesty never seemed to be much of a problem. (The Mother Phillips display laid that issue to rest.) Nor are the $5 donations till such a big deal to us freshly-minted, upscale types. No, it must be the fogs which keep our letters away in droves.

Now for some of the good stuff: Hats off to a fellow banker, Karl Harig who married Deborah Bamford in October. They both work for Fleet National Bank and live in Narragansett.

An anonymously contributed news clipping arrived on behalf of Terry Dorman. He seems to have side-stepped the whole MBA scene and built himself an empire" (seven figures) in the membrane keyboard business. Unfortunately the article failed to mention where we can send him our resumes.

Another high-tech-er is Charles Smith, who is a computer systems analyst for Grumman in Bethpage, NY. He saw Peter Kapetan off-Broadway in Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat. By way of review, he says that it was a "great, inexpensive evening at the theatre." Terri Samel Miller's son, Samuel Nathan, just celebrated his first birthday, also in October. Sharing that Halloween spirit with Samuel Nathan was Marsha Kazarosian Moccia who tied the marriage knot and started practicing law in Haverhill. She sees Ann Randazzo

"quite often" and says "hi."

I see Grant Donovan quite often at the Stanford GSB, where he is bearing up far better than I in his first year.

Another big hello goes out to you all from Day Hall alumnus, Gordon Billheimer. Not one for understatement, Gordon married "the greatest of the world's greatest girls" in May, 1981. (Formerly Meg Mittleman to her worshiper, who in his spare time practices labor law in Atlanta.) He reports that Clifford Flamm married Linda Ragland somewhere in Montana. Ted Nace apparently stole the show, however, when he pulled up to the church in a checker cab (in Montana?) in time for the vows. Cliff is now attempting to re-define the A+ at Cornell.

Kevin Connolly and I kept each other company at Morgan this past summer, as we happily re-defined the pub crawl. Perhaps when I return to the Apple next summer the bolder among you will be able to join us.

Between now (New Year's) and then, I have the famed Stanford tanning season to look forward to. Some mail for the summer column would make everything just about perfect.

After last winter's terribly long column, I have received a subtle hint: only three pages to fill! So here goes and please pardon the nonsequiturs and brevity. Linda Bilkey Krainik has moved from DC to Houston and is working in energy marketing for a computer time sharing firm. Thanks so much for your letter, Linda.

Andrew Wheelwright, is living in N. Andover, is engaged to Beth Stevens and working for Western Electric as an electrical engineer. John Florence, with wife Gail, is living in the Hartford area and working for IBM in marketing. Tim Cameron is in Boston. Al Lintel was married to Elizabeth Fletcher in June. Bill Snedeker is finishing law school at Georgetown; Joanie Bozek is there, too. He relates that Jon Otto is becoming a drug store tycoon and that Lou Laskey is now an Israeli citizen, and serving in the army. Steve Bache is a wealth of info: no longer with Dewey Ballantine, he's at B-school; so is Tony Pucillo; Roger Kohn is at law school and Peter Kao in Ph.D.-M.D. program—all at Columbia. Kurt Schwarz is still at Princeton and Anne Rollings remains at her job with the New Yorker. Harry Flynn is in Palo Alto—more news, Harry? Pete Wyman is headed down the aisle in May and continues with IBM in marketing. Mari Wellin is loving the quality of life in Seattle (maybe I should help to keep that secret, appreciating it myself) working in sales for a glassware manufacturer. Lawrence Kemp is still in business trading commodities for Continental Grain Co. in Minnesota and Brad Geier is applying California coasting principles to his second year of Harvard B-school after applying himself in year one. And Whiteford, well, he is about to finish school! Bill will be leaving Stanford, maybe, with an M.S. in geology after three winters in the mountains of western Austria. You sure know how to pick your field areas Bill! Kurt Silverman and Virginia are in shock in Cambridge after a recent uprooting from Berkeley. Kurt's at MIT's Sloan School of Management. Frank Lavin is Asst. Dir. of the President's Commission of Executive Exchange (does that tell you what he does??) and is completing his MA in Chinese language and history at Georgetown. I think Frank is carving out the proverbial niche. Louis Patkin will sell you a used car from the family business Patkin Cadillac, and wants all Mass.

residents to watch for a future stab at politics. Courtney Finch is in international publishing, located in NYC with St. Martins Press. And Tim Hofer, senile at 25, is at UC-SF Med school. Cornelia Kurth is in school for her physician's assistant degree in Houston after leaving medical research. And my space is up, as are my hopes that I'll hear from as many new contributors next time! Thank you, and I hope the New Year is a happy one thus far.

It is music to a class secretary's ear when he hears so much from his 'mates. A fine performance by the '76 trombones means much to relate—and so little space!

Ed Brainard returned from Switzerland for our reunion in '81 June thence to Marion, MA where he has joined the family business—in oceanographic instrumentation.

Ned Elmer is trying to create antibodies to breast cancer in the labs at Mass. General Hospital, surgical oncology division. Gerry Cox has written in praise of Ned's fundraising style.

Charlotte Gifford wrote from Southern Vermont, where she teaches both Spanish and French at Vermont Academy. Charlotte finished Tufts in 1980 on her way to a teaching fellowship at PA, and was married 28 August to Dan Axrell, classmate from Tufts. Pam Schwartz attended that wedding, though I'm not sure she was able to make it to Susan Lambiris' July nuptial celebration. Louise Stites mentioned Susan's good fortunes in a recent letter from Knoxville, where she studies "barks" and "meows" at the Auburn University School of Veterinary Medicine. She, too, is married—since 1981 June.

Tomes could be printed with news from Cambridge trombones—and I needs must only sketch some of the highlights. As you may know, Harvard University in Cambridge has a three-year program in law, from which Chris Auguste will graduate in June. "Anything my classmates could do to help me find a position," he writes, "would be greatly appreciated."

Harvard's other graduate program, the Business School, is honored with a fair share of the '76 trombones, including Tim Draper and Beth Cogan. Tim has been in touch with Dave Delucia and Scott Bone, and witnessed the Andover victory over Exeter last fall with Burt McGillivray and Betsy Atwater, both '75. Also in Cambridge, though reports that he is alive and well remain unconfirmed, is Dan Chadwick.

Christian "Tiny" Coan can't find enough hours in the day for all the work he has in his carpentry business in Greenwich, CT. I understand President Reagan is considering Tiny for the position of Chief Economic Adviser. Mr. Coan has announced plans to visit Andy McKinley in Berkeley, and I anxiously await news therefrom.

New York City is simply humming with trombone music. Jill Shaffer works in the Apple and studies in Italy, which makes for a long walk back to the dorm at night. She still hasn't had me over for tea—and with so much to catch up on! Jill sees something of newlyweds Liz Smith, Ellen Greenfield, and Sarah Mleccko. Ms Shaffer also mentions occasional visits with Jon Tweedy, Phil Welch, Dave Scott, and Kate Rohrbach, all '75.

Richard Babson appears to be studying for his masters at the London School of Economics and Social Research. He and John Peterson attended a School Year Abroad reunion at PA last fall. John is about to finish up at Annapolis. John Chory has gone into intelligence work,

Susan D. Chira '76

"On Christmas A Day of Peace and Quiet - Fog and 64° in New York" headline on front page of Sunday, 26 December 1982 New York Times.

Byline—Susan Chira.

Christmas Day 1982 was not a holiday for Phillips Academy alumna Susan Chira '76. A full-time reporter on the Times staff since July 1982, Chira, at twenty-four, has to work on holidays, but her articles do appear on the front page of the New York Times!

While Susan Chira was growing up in Rye, New York, her parents encouraged her to challenge herself. Bored with the homogeneity of her suburban community, Chira, at fourteen, persuaded her parents to send her to Andover at the dramatic moment when the Academy became coed in 1973.

Chira credits Andover with having pushed her to pursue her strong interests in depth— theatre, photography, English (especially writing), and history. She appeared on the George Washington stage in many productions, and as a senior toured England with the Andover Touring Company. Chira won prizes in English and history and fed her political appetite as a Washington Intern working for the Children's Foundation. She graduated cum laude ("the best history student in my class," said Fritz Allis) and went on to Harvard.

In Cambridge she dropped theatre as a pervasive interest, but at the instigation of classmate David Hilder became involved with The Harvard Crimson. In her junior year Chira expanded her journalistic interests to immersion and she edited The Crimson, its second woman President. "My work on The Crimson let me look at Harvard in a variety of ways. There was much to write about Harvard in the Cambridge community—Harvard as landlord, Harvard as a corporation, as well as the Harvard that provided me and my classmates an undergraduate education."

At Harvard Chira became interested in Asian history and eventually majored in Asian studies with an emphasis on Japan. Head of the Japan Foundation Ezra Vogel became her Harvard mentor and encouraged her to spend a post-graduate year in Japan living with a family. She had learned French well at Andover, but the self-discipline required to master an ideographic language was a greater challenge.

Having been graduated from Harvard in June 1980 summa cum laude and having received the history prize awarded to the woman with the highest average in the history department, Chira enrolled in a nine-week intensive course in Japanese at Middlebury. By September she was on a fellowship in Tokyo studying Japanese diligently each morning and then writing articles as a New York Times stringer afternoons. Her variety of articles on women's issues, on education, and on art exhibits led the Times Tokyo bureau to accept her as one of their members. Chira voices enormous respect for the Japanese and the complexity of their language, and continues taking Japanese lessons with a tutor in New York.

When Chira returned to the United States following travel to Australia, New Zealand, and mainland China, she became a Times reporter trainee in December of 1981 for a year's probation on general assignments. She managed to cut her probation time and become a full reporter in seven months! Chira took on the city beat, shifted to education issues, and next was assigned, in Albany where she now lives, as one of four reporters to cover the state house and political issues of New York's recently inaugurated Governor Mario Cuomo. After one month on that assignment she captured the lead article of the Sunday news section.

Headline of lead article in the Sunday, 30 January 1983 New York Times: "Cuomo to Propose Sweeping Change in Aid for Schools." Byline, Special to the New York Times from Albany by Susan Chira.

—Patricia H. Edmond

casting his gaze upon the North Koreans. Mr. Chory has said that Steve James is working in an Apiary near Chicago, or was that North-western Bee School? Paul Gangi is polishing off his DDS at Tufts Dental School.

Out on the West Coast, Marc Gourevich writes from San Francisco of his attempts to keep toxic industrial chemicals out of the drinking water in Silicon Valley, and that the people are up to their respective keesters in the stuff. I should put him in touch with my wife Pam Eaton, now consulting for the Environmental Protection Agency on their hazardous waste cleanup program, Superfund. Marc will be returning to academia next fall—medical school. Pam and I may be returning to academia next fall, too, though not necessarily to study.

Andrew Novick has done very well by California Western School of Law. He has been appointed an Honors Instructor in Legal Skills, elected to the California Western International Law Journal, and last year received the American Jurisprudence Award for Achievement in the study of contract law. I guess we'll see him at the bar.

I'm getting to the end of my vine, so I sign off—with the traditional request for more news. I still receive most of these snippets from the sticky part of the envelope in which you mail your annual gifts. I would never want you to quit that practice, but a line or two from time to time keeps me, and the rest of the class, informed of all that our infamous and famous like are up to. Blow your horns!

HAH! I knew it... People are doing things! Space is limited though, so here goes. Jazz Robb sent me a letter which she asked me to print in its entirety:

"I went out to California this summer and spotted quite a few ex-classmates there. Josie Selin was selling oca and mangos in a parking lot in Berkeley. Jane Sullivan was handling various organs at Herrik Hospital in Berkeley. Philip Krohn was tending to cows and fluids in a lab in San Francisco and painting beach balls in his studio in Oakland. Beth Nachman was held captive in an office and was forced to spin Volodex wheels. Susie Magnin was painting my fingernails and deliberating contracts with a cookie company. I was a maid to an odd assortment of people, my favorite being an onest to God 7'3" tall ex-basketball player from Brooklyn. I am still a maid and living in NYC. One last interesting note—driving through Arizona I spotted an interesting 50 x 10-foot neon sign flanked by an enormous US flag. The sign flashed "Terrible Herbst." It was at a large gas station. I looked for the Herbsts but didn't see them. Maybe it's a sideline of theirs. So long from the silent majority!"

Lots of people were abroad this past semester and I am happy to say that not once was there an international crisis that could be blamed on any one of them. Ann Cummings spent the fall in Freiburg, Germany and she will spend the spring travelling around Europe before returning to Brown in the fall. Also in Germany (for Oktoberfest of course) were June Lasner and Holly Helliwell. June actually spent her fall in Florence, Italy as did Sally Van Cleve who will remain at the University of Florence for the rest of the year. Sally has bumped into a lot of PA people who, I would imagine, are all dying to get a little "culcha" before it's time to do a little job. Rumor has it that John Abbott will see the Pope drive by in Barcelona, Spain, though I've heard no further details. Kathleen LeMaitre saw Beth Moore this summer before Beth left for England for the year. Also in the U.K. is John Hamilton, who, from what I've heard, is having a fantastic time. Chris Neville spent the fall at the Pushkin Institute in Moscow. Linda Beane is avoiding the cold by going "South of the Border" this spring. Paula Caballero spent the fall in her native Botota, Columbia and expects to go to either Paris or Vienna to finish her education. Hudita Mustafa will spend the spring and summer in India, after having taken the fall off from Yale. Other Elis (and to be fair "Elas") that are doing well are Sprightley Ryan, who is a history major at Yale and "doing the same things I did at PA—recycling and singing—usually not at the same time," and Dan Egger who is "alive and well and living off-campus in New Haven, still writing."

Connor Haugh did not come up to Yale for the Yale-Princeton game, "but he's all right anyway." (I guess that means that someone at Yale has forgiven you Connor). Richard Goldberg was kind enough to forgive me for the articles I missed and reports that both he and Kathy Connor are "awesome," which just goes to show you that you can take the mind from Massachusetts but you can't take the Massachusetts from the mind.

The other Princeton people that I've heard from include Heather Richards who reports that Barb Duvoisin and she are "braving the History Department." She added that "Sarah Aikens is hanging out in the Creative Writing Program and Brian Cordischi is only occasionally seen in the library—he's missing all the fun!" Heather, please tell me that there are other places to have fun at Princeton besides the library—perhaps even the basketball team? (Bo-o-o-o-ring!)

And finally, the one other person from Princeton that I've heard from (as have many of you I'm sure) is Monsieur Le H. L. Silets who spent a semester in France. He's asking for money and once again he claims that it's for Andover, though rumor has it that next year he plans to buy a condominium on the lower east side. Seriously though, even a small check can't hurt.

Another Class Agent that I've heard from is Cassie Doykos whose sister Mae is now a junior at Andover. Congratulations go out to her family as her mother just recently gave birth to her seventh (yes 7!) daughter. Cassie reports that she is a teacher's aid in Delaware and that she can't wait to have her own classroom. Also at Ohio Wesleyan University are Michael Grittani and Al Sciarabissi who are both playing varsity football.

Thomas Gibb had a rough summer on Nantucket where he was forced to divide his time between bodysurfing and tanning (he worked some also). He is in Alpha Delta Phi at Cornell and enjoying it. He mentioned that Debbie Hodgson has skipped a year at Syracuse and that she is working as a journalist for a local paper.

Marianna Gracey is doing OK in Wisconsin and says "hello to all!"

At Brown, Larry Siff is big in student government and is having a great time. Heidi Steinitz is also enjoying Brown and says "hello."

At Hahvahd Claire Gilliatt was preparing for a "hectic party season as manager of Hasty Pudding Theatricals." Laura Feigenbaum is "pursuing her interests in psychobiology," and everyone is still wondering just how Penn could beat them in football.

Well I'm already way over; I better say bye before I'm hated forever. And Pleeeeeeeeeeee WRITE!!

Dear Class of 1981,

Since the perennially prompt Drew Quinn has left for Europe for the term, I have been asked to write the class notes. Drew, along with Jim Cleary, is off to France on the Dartmouth term abroad program. Another of our classmates to trot off to Europe is Wendy Pulling, who, in search of something other than Princeton crew and men, opted for a more continental experience.

Back in America, Datie Leede, our spiritual leader in abstentia, writes that she is very busy acting, traveling, and working hard at Dartmouth, and that she is "losing it." What are you losing Katie? Sylvia Veh, after a summer at the Sorbonne with Alison Gibbs is back at Brown. And on a more informative note, Joe Sutherland writes in and says, "I'm alive." From Tulane, Peter Leuhusen mentioned that he, Rob Mason, Murray Stewart, Geoffrey Daniels and Warren Jones "are keeping up the Pine Knoll spirit."

Thanks to a detailed letter from Randy Accetta (Amherst), I learned that Doug Wilbourne is singing for the Spizzwinks at Yale; Chris Bedell is in the ROTC program at Duke; John Rees plans to take a year off, forest rangers or running a hostel on the Appalachian trail; Laura Harrison, after some foot problems, is starting to dance and run again at Harvard; and John Blasberg—who is a Psi U brother and now a heck of a squash player—is frequently seeing Abbey Adams at Amherst.

Mary Cataudella just can't leave those football players alone; she is managing the Holy Cross team. At Harvard, Scott Amoro, Mark Bamford, and Jim Herberich all room together in Kirkland House, having almost as much fun as they did in Taylor East—still having a blast with those lacrosse sticks. Also at Harvard, and working on the Crimson, are Chris Richards and Dave Parker, who, incidentally, room and row crew together. Tim Clark is interested in taking a year off to teach English in Brazil. He sees Tony Bienstock often and said that Howie Lebowitz is still clasping onto fond memories of Andover, making weekly trips to the hallowed halls of George Washington to check up on Mr. Cobb and the Administration. And, I am told, Katrinka Leschey and John Avery seem to be a pair at Harvard.

On a more hard-core note, Al Howard plans to graduate from Yale in three years. And Bill Kummel, a fellow Eli, is working for the Yale Daily News in the business department and also taking photos.

Don Mackenzie at Middlebury, is, as usual, overcommitting himself, singing for the Crazy Eights, acting and working hard. I spoke to Laura Bull in NYC during Christmas break; she is enjoying Middlebury tons. To the South, Ted Decker, at William and Mary, is a Sigma Chi man and an accounting major to be.

In New York, Andy Morton worked on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange for Christmas break, which he and Steve Frank did over the summer. It was not uncommon to find these two, along with Cleary or any PA person in New York at the time, to be reminiscing over a Schaefer draught at the Subway.

In scenic New Jersey, at Princeton, Bill Nagle, Donat von Mueller, and Andy Young are all rowing crew. Jennifer Marron, also a crew jock, is working hard learning Portuguese. Jim Ringier, still smiling, is a history major and considering lacrosse after a solid season last Spring. Annie Yates, who lives in the rowdiest sophomore suite on campus, threw a heck of a Christmas party here. She is also playing number four for the Women's Varsity Squash team. In February, when she faces the Harvard team, she will find former teammate Mary Hulbert at the number one spot. Although Al James and Jack Liebau are at school in California, they came back East this summer to work in Washington, DC. Al worked for the Commerce Department and Jack worked for George Bush. Al, the jetsetter that he is, managed to hook up with me and Bill Kummel and we spent a few days on Cape Cod with John Burgess.

It is an unfortunate task to have to report the sudden death of Jane Paley's father. She asked to have this mentioned since her father truly loved Andover and had the opportunity to meet many of her friends.

Bill Lawrence writes the following: "Deep in Duke forest, four hours from Washington, DC and ten from Florida, lies an ivory gothic tower at the heart of University of Bethesda, Maryland at Durham, affectionately called Duke. There live about twenty Andover grads who pretend not to know each other and tell everyone they went to "a school in Massachusetts" to avoid being labeled a prep.

"A lot goes on here. Cathy Coyle is heavily involved in the remarkable theatre program based in brand new, state-of-the-art theatres. Rhett Jackson '80 is a leader of ECOS, an environmental group. Calista Woodbridge '82 takes my art class and has been seen with some Frisbee players. Alison Gibbs and Betsy Connell '82, have been seen with smiles on their faces and Greek letters on their chests. Jaimie Lebowitz's fraternity was disbanded by the University, but Jaimie and Chris Bedell can be seen on the quad on sunny spring days. Gibb McMahon has this Saudi Arabian friend with a couple of Trans Ams, and Steve Frank has cool shades, pretty girls, and a cool fraternity (Beta's). Ernie Costello runs track. Reid Livingston '79 keeps to himself and lives off-campus. Phil Knight '82 was interested in starting up a jazz band. La Shaun Bellamy and Jennifer Sharp are happy; La Shaun works in a campus restaurant called the Downunder and takes upper level French classes. Laura Whitman lives in my "radical" living group, and so did Jackie Thaw before she transferred to Brown University in December to pursue studies in psycholinguistics. Andy Darrell invites American Indians to the Georgetown Asian Studies Club and is trying to publish a magazine of student papers there. He plans to spend the summer studying in Taiwan, and the fall travelling in Asia.

"I'm studying History and am on my way to Duke Summer Session at Reid Hall in the Sixieme Arrondissement in Parez, France, before junior year in France (Paris) with either Sweet Briar or Hamilton. I just published an article on the History of Radio at Duke, where David Hartman got his start. I plan to spend my senior year writing a thesis on French Socialism, the Nicaraguan Revolution, Yin, Yang, and 14th century Florentine sculpture. I spend my time working at rallies for the Nuclear Freeze and against military aid to El Salvador."

Finally, I would like to thank all of you who wrote in, for making this job much easier; and special thanks to Jim Ringer for helping me put this together. Have the happiest of new years. Love and Cheers, Bill Ullman.

Hi! I've seen and heard from several other people since the last set of notes. Glad to hear that most of you are doing well and are keeping busy.

Jane Simoni spent the summer as a camp counselor in NH and is now at Princeton playing tennis and squash. She was persuaded to play squash by Annie Yates '81. Jane wrote that Kim Simmons and Trina Sorenson both played varsity soccer at Princeton, and that Burke Doar played b-ball and was writing for the Princetonian. Tom Brand played soccer at Vassar and Ming Tsai made the Yale Squash team. Liz McDonald isn't swimming but is having a great time at U. Mich. Alice Banta (according to Liz) is "as wild as ever" or was it "as wierd as ever"??

Earlier this fall I saw Saeed Aminzaden, Justin Won, and Bonnie Tai who all drove to NY from Hopkins. Saeed and Justin are roommates there. Art Brodie likes Vassar, I saw him at a party at Columbia this fall.

Over A-E weekend I caught up on what some of you are doing and saw, but did not talk to some others. It was pretty wierd but nice to see everyone. Parker Quillen and Ashley Tobin came up from Vassar and Parker has established himself already. Check out a September issue of the Vassar newspaper. Scott Cory worked as a messenger in Manhattan this past summer. Chris Ashley likes Yale, and so does Kathy Lee. John Frank is bumming around Europe now. Anne Von Arenschildt is rooming with Melissa Perkins "who keeps me (Anne) sane." She told me Doug Benedict is doing well at Harvard. Anne Northrup is a possible anthro major and is in a health food co-op with Martha Brown. Karen Herman likes school and was at a party with Mona Lim. Mona sang in an operetta workshop, at a nightclub, and is waitressing in NY, living with Katie White. Katie was in a play, and also stage managed one. Paula Lee was visiting them both from Cornell. Paula sees Maria Elias quite often and Paula has every single one of her classes with Andy Mockler. Beth Berkowitz is studying nutrition at Cornell.

Einar Westerlund, Dave Work, and Calvin Hsu are sharing an apartment at Berkeley. Yalda Tehranian is at school there and is in a sorority. George Lemaitre is across the hall from Mike Polansky at Stanford. He said that Hilary Krane was in a class of his and that he sees Tony Quan and Chris Grover every so often. Pierre Valette wrote and said that he was OK and doing fine. Dave Saalfeld was seen at Wesleyan with a shaved head and dark glasses.

Over vacation I met a girl who knows Dick Conway at Duke. He is reportedly studying hard and likes it. Maiya Greaves, Art Small, and I are all taking the spring semester off. Maiya and Art may travel and I'm working at a TV station and the Met. Big news flash: Jeriann Ordway and Alan Evans '80 were married in December and are now living in Mississippi. Congratulations and good luck!

I hope to hear from more of you. If any of you are in NY call or drop by. (Please note my change of ad). Ciao.

The US and The USSR: our mutual nuclear predicament

If the Bulletin is to start printing occasional essays, I would hope for more originality than the first essay, by John Richards. It is an odd quality of places of learning, where originality and logical reasoning are expected, that there is such a herd instinct on public issues. Right now nuclear freeze is all the rage and John Richards rehashes the familiar arguments in favor of it. I think he rightly gets down to the heart of the issue, the trustworthiness of the Soviets, but comes up with the peculiar notion that the Soviets act out of a feeling of being threatened and therefore we should threaten them less. His thought processes must be identical to those of the British politicians who felt that Germany in the 1930s was only concerned about its self defense. The Soviet Union has consistently attempted to achieve mastery over as large a share of the world as possible. Our policy, on the other hand, has long been one of defense and containment, and surely the Soviets understand that. Indeed, they understand too well our unwillingness to be aggressive, and have encouraged the current drift to pacifism in the west. The weaker our defense (including counter-attacking capability) the more able the Soviet Union will be to carry out its desire to expand its tyranny over the rest of the world.

Mr. Richards and others are unfortunately victims of the wishful thinking which goes: if we reduce our armaments, so will they, and therefore we're more likely to have peace. Of course, what would actually happen, if we fail to provide an adequate deterrent, is that there is more likelihood of aggression on the Soviets' part.

I wish as much as anyone that this were not true, and that all the countries of the world could live in peace, but when there is on the loose a tiger as deadly and menacing as the Soviet Union is, we simply have to carry a stick big enough to stop an attack.

The Andover Pooled Income Fund II

Established 15 February 1983, the APIFII works like a mutual fund, or money market fund, except that the assets which generate an income for investors, pass to Andover upon their deaths.

The APIFII will accomplish the following:

- Generate an income for life at the highest rate available to specified beneficiaries,
- Provide a substantial income tax deduction especially if assets are transferred in 1983, 1984, or 1985,
- Erase all capital gains tax for donors wishing to increase their income from low-yielding highly appreciated stocks, and,
- Provide a major gift for Andover!

The View from Bulfinch

At the beginning of this new fiscal and publishing year, we draw our readers' attention to a change in our publishing habits. The extraordinarily perceptive will have already noticed that they are now reading a magazine instead of our traditional summer tabloid: for the past few years we have annually published two magazines (Fall and Spring) and two tabloids (Winter and Summer). Never having been particularly fond of tabloids, editorially or aesthetically, we have now discovered that by omitting the abbreviated twelve-page edition of February, we can afford to convert the Summer edition into a magazine. Though we shall henceforth be visiting you only three times a year, we are happy to pay you the courtesy of being dressed more appropriately for your home or office. And we think we can arrange for you to receive more mail from PA to compensate for our absence in February.

As we grow longer of tooth and fonder of home than we probably should be, we are constantly amazed at how relatively little homesickness there is at PA. A fourteen-year-old one thousand miles from home has certain rights, and homesickness could be one of them.

We have, of course, our safety valves. We begin by choosing independent customers. Then we keep them busy and sometimes even happy. And then there are the extras.

Like Jo, the silken white English setter that one of our younger faculty recently acquired. In good weather, Jo is frequently anchored to a tree in front of the Borden Gymnasium, where she is completely visible from our Bulfinch window. She is one of those especially affectionate dogs who beg to be petted — her tail-wag starts at the neck — and during any single hour twenty to thirty students walk yards out of their way for a quick dose of canine affection, as if Jo were parked there specifically for that purpose.

No need for the students to be embarrassed about needing affection: Jo reacts so energetically that one can easily pretend that one is doing the dog a favor.

We often wonder how many incipient cases of lonesomeness have been cured or avoided by a fifteen-second session with Jo. Of course, we who are older do not require this kind of emotional indulgence. Unless we are fairly certain that no busybody is peering at us from a window in Bulfinch.

Some of our brightest seniors in Bulfinch who have been studying the satires of Pope and Swift have become enamored of the name "Grub Street" — a slum street in eighteenth century London that was inhabited by hack writers. Scribblers who tried to eke out a living from their literary talents, these dunces (as Pope named them) produced reams of fifth-rate prose and poetry.

It has come to the attention of our seniors that the private road on which Bulfinch Hall sits near the Bell Tower is without a name, and they have come up with the obvious suggestion.

Their reasons are not completely without merit. The sheer power of all the scribbling that goes on in Bulfinch Hall is physically visible. Witness the glazed eyes of our English Competence students when they are being subjected to a season of daily writing; or the lean English teachers in June, fatigued from lugging and reading 1500 essays every year; or the endemic illusion we all entertain that our writing improves if our machinery is better, so that we progress from pen to typewriter, to electric typewriter, to electronic word processor. Grub Street. How true, how true.

Unless, of course, the scribbling our seniors refer to is the writing by the English faculty themselves, a significant number of whom are writing and publishing in all sorts of places. Nonsense — they can't mean that. Our students are merely using affectionate irony. After all, our jesting seniors know that they themselves have done a good deal of scribbling over their years in Bulfinch.

Whatever their rationale, we applaud our seniors' sense of humor and hereby support their frustrated intention of naming the road that turns off Salem Street at the Admission Office "Grub Street," as long as our neighbors in the Gymnasium do not object. We doubt that there is another school or college in the entire kingdom that has a comic spirit deep enough to place its own English Department on Grub Street. What an incentive to the writing teachers to remain ever undeserving of the address!

Indeed, if we hear positively from a significant number of readers (a street sign costs money, after all), we shall rename this very column "The View from Grub Street." □

by Joshua Linder Steiner '83

As the last diploma wound its way around the circle of seniors, the first of countless bottles of champagne shot their corks into the hazy morning. The pops bounced across the Vista to greet the students with a fleeting salute. I listened to the sounds, toasted my friends, and breathed a sigh of relief.

The moment was undoubtedly one to be cherished. Yet it was far from the spine-tingling, tear-producing event that my alumni friends had promised. At the time this disappointed me. Forty-eight hours later, however, I have been able to place the event in some sort of perspective. Single events at Andover will always stand out in my memory, but my first exam week (which seemed more than five days long), or the long hours I put in with my teammates this last lacrosse season, mean a great deal more. To grasp my diploma between by perspiring hands was marvelous, but it was truly only a fraction of the period from the end of my last examination to that final instant of jubilation.

My first week at PA three years ago was terrifying, confused, and punctuated with moments of exceptional pride and happiness; my last week seemed virtually identical. The same feeling of uncertainty and honor were present at both occasions. But whereas I remember my first day at Andover as a series of individual encounters, the graduation period sparks feeling of familial and collegial support. The importance of my friends and family was never so clear as when good friend handed me my diploma and my parents stood ecstatically behind me. I was in that circle because they were around me then, and, more importantly, they had been surrounding me for the past three years.

Almost each event in the four-day period that I considered graduation brought forth my feelings that support was the single most important part of graduation.

Hisun Won '83 receives her diploma from the HM as Robin Harutanian looks on at Andover. As I walked shakily out of my last examination, my relief was enormous — partly because it was the termination of my Andover schooling, and at that moment the vision of a book horrified me. More importantly, I was relieved that I had had teachers, friends, and family to guide me through the most treacherous paths of academic pursuit, people who picked me up at the end of my worst failures and who lauded my achievements. Nothing academic seemed insurmountable given the proper assistance.

The days following my last examination continued my education. Two nights later, retiring history teacher Ted Harrison urged each student to perform every task to perfection. A higher request could not be made of anyone. Where did Mr. Harrison find the confidence to expect that much of us? Perfection was an ideal that had all too often eluded me during my hectic PA career. My confidence was bolstered, however, as I gazed around at my companions — friends and teachers who had pushed and helped me to achievements beyond my farthest aspirations.

Mrs. Mary McHenry, a professor at Mount Holyoke College and mother of a graduating senior, provided perhaps the most humorous example of the importance of friends. She spoke of the unique language that students develop and the difficulty of understanding it that most parents face. One of her most vivid examples was the use of 'n' in the place of the word and. "Me and Electa" becomes "me 'n' Electa." And so often precedes names that an abbreviation has become the norm. People at school come in pairs. Most times, the stories worth recounting were the ones involving others.

The Senior Recital Friday night and the Talent Show Saturday night were both startling examples of patience and guidance as the keys to success. The two musicians dedicated their concert to their parents, who had endured countless hours of practice. The exhibitioners Saturday let the applause and laughter that filled G.W. Hall be their thanks to those few or many who had taken them so far.

By Sunday I must admit I had become intensely aware of this community, and it is therefore not surprising that I found it reflected in the speeches of Headmaster Donald McNemar and School President Robert Weisbach. Mr. McNemar's talk divided into two sections. In the first he thanked the students for the contributions they had given the school. He next urged us to tackle the pressing problems that confront our generation: the epidemics for which there are no vaccines, solutions that must be reached through group consensus.

Bob Weisbach reminded us that we had received from Andover only what each of us wanted: the "Andover experience," however undefinable, took its character from our high aspirations.

Graduation marked the beginning of the newest stage in each of our developments. Our various periods of concentration will blend together forming an enormous step from which we may launch ourselves into the future. Secure in the knowledge that we were academically well prepared, we broke from the circle and wandered in differing ways. The class of 1983 had moved only temporarily from its coherence. Within a few days our minds were full of memories and "me 'n' Andover."

1983 Reunions

The 1983 Reunions have put to rest forever, apparently, the myth that reunions must be merely parties. There are few pleasures like seeing old friends after years of being apart, of course, and such pleasures dominated the entire weekend of 10-12 June. But PA and Abbot reuners showed such enthusiasm for the abundant opportunities to acquaint themselves with the changes and progress in the school, to meet newer faculty and reminisce with the older ones, and to witness the achievements of fellow alumni, that we shall probably continue to offer programs similar to the ones of 1983.

Beyond the traditional cocktail parties at faculty homes on Friday night, followed by the Flagstaff Court dinner and the Headmaster's reception in the Addison Gallery, the offerings on Saturday afternoon were many and varied. There were three films shown: The Atomic Cafe by the brothers Rafferty (Kevin '65 and Pierce '71), a feature film composed largely of skillfully juxtaposed propaganda excerpts about the atomic bomb from the 1940s and 50s; Crack of Dawn, by Frank Makanna '58, a slide tape anticipating a completed film about Texas cropdusters; and Burden of Dreams, by Les Blank '54, a documentary about Werner Herzog's struggle to make a film in the upper Amazon jungle.

While these were being shown, there was a cello recital by Frank Hammond '58 and Lodowick Crofoot in Graves Hall, followed by a chamber music recital by PA students. In White Auditorium in Evans Hall, the science building,

Dean of Residence David Cobb was moderating a panel discussion with students on "Andover Today." In Bulfinch Hall English Instructor Tom Regan '51 was leading a class of alumni through some exercises on the non-literal use of language in satire. And the Addison Gallery displayed the works of thirty-eight alumni/ae in a show called "Tradition, Transition, New Vision."

There were other traditional events over the weekend. The Alumni Chapel Service just before the Saturday parade was conducted by the Reverend J. Philip Zaeder, Protestant Chaplain; Father Richard K. Gross, S.J., Roman Catholic Chaplain; Reverend Theodore H. Gregg '33; and Gabrielle Hagedorn '78. On Saturday afternoon the Abbot Alumnae Tea was held at Morton House. And the 2.2 mile Mini-Marathon was run across the athletic fields (winner: Kirk Doggett '78 in 11:58).

Annual Meeting of the Alumni

It is always both humbling and glorious to realize how many (over 800) people return to reunions, and from what distance — England, Belgium, Alaska, Hong Kong, and West Germany were among this year's prize winners.

By 11 June, there had been 6,250 donors to the Alumni Fund for the fiscal year that would end on 30 June, and with three weeks to go they had donated $1,106,414 towards a goal of $1,275,000. Led by Tom Crosby '33 and Hugh Samson '33, the fiftieth reunion class gave $113,530. The forty-fifth reunion class of 1938, with an extraordinary effort from Bill Pike, Dave Meade, Ted Harrison, and Jean Cross Maier, presented the Alumni Fund with $60,552 and $9,500 for the Endowment. Miriam Ganem Reed '57 reported that 1,010 Abbot donors broke their own record by giving $80,366 as of 9 June.

With mingled sentiments of melancholy at her leaving PA and joy at her future prospects, President of the Alumni Council Stephen B. Clarkson '55 presented Associate Secretary of the Acad-

Mr. Andover

Nothing else in the entire weekend, however, quite captured the hearts of the alumni as much as the presence of Sumner Smith '08, celebrating his 75th reunion. This generous, benevolent, gracious man, who is never happier than when he is in his garden or watching an Andover hockey game, marched down the Elm Arch at the head of Saturday's Alumni Parade, his wife Flo on his right, and the Old Guard banner carried before him by Melville Chapin '36, President of the Board of Trustees, and Joseph C. Mesics '53, Secretary of the Academy.

When he received a gift from the Academy — a large colored aerial photograph of the school — at the Alumni Meeting, it was typical of Sumner in his brief speech to belittle his own contribution to Andover and to praise the achievements of retiring teacher, former athletic director, and hockey coach Ted Harrison. Sumner announced that as a tribute to Ted the school was retiring his hockey number 4.

Sumner Smith's years as Charter Trustee and his generosity in providing Andover with such amenities as a covered hockey rink and a proper maintenance center for the Office of Physical Plant have been discussed in our Profile of him in the summer 1979 Bulletin. Today, however, we were more interested in his reminiscences of Andover seventy-five years ago, and our interview with him revealed a man with an extraordinary memory.

Sumner entered PA in the spring term of his Upper Middle year because a place became available when another student was dismissed. His dorm, Woods House, was then located where our Chapel now is, but it was removed during the Cochran years. Of all the things he can remember about those days, the strongest memory was of Al Stearns, who was an impressive headmaster, in love with the school and respected by his students.

"Gosh, did I have to work. I was all right in Latin, French, and English, but math got me."

Were there any pranks in those days? "Oh yes, the school was full of them. Al Stearns himself was full of humor, and never seemed to take offense at the hanging skeleton that periodically appeared in the Chapel." One of the more worrisome pranks to the administration was a tradition of "All Out" nights: a senior would shout "All out!" and the dorms would empty and head for Chaps, an eatery on the east side of Main Street at Morton Street, with Al Stearns running after them to make sure no harm was being done. Nothing pleased Al Stearns more than when J. Reed Kilpatrick, a senior and the best athlete in school, said no, he had a paper to write when an All Out Night was called. It was

Jorge Luis Borges

Borges in his element

by Alexander Theroux

The great writer is blind only in the way we aren't and sees exactly almost everything we don't. His blindness stands for what is immediately so impressive about Jorge Luis Borges (born on 24 August 1899 in Buenos Aires, Argentina, of Spanish and English parentage) who visited Phillips Academy for three days, 30 April to 2 May 1983. He made me recall, as I sat listening to him, the magnificent lines of Paradise Lost:

So much the rather thou
Celestial Light Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers Irradiate, there plant eyes, all mist from thence Purge and disperse, that I may see and tell
Of things invisible to mortal sight.

(III. 51-55)

It was on Sunday night to an es-entially student audience — most of whom, I imagine, had only lately come to Borges, probably by way of his most celebrated collections, Ficciones (1945) and Labyrinths (1962) — that he showed himself to be not only an international writer of first rank, the author of short narratives, little essays, and brilliant metaphysical poems, but also an extremely witty and gracious man with a wealth of information, unique opinions, and a range of English and American literature upon which refreshingly he pronounced with as much gentleness as authority. The assembly of 1500 students and faculty were fully bewitched.

"I always know the beginning and the end when I start writing," he said of his own method of composing (he dictates his work), "it's the middle I have to figure out." Borges's stories are parables of a sort, formalist games, tight little webs of narrative inextricably to do with dreams, time, labyrinths, mirrors, libraries, paradoxes, and etymology, all of which in their astonishing scope of thought and conclusion turn the dedicated reader into a detective trying to "solve" some of the most compelling mysteries written since Poe, coincidentally one of Borges's favorite writers. A neglected book of Borges, Six Problems for Don Isidro Parodi (1980), has as its hero a detective who's a lifer in prison. Borges loves detective fiction and knows the genre completely.

His literary tastes are curious. On the Monday he spoke to the English and Romance Language departments in Bulfinch Hall he referred, with passing ease and yet exegetical authority, to Whitman, Kipling, Chesterton, Verlaine (his favorite French writer — he confessed to despising Baudelaire), and H.G. Wells. We heard him claim

Borges and Spanish Department Chairman Angel Rubio in front of Phelps House

Austin, Texas, for his favorite city in the United States, quote Beowulf, and explain he was always in love. "Women are so essential in literature," he said — he meant, I believe, informs so much of the drama of literature — "that I often exclude them from my own writing.") He dislikes American hamburgers and soft drinks. He pronounced the Encyclopedia Britannica (11th edition only) to be a masterpiece. Stevenson's Treasure Island, one of the first books he read as a child — he went blind in 1955 — meant more to him, he added, than the later philosophical work of that writer.

Borges loathes politics. He described the recent Falkland Island War as "two bald men fighting over a comb." He exclaimed delightedly at never having met Eva Peron, whose totalitarian husband during that regime transferred Borges, at the time director of the National Library, to a job as chicken inspector in order to humiliate him.

He seems literally to have read everything: the Cabalists, Browning, Lewis Carroll, medieval philosophy, cowboy stories, Kafka, the Church Fathers, things like De viris illustribus of Lhomond and Quicherat's Thesaurus and Pliny's Natural History, three books, for example, which appear in one of his most famous stories, "Funes the Memorious" — a work he told us he wrote as "a metaphor of insomnia."

Borges looks like a poet. He is 83 years old. His hair, wispy and grey-blue as Yeats's was, is flustered. The alabaster skin-tone of his beautiful face has a quality of softness and tenderness which Frost's lacked (he admires Frost greatly). Borges leans forward to field a question — his hands crossed over a short-handled cane — and frowns sweetly at whatever query, looking directly at the questioning voice and addressing the question before the question mark is even remotely near! It's a milder version (in my mind) of the great blind poet, John Milton, who sitting on his front step near the Bunhill Fields supposedly lived out the final years of his genius until 1674, impatient with Restoration corruption and contemporary idiocy, but willing to answer any question anybody cared to ask. Having no facial disfigurement with blindness was one of Milton's boasts; it could be Borges's as well. He looks as handsome and as serene as a Della Robbia patriarch.

The Andover students adored him. Borges is an extraordinarily unpretentious man, a rare thing in a scholar of such precision and scrupulosity of erudition. And of course young people feel such a thing right away always. He drew applause countless times and adulatory laughter all evening, which shows only a single approximation of the great man's universal personality. Borges seemed tireless. He took questions at George Washington Hall for more than an hour, retired to the Underwood Room for a further meeting afterward, and then the following day spent all morning visiting classes — and always showing that intellectual ingenuity, consummate skill as a narrator, and astonishing capacity to recite bits and pieces of poems, drawing them out like a conjurer sprouting up bouquets of flowers from nowhere.

Of the strangely brilliant philosophers mentioned in his amazing story, "Tlon, Uqbar, Orbis Tertius," he wrote: "they seek neither truth nor likelihood; they seek astonishment. They think metaphysics is a branch of the literature of fantasy." I think that perfectly defines the genius and the art of Borges. The genius we detected. The art we heard. And finally we came to see — and love — the man.

The Headmaster's Symposium

by Seth Bardo

For many years The War Game, a realistic film produced by the BBC about a nuclear attack on Kent, England, was shown as part of History 300 during spring term. In the spring of 1982 the general student reaction was markedly different to the film from what it had been during previous years. What psychiatrist Robert J. Lifton refers to as "psychic numbing" was perforated; students did not watch the film and then quietly return to their homework. Many found the film unsettling. They gathered in small groups. Some went to talk to their history teachers, others sought out their house counselors. One group decided to meet with the Headmaster.

History Department Chairman Thomas Lyons and colleague Jeanne Amster had a long discussion concerning the students' reactions to the film as well as their requests for more information about the nuclear issue. The War Game was only one of several catalysts. Town Meeting votes on a freeze resolution, the emergence of STOP Nuclear War (Students/Teachers Organization to Prevent Nuclear War) on campus, and the 12 June 1982 demonstration were all factors that had suddenly and dramatically thrust the nuclear question before students in a way that many had not observed since the Vietnam War. Amster and Lyons began to explore the possibility of a program that would be outside the regular curriculum and could accommodate a wide audience.

When Mr. Lyons proposed the idea of a special program to the Headmaster, he found that Mr. McNemar was receptive from the outset because the Headmaster had already given the matter a great deal of thought. "When the students came to see me after The War Game, their concern about the nuclear arms question merged with mine. We agreed that this was the issue of our time."

The Headmaster appointed Mr. Lyons as the coordinator of the proposed event. Largely through the energy and enthusiasm of these two men a framework over the summer began to evolve: the program was not to be offered for credit; it was to be scheduled for winter term; it was not to last a entire term; and the activities would take place two evenings a week. Sundays would be devoted to films and speakers, whereas Wednesdays would be for small discussion groups led by faculty and student leaders. An appropriate title was also decided upon: The Headmaster's Symposium.

William Sloane Coffin '42, minister of the Riverside Church in New York, social activist, and Andover graduate, who was unable to attend the symposium in the winter, came to PA in the fall to address the student body at an all-school meeting. His impassioned and opinionated speech focused on the nuclear arms issue. At the end of his address he challenged his audience not necessarily to join him, but to inform themselves so that they could act with commitment and intelligence.

Coffin's speech elicited many responses, including anger by students who felt that it was essential to present another speaker to balance Coffin's strong conviction that nuclear weapons posed the greatest threat to the earth and that by adding to our nuclear arsenals we were further heightening the risk of annihilation. However each student reacted to Coffin, he certainly did challenge his listeners to think about the issue.

As Arena Day approached, symposium posters, graphically dominated by a mushroom cloud, were displayed on campus and in Andover. Also, in preparation for their role in discussion groups, the fifteen student leaders had an orientation weekend at the Log Cabin. The weekend's events, conceived and organized by House Counselor Sarah Bardo, concentrated on providing information to the students as well as giving them a sense of purpose and support among themselves. It proved to be an important gathering, for as Tom Lyons later commented, "The student leaders' contributions went far beyond my expectations. They were invaluable to the success of the symposium."

Approximately 130 seniors and 20 uppers signed up for the symposium at winter term Arena Day. It had been decided that 150 would be the maximum because of the desire to keep the discussion groups small, and that the opportunity to sign up would be given first to seniors, then uppers. Each student was given a copy of War and Peace in the Nuclear Age, a special supplement from the Boston Globe which was later to win the Globe a Pulitzer Prize. Students were also assigned to discussion groups.

On 16 January 1983 the Symposium began with the film The Day After Trinity: J. Robert Oppenheimer and the Atomic Bomb. For many participants this film had the most powerful impact of all the presentations.

The first movie sticks in my head. It showed how human the people were who made the bomb. Oppenheimer's efforts to see the bomb for what he believed to be a good purpose were clearly and tragically shown. He did not believe in the arms race. He was not aware of the consequences. None of the scientists were. They didn't know.

That really sticks in my mind. I have such evil association with the bomb, but the film showed that Oppenheimer and Einstein were not evil.

—Angela Lorenz '83

Brief reading selections (the first was from Jonathan Schell's The Fate of the Earth) and one-page essays were assigned with each speaker or film. Although neither attendance nor papers were obligatory in the discussion groups, the non-credit format offered an advantage: as senior Jeb Doggett noted, "Only people who were really interested in the topic signed up because it was not for credit."

The first speaker was Richard Rhodes, father of Katie Rhodes, an upper at Andover. Mr. Rhodes, a free lance writer, currently is assembling a massive amount of research into a book on the history of the atomic bomb's creation. His lecture began with a vividly crafted description of his personal odyssey which led him to Otto Hahn's wooden worktable preserved in plexiglass in Munich's Deutsches Museum. Rhodes used the concept of a plague for the central metaphor to his lecture because nuclear weapons like a plague began at a source, then proliferated to a situation that at any moment could be beyond control. Also, unless vigilantly controlled, nuclear weapons pose a continued resurgent threat. As Rhodes explained, when one is pursuing a virus, one searches for the source. Rhodes found it at the wooden worktable where a uranium-bombardment experiment was conducted in 1938, an experiment that would soon lead to the first demonstration of nuclear fission.

After Rhodes, on 23 January filmmakers Kevin Rafferty '65 and Pierce Rafferty '71, screened their widely distributed documentary, The Atomic Cafe. The film depicts our government's response in the 1950s to the bomb through civil defense programs and air raid shelters. "What was amazing was that they [the Raffertys] did not have to provide any narrative. They gave us a clear picture of the mentality of the post-atomic bomb administrations. 'Duck and cover.' Come on!" Angela Lorenz observed.

The following Sunday Robert J. Lifton lectured on "The Encounter with Permanent Death." Lifton had done much research on the impact of the bomb, most notably set forth in his seminal work Life in Death: Survivors of Hiroshima. His lecture was taken largely from his recently published book that he co-authored with Richard Falk, Indefensible Weapons. What he offered his audience was not only the important message to "imagine the real" (Buber's phrase), that is, to confront the imminent possibility of nuclear holocaust, but also the opinion that this realization did not have to lead to despair. Rather, one could be empowered by knowledge and with that knowledge commit oneself positively to halting what Lifton sees as this country's current arms policy, which will end in the world's destruction unless citizens act to change President Reagan's position.

A radically different perspective toward nuclear weapons was presented on 13 February by Dr. W. Scott Thompson '59, Associate Director of the International Communications Agency of the US Government. Thompson's appearance had a tremendous impact, not so much because of content, but more because of the way he presented his material.

"Thompson was the highpoint in some ways," Tom Lyons recalled. "Not only did he give us the other side, but he really forced people to face the facts. Was this guy right? He challenged the kids to find out the facts." Jeb Doggett distinctly recalled Thompson's attitude. "He was very defensive. He seemed ready to jump at us. He never really explained where the government was coming from. He just assumed students had the wrong position."

A majority of the students were troubled by Thompson's appearance. They had hoped for some answers to respond to Schell and Lifton. Thompson did not provide them with many answers, nor did he seem interested in their deep concern. In addition, students wondered if he truly did represent the government and if he did, then that disturbed them. Many found him cold and condescending. They became indignant. I remember going into the Underwood Room after Thompson spoke. When the students gathered there to ask him questions, one could almost feel the heat coming from the group's intensity. Thompson did not relent. In rebuttal to a question, he called a student's position on the issue "a moral cesspool." The exchange between students and Thompson probably would have gone on for hours if not for the 10:00 PM sign-in, a termination point that left many students frustrated because they had not gotten the chance to confront Thompson.

The final lecture was given by John Newhouse, who had worked on SALT negotiation talks and currently is employed at the Brookings Institute. Newhouse gave a balanced, comprehensive view of arms control by providing a brief history of the process and explaining where that process left the United States in terms of its future options. As one student remarked: "He introduced the facts without imposing his judgment upon them."

A very conscious manipulation of the facts was shown through the two films that ended the symposium, Countdown for America and War Without Winners. The films were an appropriate conclusion to the symposium. What became apparent to students almost from the outset of the experience was that issues are terribly complex; there are no simple solutions. They discovered the necessity of pursuing a question from sundry perspectives. While this quest for knowledge is often frustrating and confusing, in the case of the majority who took the symposium the course was ultimately rewarding too.

I walk away from the symposium without any answers, but with a greater understanding of the problem and my own relationship to it. When I first heard about nuclear bombs, all I could think about was my own lack of future. Assuming the role of The Victim, I felt helpless and futureless. I rejected any knowledge of the issue itself. When asked to work on the symposium, I was forced to immerse myself in facts and examine the issue head on. My fears were finally given images and substance — a painful, but necessary process. At first I had rejected knowledge; now I depend upon it. I have continued to read articles, talk to people, and change my opinions. I don't feel helpless any more. . . . Working with students and faculty to raise a whole community's awareness of such a vital and pertinent issue really taught me what "education" means. —Cori Field '83

Each person judged the first symposium through his or her own criteria and involvement. However, one objective testament to the program's success was the student evaluations. All of the respondents wrote that the symposium should be repeated. No other question elicited such a uniform response.

The symposium's impact is rgely intangible. Most students commented that it offered a begining. As senior Suzie Kito said: "It as so important to transcend the ounds of Andover and get in-olved with something besides ndover life." For at least four stuents the symposium produced a ommitment which they wanted to ursue immediately. Their Inde-endent Projects were designed nd proposed so that each indi-idual could channel his or her interest in the arms race into direct involvement.

A natural outgrowth from the ymposium during the six-week eriod was the close cooperation between faculty and students. Dis-ussion leaders often met with their student counterparts for lunch or dinner; partnerships were forged. Groups frequently gathered in faculty houses where a special intimacy and sharing took place. The symposium with its different academic construction revealed another side to Andover, one that sometimes gets buried under the frenetic and pressured pace established at the school.

The mutual respect between faculty and students crystalized during a winter term faculty meeting devoted solely to the symposium.
Two faculty members, Robert Perrin and Sandra DeJong, and two seniors, Matt Gilligan and Cori Field, spoke to the faculty. Each speaker was eloquent. I was particularly moved by Matt's series of questions that he posed for himself and for all of us because as a future cadet at West Point he would be confronted with these questions daily and dramatically.

support vast buildups of nuclear arms which cost unlimited amounts of the citizens' money.
Am I to support this when I see poverty and unemployment throughout the US and all around me? . . . Or when I see that millions of Americans are deprived of a decent education because they cannot afford it?

As an officer I may be expected to consider a nuclear arms buildup as essential to keeping America the number one power in the world.

I may be told that this route of channeling billions of dollars into a nuclear buildup is the best way to help countries which are not as fortunate as we.

Am I to forget the moral issues confronting this world? Am I to forget the horrors of the past —
Hiroshima, Nagasaki?

Can I support this expenditure when I see starvation in Ethiopia and Cambodia?

The dilemmas go on and I am trying to make some sense of them.

I know I cannot forget what I have learned here at Phillips Academy.

All I can hope for is that when I am finally faced with these dilemmas, I can hold what I have learned here, and combine it with what I shall learn at West Point, and combine both with my faith in myself in order to make future judgments and never to lose sight of moral issues.

The symposium did not change Matt's beliefs. This was not its intent. What it did offer him as well as to the other participants was a forum to test their ideas; it provided a vehicle for them to form an intelligent approach to the nuclear weapons issues as well as a model to approach all serious questions.

Celebrate!

OUR NEW MUSIC CENTER in Graves Hall

APRIL 8-10, 1983
Phillips Academy, Andover

The New Music Center in Graves Hall

It was a festival, the weekend of 8-10 April, as the entire community celebrated the dedication of the Graves Hall renovation project — $1.8 million of acoustic engineering, soundproofing between rehearsal rooms, spacious and airy and well-lighted recital halls, a record library, and handsome decor throughout.

There were honored guests. Music Department Chairman William Thomas welcomed back Chairman Emeritus William B. Clift, Jr., after whom the new Record Library has been named, in recognition of Bill's having established the earlier version in improvised basement rooms. Frederic A. Stott '36 spoke about the generosity of R. Crosby Kemper '45, who donated the Carl F. Pfatteicher Orchestra Room. On hand to celebrate the dedication of the John M. Timken Concert Room, which she has given in honor of her father, was Barbara Timken '66. Barbara Timken also provided funds for the original planning of the project, and for the architectural competition that was eventually won by Richard Bertman of Childs, Bertman, Tsecharas, and Casendion.

There were concerts: the Chamber Orchestra; the Music Faculty; the Concert Band; the Jazz Band; the organ; the carillon; and the combined choruses of Andover and Exeter and all willing visitors who sang Handel's Messiah.

The photographs tell the rest.

BOOKS

The Andover Bulletin takes pleasure in announcing the publication of books by our graduates and our faculty. Because of the undependability of the projected dates for publication, however, we do not announce a book until we have a copy in hand. All books sent to us will be shelved and catalogued in the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library with the Alumni Collection.

'40 Hayler, William B., editor in chief. John M. Keever, Paul M. Seiler, associate editors. American Merchant Seaman's Manual, sixth edition, based on the original edition by Felix M. Cornell and Allan C. Hoffman. Cornell Maritime Press, Centreville, MD, 1980. 615 pp. A well-indexed handbook, this manual has been the standard seamanship text for the American Merchant Marine for decades. It covers everything from block and tackle use, knots, and canvas work, to Rules of the Road, medical procedures, and laws pertaining to merchant seamen. Profusely illustrated.

'49 Kimball, John W., Introduction to Immunology, Macmillan, NY, 1983. 532 pp. This new text examines both the chemical and the cellular aspects of immunology. Illustrated.

'49 Kimball, John W., Biology, fifth edition, Addison-Wesley, Reading, MA, 1983. 974 pp. This standard college text, first published in 1965, has been revised and brought up to date. Copiously illustrated. Earlier editions have been translated into five languages.

'52 Lish, Gordon. Dear Mr. Capote, Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 1983. 258 pp. This novel is about a madman who is almost halfway through his goal of murdering forty-seven women (he is forty-seven years old). His letter to Truman Capote, he hopes, will provide Capote with the material for a good book, the proceeds of which will support the narrator's nine-year-old son. The epistolary form and the idiom of the murderer combine to create a unique style which gradually reveals his character.

ing Office, Washington, DC, 1982. xxviii + 290 pp. Printed on very heavy, acid-free stock, unbound in looseleaf form so that the book can lie flat when it is opened on the workbench, this 8½ by 11 inch handbook is profusely illustrated. Instructions are thorough and clear so that the book collector with any kind of manual skill at all will be able to construct boxes to protect valuable books from the destructive elements in our atmosphere. The introduction identifies the materials used and gives lists of sources of supply.

'56 Brown, Margaret Roth, illustrator. Bookbinding and the Conservation of Books, A Dictionary of Descriptive Terminology, by Matt T. Roberts and Don Etherington. Library of Congress, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington DC, 1982. x + 296 pp. A large format (9 by 11½ inches), elegant dictionary printed in three columns on acid-free paper. The 9-point Times Roman type is eminently readable, and the illustrations are clear and handsome. The dictionary is useful for both book collectors and librarians who find that sales catalogues sometimes use confusing terms, and for conservators and bookbinders who are skilled craftsmen. Tools, materials, methods, important historical figures in the field, and booksellers' terminology are all identified.

'59 Lunde, Erik S., Horace Greeley, Twayne Publishers, Boston, 1981. 138 pp. This volume is one in a series on United States authors. By examining Greeley's writing style and major ideas in his most important works, the author is able to analyze Greeley's lasting literary merit. Greeley was an "Everyman" of the 19th century and through his newspaper forum and effective writing style allowed the whole country to hear the reform movements of the period. The author goes on to state that Greeley "embodied the American Dream" and that we could use some of his vision today.

'64 Kennedy, Sean K., M.D.; Alan H. Ropper, M.D.; and Nicholas T. Zervas, M.D., editors, Neurological and Neurosurgical Intensive Care, University Park Press, Baltimore, 1983. 290 pp. This book originated from an annual course in neurologic and neurological intensive care and contains a core of information pertaining to Neuro-ICU's which was developed by practitioners. It is pragmatic in its approach to caring for neurosurgical patients, the severely neurologically ill, and their families during these difficult periods. This technical book includes references for further study in this expanding field.

'65 Devereux, Stephen E. and Dr. Rob Roy McGregor, EEVeTeC The McGregor Solution for Managing The Pains of Fitness, illustrated, Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, 1982. 301 pp. EEEVeTeC stands for Equipment, Environment, Velocity, Technique, and Conditioning which the authors feel must be employed in order to alleviate "sportaches." This is offered not as a "panacea but as a process" that the serious and not so serious sports enthusiast can use to help prevent a medical condition for rehabilitation after an injury. Devereux and McGregor stop short on back pain and advise consulting a physician, but state that most "sportaches" and inflammations can be handled without a doctor's care by using EEEVeTeC. The amusing and informative illustrations by Bill Hoest help the reader through the specific ways to use EEEVeTeC for running, tennis, and a variety of other sports.

'65 Vanderwarder, Peter, Boston Then and Now, Dover Publications, Inc., New York, 1982. 121 pp. In this paperback book fifty-nine Boston sites photographed in the past are placed beside the same sites photographed today. Each picture is captioned with a brief history of the building and surrounding area including the changes they have undergone. The author confided to the Bulletin, "My training in photography began at Andover."

'68 Gura, Philip F., and Joel Myerson. Critical Essays on American Transcendentalism. G.K. Hall & Co., Boston, MA 1982. li + 638 pp. A collection of fifty-two reprinted essays of criticism and analysis of Transcendentalism, from 1840 to 1979, including works from Dickens, Carlyle, and Holmes in the nineteenth century, to Rene Wellek, Joel Porter, and Perry Miller in the twentieth. The volume is thoroughly indexed, and the source and date of each essay is given. The 51-page introduction includes both a survey of the subject and a 25-page critical bibliography of the field.

'68 Gura, Philip F., The Wisdom of Words: Language, Theology, and Literature in the New England Renaissance. Wesleyan University Press, Middletown, CT, 1981. 203 pp. A study of the role of language in the American Renaissance of the nineteenth century, focusing on the literary symbolism of Emerson, Thoreau, Hawthorne, and Melville. The author addresses "the question of ambiguity inherent in the gesture of human speech" and traces the progress of the writers under discussion "toward a concept of symbolic discourse." The theological arguments between Trinitarians and Unitarians from 1820 to 1850 over literal-versus-symbolic interpretation of the Bible, Mr. Gura maintains, played a major role in the literary use of language for the rest of the century.

'72 Tucker, Jonathan B., Ellie: A Child's Fight Against Leukemia, Holt, Rinehart & Winston, NY, 1982. 338 pp. This account of a youngster's struggle against a mortal illness is a composite story melded from three different cases, with names altered. The writer, an editor of biomedical topics at Scientific American, dramatizes the daily pain, hope, and courage of both a four-year-old child and her family, at the same time educating the reader about the nature of the illness and the most recent medical advances in treatment. The book has a glossary, a bibliography, and a useful index.

'73 Schelberg, Ellen Hoitsma, Baltimore: A History for Children, privately printed, 1979 (third printing 1982), available from bookstores in the Baltimore area. This booklet was originally written for the study of Baltimore by students in the Bryn Mawr Lower School. Illustrated.

FACULTY

Monsky, Susan, Midnight Suppers, Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, 1983. 233 pp. A novel by a PA English instructor about a love triangle involving two pediatricians (Max and Abe) and Max's wife Esther, set in an established Deep South Jewish community. The implicit acceptance of the triangle is one way that the principals of the story resolve their conflict of love and friendship.

Smith, Bruce, The Common Wages: Poems by Bruce Smith, The Sheep Meadow Press, New York, 1983. 68 pp. Editor of the literary periodical Graham House Review, and instructor of English at PA, Bruce Smith has collected thirty-two of his poems for this handsome paperback. Many of the poems are about his perceptions of the city of Lawrence and its life as a mill city of the past. □

Cornelia Weldon LeMaitre '53: New Director of Annual Giving

by Helen M. Eccles

Phillips Academy's new Director of Annual Giving is Cornelia Weldon LeMaitre '53, an Abbot alumna experienced in school development and public relations, a Class Agent for the Andover-Abbot Class of 1953, and a PA parent. She is a lifelong resident of Andover. Mrs. LeMaitre, Director of Development at the Pike School in Andover until this June, succeeds Sandra Urie Thorpe '70, who leaves Andover to enroll in the Yale Graduate School of Organization and Management.

In 1979, Connie LeMaitre established the professional organization of development at the Pike School, and Pike's annual fund has tripled since then under her direction. She was, in addition, assistant to the headmaster for admissions. Before 1979 she did freelance work for Corporate Images of Boston for five years, assisting in publicity for the Channel 2 Auction. In community affairs, Mrs. LeMaitre is treasurer and past president of the Board of Trustees of the town's Memorial Hall Library, involved in planning a projected $4 million addition to the library, and was a trustee of Lowell University, 1975-79. She has served on the board of directors of the Family Service Association of Greater Lawrence and of the Lawrence General Hospital Aid Association.

She and her husband, Dr. George D. LeMaitre, a local physician, are parents of two current Andover students, Matthew and Ellen in the junior class; two Andover alumni, Kathleen '80 and George '82; and a son, James, now in his last year at Pike School.

Welcoming the appointment, Secretary of the Academy Joseph C. Mesics '53 said, "I am most happy that Connie LeMaitre has decided to join our Office of Academy Resources team. Sandy Thorpe has done a marvelous job in bringing together our Andover and Abbot alumni families in a very professional manner. I am confident that Connie will take the baton and move our annual giving program ahead without missing a stride."

As an Abbot student, Connie Weldon was president of the day students in student government, and graduated cum laude. She received her B.A. from Newton College of the Sacred Heart, cum laude, in 1957, and the following year studied literature both at University College in Dublin and at Yale University. Between 1958 and 1962, she was an editorial and research assistant in publishing, and in public relations at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. □

David M. Underwood '54 New Charter Trustee

David M. Underwood '54 of Houston, Texas, has been elected a Charter Trustee of Phillips Academy. Mr. Underwood is vice chairman of the board of Underwood, Neuhaus & Co., Inc., an investment banking firm in Houston, and president of the Feliciana Corporation. He will join the Andover Trustees for their fall meeting.

Mr. Underwood will replace John U. Monroe '30 as one of Andover's twelve Charter Trustees. Mr. Monroe, Lawrence Durgin Professor of Writing at Tougaloo College in Jackson, Mississippi, honored with Andover's Fuess Award for Distinguished Public Service a year ago, becomes a Trustee Emeritus of the Academy in his 70th year. Underwood will be the first Texan on Andover's Trustee Board since George Bush '42 resigned to enter Presidential and Vice Presidential campaigning in 1979.

During Underwood's Andover years he was a member of Student Congress, the Glee Club, and the Athletic Advisory Board. He received the B.A. degree from Yale in 1958 and served in the U.S. Army 1958-60, and saw active duty again 1961-62. He was a member of the U.S. Army Reserve, attaining the rank of captain.

David Underwood has been a key figure for Andover for admis-

Events on Campus

It is possible that, thanks to lectures, performances, exhibits, and readings, a term at PA would be an education in itself even without academic classes. Among the speakers this spring term was Congressman James Michael Shannon '69, Representative for the Fifth District in Massachusetts, our home turf. Born in Lawrence and a PA day student for four years, Jim was elected to Congress at the age of 26. The occasion of his speech was PA's presenting him with the Claude Moore Fuess Award for sions and alumni activities in the Houston area, where he served the school as Alumni Representative for admissions, and he was an Alumni Trustee nominee in 1979. His support for the Academy's major fund campaigns goes back to the Andover Program, 1958-60, when he and his family made the Underwood Room possible, through the Academy's Bicentennial Campaign to its current Campaign for the Addison Gallery. During the Bicentennial Campaign he was a member of the Steering and National Committees and was Area Chairman for solicitation of gifts.

The new Andover Charter Trustee is a Governor of the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD). In Houston he is a director of the InterFirst Bank Fannin and a member of the Houston Society of Financial Analysts. He is a director of the Texas Medical Center, Inc., and in the Houston community is a trustee of the Fonden Foundation and the Methodist Hospital and chairman of the board of trustees of the Kincaid School. He and his wife, Lynda Knapp Underwood, have three children: David M. Jr., 17; Catherine F., 15, and Duncan K., 12.

Distinguished Contribution to Public Service. Among the points he emphasized in the all-school meeting in Cochran Chapel on 8 April was the importance of the individual voter in an electoral system that is too often dominated by special interest groups and their financing.

A month later on 6 May, Hedrick Smith of The New York Times spoke on daily life in the Soviet Union as he and his family experienced it when he was assigned there for three years. Mr. Smith is the father of S. Scott Smith '84.

Former Headmaster Theodore Sizer returned on 25 May to give the Stearns Lecture, "A Study of High Schools: A Report to Students." His old students gave Ted a standing ovation at the beginning and the end of his lecture, which reported and commented upon some of the findings that will soon be published in his multi-volume study of American secondary education. A marvelous Profile of Ted by Audrey Laganas '80 appeared in The Brown Daily Herald on 15 March. Ted has been Visiting Professor of Education at Brown University this year.

The PA annual Dance Recital at the end of April was one of the finest we have seen on this campus: sixteen different dances, almost all choreographed by the students themselves and executed with the grace and skill that have given our Dance Department its reputation for excellence. In May the Dance, Music, and Theatre Departments combined to produce an impressive version of West Side Story. Other festivities like the dedication of the Graves Hall Renovation and the visit of Borges to PA are described elsewhere in this issue.

Ballet Collection Donated to PA

Mrs. Carolyn Buchman Parks of San Francisco has donated to Phillips Academy her collection of more than 300 books in several languages and 160 memorabilia, including dance programs and unique photographs. Among the books are rare and first editions.

Carolyn Parks was the first American dance teacher and formal dancer to be invited by the USSR Minister of Culture to visit the Russian choreographic schools in Moscow and Leningrad — the Bolshoi and the Kirov. The collection includes photographs and notes she took from her first visits in 1960 and 1961, when she was able to attend classes, examinations, and rehearsals. Her notebooks and photographs have already been used extensively this spring in the ballet classes of PA instructor Christina A. Rubio. The collection was on exhibit in the Freeman Room of the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library during Reunion Weekend.

The donor was co-founder of the Bay Area Ballet Company in 1957, which was later renamed the Pacific Ballet. Although Mr. and Mrs. Richard Parks are not graduates of PA or Abbot, they both have become involved in the school and its programs since their first visit to Andover three years ago.

The Faculty

On Thursday, 9 June, the night before Reunion Weekend began, over four hundred friends paid tribute to Marge and Ted Harrison '38 on their retirement from the PA faculty. The main speaker at the dinner in the PA gymnasium was A. Bartlett Giamatti '56, President of Yale University and former English student of Ted's. It was a night of laughter and affection. As a tribute to the Harrisons, their friends have contributed $100,000 to the Harrison Fund, the proceeds to benefit PA in some way approved by Marge and Ted. Chairman of the dinner was David L. Morton '55;

Frank ("Junie") O'Brien '39 was chairman of the scrapbook; Gerard E. Jones '55 and John P. McBride '56 co-chaired the finance committee; and Helen Bronk coordinated the entire affair here in Andover.

Math Instructor Lou Hoitsma was honored at the spring Sports Banquet on 17 April to celebrate what he has done for the squash program in his twenty-five years as varsity coach. The Ullman family has established an award in Lou's name to be given annually to "that boy or girl involved in the squash program who best demonstrates qualities attributed to Mr. Hoitsma — spirit, loyalty, integrity, and good sportsmanship." The initiators of the award were Bill Ullman '81 and Tom Ullman '83.

The Headmaster has appointed History Instructor Jeanne Amster as Dean of Studies, beginning in September. Jeanne replaces Phyllis Powell, who will be taking a leave of absence before she returns as Director of the Summer Session.

The Trustees have appointed a committee to oversee the construction of a memorial to the Reverend A. Graham Baldwin, School Minister from 1930 till 1968, who died 25 June 1982. The memorial will be room in the basement of Cochran Chapel, behind the Kemper Chapel at the Wheeler Street end. Resembling a cloister, the design allows the room to be a lounge, a meeting room, and a "special parlour." The outer porch will look through pillars to an inner porch or lounge; and in the center of the thirty-by-forty foot rectangle will be an area suitable for receptions, lectures, and even small liturgical dramatic performances. Chaired by Alexander B. ("Sandy") Trowbridge '47, the committee include Donald H. McLean, Jr. '28, English Instructor and Protestant Chaplain; J. Philip Zaeder, and Secretary of the Academy Joseph C. Mesics '53. Construction will begin as soon as sufficient funds are available. In future issue of the Andover Bulletin we hope to publish pictures and diagrams of the project originally designed by Felix Drury '47.

First Prize

Xiangdong Yang '83 from the People's Republic of China present Headmaster McNemar and PA with a Chinese scroll on Prize Day

At the end of Prize Day in Cochran Chapel, one of the three PA students from the People's Republic of China approached the podium and awarded a prize of his own. We quote from his speech:

"I am Xiangdong Yang. I come from the People's Republic of China. I have been here for almost a year. During the year I got to know you people, and I really feel that I've learned a lot of things that are hard for me to know in China. I feel I had a wonderful time here. I really don't know how to thank you.

"Before I came here I brought a gift to the school. It's a Chinese calligraphy. It was written by a famous Chinese calligrapher, whose name is Shenyan Ye. Chinese calligraphy is one of the most important parts of Chinese culture. . . . I would like to present it to the school. I know that compared to what I received here this is just a token of my appreciation, and it represents my love to the school. I would like to translate it: 'With great pleasure to foster talents.' Thank you."

And the entire school, with a collective lump in its throat, returned his thanks with a standing ovation. □

like a Hardy Boys melodrama.

The girls at Abbot? "Oh gee, you could hardly look at them in those days." The most prominent member of the faculty after Al Stearns was Charlie Forbes, the Latin teacher who was Acting Headmaster whenever Stearns was out of town. Forbes's entertaining was so celebrated for its wine and formal dress that Fuess, years later, wrote a Bulletin article called "Going to dinner with Charlie." Another faculty character in those days was the school physician, who was known for his cure-all for everything from measles to broken bones: "Paint it with iodine."

Since there was no gardening at PA for Sumner in 1907-08, Andover can take little credit for his interest in flowers and trees; that love for nature came from his mother, who was a splendid gardener. But of course, Phillips Academy and its campus have profited so much from Sumner Smith's sensitivity for natural beauty that he is often referred to as Mr. Andover. On the occasion of his seventy-fifth Reunion, the entire community says Congratulations and Thank You, Mr. Andover. □

Three generations of Sumner Smiths: '38, '08, '68 (all on the same reunion cycle)

Celebrities Work Overtime

Even during vacation, PA sometimes hums. For three days right after Reunion, a crew of about fifty set their equipment up in Samuel Phillips Hall, the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, and Chapin House, to film some quiet scenes for a CBS Movie of the Week for next fall called Freshman Year.

Loretta Swit, one of the stars of *M*A*S*H*, played an English teacher in Sam Phil with such sweet skill that it broke the heart of this observer. Two of her students were Melissa Sue Anderson (Mary in Little House on the Prairie) and Kim Delaney (Jenny in the soap All My Children). The script was written by Judith Parker, and the movie is co-produced by her and Andrew Gottlieb. The film is directed by Gus Trikonis, who is assisted by Allen Wertheim.

Our impressions? The crew could move tons of equipment out of the Library in twenty minutes, and not leave a trace of their presence — of their cameras, lights, or miles of cables. And the producers, actors, and directors warmly welcomed the Andover Bulletin in spite of our Inspector Clouseau-style clumsiness. Their craftsmanship, intensity, and friendliness all at the same time are a sublime mystery to us.

SPORTS

David Lyons '83 advances the base runners in PA's 4-0 win over Exeter

by Michael C. Friedman '84

During the Spring term, Andover varsity athletics compiled a combined record of 69-38-2. Great team and individual efforts marked the season.

Golf finished best, at 15-2-1, led by senior Andy Siderowf. His consistent play helped Andover capture the coveted Witherspoon Trophy, and steady performances by the lower ranked players gave the team strength. Boys lacrosse also excelled, finishing 11-2. Captain Josh Steiner led the squad with forty goals, and the Blue capped their season as Dave Trowbridge scored in double overtime to give Andover a victory over arch-rival Exeter. Steiner, middle Rick Apgar, and defenseman Mike Glumicich received All-Star honors for their play throughout their term.

Boys tennis, paced by Jeff Koffman's leadership and 14-1 performance, finished strongly at 6-1. The sole loss broke a fantastic Andover winning streak of 38 triumphs. Boys track also had an excellent season, finishing 7-2 and winning an unprecedented fourth consecutive Interschols title. Upper Chris Schille made great contributions to the squad and he won MVP at interschols to top his record-breaking term. Softball finished at a strong 7-3, led by pitcher and co-captain Christine Kubacki. With many young players, this looks to be a real force in the future.

Boys crew finished well at 4-2, capturing back the Dent Oars. First Boat also took an impressive fourth place at interschols. Girls tennis, led by lower Alice Stubbs at the number one position, finished at 6-4. The youthful squad looks forward to an outstanding season next year, losing just two seniors to graduation.

Varsity baseball, paced by MVP Denny Wright, finished at 5-9, good enough to qualify for the league playoffs, where the team lost early to Deerfield. But after losing a close one 8-7 at Exeter on 25 May, three days later the team did everything right at home and shut out the Exies 4-0. Girls track ended the term at 2-5, beating Exeter in the final meet. Captain Moira Recesso led the team with tremendous performances. Girls crew had a difficult term, with the first and second boats finishing at 2-5 and 1-5 respectively. Girls lacrosse rounded off the sports, ending at a disappointing 2-6-1.

In all, the term was successful for Andover teams, who distinguished themselves with victories over tough competition.

Michael C. Friedman '84 is Executive Editor of The Andover Scoreboard, PA's student-run sports magazine.

Alumni Miscellany

Athletic Director Joseph B. Wennik '52 reports that the Athletic Department has decided that it no longer needs the football films from the past years, except, of course, the Exeter game films. All other films three years old or older are now available for $25 each, the profit to be placed in the football budget. A recent inventory indicates that we have almost 150 films of games dating back to 1937. Anyone interested should get in touch with Mr. Wennik (617) 475-3400, Ext. 190.

Soccer coach Meredith Price reminds us that the Alumni-Varsity soccer game will be played on 24th September. Last year's alumni team came from twelve different classes.

A limited edition of PA and Abbot T-shirts will be distributed to donors to the Alumni Fund who meet the standards set for their class. The minimum gift necessary to receive a T-shirt will be determined separately for each class on a sliding scale to be announced in a letter from your Class Agent. Credit for this project is due primarily to the generosity of Daniel Woodhead III '54.

Following is the travel schedule for the Alumni Office staff:

Denver 16-17 October (Sunday and Monday)
 Los Angeles 18 October (Tuesday)
 San Francisco 19 October (Wednesday)
 Seattle 20 October (Thursday)
 Portland 21 October (Friday)
 Chicago 25 October (Tuesday, with Admissions staff)
 Dallas week of 28 November (with Admissions Office staff)

The new Director of Annual Giving, Connie LeMaitre '53, will be travelling with the Alumni Office group. Alumni in each area will receive notices about meetings and receptions well in advance of the events. ☐

Several alumni have asked whether it is possible for them to subscribe to The Phillipian. Mail subscriptions are indeed available for $25 per year (approximately 22 issues), addressed simply to The Phillipian at PA, Andover, MA 01810.

The Addison Gallery Campaign, the Academy's capital fund-raising effort which was launched in May 1981 in honor of the Addison's 50th birthday, has been proceeding in high gear since the $1,000,000 Challenge Fund to complete the Campaign was offered by the Trustees and alumni and alumnae in October 1982.

Recently, in conjunction with the opening of the Alumni Show on 13 May, funding for the Directorship of the Gallery was announced. Mr. and Mrs. R. Crosby Kemper '45 of Kansas City have given $500,000, which when matched with $250,000 from the Challenge, endows for the Directorship. The alumni/ae show of works by thirty-eight alumni and alumnae artists (1954-1974) is the culminating event celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Addison. As Robert Taylor of the Boston Globe wrote, "That Andover should produce forty professionals in the last twenty years seems miraculous. The miracle, though, is the result of progressive teaching methods, starting with Patrick Morgan, in which the resources of a museum unique among secondary schools are allied to studio practice. The Addison has served Andover well, and the community of art." (The Boston Globe, 5 June 1983)

At reunions in June, Campaign Chairman Robert M. Walker '28 was honored by Trustee President Melville Chapin '36 with the establishing of the Robert Miller Walker Foundation for a Curator/Art Historian. A Fund given by Mollie and Garland Lasater, Abbot and Andover '56, along with a substantial commitment from Walker himself creates that endowment.

At the Alumni meeting on 11 June, Trustee and Major Gifts Committee Member R.L. Ireland '38 announced the Campaign totals that have resulted from the magnificent Challenge. Close to 1,200 donors have given $4,070,000, more than $2,000,000 since the Challenge, leaving $462,000 yet to be raised to complete the Campaign. In the months ahead Major Gifts Chairman Edward E. Elson '52 and Special Gifts Co-Chairmen Josephine Bradley Bush '57 and Robert A. Feldman '54 will be stepping up their efforts to insure successful completion of the Campaign by 31 December 1983.

1918 George F. Hamer, Jr., New Castle, NH; 19 February 1983

Robert E. Moody, Boston, MA; 28 March 1983. Dr. Robert E. Moody, historian, author, retired chairman of Boston University's history department, former director of the University libraries and museums, editor of two volumes of the Saltonstall papers, and history professor emeritus, has died after a long illness. He was 82.

Dr. Moody earned his bachelor's and master's degrees in 1922-23 at Boston University and his Ph.D. at Yale in 1933; he was also the recipient of an honorary LL.D. degree from Emerson College, 1961, and was elected Phi Beta Kappa.

At Boston University, he also had been chairman of the Board of Editors of the B. U. Press and was a member of the committee on the Bacon Lectures on the U. S. Constitution; the committee on University Lectures; and the University Library Committee.

Dr. Moody was a specialist in American Colonial History contributing to the Dictionary of American Biography, the Dictionary of American History and the Atlas of American History. He was also the editor of Province Court Records of Maine and was author of numerous articles and reviews of historical journals. His work as editor of two volumes of the Saltonstall Papers, finished in 1973, a compilation of the papers of six generations of the Saltonstall family, was considered his most accomplished and praiseworthy work.

He was a Fellow, American Academy of Arts and Sciences; Recording Secretary, Colonial Society of America; Chairman, Committee of Publications, Massachusetts Historical Society; Member, American Antiquarian Society and the Maine Historical Society.

His affiliation with Phillips Academy included, in 1964, the vice chairmanship and chairmanship of the Friends of the Oliver Wendell Holmes

Library and he was elected for a three year term to the Alumni Council. Mrs. Moody has said recently of her husband, "Andover was always of warm and affectionate interest to my husband . . . education was his vocation and his avocation, truly."

He leaves his wife, Eleanor (Wragg) Moody, two sons, Stephen and David, and one grandchild.

1921 Alfred Pearson, Zephyrhills, FL; 12 February 1983 (See Class Notes)

Howard Snow, Charlotte, NC; 12 April 1983. Mr. Snow graduated in 1924 from New York University with a B.S. degree in engineering. He was President of Southern Friction Materials Co. for over thirty years. After his retirement, he was a volunteer in many community affairs including advising businessmen who requested help through the Small Business Association. He was also a business consultant to a company in Virginia until recently. He was a founder of the Charlotte Country Day School and contributed his time and resources to the school in its beginning years. Mr. Snow also devoted his time and energy to the Community Chest. He was a Boy Scout leader as well as a leader of his church, the Plaza Presbyterian Church where he held positions of Deacon, Elder, and Elder Emeritus — he also taught Sunday School for many years. Mr. Snow had deep feelings of affection for Phillips Academy and was a devoted supporter and worker for the school, having served as an alumni council member and an alumni representative in his area, interviewing prospective students for Admissions. Surviving are his wife, Bernice (Dennand) Snow, two sons, Peter D., David G. PA '58, a daughter, Susan Snow-Asher and four grandchildren.

1922 Augustine J. Cotter, Seattle, WA; 23 November 1983

H. Mansfield Horner, Hartford, CT; 9 May 1983. Starting his career in 1926 as a stock boy at Pratt and Whitney Aircraft, H. Mansfield (Jack) Horner retired in 1968 as chairman of the board of that company (later known as United Aircraft Corporation and now United Technologies Corporation).

After World War II when Mr. Horner headed the company, it moved from the manufacture of its single product, the Wasp piston engine for air planes, to become the technological leader of the industry with jet propulsion and space flight hardware among its many other products. United Technologies today is a major military supplier, which also produces helicopters, air-conditioning equipment, elevators; and Mr. Horner presided over the company's growth and expansion for 22 years — ten as president and twelve as chairman.

After taking his first plane ride at fourteen and especially after Wilbur Wright's lectures and flight demonstration at Yale while he was a student there, Mr. Horner developed an interest in aviation. Frederick B. Rentschler, a friend of the Horner family, who had just founded Pratt and Whitney in Hartford, warned him there "wasn't much opportunity" in the aircraft industry when young "Jack" inquired about employment, but nevertheless gave him his first job after he received his bachelor's degree from Yale in 1926. He advanced rapidly in the company; a year later he was appointed assistant treasurer, and subsequently took over as the chairman after Mr. Rentschler's death in 1956.

Mr. Horner leaves his wife of 57 years, Lela (Shumate) Horner; a son, Leonard Mansfield Horner PA '45, and a daughter, Lela Burwell Horner. He was a grandfather of three and a great-grandfather to four children.

948 Sheward Hagerty, Wilton, CT; 27 February 1983. Mr. Hagerty died suddenly, at his home, of a heart attack after returning from a run.

He graduated from Yale University in 1952 where he was managing editor of the Yale Daily News and a member of the varsity football team. After serving as a captain in the U.S. Marines in Japan and Korea from 1952-55, he took graduate studies at King's College, Cambridge, England, returning to the U.S. in 1955.

Mr. Hagerty's journalism career began as a reporter for the Hartford Courant. He joined Newsweek in 1956 and was assigned to be their London Bureau Correspondent; in 1959 he returned to New York where he was named education editor. During the late 60s, he again returned to England as chief of Newsweek's London bureau. He left Newsweek in 1970 to become New York Daily News feature editor, during which time the paper's theater, film, and radio-television coverage was expanded in an entertainment section formed in 1971. In 1977 he returned to Newsweek as a senior editor, a position he held at the time of his death.

Mr. Hagerty is survived by his wife Lisa (Blau) Hagerty; three sons, Sheward, Jr., 24; Sean, 21; and Sandford 18. His mother, Mrs. Johnson Hagerty of New York City, also survives him.

To find a moonbeam in your life and let it shine night after night
A dove-tailed moonbeam, one that's bright and fits next to your own . . .
—Jay Metcalf

After graduating from Andover, Jay attended Cornell University, receiving his B.S. in Engineering in 1979, and in 1981 he earned an M.S. in Mechanical Engineering from the University of California, Berkeley.

During the summer of 1981, he and some friends sailed a thirty-six foot sailboat to Tahiti. When en route he noticed symptoms, he was flown back from Tahiti to Stanford, and the condition was diagnosed as cardiomyopathy — congestive heart disease — an incurable disease. Jay was stable for two years while living at home with his parents and was able to keep active. He took courses at American University, tutored, and belonged to a drama group — and was reshaping his career when heart failure caught him one evening this spring, among friends.

Survivors include his parents, retired Navy Commander and Mrs. John T. Metcalf, Jr., and two brothers, William V. and Michael, all of Chevy Chase, and two sisters, Mary-Clare Metcalf of NY and Alida Metcalf of Austin, TX.

ABBOT

1898 Beulah Loomis Hyde, Tacoma, Washington; 19 January 1983. One of the oldest surviving members of Abbot Academy has died at the age of 97.

She was an accomplished artist, having many one-person shows in the Tacoma-Seattle, Washington area as well as in Salem, Oregon and Kansas, her birthplace. She was also a horticulturist . . . and in 1964 at the age of 78, she took a trip around the world.

She married in 1913 and she and her husband, Robert Henry Hyde, had three sons. She lived in the Tacoma, Washington area all of her married life.

She has two sons who survive her, Charles H. and William B. Hyde, four grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

We few survivors of Andover 1910 have lost our most admired and most loved member — our dear Henry Hobson. On the afternoon of 9 February he lay down to take his afternoon nap and never woke up. For him "The busy world was hushed, the fever of life was over — and there was peace at the last." Henry's whole life had been one of unselfish service to God, to country, and his fellow man; even during his undergraduate days he was involved in the Christian life of Andover and Yale.

The first World War started shortly after he graduated from Yale and he served as a Major of Infantry in France, was wounded twice and was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for bravery.

The war over, he chose to make the church his career, graduated from the Episcopal Seminary in Cambridge and served in churches in Waterbury, CT, Worcester, MA, and Cincinnati, OH. He was consecrated as a bishop in the Episcopal Diocese of Southern Ohio at the age of thirty-eight. At the time he was the youngest Episcopal bishop in the United States and at his death at age 91 he was the oldest surviving bishop.

As you all know, he served as president of the Andover Board of Trustees for seventeen years. During Henry's administration, Andover enhanced its image as a national high school drawing students from all over the country with the highest standards of education and a democratic policy of admissions.

Jessie B. Pitijn Higgins, Andover, MA, 13 April 1983. The widow of Phillips Academy English Instructor Roger W. Higgins, Jessie Higgins was a superb accompanist on the piano, a teacher of piano, and the force behind community musical activities here for decades beginning in the 1930s. She devoted herself to musicianship and musicians, accompanying and encouraging Phillips and Abbot Academy students, and teaching students in the town community. She promoted town-gown musical activities such as the Andover String Quartet and the Merrimack Valley Symphony Orchestra, for which she served as Librarian. In her long association with the Music Department she was a kind and encouraging accompanist, tirelessly helping students rehearse for the spring musical or a recital, and faculty and friends will remember the warmth and hospitality of the musical gatherings at the Higgins' home. The Higgins' two sons, Haydn '50, and Jon '58, achieved note in their musical professions. Haydn "Eddie" Higgins, formerly of Chicago, now living at 2407 Tortugas Lane, Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33312 is a well-known jazz pianist; Jon Higgins, 461 Laurel Grove Road, Middleton, CT 06457, a specialist in South Indian music, is chairman of the Music Department and director of the new Arts Center at Wesleyan University. The Memorial service for their mother in Cochran Chapel on 21 April was made especially memorable by their musical gifts. Memorial contributions may be made to the Department of Music.

On retirement he devoted his life to Yale affairs, being Class Agent for the Yale Class of 1914. For a number of years he achieved the unprecedented record of attaining 100% participation in the Alumni Fund. He did this by laboriously writing personal letters in longhand to every member of the class. His philosophy was that getting every member to participate according to his means was fully as important as getting a few affluent members to contribute large amounts.

In spite of increasing blindness he carried on a large correspondence and his daughter Katharine wrote me that she found a letter from me on his desk the day he died.

I feel that the world is a better place for his having lived, and all of us who were his friends have had our own lives enhanced by having known him.

He is survived by his wife, Edmonia: those of you who went back to Andover and Yale reunions will remember with affection "Monie." Unfortunately in recent years she has become an invalid and Henry had given all of his strength to her care. He is also survived by a son, Henry Wise Hobson, Jr. of Cincinnati; two daughters, Katharine H. Sturtevant of Braintree, MA, and Margery H. Thomas of Kalamazoo, MI; twelve grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

As the newly appointed Secretary of the Class of '14, I haven't the charisma of Ray Snell — God bless him and keep him — so I need help from all of you fellows. Remember, if you don't let me have some information about your activities, you won't be able to learn much about the activities of other members of our class. And I am in the same category.

Mac Baldridge and Stu Caldwell sent in checks but no news. You other fellows who haven't sent in anything ought to know they believe in Andover still.

Fortunately, General Leo McMahon and I have had a chance to exchange letters and he is still going strong. Evidently Leo and his son, Leo Jr. both knew Joe Mesics from Pennsylvania before he came to Andover and are pleased that he has.

Joe and Chris Shaw were in Atlanta on a fund raising trip. While we are not too crowded with Alumni in this area, we got a fair turnout. With the exception of myself, no others of '14 were there.

We are planning an ANDOVER/SOUTHEAST in imitation of the ANDOVER/WEST reported in a previous Bulletin.

Hear the good news — the class of 1914 had the highest percentage of contributors to the Alumni Fund — 84%.

Received a touching letter from Toby Roberts's wife, Ruth. Toby passed away in 1971, two days after their 52nd wedding anniversary. They had lived in Englewood, NJ, but Ruth is now living in Amherst, MA.

Albert Clarkson has retired to Edgewood Manor, Portsmouth, NH. He is getting ready to plant his garden which is a mile from home, and a mile from his "lady friend." The garden is 5' wide and 80' long. His son is Steve Clarkson, PA '55.

Spring fever must have hit every member of the class of 1916. Your Secretary has not received a line of news for publication from a single member of the class. I can report that I am busier now than when I was considered a Working Man. Having drawn a blank from the rest of you for news for this issue of the Bulletin, I will be sending everyone a stamped return post card so that you will have no difficulty in updating your life events. Don't forget that your classmates want to know what you are doing and how your families are. We will look forward to some interesting stories next issue.

I have learned, very belatedly, that Stuart Buxton and Thomas Carpenter passed to their reward. Stuart on 26 January 1982 and Tom on 8 October 1981. We have no details regretfully, but in their last report both were living a full life. They both made their contributions towards a better world. Our sympathy goes out to their families. Another death to report, unfortunately, is that of William C. Osgood of Wellesley, MA on 24 September 1982. He is survived by his wife Charlotte B. Osgood, a daughter, a son, and four grandchildren. Our sympathy is extended to Mrs. Osgood and her family.

In 1918 the eager members of the class grabbed their diplomas and planned great futures. Now, sixty-five years later, we find some of our classmates still eager and active. Eddie Kahn still practices medicine although he gave up surgery, amazingly enough, just last year. Ab Chase is still working on the Alumni Fund — more power to him! He wrote that he keeps busy with his stamp collection and he dabbles in photography. Ab is also the proud great-grandfather of a two-year-old great-grandson. Wallace Graves recently moved from Leisure World in Laguna Hills to Regency Park, a retirement home in Pasadena. He and his wife are enjoying their new location as it is only a ten minute drive from her family.

Roger Woolley wrote as follows: "Virginia and I are both well and running. We keep the farm at Claverack, NY open all year and, if there is a good snow, up we go!" George V. Smith wrote an interesting letter in February telling me that he finished writing his autobiography, The Life of a Physician. He also wrote of his wife, Olive, and the various projects they were working on together. Sadly, I subsequently learned that Olive Smith, an extremely accomplished woman and a very devoted wife, passed away. We extend our heartfelt condolences to George and his family at this time.

Marion S. Hamer wrote that her husband, George F. Hamer, Jr. died on 19 February 1983. I have also learned of the death of Lindsley McChesney of Troy, NY on 24 October 1982. Robert E. Moody died on 4 April 1983 at New England Deaconess Hospital after a long illness. Dr. Moody was the retired chairman of the history department at Boston University, and was also the former director of the university libraries and museums and editor of two volumes of the Saltonstall Papers. Surviving is his wife Eleanor (Wragg) Moody of Boston; two sons and a granddaughter.

Few, if any of us, have been in touch with Harold Walker in recent years, although he did come to our 50th reunion. Our classmates will recall him as the talented shortstop on the 1919 baseball team. It is now good to hear from him about his interesting career. In his one year at PA, he also played some football and soccer, and he speaks well of his classes with Artie Leonard, Freddie Boyce and "Drip" Newton, but in athletics he found Doc Page and Fred Daley difficult to get along with. After Andover, he spent a summer in Meredith, NH working and playing ball, and beginning in 1921 spent two years in professional baseball, after which he got a job in a Lawrence mill, which also had a ball team. Unsuccessfully, he applied for a coaching position at PA. He then enrolled at the University of Illinois and, despite his pro background was able to play baseball for them and in 1928 was on a Big Ten team which toured Japan and won twenty-one out of twenty-eight games and led in most runs hits and RBIs. After graduating with a B.S. in 1929 from Illinois, he became a physicist and chemistry teacher at Ashland, MA High School. He was also a football, baseball and basketball coach there, where he turned around losing programs to winning ones in the three sports from 1932 to 1956, when he moved to another school with a less successful program. He went back to teaching at the High School, which has named their athletic field after him. He founded the Walker Scholarship Program for Ashland High graduates going on to college and this has helped thirty-four students since 1974. However, he has not stayed in one place, spending winters in California and trips to Europe in 1971 and to Asia in 1977, including Nepal, Siberia and Russia. He tells us that his hearing is badly impaired, with glaucoma in one eye, but that he is otherwise OK and has made some very good friends over the years.

For the first time I have learned that Larry (Lawrence J.) Kane died 19 February 1978. His widow, Dorothy Noyes Kane writes: "Suffering from angina and hypertension for several years, he was nevertheless active in his investment counselling work until the day he died. Happily he attended a Metropolitan Opera the afternoon before he succumbed to cardiac arrest. Larry always spoke fondly of his days at Andover." I am writing her and asking for details on his career. She lives at 14 Charlton Hill, Hamden, CT 06518.

No greater proof of Tom Regan's perfect sense of tact could be given this Class Secretary than his inclusion of no less than four "copy pages" and "news that we may have accumulated for you at this end." I fear the record of this ancient dynasty will not reveal a single occasion when we have exceeded two pages and even this amount rarely.

As the new deadline of 6 May approaches, I am again faced with a paucity of news of Andover classmates in spite of the fact that according to the calculation of Bill Rosenbaum there are still some sixty-two of us still around. He refers to the late Joe Lucas whom your scribe remembers as an indefatigable supplier of news, but I have not heard from Bill's other neighbor Dick Lawton. My experience with Vin Farnsworth and Stew Sanders was the same as Bill's: acknowledgements but no news. Bill wrote on 24 February and I at once wrote back asking for news of himself. He has just (18 April) replied by indirection, indicating that he lives next to the launching site of the Challenger — the take-off of which he says was "a beautiful sight from our back lawn. The return came up the beach with its escort not much above eye height. It was an awe-inspiring experience."

Ed Greene who has for some years been greatly troubled by bad knees, had one operated on recently and the operation was a great success; he is about to have the other one operated on by the same doctor in Boston.

The same stalwarts continue to show up at our monthly meetings of the Yale Class of '24: Greene, January and Co. Alan Carmichael is not well and hasn't been for some time.

Stafford), 9 Cleaves Street, Rockport, MA 01966. Hilda has two sons, two grandchildren — one a senior at Brooks Academy in North Andover, the other a freshman at Rockport High School. "I am handicapped by failing eyesight and emphysema. I still enjoy concerts, lectures and I play bridge." Hilda's husband George S. Stafford died in 1968.

Bertha Worman (Mrs. Calvin B. Smith), 850 Boston Post Road, Sudbury, MA 01776. "My old house was built in 1730. I can't work in my garden now, but I hope with the warmer weather I'll improve." She also wrote, regretfully, that her two sons died in the 1930's. Margaret Worman (Mrs. Margaret W. Thompson), 87 St. Stephen Street, Apt #31. Going to Rochester, NY soon to visit friends and see lilacs. Katherine G. Hamblet, 506 Lowell Street, Lawrence, MA 01841. I am busier than before I retired with Red Cross, garden club, etc. In May I had seventeen days in Brasila and Rio de Janario, where my nephew, son of my sister, Marion H. Green, '15, was in the State Department.

This is 6 May and I have yet to see what I wrote back on 13 January, all of which confuses me, as a bunch of cards have gone out asking for news, and if they ever come in you'll read about them around Christmas. Please keep in touch! I did get an unsolicited letter from Abe Clark bringing me up-to-date. Abe says he is enjoying life, keeps busy, and plays golf at least once a week in the summer and usually goes to Florida for the month of March. Thank you Abe!

Charlie Morris wrote in April that for the first time he gave his wife a view of Andover. In spite of clouds and some rain they found the campus ideal and Charlie was most enthusiastic about the Andover Inn: "Surely one of the most comfortable and attractive hostels in the States." But too early to make a reservation for reunion 1986.

When we went to Sedona, AZ to see Norm McGee, as related a couple of years ago, the first thing we noticed when approaching the town, was a couple of his "litter lifters" out walking. Norm is still chairman of "Keep Sedona Beautiful, Inc." with some 1300 members and twenty-five on the board. Norm added a new twist to what they accomplish: "Keeping the streets free of such treasures as discarded disposable diapers!"

Also a note from Ed Parnall, M.D. commenting on how he first learned wood carving in Charlie Forbes' shop. He has put his "bone saw" aside in favor of wood again, but does orthopedic evaluations. Then, in further correspondence, we diverged onto eateries out his way in New Mexico (Albuquerque) and Mexican menus vs. local and/or California. He seemed to favor California. Ed said he had just eaten at a local place, much touted, paying more for a mediocre lunch than he did for a real fine dinner in Anaheim. My idea of gourmet eating is herring roe (free, after catching the herring in a creek), lobsters washed ashore by storms, and mussels picked up at low tide!

There are two deaths to report: Fred Small died in Fort Lauderdale, FL 29 October 1982, and Al Pearson on 12 February 1983 in Dade City, FL near his winter home in Zephyrhills. Al was born in Gardner, MA and after PA graduated from Yale in 1926, had a stint at R.H. Macy's as a buyer and then joined the family-owned Goodnow Pearson Co. in Gardner, eventually becoming President. He was an avid collector and traveller and an active barber shop quartet singer and supporter. Besides his wife he leaves five daughters and eleven grandchildren.

One classmate who has not retired is Stanley Osborne who continues as a limited partner of Lazard Freres in New York and as Chairman of the New York Hospital. He also continues as Deputy Chairman of the Private Investment Company for Asia (Singapore). This latter position takes him to various parts of Eastern Asia or Europe for Board meetings twice a year, thus covering some 60,000 air miles annually. The Osbornes have eleven grandchildren.

Lawrence Philbrick and his wife spend their winters in Florida and may become permanent residents of that state if their plans to enter a retirement home in Live Oaks materialize. Hoddy Cole made his annual western pilgrimage during the winter months where he visited his son in California and the Les Sherrills in Tucson, AZ.

Oh, my dears! I sent out thirteen cards and received eleven answers! Bet that would win over all the other class returns, in percentages. Thank you all, very much.

Millicent Bartlett Holmberg was in Andover briefly last summer and was very depressed as she stood before Abbot Hall and walked the circle. We all feel that way but when you read the first paragraph, realize that it may look that way, but in our hearts it is still vibrant and green! Her shop is doing well. There are two children, a grand and five great-grand. The oldest of these is fifteen, so Millicent is looking forward to great-greats — whew!

Sally Bodwell Nelson still does volunteer work in a hospital auxiliary nearby twice a week and one day with her bird club and field trips. In March she enjoyed a ten-day trip to Trinidad and Tobago. It would be nice if people in Maine had a luncheon together — Sally is in Weld, ME for over four months. Shall we? Kay Damon Kletzien got a lot on her postcard. She and Seymour have four children, ten grands but no greats as yet. One granddaughter is a freshman at Swarthmore College, just three blocks away! Their two recent grads are in good jobs which is nice to hear these days. Kay and Sym haven't been at their best these last two years, but "keep looking up." We are sorry to report that Gertrude Franklin Callahan's husband, Baldwin, passed away in March. Our sincere sympathy to you, my dear.

Beatrice Goff's exciting news is that two years ago she married and is now Mrs. James A. Dowell. Happiness to you both. She regrets that Abbot is part of a co-educational institution. Speaking of area reunions, Barb Goss would like to see those nearby meet at the Town Lyne House this summer. She is fine, glad to be around and active! Ruth Hill English still teaches in her studio two mornings a week and finds real talent among her pupils. She has two daughters, two granddaughters — one still in college — and two grandsons starting careers. She sounds happy and peppy — that's our Ruth! Lib Hutchinsin Matthews, still "Bubbles" to most of us, has a happy life even with her children in different states in the East — Bob in Waitsfield, VT, Joan Brooks in Pittsburgh, PA, and Margot Drenkhard in Franklin Lakes, NJ. Fortunately Margot's son and his wife are nearby and keep a good eye on Lib and Doc. She happily keeps busy with the Times crosswords, needlepoint, knitting, painting, etc. Margot and Jane got sixty old friends together to celebrate her 80th birthday. Many more to you!

Mary Mallory Hadlow and her husband are just back from Hawaii after a fine winter. Mary says it has become a very pleasant habit. Elizabeth Ohnemus Hicks and husband Clyde did not find Florida the usual pleasant spot this winter. In mid-May they will be coming to Brewster, MA for over four months. Now there's another place for a reunion! From Susie Welborn Osborn — "My adorable great-grandson and his parents have moved to Duncanville, TX, a suburb of Dallas; his daddy was transferred there. We're happy that it wasn't even farther away. Love to all." She phoned me last week and sounds as young as ever.

I wish to thank you all for your good wishes on my move to Maine to be near four of our families. I miss old friends, but you have all shown me that you do not have to be near to keep old friendships alive. These '22ers all sent love to you all and I pass it on with mine.

Affectionately — Olivia

Reunion Report: If you want to know how great the 60th reunion of the Class of 1923 was, you will have to write to the following who attended: Otto Alcaide, Jim Bruce, Leo and Helen Daley, Bill Ellison, Alec and Josephine Gordon, Eric and Frannie Haight, Bill Hutchinson, Earl and Dorothy Merrill, Frank and Betty Newman, Winkie Newman, Mitch and Sue Posey. There would be many superlative adjectives if each of the above should contribute his or her impressions, but in all there would be unrestrained enthusiasm. Reunion Chairman Leo Daley arranged 48 hours of unsurpassed enjoyment.

After registration and tours of the extraordinary facilities of our superb PA (if you deem my words extravagant, come back and see for yourself) we were guests of Leo and Helen at the elegant Lanam Club, where the drinks, hors d'oeuvres, and dinner can best be described as nonpareil. I know I will not be contradicted when I declare that this opening affair was a happy, delightful highlight for which we do not know how to adequately thank our host and hostess.

After the traditional march under the phenomenal, picturesque elm arch, we attended the meeting of the alumni, which was both impressive and informative. The new Headmaster, Don McNemar, charmed the entire audience with his charisma, and it was inspirational when Sumner Smith '08 was honored for loyalty and service to the school on his 75th reunion. How many of us are going to beat that record? After a picnic lunch on the lawn in front of the gymnasium, all reuniting classes dispersed and tried to keep up with the many events that were scheduled for the afternoon.

Our class dinner was held in the Phillips Room of the Andover Inn. We were happy to have George "Swede" Larsen '24 and his wife Bunny join us at this final event. Leo, as reunion chairman, welcomed us at the beginning of the dinner, and then your Class Secretary asked to have the floor. On behalf of those who had been their guests the night before at the Lanam Club, he presented to Leo and Helen a crystal glass bowl in loving appreciation of their gracious hospitality.

Following the traditional format, the chairman called on each of us to say a few words. The two main topics addressed by the assemblage were our love for Andover and our appreciation of the warmth and kindness of Leo who extended to many of us a helpful, encouraging hand in the days when we were new and somewhat bewildered "preps" coming into an unfamiliar milieu. When Earl Merrill rose to speak, to our delight, we discovered a class poet laureate. Herewith the masterpiece he read to us:

Ode To Us

Andover classes may come and go,
But history will surely show
None so handsome, brave and bright
As those foregathered here tonight.
So pure in heart, so bold in deed,
So free from envy, lust and greed,
Our faces shine with virtue's light
As we are gathered here tonight.
And why should we so lucky be,
The famous class of '23?
So really favored by the gods,
An island in a sea of clouds.
And so, my friends, without ado
I tip my hat to each of you,
And to your mates, the ladies fair
I blow a kiss into the air.
Hail to the men of '23!
May they ever faithful, loyal be!

The author did not reveal what sent him into this state of euphoria which led him to create this well-deserved tribute to the greatest of all classes.

Early in the proceedings Leo read a very fine letter from Malcolm Burton, in which he expressed his great regrets that he could not be with us on this joyous occasion. The Secretary also passed on a message of greetings from Don and Dottie Jean Harris.

So ended our 60th with wistful hopes that a large number of us will return for our 65th and later as the Old Guard.

Pre-reunion news: Bill Heald still has his real estate office. He and wife Anne travel a lot to see family — son Bill in NJ; children and grandchildren in Grand Traverse Bay MI; daughter Nancy and her daughters in Cincinnati. They wintered on Florida's gulf coast. Don and Dottie Jean Harris spent twelve days in Tucson in March, staying in my pad for the first week while I was visiting relatives in the East. There were many happy reunions of friends of the seventies when the Harrises lived here. In June they go to Montana to ride and fish.

Bill Hutchinson widower, retired, part time realtor, has a son (Yale '54) and a daughter (Smith '55). The son has two married daughters and a granddaughter and three sons. Bill's daughter has two daughters and a son, none married. My abacus (fingers) add that all up to eleven progeny — a nice family. The stork promises more soon.

After Reunion.

Last January a good friend of mine who is with the State Bureau of Mental Retardation (in which I was interested when I was in the legislature) came to me and said, "hear you want to go to Andover in June and

Frederick M. Kimball '29 and Leo F. Daley '23 before the Alumni Parade on Saturday

I will take you. I used to live in Andover and I should like to go back there to visit for a couple of days." I could hardly believe it. Wasn't I fortunate? So on Friday 10 June he, Gerry and his friend Debbie, and my daughter Betsey (AA '56) who was on her way back to her work in Winchester, and I started for Andover. I had a great time and I am glad that I went, despite the fact that I did not see any classmate, which of course was a disappointment.

Our host for the Reunion Class reception was Dean of Residence David Cobb (from Maine, by the way) who was most gracious and came and sat with us at the Faculty Buffet Supper. We also enjoyed his wife and daughter. The PA '23 alumni were very kind and sort of adopted me — I was glad to meet them and their wives. In the evening we went to the Addison Gallery which I was glad to see after reading so much about it. I then retired to Isham Hall where I had a room. Gerry and Debbie went everywhere with me to see that I made it on time. I do not walk very fast these days, but thank goodness I am walking!

We enjoyed a morning chapel service Saturday morning where a PA '33 minister spoke very entertainingly; I chuckled at the circumspection with which the words of the Phillips Hymn are put together. Have you read the hymn? It is good.

At the alumni/alumnae meeting I met Headmaster Don McNemar. I said to him that when I saw his "happy family picture" on the cover of the Bulletin I felt sure he would be a great headmaster, and now I am sure he is. He is a very friendly man and speaks well. I also met Betsy Parker Powell AA '56, a trustee, who is delightful. This was followed by a delicious lunch on the Bell Tower lawn (all the meals we had there were very good). Of course the bag pipes were there, and I walked for a short distance in the parade, and Gerry picked me up and took me the rest of the way. I always liked bag pipes and was happy to march with them. Mid-afternoon I went back to the registration office and called Martha Buttrick Rogers, who was not able to be there. We chatted about what we know of 1923 people and wished we might see all of you. I also tried to reach Miriam Sweeney McArdle but there was no answer. The registration office was a great place to be — they were all most friendly and helpful.

At the Abbot tea, the last function I attended, I really had a thrill. I saw Miss Sweeney! The tea, held for all classes at Morton House, was a highlight and very well attended. I was so pleased to see Miss Sweeney — she was one of my all time favorite teachers in English. She has changed amazingly little; I knew her immediately. I was grateful, too, to the alumna with whom I had been talking, for dashing out to tell me that Miss Sweeney had just come in as I was going out by another door — I could so easily have missed her.

I also have another Abbot daughter (1947) and right now I am hoping that I can get them both to go back with me to my 65th. How about it?

As always I am grateful to you who have sent news — thank you. I am writing this on 1 May and I am hoping to see some of you in June, for reunion.

Eva Holt Mucklow writes that her husband has at last retired from the real estate business and they can spend most of their summer and fall in Vermont. She has retained her old summer home in Pownal, VT and they love it up there. They also own an old country store, open only on weekends, where they collect and sell antiques. Sounds like a fun place to go antiquing. She may get to the reunion — I hope so.

Nip Page Neville wrote "Alas I have been looking forward to our 60th, but feel I had better not plan on it as I have a grandson's graduation on 14 June and a trip to Russia on 17 June. At seventy-nine I just can't plan too much. I have another grandson going to PA next fall." I don't plan on allowing myself to be envious, but if I did, I would envy Nip that trip. It sounds interesting, and seventy-nine or not, I think she sounds pretty peppy — but wasn't she always?

Martha Buttrick Rogers writes of her ten grandchildren — two girls married — seven through school and college and all working; one boy a senior at Boston University; seven live nearby and keep her busy; three in Florida whom she sees about twice a year. She says that her husband is not too well — has been hospitalized several times since October. We hope he is better now. Peggy Scudder Marshall writes that she and Larry are "pushing 80 and holding." They are going to Bermuda 18 May to the 26th. I hope they may come to reunion. My card to Anne Frye Schoener was returned "Attempted Not Known." Does anyone know what her address is? I was sorry to receive Sally Finch Hartwell's card back saying that her husband died very suddenly on 21 March 1983. I am sure we all join in expressing our sympathy.

Elizabeth Thomas Elliot is still busy. She says her active schedule gets smaller but she works as a volunteer in a thrift shop still, and recently was a substitute grandmother for a grandparents' day program. She enjoys "landscaping" around her home and these things are some reasons why she "keeps happy."

Libby Thompson Henry reported on grandchildren — five of their nine have graduated from college and the other four are coming along. She and Mimi will be travelling as usual in New England in June and in August. They are going to Glen Arbor, MI for the World Affairs Symposium where they expect to have a delightful "learning" vacation.

Dottie Taylor Booth says her travellings seem to follow the arrivals of great-grands — #4 was born Christmas Eve and #5's coming this summer. She has seven grands and three grands-in-law. One is a freshman at Williams and another is graduating from Princeton in May. She hopes to be up here one day now that she and Wally are alumni of the same school and would be able to attend reunions together. Sounds like a great idea, and unusual. She sends greetings to classmates. I surely wish we could all get together.

Ruth Holmes Durant says she and John are fortunate to be able to spend five months in Florida and pursue the good game of "bowling on the green." In the summer they take up the game in Quincy and Milton, MA. You will recall that John is a top bowler and has won tournaments in the East, the South and the West. Ruth and Fran (Holmes) get together in Florida every winter.

M.C. Swartwood Sinclair writes "my biggest news of the year is my first great-grandchild, Meagan Blythe, born last July.

Her father is my oldest grandson, Sinclair Blythe; her grandmother is Helen (Hellie) Sinclair Blythe, my youngest, who was at Abbot for two years way back in the 40's (47-48). I'm well and still garden; love fly fishing here in Colorado. Two of my eight grandchildren are married so I am very hopeful there'll be more great-grands coming along. I had a wonderful month's stay in Scotland last September visiting longtime friends and staying a few delightful days at Dunbeath Castle with its new owners. Sheer heaven to be there." (M.C. was my roommate the two years we were at Abbot and we are still good friends!)

Eleanor Widen writes, "I live a rather quiet life. I went to Portugal and Spain in September for ten weeks. It was thirty-six years since I had left Portugal where I had worked in the Embassy during World War II, so I found many changes. My many nieces and nephews keep me busy with visits to and from." Personally, I think this sounds like an interesting life — a ten-week trip to Spain and Portugal, and nieces and nephews in and out — sounds like fun.

My granddaughter, Shireen Shahawy, who is a sophomore at Colby College, was in Paris for the month of January. Colby has what they call a January Plan, during which time there are no formal classes, but each student does something sanctioned by the College. Last year Shireen worked for CBS in New York City, and this year she was with a group from the college studying French. My grandson, John White, is in Florida taking his last year at Florida Atlantic University, and enjoying it very much, and doing well.

For the last two years I have been a member of Senator William Cohen's Committee on Federal Service. Our duty is to interview candidates for the various federal positions available for Maine residents. The second week in January we interviewed candidates for a Federal Judge. I have found it to be very interesting.

Thanks to all who have helped — I thoroughly enjoy hearing from you; you will be receiving cards from me again soon, so save up all your news!

A regrettable omission was made in the Spring Bulletin, fault of a technical error the office informs me, and that was that our friend Barbara Clay Crampton died 16 November 1982. We extend our sympathy to her family. You will remember how much we liked Barbara and her sister Kay. She will be missed.

Recently from the rock-bound coast of Maine came two letters, and from the West Coast two more arrived. Bill Viles writes from Augusta, that Elsie and he didn't get to Arizona this winter, "a mistake we must correct another year." He mentioned our son, Tom, who finished in the Boston Marathon, as his nephew ran in the New York Marathon last winter. Bill says the only trouble with his nephew is that he's an Exeter graduate. Sure was good to also hear from Dick Bolster in Portland, ME. Dick and Barbara want to know why the Larsens never came to Maine. Say they have beds and also a sailboat rigged to please even senior citizens. Keep the latch string out folks! Dick and I were born in Dorchester, MA and both later lived in Newton.

We spent two days in San Diego staying with Ken Mumby's widow, Mary. She made us feel at home the first night with a New England boiled dinner. We were the guests the next noon of the Dick and Mary Chases at Mr. A's restaurant atop a high building. Gige Mumby must have tipped off the Maitre'd that we owned a restaurant. The service couldn't have been better. And what is more, he has eaten at our Pillar House.

From Leavenworth, WA, Barney Treat, Frank's widow, having returned from Green Valley, wrote to say she liked it so much she'd like to live there. North of San Diego is Lake San Marcos, made famous by the E.T. Thompsons. (E.T. is not Extra Terrestrial.) But they do get around, and surely kept us busy going to restaurants and shops our four days with them.

Vangie Schulten, Alex's widow, lives in Orange, CA not far from the Crystal Cathedral in Garden Grove. Our son and grandson joined Vangie and the Larsens at the service that Sunday. Bill Curtis in Harwichport, MA wanted us to put a dollar in the plate for him and Sally, knowing we were going.

In Ventura we saw Sabe Carr and Jean, and had lunch together. It had been several years since we last met so we had much catching up to do. It doesn't seem possible the pole vault mark is 5' more than Sabe's world record. While in Santa Barbara we called Gardie Brown, but he had other plans that day, unfortunately.

On the way back to Green Valley, we stopped off to see Roger Batchelder, PA '22 in Wickenburg, AZ. We hope to see him at the Yale 55th also. Art and Frieda Tait came on from El Paso and paid us a visit during school vacation in April—a short trip since both are involved in school duties.

The PA Class of 1923 was well represented this winter. The Don Harrises spent the day with us and Jim Bruce and a Wheelock classmate of Bunny's came for a visit another day. "Red" Cleaveland called from Tucson and Leo Daley wrote from Florida. Also from Florida's Key Largo, Jack Ottaway and Roberta have their winter home so they can be near their kids and grandchildren. Jack says it's only two hours from Detroit on Eastern Airlines. I'll never forget Jack playing the old songs at our 50th.

Dave Mdivani always writes after he receives our Newsletter. We hope he and his son Michael, will make our 60th next 8, 9, 10 June. And another letter from Fred Van Peski in the Netherlands, who said as he read our Newsletter, that he got out his Pot Pourri to study the faces of those named. Fred still hasn't recovered from Martha's death. Likewise . . . Ed Renouf reported that his wife, Cathy, died in June 1982. He was unable to go to his own exhibit in New York last year. Ed, our deepest sympathy.

Ralph and Grace Blank are rightfully proud of their daughter, Betty, for receiving first prize for her Viking exhibit at the Yorkshire Museum in England—a tremendous honor. Betty, the Blanks, and grandson Chris stayed with us a year ago in Newton. Ralph says only fourteen months to go before the big 60th at Andover—"A very special one for all." The Blanks will be in England again in May and June. The Bob Woods were in China this April; they heard Henry Hitchcock would be on the cruise too, but they never did meet. I was hoping Bob and Sissy would bring back some "ancient Chinese secrets."

Al Foote, Hitchy's Yale roommate, says I finally got his age correct; six years ago I had his age the same as today. Just remember, Al, I'm your senior. And Chick Peck thinks your Secretary must have a very good portable computer to remember birthdays. "All goes well here!" (In Montreal, P.Q.) says Chick. Bill and Min Dickerman were down in Antigua again where Bill celebrated his 76th. Says they swim three times a day and fast enough "to feel well exercised." Say they are in fine physical condition due to a careful diet. "Remember, I studied a lot of chemistry and plenty of correct exercise," says Bill.

Another letter from Van Johnstone wishing me well on my 80th in June. Fred Stott who is still active on the Hill hopes to call on Van and Billie Wingate, Frank's widow, while in Florida. Vic Earle wanted to report on his six months of married life after 75 as most exciting, and he hopes after the twenty inches of snow outside melts, they want to drive to Newton to see the Larsens and also he wants his wife to see Andover. Thanks Esther and Vic for your Easter card.

Bunny just called to say Dick Morris in Philadelphia was on the phone. Dick wanted some advice on a future cataract operation—my grandchildren mispronounce "cataract" and think I have two Cadillacs. Bill Jones was in Yucatan, Mexico in February but says it was cold there. Had a long letter from Jack Barss. His letters are always amusing and full of news of Andover. Jack must be the only member of the faculty left of our time. We hope to see Helen and Jack this summer and also Mary Dake. The Bob Clarks have signed up for another trip to Austria, Hungary, and Bavaria in W. Germany, including five days cruising on the Danube and one on the Rhine. Says the weather has been so good in Ft. Collins that he has played golf almost daily. The card Esther and Bob received from the Joe Smiths was encouraging and Joe seemed better. Ruth wrote on our card that Joe had been out to a dinner party which was good news.

We were sorry to hear from Ethel, Morry Skinner's wife, that he was not well and had been hospitalized. We later called Salem, OR to learn Morry was in a nursing home. We will keep in touch, for we miss his great letters.

Laura Williamson, Secretary for Abbot '24, was coming to Tucson this winter but plans changed. In her letter was a picture of Laura and Polly Holden taken while they were at Alumni Council weekend. Received a card written on the Stella Oceanus by Herb Kinsolving. He mentioned a Green Valley couple on the cruise. Herb says he may not make our Yale 55th he's so busy. Amy Howe, Dike's widow, writes quite often and we may see her in New England this summer. She keeps busy with many projects in Conroe, TX. Recently she ran the 50-year-olds golf tournament. The hardest thing is to get the gals to admit they are 50.

Nick Danforth's Norwegian daughter-in-law had her sabbatical at MIT teaching energy, and is leaving for Bangkok to work in the World Bank. Her mother and sister came over from Norway and Nicko referred to them as "smashing beauties." Before leaving, the Danforth grandson was christened in King's Chapel where his grandfather is head warden. King's Chapel is probably the oldest church in the country.

Esther Burton, Myron's widow, says she enjoys our 1924 Newsletter. "I am still trying to make a meaningful contribution, singly, after 51 years of partnership." I'm sure she is. Helen Bronk, of the Alumni Office, who has always been my mainstay, was in Florida for sixteen days over the holidays. She was glad to leave all that snow behind. Our first stop on our way East will be with the Dick Vaughans in Albuquerque. Dick and Adele attended the Sports Illustrated dinner party before the 17,000 people descended on the city for the final basketball game. Tickets were scalped at $1,000 each. Dick says he keeps busy answering Ed Fischer's letters. Nobody can write like Ed. I tried! He was our chemistry prof at Yale.

"Don't you dare go a motel when you are in Oklahoma on you way East," says Peggy Wienecke, Louie's spouse. We stayed with them last year and we like their "Motel" especially the Wienecke hospitality. We will see Dick Knight at his daughter Nancy's home in Freeport, IL. Dick was in California in April and spent several days with the Thompsons. The Bob Woods will be our next stop in Decatur, IL, and then in South Bend we will visit Jan Rugee, Louie's widow. Jan was in Green Valley this winter. Our last stop will be with the Tom Wards in Rochester, NY. Tom being Chairman of our Directory, we want to get started on our 60th. Bob Redpath writes, "no classmate's death occurs without my thinking I wish I had known him better." It is so true, Bob, and after writing most of them for eighteen years I know what you mean. Bob called from So. Orange, NJ to tell of the death on 27 April of Bill Blunt. Bill and Helen lived in Ridgefield, CT. He was one of the top men in National Distillers and the Blunts had many friends in Green Valley. I have written to Helen and also his brother Charles Blunt, whom we used to see in Michigan.

Bob Hamilton reported the death of Charles Cornish on 13 January. Chuck was captain of wrestling at Andover. He went to Cornell and was a Dr. of Obstetrics and Gynecology. Chuck and Dorothy lived in Maplewood, NJ.

Ruth Larter Eveleth has survived her move to Concord so well that she has boated to Bermuda, taken a week's bus trip to the Gaspay and now is off to her 55th reunion at the University of Delaware. Even her grandchildren are grown up now—a grandson at Columbia University; a granddaughter at Kenyon College and her last at Concord-Carlisle High School.

Polly Bullard Holden and John are just home from three weeks in a small Bahaman village where they knew everyone shortly after they arrived, but the locale is a dark secret. Thirty Holden family members are to picnic on Mt. Mansfield, NH on 5 August, for a double 50th wedding anniversary. Polly's brother and wife were married that same day.

Mary Harvey Kindel flew last winter to Bombay then boarded a yacht for So. India, Sri Lanka, Burma, Thailand, Malaysia, Indonesia, Singapore, and Hong Kong. She trudged through jungles to see the Koniodo dragons and had her picture taken with the Queen of Thailand. She said it was beautiful, enlightening, interesting, and at times exhausting!

Betty Bragg Kine wrote Sybil saying she just lost her husband while they were on a world cruise. But she plans to come to our 60th reunion in 1984. Our love, Betty.

Barbara Loomer lives in her own home in Andover. After a very active career as a teacher of mathematics in Haverhill, she became very involved with the American Red Cross. She was executive director of the Andover chapter for many years, then she was transferred to the Boston chapter where she did extensive field work in the inner city and surrounding towns, being assigned to many disasters. She traveled to Europe in the 60s and 70s and worked at the Geneva headquarters. She became executive director of the Greater Lawrence Chapter in 1968, retiring in 1971. She now volunteers as chairperson of volunteers throughout New England.

Frances Platt is still happy to be in her town of 1800, where she works in the small town library where she has played the organ in the Episcopal church for the last fifty-four years. She says her mother graduated from Abbot in 1899 then went on to college without a diploma, because this was not done in those days. But, she was given a diploma at her 50th reunion!

Olive Mitchell Roberts writes that she is just an "old New Englander." But she has four daughters, twenty grands and twelve great-grands spread "all over the place." One in Washington state, another in Alaska; one is an Army captain in Japan and another a Russian language bookworm. One daughter lives at home.

I wish I might have reached all of you at home on the Andover Phonathon. I learned so much more about you all orally. Do make a bargain and call when you have news — even reverse the charges!

A piano concert on 31 March in Cambridge, MA by your scribe's daughter, Lilian, generated a '25 mini-reunion of sorts. Attending were the Charles Poores, Dorothy Partridge and the Louis Kemps — regrets from the John Whithams, Lawry Clarkes, the Allen Keedys, and Pres Breed, with a spate of news from each. The Whithams much involved in redecorating their home in Andover and adding a storage shed; Lawry recovering from a hernia operation and proud of his success in producing three precious gallons of maple syrup; Al and Ada Keedy winding up another rewarding winter ministry in St. Eustatius, N.A.; Preston Breed's daughter, Elizabeth, is an accomplished pianist giving recitals and acting as organist for her local church. Pres reports his new hip is behaving nicely.

Chuck and Lois Eeles may be retired but their myriad activities belie it. For ten years they've planted, tended and harvested their flower garden, which produces all the cut flowers for the Radley Run Clubhouse. Chuck has taken an active role in persuading the original developer to repair the roads, bring them up to a condition where they could be dedicated to the township — a five-year project! In his spare time he mows the lawn, golfs and works for his church. Is looking forward to our 60th in 1985.

Sad news from Dan Layman. He lost his wife, Lee, last December and was in Indianapolis for a few days before Christmas for services for her. While there, he had lunch with Monte Kahlo. Our deep felt sympathy, Dan.

I'm grieved to report the deaths of Charles F. Shelden in January, Robert E. Spiel on 27 January, and Dudley H. Dorr on 18 February. Chuck Shelden graduated from Yale, was successful in business as President of the Joshel Corp. He retired to La Gorce Island, Miami Beach. He leaves his wife, Joan, and two children. Before retiring, "Bebe" Spiel was Executive Vice President of Manz Corp., a printing concern. He and his wife, Marie, resided in Lake Forest, IL. He leaves one child. Dud Dorr graduated from Harvard. He retired as Vice President of the Worcester County National Bank and later was active in real estate in Lancaster, MA. He is survived by his wife, Nancy, six children and five grandchildren. The class extends its condolences and heartfelt sympathy to these bereaved families.

This is the maiden effort of your new Class Secretary for the Class of 1926, so bear with him for a while! He has spoken to his praiseworthy predecessors Sandy Sandburg and Ben Gilbert. Sandy isn't too well, but still keeps fighting to recover in time for our 60th in '86. Ben has been kept exceptionally busy running his business and his Greenaway Island home off Stamford, CT.

Pete and Laura Tully have returned to Brandon, VT after spending a good part of the winter at Silver Springs Shores, near Ocala, FL. They enjoyed it thoroughly, although a bad back prevented Peter from playing his usual sterling game of golf. They had a pleasant visit from Frank and Alice Spinney who were on their way back to Woodbury, CT after spending a few months on Siesta Key in Sarasota, FL. The Spinneys also spent a day with Noyes and Sue Wilmot in Boca Grande, FL. Frank's comment on Sarasota: "It is less congested driving through NYC at rush hour than Sarasota." Now that he is back home, he is studying sculpturing in nearby Washington, CT. He also does some etching which he studied in Mexico a couple of years ago. The Wilmots report that their son Jim's wife Louise, a regular U.S. Navy officer, has just been made a full captain. Congratulations are in order.

Fletch and Kay Nyce celebrated their 50th anniversary last year with a family gathering of about nineteen in all at a family camp on Squam Lake (Golden Pond), NH. Included were their two daughters with their husbands and six grandsons who had the time of their lives. Everyone enjoyed the swimming, canoeing, sailing, tennis and hiking. Even the weather cooperated. Fletch says it was so perfect that they may do a repeat this year. George Dove wrote Fletch that he went to camp on Squam Lake as a "wee mouse" and recalled its beauty and serenity.

Ed Huson writes, "I retired as Treasurer of the National Assn. of Watch & Clock Collectors in June 1980, and now have a permanent status of "Treasurer Emeritus." He is still an avid timepiece collector and is enjoying retirement. P.C. Kohn has sold his home on Sanibel Island, FL, and has moved back to West Hartford, CT. He keeps busy making "kit" furniture and "Sailors' Valentine boxes" for his wife Tommy's shell designs. He reports that they are both lawn bowlers and he still plays golf although his handicap rises every year. Whose doesn't, P.C.? Transportation crisis has forced Chuck Langmuir to move from Marblehead, MA to Salem, since he had to give up driving his car but still must be near the Peabody Museum. He writes that his next requirement is a golf cart with a side car, trailer hitch, and radio telephone, plus a heated cab for winter.

Word from Jere Annis — he retired from active practice on 1 February. He helped found the seventy-man clinic in Lakeland, FL where he practiced for forty-five years. He has been active in the Florida Medical Association, the A.M.A., Group Practice Association, Chamber of Commerce boards, etc., and loved it all. Upon graduation from Minnesota Medical School, Jere started his distinguished medical career around 1937 as a fellow at Mayo Clinic.

Tom Ford returned to Birmingham, AL after a 2,000 mile motor trip through New England. He also revisited Andover for the first time in nearly fifty years. He comments that most of the old landmarks are still there. The most noticeable change — girls!

John McClellan writes that he is "mostly retired, busy sometimes and planning trips." How fortunate for him to live in Andover!

Your correspondent is proud and grandma is also busting her buttons having two Phillips Academy men among their seven grandchildren — Jay McDermott, an enthusiastic member of the Class of '80, now Yale '84, and Jeff, his brother, equally keen, an upper middle hoping to be graduated in '84.

We regret to report that Alice Davidson, the widow of Don Davidson, died on 6 October 1982. She was a remarkable, vital, active woman who traveled widely, enjoyed everything including golf, gardening, her children and grandchildren. She has kept in touch with many of Don's classmates through the years and was most hospitable when they visited Seattle, WA. We also regret to advise you of the death of Sydney Sullivan Walling, the wife of L. Metcalfe "Mack" Walling on 28 November 1982, leaving him a widower for the second time.

Classmates — please send news of yourself and your family — what you are doing, thinking, and enjoying. We are anxious to hear.

Installment #2 ('28 RIDES AGAIN!) — Class highlight of celebration of 55 years of our post PA Pilgrimage toward Posterity was recognition of Bob Walker's heroic efforts as leader of the Addison Gallery Campaign, via Trustee establishment of the Robert M. Walker Foundation to provide for the services of a Curator of Art History (described elsewhere in this issue). Bob, who had previously rendered a modest accounting of his stewardship, in which he inadvertently omitted a vitally important cipher to spice his rendition (leading to some concern about the adequacy of his background in mathematics) was obviously as happily flabbergasted as his friends and classmates were delighted.

With memories of past commencement and reunion operations beclouded with humming herds of undernourished mosquitoes, a small flagon of "Ben's TM 100," The Atomic Age Citronella, was ever at the ready but never swung into action on a truly superb weekend, that started on Friday afternoon with the warm hospitality of David and Sumida Cobb on the lawn and terrace of Samaritan House, where Nancy and I spent 25 years prior to our 1970 departure. (We were glad to see Jack and Helen Barss at this reception.)

Flagstaff Court picnic and Addison Gallery reception for McNemars and Mesics were followed by congregation in Elbridge Stuart House HQ. Several '28sters and wives attended the simple, effective memorial service on Saturday morning, with particular enjoyment of the Rev. Theodore Gregg's ('33) remarks about his somewhat thorny non-cum laude career on Andover Hill. Subsequent, kilted Elm Arch parade was followed by general alum-conclave, at which Classmate Walker was honored (cf. supra), Al Rowland took a bow for another outstanding agential extraction effort, and Headmaster Don McNemar delivered an impressive report on the state of PA 55 years after the exodus of its Indubitably Greatest Class. With a tactful eye to eschewal of injury to the sensibilities of other, lesser groups, the headmaster wisely refrained from alluding to us in those precise terms, but we don't have to be told, do we?

Another picnic exercise was followed, with grease-stained fingers, by a brief class meeting in Stuart House to discuss ways and means of continuing and strengthening '28's support of the school. All through the afternoon an extraordinary array of activities, exhibits, films, et al, was on the menu, as described elsewhere. Of particular interest to many of us was the renovation of Graves Hall into a magnificent headquarters for the Music Dept. — a far cry from the facilities in the bowels of the Archaeology Building whence emanated the dubious sounds of the Mandolin Club and PA Riveter practitioners in a more primitive era.

The Class Dinner at Stuart House, attended by those listed below, all of whom were reunific "repeaters" save for the welcome appearance of retired medic Ted Lee from the wilds of Peterborough, NH, featured amiable conversation reminiscence, and grateful bestowal of two tokens of appreciation to Reunion Chairman Al Rowland (handsome blazer perquisites and an inspirational literary opus, "The Complete Reagan Diet," bound in finest paper.) Those of us who attended were sorely disappointed by the absence of many who had expressed hopes or expectations of being on hand but were unable to do so for reasons ranging from personal or familial health problems to grand-offspring school graduations. We missed you and others who, in the manner of Father Figure Calvin, "Did not choose to return." And you missed re-exposure to a vital, exciting institution that could and should serve as a model of what American secondary education should be about in these parlous times.

Herewith the roster of '28 at Andover, June, 1983: Bob and Gladys Adler, Spike and Nancy Adriance, Em and Ruth Ann Bates, Bick and Barbara Bicknell, Clare and Barbara Flarsheim, Ted Lee, Don and Martha McLean, Roger and Agnes Murray, Dan and Marion Nugent, Miles and Katie Pendleton, Al and Barbara Rowland, Bob and Alice Walker.

Latest ukase from editorial Tsar Thos. Regan (spelled with but one "a") advises that secys of reunion classes unburden selves in two installments, one before and one after reunific festivities. Here with Instal. #1, concocted in the waning days of an Aprille noted for an overabundance of shoures soggly unsote To open on an appropriately youthful note, under a "Baby Doe Law Struck" headline, a recent UPI dispatch stated that "the Reagan administration is preparing to appeal a federal decision that struck down its 3-week-old 'Baby Doe' rule. U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gessel invalidated as 'arbitrary and capricious' the regulation that bolstered the government's police powers in hospital delivery rooms and nurseries The American Academy of Pediatrics challenged the rule on several grounds, including failure to carry out the intent of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the use of non-medical people as investigators of alleged violations." A note of congratulations to Gerry, on what seemed in this corner to be a wise and courageous action, elicited a prompt reply, indicating "much comment, favorable and otherwise" and gratitude for support of old friends. Unfortunately he and Peg will be in Spain in June, but "we'll be with you in spirit." . . . Anybody need Bayou Sleuthery Way Down Yonder? If so, consult Hort Smith, who performed generous services to yr. secy. et ux in checking out a potential lessor of their Chapel Hill abode, by buying him a lunch, giving him top marks, reassuring Mme. A re. probable summer's end pristine preservation of Tar Heel goods and chattels. Hort has weathered recent entanglements with corneal transplant and bladder tumor removal with good prognosis, doubtless the result of scrupulous observance of the Scout Laws for lo, these many years. . . . Good letter from Harold Edwards says all A-OK with him, Margaret, four "children", ten grandchildren (one a member of the Class of '85 at PA who "thinks it's great"). Three Edwardian sons and one daughter, as well as assorted in-laws, are involved in education or medicine, and their parents continue to sound fraught with vinegar and joie de vivre, with Harold jogging, hand-mowing lawns, and climbing mountains in a manner truly merveilleuse to a somewhat more sedentary type. . . . From consulting engineer Fred Wolff: "After several months with no work coming I decided I was through and 'retired' . . . and immediately got four jobs simultaneously. One rather interesting — the design of 300 remotely direction controlled examination and operating lights for a military hospital in Saudi Arabia — only one difficulty involved: from the architectural sketches it would appear that doctors and surgeons would always have to stand in their own light, throwing nothing but dark shadows on the patients. But perhaps the great Petro Dollars can overcome this problem, although they don't seem to be solving any of the other problems of the world with which they are faced. This job done, and drawing submitted, I am now retired again." . . . Word from Dave Dudley tell of continuing, rugged chemotherapy treatments for "Villa," for which she and Dave travel from Mississippi to Houston. He still tutors occasionally at Mississippi University, "a 21-year-old-girl and freshman of 50 — and an alumna has approached me hesitantly and decorously, hasten to add." . . . No item in this column has evoked more interest and respons than the report on "Sunny" Sundown, who was obviously recalled with affection and respect by many of his contemporaries. News of his death in a Santa Fe nursing home on Christmas Day came in letters from Bill Adams and Bill Robertson and from Burch Ault of the Class of '44.

Bill A. also reported a spring trip to Borego Springs, possible participation in B.S.'s Pegleg Smith's annual Liars' contest. Bill R., apparently a fellow-inmate of Clement House in the "Lightfoot" French housemasterly era, followed up a fine, reminiscing letter to Sunny (copy to me) with a phone call from Tucson, where he and Anne were vacationing, to receive the sad news. Bill particularly recalled the Sundown wrestling and vocal prowess, and referred to "one melody of a song he used to sing that has been running in my head these many years. I've forgotten the words." If he and Anne once again grace our June rendezvous, as we hope they will, maybe one of us can help to solve that teaser.

I am sorry to have to conclude Instal. #1 with news of the recent deaths of Fred Baldwin and Bill Hyde, and the death of Dwight Church in February, 1981 all reported to me by the Alumni Office, with our sympathy conveyed to Gale Baldwin and Jean Hyde.

Four of the '28's plus Jeanne Skinner (a neighbor of GeeGee Gay d'Elseaux's) had a fine Reunion luncheon at the Andover Inn. It was good to see Libby Small cheerfully as can be, smartly dressed Mary Piper Sears, and GeeGee and her guest. Individually, we drove around the Abbot circle where the chapel has been restored as it used to be in our day. Draper and McKean have both been condemned by the Andover Fire Department so they appear forlorn. However, in the library wing is housed a day care center. The tots added a cheerful touch to the circle.

Joe Mesics '53 and Connie LeMaitre AA '53 from Development beamed upon us, while a young, attractive, and alert Trustee, Betsy Parker Powell AA '56 assured us that the Trustees have decided not to sell Abbot. However, they are in somewhat of a quandary about what to do about finding a profitable use for Abbot.

Of course, the usual pictures of the D.O.G.'s were snapped.

Nivy Chase Austin had hoped to bring "Austy" to the luncheon, but after one drive to New England for his reunion, they felt they could not make another trip at this time. Each is busy with young people and music.

Because of various family complications Eleanor Leech Williamson could not attend. While Winnie Dudley Burnham was busy at her school where she is retiring as Librarian but will continue as Archivist.

During next year Kay Fox Smiley will be hunting a place to live as the farm must be sold to her son. Meanwhile she keeps busy making and selling children's quilts, transplanting from her cold frame to her flower beds and editing a new detective story Devil Jogging By. Nothing dull about Kay.

This past winter GeeGee Gay d'Elseaux, the day after she had a right lobectomy, lost her husband who had been in a nursing home. Before reunion she had a chemotherapy treatment the first of the week, rested the rest of the week, and came to Reunion looking as dear as ever. She is a trump.

The Abbot Tea at Morton House was well attended by Abbot femmes. Missed Miss Sullivan who was to have been there, but by 4:30 it was time for me to head for the hills of New Hampshire.

We missed you. Do send cards telling me about you and yours. See if you can come to the 60th! Good wishes to you all, Laddie.

From Florida, Bea Lane Mercer - "Couldn't make the 55th. Has a bad left knee from a fall about eight years ago. Now has to use a walker, also heart problems; my M.D. keeps me close by. I do still manage to play duplicate bridge about four times a week and enjoy that. We celebrated our 50th in June '81. All four children were here together for the first time in nineteen years. We had planned a big celebration but I was in the hospital with a heart attack but still had a real nice time and memories. Eleven grandchildren; three are married and we expect our first great-grandchild in September. I see Helen Leavitt Fisher every once in awhile. My husband will be eighty in April and still plays golf in the 70s most every day. We've traveled a lot." Love to all, Bea.

In March Peg Graham Greenleaf says, "We have been in Key West for a visit with my daughter and grandchildren and I think now I could make the trip (to Andover). Went to my 50th at Mt. Holyoke last May and it was wonderful. Visited my brother in Maine and cousins in Boston. Have not been in Andover or to a Reunion ever. Also the National Herb Society will have its meeting around then . . . so!" Do hope Peg can attend our Reunion luncheon.

Jo Paret Barrett are you planning a 55th Reunion? I might come, can't promise now (March) but will give it a try; I did love the place so. Am working on all kinds of things, among them working with three groups of retarded children Saturday afternoons, using creative drama; its wonderfully rewarding. There are all kinds from Downs Syndrome to Autistic, and what I do is largely experimental, but it all seems to help. Happy spring and happy year to you.

All for now, let's catch up at the 55th. Laddie.

One letter that came in a little late for the last Bulletin was most welcome from Mary Elizabeth Olson Crum who has not been in touch with 1931 due to an extended illness. In 1977 a bad case of shingles affected her face and spread to her brain. Fortunately no damage there, but extensive nerve damage left her with severe pain for 5 years. After the doctors had tried everything in the book, she responded to laser beam therapy. Unfortunately she had to give up her profession as a realtor right in the midst of the real estate boom. Mary Elizabeth has made a good recovery and is entertaining a lot including the Kiwanians and the Republican Club. She plans to do some traveling particularly to see her ninety-two-year-old mother in Michigan. Good to see you, Mary Elizabeth!

Marie Whitehill caught up with correspondence during a severe snow storm in January! However, the storm came too late to meet the Bulletin deadline! We had the same storm in Atlanta much to everyone's surprise. Last July, Marie enjoyed a wonderful cruise of the Inland Passage to Alaska and then spent Thanksgiving in Chicago. She is very busy with "Meals on Wheels" serving on their Board of Directors and as the Fund Raising Chairman as well as delivering meals once a week. Church work and a variety of sports round out an already full schedule.

Mary Smead Homlar is enjoying being a Grandma — the children of her husband — who were seven, nine and ten years old when they married in 1952. They have now given them seven grandchildren, two in Atlanta, three in Cincinnati and two nearby. Mary is keeping up the old Abbot tradition as she joins three "walker" friends each Saturday as well as walking two miles daily for her own health. She is a member of the diocese of the Congregational Church and is also active in the Zonta Club of Toledo (an international service club). She enjoyed its International Convention in San Diego in 1982 and is looking forward to the 1984 convention in Australia as well as our own 55th reunion.

Eleanor Royce Witter was widowed in 1979, but tries to keep busy with volunteer and club work as well as trips into New York for the theater. Her daughter who lives nearby has two college-age sons and two daughters who attend the Stuart Country Day School in Princeton, NJ. Her oldest son lives in Warren, VT and he, too, has two college-age sons and two daughters in school in Vermont. Her youngest son lives in her hometown, St. Albans, VT. Eleanor is thrilled that he and his wife are winterizing their former summer home on Lake Champlain. She plans to visit there frequently.

Many clubs and organizations keep Dorothy Hunt Bassett busy. An enjoyable trip to Florida in March to visit her sister-in-law was a welcome break from the cold weather.

Catherine Prentice White was most appreciative of our interest and inquiries as to what she was doing. She is retired with her Scottie "Andy" and enjoying her everyday living to the fullest. Like all of us, she thinks about her happy days at Abbot and the friends she made with whom she still keeps in touch.

Our class members who attended our 50th reunion felt that the moving picture film of our senior year winter trip to Intervale, NH shown by Carol Grosvenor, Myers was one of the highlights of the weekend. We are so pleased to learn that Carol has made a gift of this film to the PA audio-visual department. We are recorded in posterity!

We were saddened to hear of Jane Goodell's death last fall. We have learned that Jane was the author of the book, They Sent Me to Iceland published in 1943. Jane served for a year on the Icelandic staff of the American Red Cross. This was the first ARC group to be sent overseas in the capacity of recreation workers.

Summer is ahead of us and a time for travel, seeing Abbot friends and families. So please keep in touch with me so we can have a newsy column in the next Bulletin. It's great to hear from you, and we would all like to have news about the ones who haven't been mentioned recently.

My far-flung correspondents did pretty well this month, considering the short time you all had to return cards. Those that did not reach me in time will be used in the fall — perhaps I'll be more forehanded then.

Harriet Wright Hight, here with Don, is involved with the Lakes Region Conservation Trust which has bought an island on Lake Winnepesaukee to preserve as a wild life refuge, safe from developers. Their fishing jaunt this summer will be to New Brunswick and the Mirimichi River (great name) and they will also have a sort of family reunion at Aloha in Fairlee, VT, where two of her granddaughters will be at camp.

Isabel Arms says she has no news, but always seems to have something intriguing to report — this time it's the prospect of taking a one week computer course for Mount Holyoke alumnae in June, hoping, she says, "it will not addle my brain completely." Then in July she and a friend are planning an "Elder Hostel" trip to England.

Kay Brigham Callanen, among others, recalled the happy time we had at our 50th last year in Andover, where coincidentally, they also had a family reunion last July. This spring and early summer she and Gardner will be at her old summer home in Brewster (on Cape Cod).

Betty Holihan Giblin, in San Francisco to see their son Will, continued reunion chatter with Judy Wilhelmi Lindahl over a delightful lunch and an afternoon's shopping.

Ruth Tyler Smith and Everett have joined the winter expatriates in Florida (Vero Beach) where they find more and more school and college friends; Helen Allen Anderson and Harry have their golfing quarters within a mile of the Smiths and as I recall the Giblins are not far away.

I had a delightful week in Washington with Dorothy Rockwell Clark who wined me and dined me. We visited the Library of Congress, Georgetown, Alexandria, and Oxford, one of the earliest English settlements on Maryland's eastern shore. We also improved our minds one afternoon at the East Gallery of the National Museum. Next month (June) I am going for a two-month visit to France, invited by my sister-in-law and her three sons, on which I will report exhaustively in the fall.

Kitty Cook Howland, who started teaching Yoga to blind classes a couple of years ago, is now learning Braille and says, "I'm doing about as well with it as I did in Miss Grimes' chemistry class — I flunked that." She added a note that her mother celebrated her 107th birthday in February, still living alone and taking care of herself! That is a lady I should like to meet.

Betty Bigler deMasi writes that they have moved from Bethesda to their new country home in Woodshore, Maryland; her husband is doing most of the work and she is his assistant, and painter. They love it, even being snowed in for five days this winter by twenty-nine inches of snow.

Betty Boyce has also moved — from Yarmouth to Portland; and her new address is 28 Harmond Road, Portland, ME 04102

In Memoriam: Lucy Drummond, 14 March 1983. A neighbor and lifelong friend, Susette Dakin, wrote that Lucy's death was a real personal loss but that it followed two years of ill health, and "I'm sure she's happier in her new life."

It was a what-a-weekend, from the benign late afternoon sun of the reception in the Headmaster's garden on Friday to the quiet sunny Sunday morning when departing PA '33ers dropped by for a farewell cup of coffee at headquarters. Here a low bow to all at PA who were responsible for the superb arrangements. They didn't overlook a thing.

People drifted in all afternoon on Friday, but Reunion really started at the reception. Then: Ed Folk, all the way from Iowa City. Of Ed, more anon. We'll let him quake in his boots until next issue. And Joe Tardiff.

looking fit to pull the old blue jersey over his head and line up at left end. Might have just a bit of trouble with that Yankee ship-captain beard and his chinstrap, though. Bob Keeney, just back from Hawaii — wouldn't be a real Reunion without Bob and his fine-looking family. Ed Gulick, looking just like a retired professor (Wellesley). Barc and Ellen Kingman, back for the first in a long while. Our California contingent: Ed Washburn, Harvey Lebow, and Ham Wilcox. Harry Sears, looking different only by a few graying hairs and still obviously a force to be reckoned with. Bob Breed and his family, including strapping son Allen (PA '82!) and James, age three (PA '96?) . . . Then the traditional buffet in Flagstaff Court. More discoveries: Jack Giles, Art Williams, Mac McTernan — first since 1933 for all, we believe. Retired Dr. David Dove (couldn't resist the full name), from Seabrook, NH. Al Bower, now from Charleston, SC.

Back to headquarters and still more long-missed faces: Bill Burnet, Bill Dwyer, Jim Toohey, Lloyd Makepeace, George Peck, Bill Nute, Art Saklad (regrettably, a very short visit). And a chance to meet our Abbot counterparts, who shared headquarters and graced our combined class dinner. What would Miss Bailey say?!

Alumni/ae chapel service next morning, and PA '33's first hero. Our own Rev. Ted Gregg was the speaker of "Words of Remembrance." Ted's gentle humor in recounting some of his vicissitudes at PA captivated his listeners. Only movement we detected was from two or three people who appeared somehow to have gotten dust in their eyes in the breezeless chapel.

Next, the parade. All classes assembled in front of Addison and proceeded behind the McPherson Bag Pipes to the gym. (We purposely did not use the word "marched" — but we got all 800 people to the gym without losing anyone for very long.) Alumni meeting at the Gym. Class of 1933 named winner of the Class of 1891 Trophy for the largest percentage of living members present. Didn't get to keep the silver bowl, but our name will adorn it henceforth. Chief hero of 1933, though — our tireless Class Agent, Hugh Samson, who presented our 50th reunion gift of over $113,000 — second only, we understand, to 1928's Bicentennial year gift. Herewith a hail to the chief — and a smart salute to his Special Gifts Chairman, Tom Crosby and Dave Haviland, and to the Committee.

And so we were feeling a bit chesty as we emerged for the picnic around the Memorial Bell Tower. Our own class meeting followed. At least it was short. The issue was hardly in doubt; Hugh Samson was re-elected class agent, and is even now planning an encore. Our term as secretary was also extended; and we, too, are plotting — never mind what. The meeting adjourned with a minimum of brawling and all hands went their separate ways to enjoy the afternoon. And here emerged another hero — Harvey Lebow represented 1933 in the mini-marathon — less than a year off heart surgery. We hereby award him his class numerals to go with the mini-marathon shorts.

The class dinner, preceded by a cocktail hour, topped things off. Introduced by our suave master of ceremonies, Dan Badger, Headmaster McNemar gave us a warming picture of the up-beat student body that enjoys Andover today. He also gave us an insight into the reason the students seem to have taken Britta and Don to their hearts. We wish the whole class could have met the McNemars. And we must mention the rendition by Alice Valkenburgh, AA '33 chairperson, of her own composition, "I Don't Want to be a Senior Citizen," professionally performed and enthusiastically received. By popular demand, an encore is scheduled for our 55th.

But we have been overtaken by events. Faces and events continue to float before us, but we are coming to the end of the paper allotted to us; and worse yet, the deadline is glaring at us. We can hear editor Tom Regan pacing the floor at PA. So, we'll have to give the rest in our next column. The glow will last until then. But for those of you who were unable to make it to the Hill this time, here is the trophy-winning line-up:

Badger, Blount, Bower, Burnet, Bush, Breed, Comley, Comstock, Crosby, Donnell, Dove, Dwyer, Ferguson, Folk, Ganem, Graham, Giles, Gregg, Gulick, Haskell, Haviland, Ingersoll, Kenney, Kingman, Lebow, McTernan, McWilliams, Nute, Offill, Peck, Piel, Reigeluth, Saklad, Samson, Sanders, Sears, Smith (Steve), Snyder, Tardiff, Toohey, Turner, Warshaw, Washburn, Wilcox, Williams, Makepeace. To all, our thanks.

If you were to ask us to pick a number between one and five, chances are better than even that we would come up with FIFTY — as in Reunion — which seems to become a larger part of each day at this point. So please make allowances for the first fifty errors that appear in these lines.

Actually, this is somewhat of an Alice-in-Wonderland situation. By the time this poetry is printed many of you will have heard all this news at Reunion — and a lot more. But, as Warner Baxter or somebody used to say in those film musicals in the 30's, "The show must go on."

Dick Lowe writes that he retired in Lighthouse Point, FL, in 1978, after a career of engineering just about all over the world. He says "nothing much has happened since then . . . unless you want a listing of the fish I have caught . . ." However, he enclosed a letter written in 1977 but not mailed, from the Dominican Republic, in response to our periodic wailing about news — the lack thereof. We wish we could condense these reminiscences of his duty as an Army engineer in the Philippines during WW II without losing the flavor — we even toyed with the idea of sending them to the Bulletin for publication in toto. We'll think of something, though. Meanwhile, they have been included on our bookshelf for browsing when our spirits need lifting.

A most welcome note from Fred Smith, in Burlington, VT with "good and bad news." The good news: Fred is preparing to attend his eldest daughter's wedding; and the bad news: the wedding is 10 June — in Anchorage, AK! We'll look for you in 1988, Fred, but in the meantime, get the word out about wedding dates that year!

Harvey Lebow is still putting out Mainstream magazine, in San Diego, although he took time out last July for extensive open-heart surgery. What some people will do to spend some time in bed! He seems well on the way to recovery, though, and says he is going to "give it the ole class try" to get back in June.

Bill Nute, as an officer of the Physicians

The sun smiled on the class of '33

Forum, was the guest of the Medical Workers Union of the USSR in Prague last October, and enjoyed a ten-day visit to Moscow, Georgia and Leningrad as part of his visit. He continues as the resident generalist in the New York City Health Department and continues to log sixteen miles a day on his bicycle to and from work!

Paul Offill is really doing thing up brown or blue: a cruise in the Aegean in May aboard the Argonaut with fellow PA alumni, then on to our 50th. This is Paul's third June visit to PA in three years, his grandsons graduated in '81 and '82.

We're one day closer to 10 June. It's shaping up as a great occasion, with classmates coming in from Maine to California and from Michigan and Iowa to Texas. It's too late to urge any "undecideds" to pack their bags and get on their way, but we hope that somehow "the spirit of '33" will have done its work by the time they read this, and that they will be looking back with pleasure on the three days on the Hill.

Unfortunately, we must again close with the news of the death of a classmate. William H. Trimpi died in January of this year. We extend the sympathy of our class to his wife Joyce, who resides at Hickory Hill, Glasgow, VA 24555.

You should have come, all of you! It was a wonderful weekend but we missed you. The weather was miraculous, peonies and iris blooming in the lovely garden behind the Headmaster's house where Don and Britta McNemar welcomed us warmly before dinner at fresco in Flagstaff Court.

Ann Cole Gannet joined us there. She has, among other things, been a Massachusetts state legislator for twelve years, and has amassed fifteen grandchildren, four of whom she's accompanying on the PA/Abbot trip to Russia.

Helen Rice Wiles, who lives on the Cape now, at Harwichport, comes often to Andover: her two daughters live there. This time, she picked up Bee, Mary Elizabeth Burnham Gazlay, who lives in Hingham near her daughter Lee; her son is strategically located on the West Coast for nice backing-and-forthing. She's put in twenty-odd years as librarian (volunteer) for Derby Academy. And Bee, all of us thank you for your fund-raising efforts on our behalf! At the alumni/ae meeting she was publicly acclaimed for the highest percentage of donors of any class.

'33 was also awarded a huge silver bowl for the highest percentage of class members reuniting, and this bowl graced our beautiful dinner party Saturday night in the Underwood Room adjoining the Addison Gallery. The McNemars were present and we had a very special guest at our table — elegant, alert Emma Holt Garside, AA '14, who left after dinner to drive back to Maine with her daughter Edna Bradbury! This dinner provided Alice Schultz Valkenburgh with an enthusiastic audience for her promised song "I Don't Want To Be A Senior Citizen Though I Know It's All the Rage." Martha Whipple Davis admits she's not too keen on Shuts' ambition to give old age a Good Name: she'd rather stay young and active, doing a lot of volunteer work and playing a bit of golf — a good bit, including a hole-in-one!

You would have loved the beautiful chapel service and would have remembered Bertha Bailey's words "We lift to Thee our glorious hymn of praise" as we sang Vaughan Williams' splendid "For All The Saints . . ." And the thousands of beautiful Abbot-blue balloons moving across the lawn as we strolled in procession to the gym for the meeting while Abbot music floated down from the Bell Tower. There's no clock face on one side which facilitates climbing up or down — if that's a skill you wish to develop!

Class pictures were taken during the picnic under the trees: look for Helen Rice and Roger Valkenburgh, our wonderful class escort, and Lois Chapman Tarby who will be your next Reunion Chairman. This came about at a little meeting we had after lunch. Bee said she didn't mind continuing as Class Agent and Shuts agreed to replace Mariatta Tower Arnold as Class Secretary for the rest of this year and find a successor for later on.

Lois Tarby and Walter live in Southbury, CT where they have a sort of Canine Elderhostel, (their own former puppies, no longer for sale) a garden and a pool. They care about conservation, and crafts. At one time Lois was a dietician, and a restaurant manager at the Statler in Boston. Even the dogs eat well at their house.

Mariatta, several PA '33s wanted to be remembered to you — Ed Folk and Harvey Hunter among others. To Abbot '33 Mariatta sent warmest greetings, adding

"Please tell everyone that our guest room and bath are ready to welcome them to the beaches and culture of Sarasota." Her husband, Farland, has been chairman of a mathematics department, she's been a guidance counselor, they've travelled all over the world, often to education meetings and conventions; but it is Farland's passion for Barbershop singing that took them west at reunion time (by way of the Panama Canal; these people know how to put things together!), plus the fact that Mariatta's sister lives in Seattle where the Barbershop Convention was being held. Thank you, Mariatta, for your steadfast efforts as Class Secretary.

Going back to that "little meeting we had after lunch": we passed around the wonderful pictures Louise McClary had sent, and read your wonderful letters out loud and did just what Guppie hoped we'd do — remembered Rachel Place's giggle, and Clara Smith's wide, beautiful grin, and Betty Tompkins and the six others who are no longer with us. More quotes from Guppie next time, and from Olive French Sherman and Betty Weaver Van Wart, Peg Black Manz and others we've heard from.

Meanwhile, two books for you to look out for: Forum Feasts, a cookbook published in support of Betty Weaver Van Wart's principal interest, the Forum School (Ed. note: It's terrific), and A Sampler of Wayside Herbs published by the Greenwich Press, illustrated by Marcia Gaylord Norman. Both worth owning.

The ordinary class notes are swamped in the excitement of the FIFTIETH REUNION, which will take place 8, 9 and 10 June 1984. The Steering Committee of Belcher, Campion, Harding, Peterson, Sides, and Woolsey have already gathered together a reunion committee of about seventy, nearly half the active members of the class, each of whom has pledged himself to be back, God willing, and to bring one or two classmates back with him. Unquestionably this will be the greatest reunion PA has ever known. We aim to break all the records: 100% attendance and over $100,000 as a class gift. I've had recent enthusiastic letters and/or telephone calls from Dick Powell, Bill Platt, Sig Weis, Paul White, Trev Cushman, Al Stratton, Joe Fox, Bill Durant, Ed Torrey, Joe McMahon and "Soapy" Chamberlin all of whom are well, and panting to be back next June, many of them for the first time since 1934. What a party it will be.

I'll wager that Oak Melendy wields as fine a scapel as the javelin he threw for our track team. He writes, "I am still practicing surgery in Augusta, ME. My wife Joan and the four children are living and well. I got ranked No. 1 in the state for the 55-year-and-older category in tennis in 1982. Looking forward to our 50th."

In June '82 I reported that Hunter Walter, who was not in our Pot Pourri, was claiming the Class of 1935 as his own. He's now on our computer sheets. Succinctly he writes, "Retired in 1981. Winter in Montclair, NJ and summer in Hyannisport, MA. Will travel from each place. Youngest son was PA '66."

In the same column of last June I reported that "Buck" Dyess had been appointed Associate Justice, First Court of Appeals of Harris County (Houston, TX). In Texas, Justices must stand for reelection, and a Democratic landslide swept Dyess out of office last fall. He puts in some time at his law firm Foreman & Dyess and also teaches law several nights a week at Rice.

I have had a nice, long letter from "Bud" Higbie which I shall quote: "I have been retired for some years now, but keep busy serving on a number of boards such as Excell-o, The Stub Brewery (we now own Schlitz and Schaefer) and a company in Japan. I am also president of the Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit and serve on the board of the McGregor Fund, and Leader Dogs for the Blind. We have a house in North Palm Beach and a summer home in Grosse Pointe, MI. Connie and I have three sons, two of whom went to Andover. The oldest works for Salmon Bros. in NYC and lives in Cos Cob, CT. His wife is about to produce our first grandchild." Bud, you have obviously had a most successful business career and are now enjoying a fine life. Congratulations! Classmates, that was a fine update. I wish more of you would write me as Higbie has done.

We have learned indirectly that Al Kerr is now headmaster of the St. Paul's School in Clearwater, FL. He was formerly headmaster at Bayside Academy in Daphne, AL after a long and distinguished career at Peddie School in Hightstown, NJ as well as a number of other schools.

We haven't reported for a long time on Harry Ward, who has been living and working in Santa Barbara, CA. A brief note from him says, "Sand is still flowing smoothly into the bottom half of my glass. Off Sunday to Australia and then to visit my older son and grandson (HRW IV) in New Zealand, where they are living permanently."

We regret to report to you the passing of Edward J. Barnes. Apparently he died accidentally in May '81, but his demise has only recently been brought to our attention. Mrs. Barnes' full name and address for those of you who wish to write to her is: Mrs. Edward J. Barnes, 1619 Herr Ridge Road, Gettysburg, PA 17325. He also leaves five children. The sympathy of the class is extended to the family.

In my May '83 column I reported on the death of Jack Ginsberg. We are grateful for this note from Mrs. Ginsberg: "Prior to his illness and since May 1950, we had been enjoying the practice of law together in New York City under the firm name of Ginsberg and Hack. He is also survived by his daughter Nina, a lawyer in private practice in Virginia and Washington, and our other daughter Hilary who, with her MIA is employed in Hong Kong by Chase Manhattan, Ltd. He is much missed." Again her address is 435 East 57th Street, New York, NY 10022.

With the arrival of twin boys to the second daughter, Jane Dawes McLennan and John claim eight grandchildren. When you read this, their ninth will probably have arrived, born to their third daughter. Jane said she feels fortunate that they all live within the borders of Massachusetts. Their son, still a bachelor, lives in Houston.

It is nice to know some of our classmates are talking in terms of our 50th. In January Frannie McTernen Coan attended a cocktail party given in honor of their neighbors' guests. Frannie soon discovered the guests were a Smitty Curtiss, PA '35, and his wife, now retired and living on the Cape. Their conversation from that point on had to do with making plans for our 50th! Frannie and Pres were able to enjoy Christmas with daughter Hillary and family (from California) as they could meet halfway in Indianapolis at Hillary's in-laws. Enclosed with Frannie's note was a clipping of interest to us all — Cathleen Burns Elmer's husband Bill (with addresses in Thornton, NH and Andover, MA) was chosen the state's (I think NH) "Most Extraordinary Man," as a result of a statewide search held by a Boston television station and the local chambers of commerce. The clipping included a good picture of both of them taken at the NH Governor's Inaugural Ball. Both looked great.

Wes and I took vacation in late February/early March to visit my sister in Carmel, CA. We thought surely the rains would have subsided by then. Not so. The rains were torrential as we covered ground from Boulder Creek, CA to Portland, OR, to Auburn, CA and then to Carmel. We were greeted there by a power outage and floods near Phyllis's residence. In spite of the sloppiness underfoot, Wes could wait no longer and finally got in a round of golf at Pebble Beach the day before our departure for home. A luncheon at the Beach Club at Pebble Beach was made memorable by watching the high surf pound the rocks. We did not return home to any drier conditions. What a wet year it has been.

My plea continues — please send me your news. Let me know if any of you claims more than nine grandchildren!

I have been told to keep these notes brief because PA '36 is not reunioneing. Due to the non-communicative nature of my constituents, this request for brevity presents no hardship. Would that it did, as I am behind my personal goal of hearing from or about all of you by the time our fiftieth comes up. To the sixty-odd who have let me know they are still with it and us, THANKS.

Harry Heilman, who did not return for his senior year, has been practicing law in Kittanning, PA for thirty-four years. He writes that he "enjoys working in the law business and does not contemplate retirement in the near future." His reason for not being with us senior year is fascinating. His letter went on "... so I steamed open the letter and read the awful news. (Claude Fuess's recommendation to his father that he seek education in another institution.) I then tore it up, took the college boards in Pittsburgh the next day, passed them, was accepted by Haverford, reported to my father that I could save him a lot of money by going to college that fall, which I did."

Sydney Fuller has retired as Chairman, Suffield, CT Savings Bank, but remains on their board as well as that of Treasurer, Suffield Academy; Trustee, Andover-Newton Theological School; and Newington Children's Hospital. He is also Director, New England Electric. He has four children and seven grandchildren which puts him right up there as a class leader.

John McLaughry retired in January 1980 after twenty-one years at Brown as a coach and administrator. He reports that "I am more than busy as an artist." (What talent lies within us.) He has a lawyer, a farmer and a graduate student as children... occasionally hears from George Seabury just prior to the Yale-Brown football game. (Wonder how many points Big George gives.)

Paul Kalat is now Chairman of the Board of Hallsmith-Sysco Food Services and a director of its parent company which is based in Houston. Paul is living in Providence on fabled, restored Benefit Street.

Quickies from another reputable source — Dick Barton visited England, Belgium and Kenya last fall... Bud Boutwell has moved to Jupiter, FL... Bill Hobbs retired from IBM last year... P.K. Clark took a 25-day trip to China, Japan and Hong Kong... Nice letter from George Downing, but more about that later.

I received the following note forwarded to me by Mel Chapin: "On 21 May, in a low-key ceremony, Dorothy McCormick, widow of our classmate Bob McCormick, will present Bob's papers to the Manuscripts and Archives collections at the Sterling Library, Yale University. Because of his intimate association with Herbert Hoover during Hoover's last years, and, as Director of Research for the Republican National Committee, and his planning of the political strategy of Nixon's successful 1968 presidential campaign, both the Stanford and Yale libraries wanted Bob's papers. Objectively they might have gone to the vast Hoover collections at Stanford, but Dorothy is giving them to Yale. Hurrah for Dorothy, for Yale and for Bob too!"

With deep sadness we report that Ray Kitchel died on 15 February. He is survived by his wife, Diane (de Ganay) Kitchel, and his children, Lolly Lovett of Southwest Harbor, ME; Carole Cahill of Cambridge, MA and William Ray Kitchel, Jr., of Stratford, VT. Diane may be addressed at 1079 Beacon St. Brookline, MA 02146. The Kitchel family will long be remembered for our 20th reunion dinner. Also that Dr. George M. Walker died on 8 April. He leaves his wife Betty (Manion) Walker; two sons, Dr. George M. of High Point, NC, and Seth T. of Boston; a stepson, Robert B. Rice of Austin, TX; two daughters, Pamela Mills of Chapel Hill, NC, and Deborah D. DeBarge of Leominster; a step-daughter, Lisa J. Rice. George was chief of surgery at Burbank Hospital, Fitchburg, MA. His widow may be addressed at 269 Prospect St. Fitchburg, MA 01420 us all; she always seemed a special part of Abbot '36. I sent a sympathy card to her husband from the class, but such words never adequately convey what one is feeling.

It is good to have heard from so many of you for this Bulletin. Mary Trafton Simonds writes that she started a class round robin letter which I hope will eventually get back to me. Mary has twin grandchildren she is enjoying. In fact, several of you mention grandchildren. Sally Scates Engelkirk has seven! Sally and her husband had an interesting trip South last winter: Florida, New Orleans, South Carolina, Savannah, and home through the Shenandoah Valley. Other travelers include Lucy Hawkes Windship and Steve who had a week's skiing in Zermatt, and Betty Sargent Crandell and Jack who have enjoyed canal boat trips in Wales and Holland. Sarge reports that she has become an avid gardener and Lucy that she works for the Adult Tutorial program in Concord. Lucy and I don't see each other as often as we might, being so near, but we did bump into each other at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts the winter before last and recognized each other instantly! I'm looking forward to a trip out to Illinois this spring to visit relatives. My husband, however, usually heads north to go fishing in Labrador and Newfoundland. Ray has just retired, as have many other husbands it seems. They and you all seem to be keeping busy.

Barbara Reinhart Livingston writes that she and DeWitt attend classes at Capital University for $5, "one of the few advantages of being a Golden Ager."

I'll look forward to hearing from more of you for the next Bulletin and to seeing you at our FIFTIETH. Meanwhile, hang in there!

If the news reaching my desk lately is any indication, this is the Time of our Lives when retirement is the order of the day. What interests me, and I hope you, is how our retired classmates occupy their time. Here are some samples: Bud Robie was made president of the Group Move and Consulting Division of the Merrill Lynch Relocation Management Co., having completed two consulting jobs for them previously. Bud also teaches at New York's New School For Social Research and is on the Board of Directors and chairman of the Human Resources Committee of CARE, and the founding chairman and member of the Princeton Advisory Council. Some kind of retirement from Equitable!

From Norm Karasick: "Received an MA in the humanities this past year from the California State University at Dominguez Hills and am attempting to expand my thesis Art, Politic, and Hollyhock House to a biography of Aline Barnsdall, the patron of Frank Lloyd Wright, who designed Hollyhock House. If you want to take it easy during retirement, get a job!"

Cameron Peake writes, "I think I've finally retired here in Essex (CT), but am still working my tail off trying to supplement a pension by making miniature models for Mystic Seaport. Very happily, I see many old classmates from PA and Yale in the neighborhood and would be delighted to see any others who may be passing through or living nearby."

Jay Rockwell, forced into retirement by environmental cutbacks, writes from Anchorage, Alaska he is "preparing to teach several courses at Alaska Pacific University."

For Howie Reed life appears busy enough before retirement. Here's the latest from Storrs, CT: "In the past year or two I've served as a Visiting Scholar at the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace at Stanford University; a Visiting Professor at Alaska Pacific University; won a Fulbright Fellowship for Research in Turkey; been invited to lecture at two major symposia on the Centennial of the birth of Mustafa Kemal Atatürk at Ankara University and at Bosphorus University in Turkey..."

Also from the Constitution State we read in the Naugatuck Daily News that on 29 January Ray Anderson was inducted into the Naugatuck Athletic Hall of Fame. We didn't need the News to tell us that "Ray distinguished himself as an outstanding football player at Naugatuck High School, Phillips Academy and Yale University."

Wally Liverance reports proudly of the recent arrival of a second granddaughter, Christin Renee, to son Alan of Scottsdale, AZ, on 22 December 1982. Other granddaughter, Catherine Victoria Lowe, now ten years old, resides in Bushey, England. Wally, who lives in Ridgewood, NJ, continues active in his NYC law practice.

Archie Andrews' first grandchild, Will Duffie Andrews, attended his father Duncan's 10th Princeton reunion this past June.

Ozzie Tower, since his return to Williamstown, has been an active member of the Williams Class of '41. Oz boasts a 92% participation in their latest drive! He writes, "If you or any of the other PA '37 gang ever come near this beautiful corner of Massachusetts, be sure to call up."

Bill Bowne has been appointed Grand Historian of the Grand Council (Masons). In spite of his new duties and obligations Bill managed to squeeze in a sentimental journey, . . . a reunion of the crews of the six ships that made up Task Group 22.3 in June 1944 when we captured the U-505 — unique in that it included about a dozen of the German crew from the sub."

On the distaff injured list are Jack Ware's wife, Jane, and Chuck Rounds' wife, Winnie-Lou. On 8 January, Jane tripped over a bamboo stick her husband had set up to mark the driveway for the snow plow. Result: a broken little finger on her left hand. "It was before the cocktail hour" so says Jack. I report that one fine day in February, Winnie-Lou fractured her radius (L.) in a skate-board accident, also before the cocktail hour! I'm happy to report both wives and husbands are doing well.

There was so much news at the 45th Reunion, a year ago, that I was unable to squeeze it all into my allotted space; however, I wrote it all down with the idea of publishing it in two installments. I now send you this belated news with many apologies to those who were kind enough to send it in.

Nancy Kincaid Breslin was sorry to miss reunion, but it came the same weekend as husband Jim's Williams College reunion. Nancy has been fund raising in New York City for the Addison Gallery.

Ruthie Hill Haberland writes from Montvale, NJ that her youngest son, a CPA, has been transferred to Hartford, CT, where he has been given a promotion as Senior Consulting Manager for Price Waterhouse. Ruth had to "babysit" during the move, hence, had to cancel reunion plans. She and Roy went to Germany last August. The year before they traveled to Greece and the Aegean Islands.

Corinne Brooks Cornish's new address in San Francisco is 6026 California Street, 94121. She works part-time for Hospice of San Francisco as the office manager.

Ellen Simpson Martin writes from Mt. Kisco, NY that she has been working in a bookstore for the past seven years. She puts in a 40-hour week and finds the job tiring at times but very stimulating. She and Jack took a motor trip to Scotland last summer. Four of their five children are married. The youngest daughter graduated from Hamilton College a year ago and works for Doubleday in New York City. Ellen and Jack also have four grandsons and one granddaughter. Jack retires this year, but they are keeping their big house for frequent family reunions.

Anna Walton Ernst remarried on 23 January 1982. Her new name and address is Mrs. Arthur Saxton, 128 Mountain Ave. Warren, NJ 07060.

Mary Perrott Whitehill could not attend reunion as she was having an Art Show of her paintings in Newburgh, NY the same weekend. . . . Lucy Hulburd Richardson had to be in Washington, DC reunion weekend and Betty Inman Kirkpatrick sent regrets. Betty summers in Milton, Nova Scotia and winters in Florida. Betty's grandchildren range in age from two to eighteen years. Number nine is expected in the fall.

The Class extends its deepest sympathy to Bobbie Daniels Goodman who writes from New York City that she lost her sister six months ago after a long illness and her brother, Charles Daniels, M.D., PA class of '34 in 1954. Bobbie and her husband, Norman, have two daughters, Vanessa and Chryse, who are both very artistic. They have three bright grandchildren and two more expected in May. Pri Richards Phenix has retired from her position as church secretary after twenty-two years, but is now working for Channel 11 (PBS) in Durham, NH. She tapes announcements every afternoon which are then aired on Channel 11. She also serves on the Red Cross Blood Bank; works with volunteer church groups; sings with a musical group which performs at nursing homes; has joined the Active Retirement Group taking courses at UNH, and last year she took part in a Shaker Service. She was also on the Committee for the Gala Ball celebrating Durham, NH's 250th Anniversary. Wearing an Elizabethan costume, she narrated an historical pageant given at the ball and had her picture taken with the Governor of New Hampshire.

Mary Emily Pettengill Smith-Petersen is enjoying her new "condo" in Naples, FL but will be in Lunenburg, MA for the summer.

This coming June, I am expecting two AFS students from Kiel, Germany to visit me for a few weeks. Meanwhile my position as a Reference Librarian at the Haverhill Public Library keeps me busy. Am looking forward to the summer for more golf and longer weekends.

THANKS TO THE LEADERSHIP OF PIKE AND IRELAND, '38 PRESENTED THE SCHOOL WITH $70,052.00 — REPEAT, 70,052 DOLLARS. THE ANNOUNCEMENT OF THIS AT THE ALUMNIAE MEETING OMITTED THE SIGNIFICANT FACT THAT THIS WAS WELL OVER FOUR TIMES THE PREVIOUS HIGH OF A 45TH YEAR CLASS! 41% PARTICIPATED — 72 PA, 17 ABBOT.

The "thing" just took off.

It reflected the spirit, enthusiasm and happiness of the occasion, as well as the superb planning and execution of the weekend events by Marge Harrison. She did all my work and I am most grateful.

Attending were twenty-eight men and sixteen wives (named in parentheses), and five Abbot contemporaries and two husbands (see Di Helfrich's notes): Abelson, Adams (Anne), Allen (Joyce Barwick), Burns (Marjorie), Carter (Ann), Davis (Bebe), Harris, Harrison (Marge), Ireland (Jackie), Kates, Kausel (Jane), Keller, F. Kent (Betty), Leggett, Lynch, McConnell (Kay), Middlebrook (Marilyn), Murphy, Pattinson (Barbara), Peelle, Pike (Connie), Martha Rafferty, Reader, S. Smith, Stevenson (Ruth), Taplin (Bea)*, Viney, Wilhelm (Anne) and Wright (Marjorie). Those marked with an asterisk represented '38 at the Harrison dinner on 9 June. To account for my enforced absence see below.

Our Saturday night dinner was graced by the presence of Fritz and Laura Allis, Jim and Alma Grew, Prissy Hallowell and Clara Maynard, with an unexpected visit from Gabriele Hagedorn, '78, Theo's daughter. Arthritis, unfortunately, kept Theo home. Doc Chase and Steve Whitney had to cancel out at the last moment. We are flattered by the loyalty of this group and enjoy them so much.

And how about Lynch and Pattinson coming all the way from California; Taplin and Wilhelm from Colorado, and Reader from Florida?

Letters were noted at the dinner from Adrianne, Banzhaf, Dearborn, Furman, Furniss, Garnett (via Kausel), Hagedorn, Hellebush, McDonnell, Richard, Schmaltz, Tine and Young. I hesitate to read Schmaltz's scurrilous note from the Danvers State Hospital with its swipes at my alleged libel (the IRS had "driven" him out of the country and he was too late to sue me) and, of all things, Harrison's "minimal" talents with a baseball. Alg said he could have hit anything Ted threw. This modesty drew a minor "humph".

Two attractive brides, Marjorie Burns and Ruth Stevenson, were welcome additions to the '38 family. Jack's and Ruth's marriage in Ft. Worth was reported in the 22 May New York Times. Ireland was best man. They added to a lively and vital group: this is a wonderful class. Our retirees (about ten) are all living very full lives, and it is fun to see the shift of directions in such as Nat Abelson, Bill Lynch and Lloyd Peelle, the last two of whom are involved with vineyards. Lloyd himself donated some estimable essence au grape. And Wilhelm headed abroad as a nationally ranked tennis senior to play in a tournament.

Laurence Viney and I shared adjacent rooms at Ted's and Marge's. Since I was on crutches with an ankle-cut, Laurence volunteered nobly as my Batman. His only problem was finding my left shoes when he packed me. His and Theo's loyalty to our class is most moving. And by the way, I was "returned" as your scribe; Pike is president and Burns replaces Dave Meader as our agent. Expect fireworks for the 50th! Dave has done a great job in his five-year stint, but asked to be relieved; and we will have trouble trumping Spink Davis's performance as emcee.

Too many people involved themselves with this Reunion and our gift for me to try to list and thank them. Ace's group solicited both funds and attendance and the results speak for themselves.

A note from Dick Philbrick enclosed a long article from the 25 May 1983 Chronicle of Higher Education on Todd Furniss, the senior academic adviser at the American Council on Education. He has organized a group of educators into an organization known as Eliot College Faculty Associates offering career and financial planning for professionals in field. It winds up with the note that Todd is about to retire from the Council.

A group of us talked at some length of 1988. (Yes! 50 years!) I will make this the subject of a newsletter as we feel early planning will get us together again and pay off.

Lastly, I have not dealt with the dinner honoring Harrison, attended by nearly 500; featuring Yale President Giamatti, '56, and organized by 1953 et seq., who knew Ted as teacher, coach, housemaster, example and friend. It will be well covered in this Bulletin.

These notes are in two parts since the school wants pre-Reunion notes in May, and the event itself in June. Suffice it to say we are in full cry over the 45th: the Harrisons doing the hard work of planning the days at PA, and Ace Pike whipping (very successfully at this point) the "boys" to get out the givers and make the target. For me this has entailed many phone calls and letters whereby I incidentally pick up scraps of news. So: Pre-June 10: Parker Banzhaf's legitimate failure to make it in June will have been due to his heavy involvement with the National and Florida Associations of Realtors, the first meeting of which featured vice president Bush '42, and the second, state-wide business. Hap Time is on an extended visit to Europe starting in Rome. He is now "in full retirement." Paul Pattinson had a visit from the Fred Kents, involving bird-watching, new to Paul. He's been drumming the list we gave him, and I notice he types at least as well as I do. Viney's letter dealt with reunions, to which he is coming, so I'll have more on him.

I had a long telephone chat with, and a letter from, Hank McDonnell, whom I have not seen since '38. He retired from a steel business in 1976, then became a manufacturing rep in the same line, at an easy six-day-a-week pace. He's on his way to Italy and regrets missing us. He regards Viney as a fundraiser non pareil (and responded). Oh, age: he complains of bad knees, not the result of an Okinawa wound. Move over. Fred Born says the recession has closed in on him. He's in the throes of selling his house and packaging equipment business and moving to a more equable climate than St. Louis. His "neighbor" from across the Mississippi, formerly of Godfrey, IL, is Blair Hellebush, who writes a nice note. He has bought a retirement house on Sugar Hollow Rd., Rte. 6, Box 275, Fairview, NC 28730, in the Blue Ridge Mts, near Asheville. Three of his bairns live in the Southeast, and one in Colorado. He enclosed a photo — looks awfully damned prosperous!

I've been working closely with Pike, Harrison, Meader, Burns, Adams, and Fred Kent on fund-raising, with many others behind the scenes, and giving it impetus! Also phone calls and notes to and from Crispell, Richards, Richard, Lee, Harris, England and Kates. Someone suggested we were getting older, which is ridiculous.

Well, reunion has come and gone and Jean Cross Maier, Midge Coll Fields and your secretary have arrived on the Vineyard for their own annual reunion. You who did not come to Andover missed a great weekend — we had a delightful time — Mary Elliot Brown and her husband John, were with us most of the weekend and Barbara Lee Mill and her husband Vic, were with us for Friday evening dinner. For us the weekend started with a cocktail party Friday evening at the Harrisons' (PA '38) and ended with a brunch again at their home on Sunday. Ted and Marge introduced us to all of our counterparts who had returned for reunion and they all made us feel more than welcome as we joined them in all the '38 activities.

We met the new Headmaster, Don McNemar, who is really keeping the memory of Abbot alive and this was particularly noticeable when he made his report to the alumni/ae — whenever he mentioned Andover he also mentioned Abbot in the same breath! A highlight of the reunion was a visit with Miss Sweeney who also went with us to look at the renovated chapel in Abbot Hall. We went to Morton House for the Abbot tea, and the class had a beautifully catered dinner in one of the Commons dining rooms Saturday evening. All in all the weekend was a great success and we are looking forward to the 50th and to seeing not only the new PA friends we made this reunion but also all of our classmates who were unable to return this year.

We were delighted to run into Margaret Comstock Bayldon's daughter, Sarah, who was attending her tenth reunion and also Mary Elliot Brown's daughter and her family. John, Mary's husband, has retired and they are in the process of moving to New Hampshire but will probably keep an apartment in Andover. We looked for Carol Whittemore Fowler's daughter who was to have been in Andover but unfortunately were never able to make contact.

Among those who couldn't make reunion but did send news were Sally Sutor Parsons who spends lots of time sailing in their new sloop and sees Barbara Bellows Kaiser '39. She also welcomes any visitors coming through St. Petersburg, FL. Jeanne Sawyer Stanwood's family were coming to visit her in Maine so she was unable to come, while Doll Hudson Biedenhard was busy with plans for a granddaughter's wedding — boy, are we getting old!

A nice long letter from Mary Toohey Kruse from Hawaii told of her harrowing experience during hurricane Ewa when a great part of their mountain home on Kauai was destroyed.

Had a nice letter and some clippings from Elise Duncan Danforth. She and her husband have been very much involved in the SPCA shelter in their Florida county. The new building was named in his honor.

Many thanks to those of you who returned your questionnaires and we hope to be using them when planning for the big 50. Please send any bits of news. This column is hard to write when you all don't send news!

Hank Terrie, who serves with great distinction as a Professor of English at Dartmouth (plus a stint as Department Chariman), writes that he has taken an early retirement option which has him teaching during the fall term and wintering with wife Jeanne in South Carolina. He will become emeritus in June 1986. He explains that "emeritus" comes from the Latin, "e" meaning "out" and "meritus" meaning "deserves to be." A year ago June, Hank and Jeanne attended the wedding of Bill Pugh and Anne Wilson Baker, widow of a dear friend of Bill's from Charleston. The bride's four children and Bill's three were the attendants. Hank reports that the Terries and the Pughs got the wedding day rolling with a round of golf — "I allowed Pugh to sink a 30-foot putt on the 18th green in order to defray expenses."

Dick Mintz writes that he is still practicing law with the same firm which has grown from eight to eighty lawyers and has offices in Boston and Washington. I observe that the masthead has six names with Dick's out front. He remarried in 1974 and lives with his wife, Norma, who is also an attorney, in a converted warehouse building on the Boston waterfront.

News of retirements continue to arrive. In order of receipt: Elaine and Joe Phelan, who have just celebrated their 35th wedding anniversary, count among their blessings five children, five grandchildren, and thirty years of "great living here in the South." Joe has retired from the consumer finance business in Atlanta. He is now "involved in management and treatment in alcoholism" with some time off for golf and travel. Doug Pirnie, who retired a year ago June, is working as a real estate broker and is delighted to be a grandfather. Bill Creighton left his position in banking in March and devotes himself "to painting, gardening, tennis and travel." And Howard Mason retired 1 October 1982 from the position of Chief Forester for Peck Lumber Co. and is now in business as a Forest Resource Specialist, advising clients about investment opportunities in forest crops. Retirement, it appears, does not mean the cessation of work, but rather the start of a second career.

There is news on the social front. Rog Lyford and Ruth Holdridge were married in Tampa on 9 November 1982. Rog writes that he has been "selected to be included in the active-artists-talent file as Stamp Designer for the U.S. Postal Service" and is also associated with the Coast Guard Art Project. Art Williams announces the birth in December of a granddaughter, Laurel, daughter of Charles G. PA '69 and Jacqueline Williams of Portland, OR. And finally on the athletic front, Dick Whittington ran the mile in 6:58 on his 61st birthday. Perhaps, at next June's reunion, we should schedule a challenge race to establish Dick as a class champ. I'll hold the bets.

I am sad to report the death on 5 February of Weston B. Haskell, Jr. Brad went on from Andover to Harvard and the University of Maine and served with the army in Europe during World War II. He was a vice president of Kaman Corporation in Bloomfield, CT until four years ago when he moved to Maine where he was engaged in business consulting and farming. Brad was a prominent leader in a variety of charitable, civic and religious organizations. His Harvard classmate, John Blum, speaks for all of us when he describes Brad as a "wonderfully warm and decent person who will be greatly missed." Brad is survived by his wife Mary, a son, three daughters, and two grandchildren. The home address is Box 184, Dresden, ME 04342. I also note with deep regret the death last year of Robert E. Christie, III. Perhaps his old Princeton roommate, Neil Campbell, can supply me with some information as to Robert's recent activities for inclusion in the next edition of class notes.

Early returns from our requests for news (with return postcard) produced the following: Kay Harris Hill sat right down and typed a long letter from her Elmira, NY home where she enjoys writing novels, children's books, and poetry. She also paints and has had a "one man" show. Kay reports she still corresponds with Miss Hersey. Barbara Bobst Paul writes that her husband has retired and they recently took a trip to Florida covering Disney World-Epcot and Busch Gardens (the latter only being ninety minutes from Sarasota — she should have stopped by!) "Bobo" makes stained glass windows and lampshades in her hometown of Natick, MA. Received a card from Jeanne Waugh Harney who lives in Hilton Head Island. She is a travel consultant, plays golf, gardens, and is off to her 40th reunion at Wellesley in June. Next was a note from Charlotte McCanna Skinner who has two daughters, one a medical secretary in Hanover, NH and the other one married with three children. "Kiki" is in charge of the English Library at Dartmouth.

Joan Hubbard Lawson and her husband have bought a house in Naples, FL where they plan to spend winters when he retires. Her youngest daughter has just started working in the personnel department of Lord & Taylor in New York City. Joan also hopes to attend her 40th at Wellesley. Rosamond Graves took a marvelous trip to Ecuador and the Galapagos Islands last year and now she is taking the Andover tour to Russia this summer. . . . Ros is busy trying to learn the Russian alphabet and some Russian phrases. Heard from Ellen Alden Reed who is selling real estate on the North Shore of Chicago. Their home in Northfield, IL was destroyed by fire last winter but they are busy rebuilding and refurbishing. . . . Polly Pancoast Tunkey is president of the Florida Association of Hospital Auxiliaries (with a membership of 150 volunteer organizations). She has three married sons, a married daughter, and ten grandchildren.

It was great to hear from all of you. News received after the deadline for this issue will be covered next time so keep those cards coming!

Who should walk in from the past last week but P.K. Allen '29, a dear faculty friend of bye-gone days. Phil, spending his fiftieth wedding anniversary here with his family, could have been on his way to Bulfinch Hall for a morning class. When I told an associate that he once tried to teach me, I was greeted with disbelief. Ah, the secret of eternal youth!

Another voice from the past in March was that of George Semler, here on an all too brief holiday. I last saw George at graduation in 1940. Since then, and until retirement last year, he followed a distinguished teaching career at Westminster and Kent Schools. George now lives in Brooklin, ME and sees Jim McCaffrey from time to time. He has promised to return for our 45th. One thing — George did not call until the eve of departure, as he did not wish to "impose on" us. I must make it clear once again, no member of 1940 can ever impose on us. "Through our open gate, none come too early or stay too late."

In absence of direct news from you non-writing characters, I search everywhere for information. From Susan's Radcliffe Bulletin I learn that Bob Ginsburgh is now retired and living outside of Washington. Major General Bob married Susan's classmate, Gail Whitehead, so it does pay off to read other alumni publications.

My trip to Arizona last year produced some news, but I have to correct one item. I wrote that I had tried to contact a listed classmate, David Withington, only to be told that he had never heard of Andover. A letter from H.R. Withington '31 advises that his brother Dave did attend PA and was a member of 1940. He suggested that I was obviously overwhelmed by the size of the Phoenix phone directory and had confused the name with that of Worthington. As the latter is the name of an eminent English brewer with whom I have had more than a nodding acquaintance in my time, I concede an error and plead guilty.

Dick Sisson writes from Kill Devil Hills (love that name) that he will soon have a book out, Outer Banks Pit Stop. As it will contain some of the incomparable Sisson art work, keep an eye out for it.

Notes from Alumni Office tell that an ever active Dick Ogrian, moving from hospital administration to care of the elderly, is planning and developing three projects in Connecticut in connection with that important work. Tom Lewis, retired from real estate in Reno, had an unsuccessful try for the Nevada state senate last fall. Tom is now on a "round the USA trip" so perhaps some of you will have seen him by the time you have read this item.

A clipping from the Bloomfield Journal of Windsor, CT advises that John Riege has been elected to a four-year term as trustee of Watkinson School. John remains active as Chairman of the Board of Reid and Riege, one of Hartford's leading legal firms.

A sad note from Jim Ennis, '43, and a clipping from the White Plains newspaper advises that Bill Ennis died 27 January after a six-week illness. Bill started life at PA with me in 1936 in Williams Hall and was one of my first and oldest Andover friends. With Betty-Gayle, Bill spent his honeymoon in Bermuda in 1950. I know you would like me to express our deepest sympathy to Betty and their four sons at the passing of a well-loved and respected classmate.

And so, a happy and pleasant summer to you all. When you have the odd moment, drop me a line from some distant place, or even from home, so that I can record your ramblings. And if you reach Bermuda make your signal at once.

Dotty Garry Warlick wrote that her son David was married last June to Mary Cahill PA 1978. Her son Garry and his family have a forty-six acre farm in Vermont. Her daughter and family live in Darien, CT. She has three grandchildren nearby to keep her busy. Susan Place Duncan and her husband are partners in the publishing business, a retirement hobby. Marietta Meyer Ekberg sends a newsy Christmas letter each year. Two grandchildren have been added to the family. Four of her five children are in western North Dakota which is unbelievably good luck! The most fun thing was that her pen pal of forty-eight years, Erika Parker and her husband from England visited the US for the first time and were introduced to the Ekberg's friends, North Dakota and Minnesota. Marietta and her husband sailed on the QE II in August for a visit to London and more time with the Parkers. The QE II had not recovered from Falkland Islands military service at that time but the trip proved to be a success anyway. Getting there was no half the fun.

I called Dotty White Wicker Abbot '41. She is a recent widow with lots of new things to do, but in great spirits despite it all. Abbot news was so scarce the office sent me two PA notes. Eugene Schnell is retired. His son attends Andover (Eric). Walter Curley wrote that he has three grandchildren. He serves on a number of corporate boards; primarily in venture capital business; much time spent abroad; still lives in Ireland part of each year. It's nice to be able to write about winners and we have two big winners to report on in this issue. The first is Nate Cartmell. As you know from recent mail you have received, and we hope responded to, Nate is the new Class Agent. He has done yeoman work in his first year on the job and it has paid off. Donations to the annual fund through 1 April were up 102%. That is an all time record for a non-reunion class. Nate has not only increased the size of the average donation but added greatly to the list of givers. I talked to several of you on the recent phonathon and all but one promised to come forward with a donation this year. Please don't forget. We are moving in the right direction.

The second big winner is Jim Carrington. At the U.S. Men's Squash Singles Championships in San Francisco, Jim became the new champion of the 55-60 group. He beat Del Fuller, a Yale graduate and familiar name to those who follow squash, in the finals, in four games.

Working the phonathon for Andover is productive of news as well as money — only difficulty is in writing everything down from a brief conversation. Lane McGovern, living in the Boston area, practices law at Ropes and Gray. He has four daughters, one in public relations in New York, one married in Maine, another at Harvard Law and the youngest studying at the University of Massachusetts. Hal Boutwell, living in Guilford, CT, is in sales and marketing with the William Carter Company, a children's clothing firm. All three children are out of college and gainfully employed.

Spoke at some length with Amos Prescott, who lives in Smoke Rise, NJ. After Andover, Amos graduated from Amherst and has been connected with the family business, J.L. Prescott & Co. ever since. It's a well known name to anyone involved in the food industry. They are the largest manufacturers of private label bleach and other household chemicals. Chances are you have had one of Amos' products in your home at one time or another.

Al McNulty, father of three boys and living in Cleveland, has his middle son at Andover as a lower middler. Al has been in the construction business throughout his business career and is with Applied Project Management. He is also an author of business books and articles on construction. Last year, McGraw-Hill published his book titled Management of Small Construction Projects.

E. D. Troupin has been associated with the music department of the University of Florida in Gainesville for the past twenty-six years. He has one daughter finishing high school and another married and living in France. Peter Welch is retired and enjoying the good life which includes summers on Cape Cod and an apartment in Boston. His older daughter, a graduate of Sarah Lawrence and Harvard Divinity School, will be married in June. His younger daughter is in law school at Catholic University in Washington. Called Bob Furse during the phonathon. He is in the oil business and bases in Houston. His wife told me he was currently in Australia where he is opening offices for his company. His work will take him there three or four times a year to places as diverse as Perth and Melbourne. Bunny and I spent three weeks in Australia this winter and it is a great country, with the world's best scuba diving up on the Great Barrier Reef. . . . Clitus Marvin still lives in Springfield, OH and commutes daily to Dayton where he is with the brokerage firm of McDonald & Co.

A short note from Hank See informed that "son Henry, Jr. was married to a wonderful French Canadian girl this September, outside Montreal. They are in business together." . . . From Maisie Saunders: "Bill and I happily adjusting to the role of grandparents. We have five little ones now. Four out of six of our kids are married. Time flies but we're having an awfully good time." . . . Doctor Bill Bauman writes that he is settling in South Salem, NY and working as the executive vice president of the Danbury Hospital in Connecticut. Bill is also president of the American Association of Medical Systems and Infirmities.

Warren Lewis has been elected senior trust officer at the Bank of New England. He is the treasurer of the Merrimack Valley Estate and Business Planning Council.

And finally, two sad notes that continue to deplete the class rolls. The school sent an announcement, but no further details, informing us that James McMahon died in 1980. In February, George (Bud) Thurber died in Nashua, NH after a brief illness. Those of you who were at reunion will remember that Bud joined us on Saturday and was looking and feeling well. Bud spent all his life in the Maine-New Hampshire area after graduating from Harvard. During the war, he was a naval ensign. Recently, he was president of the T.H.E. Company of Hollis, NH and a director of the Bank of New Hampshire. An avid ocean-yacht racing enthusiast, he was a former commodore of the Camden, ME Yacht Club. Bud is survived by two daughters and two sons.

I won't have the benefit of a reunion or phonathon for the next set of notes, so please drop me a note telling me of your activities or those graduates you have seen.

From Reunion Chairman Lou Hudner: We had a great time at our 40th Reunion, but first, Jack Fallon has stepped down as our class secretary. After 15 years of superlative service, he will be devoting most of his time writing his highly entertaining articles about fishing—and he's on the lecture circuit which involves some interesting travel to faraway places (for example, Ireland and Spain, no less!). I can attest to the quality of his talks—they're fascinating. He has our sincerest thanks for a job well done and best wishes for his continuing career as a writer and raconteur. Jim Brown is our new Class Secretary; Jim has agreed to write our news, starting with the fall Bulletin, so get your news to him at RFD #1, 70-I Montauk Avenue, Stonington, CT 06378.

A few observations from our fine Fortieth: Dave and Marie Anderson, back for his first time since graduation, have eleven children between them, including their own three, the most recent being a fairly young set of twins. Dave's a State Rep in the Connecticut Legislature. Our class had two of the alumni who "came the farthest" to Reunions — Win Bennett and Betsy came from Vancouver, B.C., and Nat and Gail Potter came in from Honolulu.

Jack Pidgeon, headmaster at the Kiski School in Saltsburg, PA, for 26 years, was with us Friday, recovering from his school's graduation. He had to miss Saturday's festivities for a luncheon appointment with a school benefactor. We couldn't feel too sorry for him when he called at our Bishop Hall HQ later to report that the luncheon netted the Kiski School a $3 million gift!

We have some people happy in second careers — among them Don Earnshaw with the Department of Commerce in Washington, DC. Also Skip Ordeman, who retired from the Mead Paper Co. in Ohio is now a consultant, as is Bud Lethbridge, after retiring from G.E. Stu Northrop is pedaling along as chairman of the board of Huffman Manuf. Co. Of course Phil Drake took on an extra career for a term when he was elected an Andover Alumni Trustee. We didn't see Gael Mahony, but hear that he was elected national president of the Trial Lawyers' Association. Skip Eccles is still teaching but also writing — his third book. He and two Andover faculty colleagues wrote a precalculus text for Andover which Scott Foresman & Co. is publishing for general consumption in July.

It was good to have Johnny and Helen Metcalf with us. They lost their 25-year-old son Jay in March after he contracted congestive heart disease two years ago (see his obituary, listed 1975) but Jay's kind of life leaves them much to rejoice over.

When Fred and Cynthia Moore came to Reunions from Minneapolis, their son Jon, in Boston, joined us for our Class Dinner in the new (to us) Common Room of Bishop Hall in the West Quad. We ended with Sunday Brunch in the Eccles' back yard at Pease House.

Several of you who couldn't make it wrote good letters. Thanks, — Bill Pabst, Hank Pendergrass, Mike Giblin, Buff Crossley, Eason Cross, Hank Vayo, and Jack Lemmon, who wrote, "I will be knocked out of the box due to a prior start date of a film," though the film, ironically, was to be made in the East.

But the Class of '43 that gathered on the Hill had a wonderful time together. At our class dinner Saturday night Skip Eccles gave us an eloquent and illuminating talk about Andover Today, and some of the changes since '43. Briefly: girls, who have improved the classes; the cluster system, which gives 1200 students home bases and keeps them in closer touch with faculty than 750 students were in our day; the arts, opening up more ways for students to excel; and sports, which are now geared less toward spectator sports and more toward participating in a variety of sports. After dinner we had a very funny, nostalgic slide show of faces from the '43 Pot Pourri. We had good conversation and even souvenirs. There are still a few left: blue nylon zipper barrel bag (for sneakers, shorts, etc.) for $10, or a book bag or barbecue apron for $5, all with the PA '43 logo — I'll throw in a PA '43 painter's hat, free. Write to me at 31 Allen Farm Lane, Concord, MA 01742.

Via newshound Roger Strong comes a clipping from The New York Times reporting that Classmate Dan Carroll is now the head of a consulting company called the Carroll Group, and has signed on as an organizer of an innovative banking experiment, a chain of national banks "in the wealthiest locales in twenty-five states."

Al, you will recall, is the head of the Upper School Division of Kay School in Stanford. . . . Curt Farrar remarried in the last two or three years to Carol Lancaster, Director of African Studies at Georgetown Foreign Service School, retired as Deputy Assistant Administrator for Research, Bureau for Science and Technology of AID last year, and he was promptly reappointed as Executive Secretary of the Consultative Group for International Agricultural Research, a part of the World Bank. Curt describes it as "a dream job."

Pete Smith, Vice Chairman of Sonat Inc. (nee Southern Natural Resources, Inc.) is obviously tapering off. This year's Sonat annual report only mentions him — of course, in addition to the above title — as Chairman of the Board of Southern Natural Gas Company and Sonat Exploration Company. In his heyday Pete wore so many different hats that he was known in utility circles as the "Mad Hatter of Birmingham." The Sonat 1982 Annual Report also has, up front, a picture of a movie star with Pete's name printed under it.

Hector Hiam (ne Victor Kiam) is on the cover of the April Fool's issue of Industry Week. Oddly enough, another movie star is pictured above his name at the top of an article in the same issue entitled "Inside the CEO, Reflections From The Top." Between magazine interviews, he has recently addressed the Harvard Business School Club and is going to talk at Wharton where one member of his audience may be Roger Strong, Jr.

Bob Boynton writes from Providence, RI, that he and "new" wife Fran celebrated their tenth wedding anniversary in 1982. Bob and I were roommates 40 years ago or so. When Fran and Bob joined forces, their nine children, of course, did also — six hers, three his. All but two are through college. As Bob says, "Whew!" My early spiritual influence on Mr. Boynton has resulted in his pursuing a career as a member of the cloth. He is pastor to approximately 500 parishoners.

Nancy Stone Heymann writes from Toledo that she loves her "empty nest." She and Rusty travelled to China with a Yale Alumni group last May. This June will bring them to Hanover to witness the graduation of two sons from Dartmouth — both with advanced degrees: Nick from the Tuck School and Peter from Thayer Engineering School. Their youngest daughter is considering joining the Army. "I keep busy with Toledo museum, church and enigmatic athletic endeavors."

Nan Beuland Koerner, a two-term trustee of the Portland Art Association, has been a stockbroker with Dean, Witter, Reynolds for eight years. Their four children are all in college: one in graduate school in Wisconsin, one at the American School in Paris and two in Oregon universities. That must be some sort of a record.

Here is a note from Julia Tavares Alvarez. "I am still in the Dominican Republic Mission to the United Nations (Alternate Ambassador) and attending the Third Committee which deals with the social and humanitarian problems (human rights, youth, the elderly, women, etc.) and have become an 'expert' on women and the elderly — no doubt because I am an 'aging' or an 'aged' woman. All joking aside, I am enjoying my work tremendously and feel very content; it has filled the vacuum when my four daughters left the house — the eldest is remarried and living in Boston doing her Ph.D in psychology; the second is teaching at the University of Vermont and plans to take next year off to do some of her writing . . . she is going to be published in an anthology for teachers. The third daughter is living in Illinois where her husband does research at the Fermi Lab and she runs a small restaurant (she's the chef) which appeared in Discovery magazine. The youngest Ana, is living in Boston and doing counselling all in very varied fields as you can see. My husband and I keep very active; he is still practicing medicine (though he is 67). I will surely God willing, see you in 1984 — wouldn't miss it — 'cause I never thought I would make it!"

It's May again and another deadline. Lot of news for a change, but also an editor request for brevity as this is a reunion issue.

First of all, I had the pleasure of accidentally running into Jim Herman and Wald Morrison in a Hartford saloon recently.

Morrison is still about the same size and shape as he was in '45 (no comment on Herman or Gearing need be made in this area). Wally is chief financial officer of Hartford Steam Boiler & Inspection Company. Herm is a Connecticut Yankee in Old Lyme from where he pursues various business interests and travels. His and Brita's youngest son is a senior at PA and they invited him to bring five of his classmates down to the Bahamas during spring vacation. Jim says it was like a locust plague at the refrigerator — two dozen eggs, two loaves of bread, two quarts of orange juice, a pound of bacon and three quarts of milk just to get the juices flowing in the morning — ah, youth!

Andy Beckwith surfaced the same week. I had written to tell him that his welcome note had arrived just after deadline for the last class notes, and he called to catch up with old times. I haven't seen him since graduation. He's a N.Y. commuter from Darien and is sales manager for Linden-Mayer Paper Co. Heidi and Andy's four kids are all over the place: Mark is rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church in Morristown, NJ; Andrea is married and is a social worker in Buffalo; Nancy is working in a law firm in Boston, and Christy does her thing with D.C. Heath Publishers, also in Boston.

Chips Lazo and Sarah, his bride of thirty years, have become Californians and are crazy about the "bucolic life" of Newport Beach. He and two friends are operating a Hispanic advertising agency which is going great guns. The last I knew of Chips he was in San Juan with Coca Cola. Great to hear from him again.

We no longer have any pull with the Senate Finance Committee. Ed Hawkins has returned to not so bucolic Cleveland where he is administrator of the Taxes and Employee Benefits group for Squire Sanders and Dempsey. He had been tax counsel for the minority of the Senate Committee.

Pete Grosz and his wife Lil have just finished a bicycle tour of the Burgundian vineyards of France "supported by a good wine and food." "Supported," "wine," and "bicycle" don't belong in the same sentence for me, Pete, but I'll accept your claim, it's the only way to go!

Chet McCracken checks in from the First National Bank of Boston. He'd like to hear from old friends. The new assignment is challenging.

On the personal side, our daughter Betsy and her family now live in Andover's Ballardvale area whence John commutes to Boston and his new assignment for the Wall Street Journal. The eighth wonder of the world seems unimpressed by PA at this point! On a recent visit, stopped to see Deke and Dean DiClemente and found them just fine.

We have sold our house in Wallingford and are moving to 500 Oak Ridge Drive in Cheshire, CT where the latch string is out. Before the real estate selling and buying took place, we had rented a cottage in Weekapaug, RI for July so pick your latch string accordingly.

Unfortunately, I'm going through the angina problem that has afflicted so many of our friends. Modifying my diet and medication has been recommended until 6 May when I take another stress test. If I'm lunk, I guess surgery is a probability. I'm not mourning about it and it helps to know that both John Lampe and Lee Bergstrom have been through it and are much better off for it. They have been very supportive.

Don't forget the Alumni Fund and the Last Hurrah for Johnny Blake who's done such a hell of a job. Drop a line when you can.

It is a bit refreshing to get news from members of the class who have not appeared in these columns very often, or at all, to my recollection. For instance, this note from George Meeks: As a consequence of advancing age, was recently made a Senior Vice President of Piper Joffrey, a regional NYSE firm. Continue to sell equities to institutions in the US and the UK and continue to enjoy it. Recently became a "country gentlemen — 'country', as a result of moving thirty miles outside of Minneapolis onto 84 acres and a stable, and 'gentlemen', hopefully the result of my Andover heritage." Well said, George, and good luck. At the recent NYC phonathon I rang up a neighbor of George's, Mike Winton, who happened to be in Africa at the time. Safari so good, right? I spoke with a few chaps that night, squeezing the odd pound out of a few, we had a blazing success this year — the deli spread at the Williams Club always inspires. Doug Shaw from New Canaan had recently pitched a little business up in the NW (Oregon? Wash?) and who was on the receiving end (amongst others) but Whit Budge. Don Landis came through with a big pledge along with countless others.

John Works is now teaching finance at the University of Akron. . . . Bill Creelman, barged his way to the top, at National Marine Service of St. Louis (but you knew that). Jean and Bill have two married daughters and one grandson, age 1. (Guess how old PK's granddaughter is now? He was the first you know. Answer: next Bulletin. . .) John "The Turtle" Friday got married again. The fountain of youth, eh? To Judith Ann Havrel of Columbus Ohio. Graduating from PA this June will be Emory Basford Van Cleve, the fourth Van Cleve to be so honored since 1976 (you thought you had high ticket education problems?); William McLanahan, fourth generation Mac to make this distinction; and Peter Thomes, who follows his sister Kate '80 into the great beyond we call "scaresville". Also, lest I forget, Jane Nutt, younger daughter of Lee, the balding Baltimore Barrister, will also graduate this June and perhaps follow sister Jennifer to New Haven. But who knows?

The Fund for Lindsay Bradford via a contribution to the Addison Gallery has gone over $7,500, ensuring the purchase of something very special in Lin's memory. You can still give. Simply mark your check for LB.

Please continue to write those long and wonderful memoranda about your retirement plans, condo economics, what's what in Hobe Sound, and that sort of thing. We all need the inspiration, you know.

It is with great regret, I have to end once again on a very sad note. Another old friend passed away this winter. John Sexton, of Chevy Chase, died 27 December 1982. The address: Mrs. Janet Sexton, 5822 Highland Drive, Chevy Chase, MD 20815.

Dear Class,

News of you is not exactly plentiful! Do please return the news cards I send you.

One of the nicest happenings last year was seeing Ellen Brumback, with sister Frances '48, from Orlando. They were in Chicago to visit Ellen's twin, Charlie, and his wife, Mary. (You well remember Ellen and Mary Howe Brumback roommates at Abbot.) Charlie is President of the Chicago Tribune. One day, Mary, Ellen, Frances and I had a wonderful excursion to Cantigny, the country estate of the late Robert R. McCormick. We were given a special tour of this beautiful home, garden, and War Museum by Arthur Veysey, the famous former London and foreign correspondent for the Tribune for many years.

Nancy Thomas Adams keeps in touch admirably. Her latest news is having lunch with Elsa Hinchman Clark and Woody when they were in Miami in November, and then Nancy had lunch with Ginny Finney Rose and husband. It was the first encounter in thirty-two years for Nancy and Ginny! Tempus fugit! Nancy's husband Ted is retiring in a year, and they are planning to build at Homosassa Springs, FL, sixty-five miles north of Tampa.

A nice note from Sally Power Hansman. Her oldest son, Jon, received his Ph.D. in physics from MIT and is on the faculty there. Thirteen year old Chrissie is finishing pre-prep at Derby Academy.

Recently, seven of us of the Andover/Abbot of Illinois group had luncheon with Peter Sellars '75, already an illustrious alumnus. Peter is a famous and talented theatrical and musical director. He is in Chicago to direct the Lyric Opera's production of The Mikado. We are proud, to be sure, for he is a brilliant, ascending star.

Last fall I attended "Andover in Arizona" — a superb gathering with faculty seminars at Jack Greenway's ('42) Arizona Inn in Tuscon. The Addison Gallery Campaign is a most worthy cause and I have volunteered some time to help. A sad note to end these notes: Patty Bowne Rickenbacher sent me word that her husband, David, had died in February of 1983.

Keep young! Love to all, Luty.

Mark has lived in France for almost thirty years now, I think, and currently resides in Le Mesriel Saint Denis.

Bob Knowles included the following note and invitation with his alumni fund response: "My aviation consulting business, Aero Economics, has comfortably been weathering the recession, although our publication Aero Index has not yet achieved the circulation its content deserves. Shirley and I spend as much time as possible in the summer at 715 Old Post Road, Matunuck, RI, and we would be happy to see any fellow alumni who might pass through the area."

As of this week, 6 April, 41% of the class has contributed to the school, as opposed to, I think, 17% last year at this time. It'd be nice if we could inch up over 50% somehow; maybe we will." She continues: "a story of mine called The Dignity of Life has been selected for inclusion in Best Short Stories for 1983, Houghton Mifflin's annual anthology. The way I figured was, no one ever tries to think through what the life of a regular non-Jessica Mitford undertaker is like, so I tried it. The Dignity of Life is a love story of a regular undertaker. I bet you anything it's the definitive story in that field, whatever else is wrong with it."

Reeves and I are pleased to announce the birth of our first grandchild, Jordon Brent Moore, born 4 April 1983 to our daughter Nancy and husband Brent.

Gerry Treadway Miller writes: "Am proud of all my kids. Sue (Abbot '71) Dampier King has a darling little girl, Christie, now one year old; Sue's working on her master's in chemistry; Kate and her husband are in Munich studying theology; Kate has one year to go on an M. The thirty-fifth has come and gone but still lingers at the time of writing this. Despite what appears to have been some computer oversights and a delayed mailing, a surprisingly large group filled every chair at the Saturday dinner and populated the campus throughout the weekend. Associate Headmaster and honorary classmate Peter McKee and his wife Jean were our special guests. Peter inaugurated the series of evening reminiscences and one of our Abbot classmates blew the place apart with an anecdotal show-stopper.

Present were: Bob and Andy Baldwin, Mary and Sergio Bonotto, Bob and Pat Brace, Al, Francoise and Michael Bress, Phil, Ann and Katie Buckner, Charles Coon, Josephine Detmer, Jane Dewey, Clifford and Janet Elias, Bill and Mary Engstrom, Kitty Fitzgerald, Dan and Karin Garland, Muffy and Wayne Herkness, Roger and Janice Hunt, Andy and Nancy Ireland, Derick and Sonny Jones, Rosemary Jones and son, Dick and Anne Kimball, Dick and Betty Lindsay, Jim Martineau, Bob and Lila Mehlman, Bill and Jane Merchant, Bill, Judy, Jordan and Agusta Miner, Ed and Betty O'Connor, Richard Reis, Frank and Bev Rutan, Mike and Helen Sapuppo, Jacquelyn Schlosser, Bob and Maralyn Segal, Nancy Steward,

Dr. Robert D. Mehlman '48

Hugh and Sandy Stone, John and Carol Turner, Beverly Wells, Bob Whitney, Gene Young, Julie Bucklin, Mike and Nancy Hurwitz, Dick and Barbara Rubin, Roger McLean, Dan and Edie Tucker, Josh, Barbara, Anne, and Andy Hill, Ed Biederman and probably others lost in the delightfully organized chaos of the weekend. Reunion Committee member Art Contas could not come because of illness and was missed by everybody.

Dan Wilkes wrote from England that he is teaching investing across international boundaries and invites everyone to contact him when there. John Lillard also sent greetings from Lake Forest where he is president of JMB Institutional Realty (Chicago) which invests in office buildings and shopping centers for pension and endowment funds. Bernard Gaffney writes that after 25 years in the general practice of law he has been appointed Judge of the Superior Court of Connecticut.

F. H. Thurston continues flying a Lear jet and Beechcraft turbo-prop in his retirement years. Don Cameron, Jr. finished eleven years of foreign service duty with Aramco in Saudi Arabia and London and is now settled in Slidell, Louisiana. We never even had to consider the "rainy day options" suggested in the reunion folder. I assume the steam bath for men and the sauna for women were as deserted as the Abbot corridors after the lights-out bell. The ten of us who came back for our 35th reunion enjoyed being together in the picture post card weather.

Mary Farrar Bonotto and her husband, Sergio, came for part of the day on Saturday. Beverly Adkins Wells is now living in Ashland, MA and joined us for the Friday festivities. She is the local distributor for Rainbow cleaners and is the proud grandmother of twin girls.

Julie Schaffler Bucklin has retired, cum laude, from her fund raising job at Andover.

She is active in the New York Andover Club. Elder son, Rob, works at Portraits, Inc. in New York and Tim is at Hotchkiss.

Kitty Bigelow Fitzgerald and Jacquie Kay Schlosser drove up together from Larchmont, NY. I gave Kitty an extra child in my last class notes, whom I hereby retract. Her eldest son works for Ogilvie & Mather in New York. Her other two sons are at Georgetown University, and daughter, Kate, celebrated her 16th birthday on reunion Sunday. Jacquie's son, Andrew, graduated from Williams College with honors. Elizabeth is a senior at Wheaton and Ben is a senior at Andover.

Rosemary Jones and her son, Jeremy, came all the way from Fort Lauderdale. Jer is nine now and was our official class escort. Robert Redford wouldn't have been as good, and besides Jeremy is going to last longer.

Gene Young, our entry in the publishing world, is doing great things at Little Brown and in the sporting world. In addition to tennis, skiing and ice skating she has taken up bicycling. She just got her first "patch" for a 25-mile ride. Speaking of the post-adolescent athlete, I, encouraged by Julie Bean, and Jeremy, entered the 2.2 mile race which circled the Andover campus. Probably an attempt to "show the flag" for old Abbot!

Another example of persistence is Nancy Elliot Steward. She got her BA degree in 1981 from Trenton State and is now teaching. She has four children and one grandchild. Nancy is one of our more faithful reuners. You stay-at-homes don't know what you're missing.

Dodie Hildreth Detmer's political roots were evidenced by the dispatch with which she conducted our class meeting. The incumbents carried the day. Bean, Mo, and Julie are our Class Agents; I continue as Secretary; and Jacquie volunteered to be our next reunion chairman. Dodie came with her charming daughter, Zareen '78 who will also accompany her on the Andover tour of Russia.

Let me hear from you. I promise to be surly if you aren't more cooperative these next five years.

Last November, the Sunday Washington Post published — for the first time in English — an article entitled, "Humanity Will Not Forgive This," which Ernest Hemingway wrote about the Spanish Civil War for Pravda in July 1938. This manuscript was found and identified in the Hemingway Collection at the John F. Kennedy Library in Boston by William B. Watson, Professor of History at MIT. The Post also featured an article by Bill, describing how he came across this manuscript after he had been working for several months in the Hemingway Collection on a book about the Spanish Civil War experiences of Hemingway, John Dos Passos, and the Dutch documentary filmmaker, Joris Ivens. After considerable detective work Bill discovered that Hemingway had produced this untitled typescript in response to Pravda's request for 1500 words on the "Barbarism of fascist interventionists in Spain." And although no such Pravda piece was listed on any index of Hemingway's writings, Bill found the article in the

1 August 1938 Pravda, on page four, along with pieces by Mao Tse-tung, Chou En Lai and Upton Sinclair. It may be the most important Hemingway find in a decade, since (as Bill notes), "it shows a politically committed, impassioned Hemingway deeply angered by the indiscriminate assault of the fascists on the civilian population of Spain."

In addition to the Washington Post, I also read The New York Times, where on the Op Ed page of 6 April 1983, I found a piece entitled, "Let Latins Alone," by Roland S. Homet, Jr. Robin is identified as a lawyer and member of the American Committee on East-West Accord who has held various assignments in the White House and State Department. As the title hints, Robin takes issue with the present Administration's policy in Central America: "What American interest," he asks, "is supposed to justify the political costs of breast-beating intervention in the growing-up process of an incidental neighbor?" Drawing an analogy between the United States' contemporary involvement in Central America and Great Britain's regrettable 1812-1815 effort to promote stability in North America, Robin counsels patience and forbearance. Even projecting worst case developments in Nicaragua and El Salvador, he suggests that "Thirty to fifty years after these upheavals, the region will in all likelihood be strengthened by the stability of self-determined States," giving us an opportunity now to demonstrate "our grander confidence in the flow of history toward democratic self-rule." Robin concludes, "For the United States today, a short-term preoccupation with the to-and-fro of Central American wars diverts our energies and demeans our purposes."

A pair of stream of consciousness letters from long-lost (from us) Bryan Hitchcock, the summarization of which defies my limited writing skills. Hitch went to Lehigh, where he captained the hockey team for two years. Then he took a year off, but ended up spending half of it working for the Corps of Engineers cleaning up the Connecticut coast after Hurricanes Carol and Diane. Then he retired to Stowe to ski and await the draft. After the Army he went to graduate school at the University of Geneva for a year and a half, then back to Stowe where he was a ski patrolman and aerial photographer for five years. Eventually ended up on Monhegan, an island off the coast of Maine, where he fishes for lobster (when the engine hasn't just blown up) and builds things. Numerous lost loves (and a lost two handicap) along the way. "Not all the traditional values appeal to me" he writes, "but I feel damned glad that I was exposed to them and that I grew up with two parents who let me be, and I mean be." The letter loses its flavor in translation, but Hitch offers to come to the 35th with a load of lobsters and his second ex-wife, who is now his best friend, to give a personal report. CONFESSIONS OF AN EX-REUNION CHAIRMAN 1983 APRIL. I am on the phone with Julie Phelan, Abbot's reunion chairwoman for '53. She and Connie LeMaitre have agreed to run our Saturday night dinner.

Timidly she asks, "What should we have for dinner?"

"Roast Beef. Slices of rare roast beef." I reply.

"What about a clambake?" she says with somewhat more determination in her voice.

"Tony Lopez loves roast beef." I tell her.

"Do you know what a truly great steamer tastes like?" she offers.

"Gee," I say, "People really want roast beef."

"O.K.," she says, "I'll talk to Connie."

When we sit down to dinner on Saturday night, Paulette and I are at a table with Bunny and Carl Hoffman, Mary and Ken Sharp, Evan Geilich and Ken McDonald ('50). Everyone is telling me what a great idea the clambake is. John Scranton comes over. He loves it. Ron Baquie is delighted. Zeus Stevens is ecstatic. Bob Sullivan is running out for more. Around the room people are dipping clams and throwing kisses at me. And this is before the lobster!

Someone turns to me and says, "At least its not another roast beef dinner."

"Yeah," I say "who needs another one of those?"

1983 FEBRUARY. There is a Phonathon going on in New York. About four members of the class of '53 are there. Two are Don Shapiro. One is Tad Girdler. Don has already agreed to run a party on Friday night. He will personally invite every faculty member we ever knew to join us after the barbecue. Don is always working for the class. No wonder he counts as two people.

An idea occurs to me. I ask Tad Girdler if he will run the attendance part of our reunion. He accepts. In fact, he is so persuasive that people we haven't seen for years come back. Ralph Douglas comes. Howie Schaff, Tad's PA roommate comes. Gordon McKenzie, John Poinier, Dave Bowman, Warren Klein, Denny Hatch, Bob Vaughan and others who barely ever come back are there. From England no less, Dave Craton and Shelby Tucker came.

Binney and Smith stock is dropping as Tad spends more and more time on the 30th and less and less time selling Crayolas.

The attendance is his triumph, but not his car. It breaks down on the way up from Connecticut. We have set an attendance record for a 30th reunion, but Tad Girdler, attendance chairman, does not attend.

1982 OCTOBER. I am in the kitchen of Moses Stuart house talking to Sandi Mesics. She is making me a cup of coffee. I am thinking what a great party you could give in a house like this.

"Sandi," I ask, "Would you give a party for the class after our dinner on Saturday night?"

"Of course," she says. But what she doesn't know at the time is that a few months later the school will ask her to give a reception for our class and 1948's just 24 hours before this party.

So, as it turns out, when the Reunion comes, Sandi is giving parties around the clock. Mike Gaskin, Sim Cotton, Tim Draper, John Marden, Pat Crowther, Bill Bride, Pete Capra, Dave Kaplan, Ralph Cestero, Dave Hayes, Bill Ridgeway, Skip Purcell, Fred Mahoney, Dex Olsson, Stu Ogden, and the rest of us can't believe she is actually doing it. Flor Kist, the Consul General of San Francisco from the Netherlands, who attends parties all the time, can't believe that each party is better than the one before. But it is.

1983 MARCH. I am on the phone with Peter Damon asking him to run a tennis tournament for the reunion.

"Yes," he says so quickly I can't believe my good fortune. "What do I have to do?"

"Oh nothing," I say.

Well, the tournament is not nothing. It is beautifully conceived and he and his co-chairman, Ann Kennedy Irish, have a real hit. Every time I go over to the courts, I see Peter working. He is scoring. He is directing. He is doing everything but lining the courts.

Give or take, including Leo Daley, Paul Hull, Joel Sharp, and Al Pearsall, we have about twenty-six players. It is a super tournament to go along with our Sunday picnic. Awards are presented by none other than the Academy's Director of Athletics, Joe Wennick.

J.D. Watson wins it; but prizes are also given to Link Robinson and his father Neal; to Joe Mesics and to one other person. Is it Tom Shoop? Is it Bunny Hoffman? It isn't Peter Damon, though no one deserves it more.

EARLY 1983. I am at the University Club talking to Joe Mesics. Quietly, efficiently,

Julie Gaines Phalen '53

Joe has been helping out with a hundred things for the 30th (and doing a little work for PA on the side).

"Bill," he says, "the plaque for Michael's dedication is done. We're all set."

"Good," I say. "What's the room like?"

"You'll see," he says.

Oh God, I think, will it be good enough for Michael?

Well, it is wonderful. A large corner room with windows facing the fields in back of Graves Hall. A room with such marvelous acoustics that kids can play their electronic equipment at full blast without disturbing other musicians in adjoining rooms.

6 p.m., Saturday, the sun is starting to lower in the sky above PA. Nancy Segal, two of her children, Debbie and Doug, her mother, Michael's brother Bob '48 and his wife, Maralyn, Michael's mother, the McNemars, and just about every classmate who attended the reunion gather for our classes' tribute to Michael.

The plaque is presented to William Thomas, Director of Music. It will appear outside the Michael E. Segal Amplified Music Studio. From now on, anyone visiting the room will see our dedication.

1983 MARCH. I am in my office reading an advance reunion questionnaire returned by Carson Parks. It says that he's not sure he's coming back to the 30th. I reach for the phone, dial Carson.

"What do you mean you're not coming?" "Well," he says, "if the schedule opens up. . . ."

"Listen," I tell him, "You are the entertainment! You've got to come."

"I'd really like to, but. . . ."

I am desperate. "O.K. Carson, here's the deal. If you don't come, I'm going to sing 'Cab Driver.'"

I am half way through the second chorus when I realize he has already hung up.

Of course he comes and performs with his wife Gaile. They are magnificent. Not only that but this time they've got a new act: Hillary, Catherine, C. Carson III, and Benjamin, their kids, singing with them. Fred Guggenheim is cheering; Skip Kimball is screaming; Randy Heimer is going out of his mind, and everyone is shouting. A standing ovation. It is the event.

1982 OCTOBER. I am having lunch at the Commons with George Bixby.

"George," I ask, "Will you and Margot give the class picnic again?"

"Sure," he says.

"Great," I say. "You guys always come

William Kaufman '53 (left) and Secretary of the Academy Joseph C. Mesics '53 welcome Julie Schaffner Bucklin '48 to the Friday reception at Moses Stuart House through, and this year Connie LeMaitre will be the class treasurer. You won't have to pay for most of it out of your own pockets."

"How do you like your hamburgers?" says George.

"It should be great," I say.

"It will be," says George, "if the house gets built on time."

Well, George and Margot's new house gets done on time and so do the hamburgers. Neal McCorvie says you can't get frankfurters as good as this in Connecticut and everything is perfect, as it always is when the Bixby's agree to do something.

But, the class knows all this. That's why at an earlier meeting run by Tom Shoop at Stimson House, they have unanimously elected George along with Dick Golde to be reunion chairmen for 1988. Reservations are being taken now.

Our Thirtieth Reunion was a smashing success under the able leadership of Julie Gaines Phalen and Connie Weldon LeMaitre. The combination of perfect weather and renewing of old friendship left all in attendance with happy determination to return to Andover for our 35th in 1988! So many of our classmates were asked about, and information was shared by those who knew, but how much better to see everyone in person! Mark your future calendars now.

Our reunion meals and festivities were shared with our PA counterparts of the class of 1953 — those fellows whom we weren't allowed to speak or write to back in the 1950s! It was wonderful to get to know them over a lobster clambake, a tennis round-robin and even breakfast in the Commons! Our class dorm was shared with PA '48, but could just as easily be shared with PA 1953. How times change but the spirit and love of the school does not, and a reunion renews so much.

Those who shared this very special time in addition to Connie and Julie were: Ann Oliver Jackson, Ann Irish Kennedy, Betty Hitzrot Evans, Meddy Goodnow White, Muffy Grant Lynch, Polly Jackson Townsend and Pam Bushnell Ellis. Connie Weldon LeMaitre will be the new Director of Annual Giving, joining the school staff. Congratulations, Connie!

It may come as something of a shock to find your class notes here — I apologize for the blank space in this column for the last couple of issues. Back on the track now . . .

I get wonderful, newsfilled notes from Les Blank every now and again. His film on the making of Herzog's Fitzcarraldo got raves from everyone who saw it, and even from a few who didn't. And just this morning before sitting down to write these notes, I took a walk through Greenwich Village on a lovely spring day, and saw a young lady strolling along with one of Les's T-shirts on, this one extolling an earlier movie, Garlic Is As Good As Ten Mothers.

Gardner Patrick has recently become a Nutmegger. For those who wonder what that is, heed: "Packed the family off to the wilds of sunny Brazil in 1979 to make Sylvania Television tubes for GTE Corp. Returned in 1981 and soon settled in bucolic Wilton, CT. Tim, twenty, graduates from Amherst and Kevin, eighteen, from Deerfield, come June. Mike, thirteen, is becoming an expert on the family's Apple II+ computer. Barbara relaxed in France and Italy with friends in October 1982. Such a life!"

Jud Sage writes that after his retirement from the Marine Corps, he went to Okinawa, has returned home, has tried his hand at novel writing, and has gone back to school. He is currently studying, and is a graduate teaching assistant. Jud now lives in Lorton, VA.

Johnny Lancaster, out of Dallas, is, like Gar Patrick, moving children in and out of school. Writes John, "Just getting older children out of college, children in college and a child headed to college. My youngest son had a marvelous time at Andover summer school last year. I picked him up at schools end, and found the campus looked the same as in 1954, only better. I'm still practising law in Dallas". . . and from Bill Martin (Atlanta) comes word that his daughter Ginnie is finishing her lower year at Andover and says she is bringing him and his wife up to date on student life at Andover. That sounds harrowing.

Bill Matalene has just returned from an enviable trip to China, and I'll quote directly from his note: "Carolyn, Daphne and I have just returned from a term as Foreign Experts' teaching 20th Century American Literature at Shanxi University in the People's Republic of China. It was, I think, as Christian Europe must have been during the Reformation and its aftermath. They seem tired of killing each other over who has the right to specify what sorts of social and economic conduct are sanctioned by the sacred texts of Marx, Lenin, and Mao. Our students had a passionate interest in America, but were constantly warned to beware of the sugar-coated bullets of Imperialist ideology in our assignments and lectures. All told, a life-changing experience!" Amen.

Steve Wilson is busy at work on a new home computer program that will change all our lives, if he burps forth with it. . . . Spike Bragg and wife Ricky are busily building a new house in Long Beach, CA, and the day I called Spike, whilst in Los Angeles on business, he told me he couldn't get together with me because they were going "window shopping." Surely not that important, I intoned. "No," quoth Spike, "We're really window shopping. We have thousands of dollars worth of windows to select." Funny, I didn't know there were window places on Rodeo Drive.

My daughter, Kirstin, graduates from PA this June, and then plans a year between school and college in Paris.

Keep those cards and letters . . .

The real harbinger of spring is the influx of cards and news arriving soon after the winter's final thaw! Thanks for your response! Space permitting, I want to share this poem from Marti Belknap . . .

I've seen the falls of Iguassu,
I've scaled the mountains of Peru,
I've skied Australia, lived in Spain,
Been to Greece and back again.
And now I love a special guy!
We're getting married in July.
Together we have bought some land
A solar mountain home we've planned.
We'll build our house and settle down Into a tiny mountain town (Gold Hill, CO) . . .

Marti would love to hear from any passing by.

Bev Gramkow became Mrs. Roland A. Triff in June '82. Bev teaches childbirth classes part time while son Peter attends Curry College; Doug at Fryeburg Academy, and Jeff at the Greenwood School in Vermont.

Nancy Donnelly Bliss' family, kindergarten teaching, and Red Cross involvements, have only given her time to phone Doris Niemand Reudin! Nancy's daughter, Sarah, graduates this June, and is job hunting. Daniel, playing varsity lacrosse, will finish his sophomore year at Bates . . . and back to school is Marilyn Towner Dodd, presently enrolled in a three month course at Katherine Gibbs after being an administrative assistant in a private day school, and then a manager for a theatrical touring company. Lynn's oldest son, Bill, is in computer management for Pacific Bell in San Francisco; Steve, a senior at Ohio Wesleyan, Peter, a junior at Duke, and Debbie is in ninth grade.

Winifred Johnson Sharp has a daughter at Duke also, Jennifer who is a senior — there are three children at home busy with school and horse shows! Wini juggles her time between the Appellate Court in Daytona, FL, and her home in Windermere. Margaret Johnson went to Jerusalem to attend the International Congress of Analytical Psychology as President of the Los Angeles contingent. Marge plans a trip to Scotland with her sister to trace their McCollough roots! Grier Smith Catledge travelled to China on an educational scholarship with her daughter who is also a therapist. Grier has begun a therapeutic learning center in Jacksonville and awaits word whether her Ph.D. dissertation in neuro-psychology has been approved. Good luck and congratulations, Grier!

More news from Florida . . . Marion Badoian Emmanuel's boys are into sailing while daughter Elizabeth awaits college decisions. Elizabeth was at PA last summer also — Sam Thayer told me about her but Sandy and I were unable to find her name on the posted lists — darn! Marion joined Gus last spring in Geneva, then a restful week in Megeve, France . . . In France, Pana de Chofnoky wrote they are moving to Moulin de Bargeton, Pont des Charettes, Uzès 30700 France, and is awaiting Abbot friends to drop by!

Closer to home comes news from Betsey Beeson Owens. The Owens group announced that daughter Greer will make them grandparents in June. Is this a first for the class? Frannie Nolde Ladd hasn't been in Pittsburgh since we met in an airport limo, but she writes that her twenty-year-old, Laurie, a History of Art major, is taking the Kenyon College junior year in Paris! Fran leaves for a week of "April in Paris" — we sure have a "travelling" class! Her daughter Alexis, is eighteen and playing field hockey and lacrosse at Hobart; Fran, "exhausted but happy" is enrolled at UNH's "Exec. MBA" course while continuing her seventh year with Digital Equipment Corp., as well as co-leader of a cancer support group at Emerson Hospital in Concord. We don't get older — certainly better!

News from another "Bermuda Bell," Sue Larter Lingeman. Sue continues her painting seriously, along with being a hospice volunteer and raising funds for them. Sue's daughter, Anne, is a freshman at Smith, and writes her two girls were in Florida visiting her mother at Hillsboro — shades of when Sue and I went our senior year — what a fabulous time . . . some things never change! Not a "Bermuda Bell," but on her way there is Audrey Davis Trowbridge and Ted for a much needed vacation after a successful triple by-pass operation Ted underwent this winter. "Aud" and I talked frequently and prayed more! Audrey received a note from Joan Wheeler who works in the library at Concord Academy, as well as ten hours each week in the Concord Public Library. Joan's father passed away this winter. Our condolences to all the family. Audrey's daughter, Hope, graduates this spring from Skidmore and I am going to try and be there, after OUR daughter Betsy's graduation from Vanderbilt that is! After graduation Betsy will be living in Cleveland working for Union Carbide Co. With one out of college next year it will be like getting a raise!

Time, space, and news are at an end. Your news and notes have been great. We would love to hear from all and every, so make that extra effort for our next Bulletin!

One of the rainiest winters in southern California history nears its end. I recall it began with a particularly nasty and stormy night last November made very warm by a visit with Ed Veazey in Pasadena. Anticipating retirement from the navy at year's end, Ed was in Pasadena to evaluate an offer from the Jet Propulsion Lab for his second career. Since six months have passed without another call from Pasadena, I'm guessing that JPL could not compete with Ed's and Joy's custom home in Fredericksburg, VA.

Along with a fair amount of rainy night nostalgia, Ed provided a few worthy news items: the Veazeys had recently hosted Sue and Hal Donnelly at the U.S. Naval Academy where they had come to see plebe James Donnelly play hockey. Al Shinn is involved in ocean projects for the National Science Foundation in Washington. On Ed's trip West he found Eda and Pete Coburn on the same plane. Which means Pan-Am, bread and butter to the Coburns who are keeping house in the Georgetown townhouse formerly home to the John F. Kennedys.

A welcome letter from John Daly, after twenty-two years as Executive Vice President and Director of E. F. Hutton. John reports that Dick Seal has left Pillsbury's restaurant division and bought and taken some of those restaurants with him. When I find out the name of the chain, you'll all know. John also gives Pete Briggs straight A's as Headmaster of Greenwich Country Day School.

Speaking of headmasters . . . the new head of the Naval Submarine School this summer will be Capt. William P. Houley. Bill and Judy have relocated to Groton, CT, where they're establishing a home base for five children attending four different schools and universities.

Larry Nauman continues to pursue his hobby of international travel, the latest junket to Japan with daughter Ann (twenty) and sons Paul (twenty-three) and Steve (nineteen). Larry also reports a profound religious experience, this at 3,000 feet during his first skydiving jump.

Jim Hutton was elected President of the New Mexico Retail Association for 1982. Jim is still Employee/Public Relations Manager for the El Paso Division of Safeway Stores. David Batchelder, "still in happy exile in London," visited The Hill recently with his two daughters — the eldest of whom hopes to attend the Summer Session this year.

It's a pleasure, with the help of the Cape Cod Chronicle August last, to up-date the career of Bruce Donovan. After two years teaching at Yale, Bruce joined the Classics Dept. at Brown University in 1965. He is now on leave as the Chairman of said department while serving as administrator and Dean of the College for freshmen and sophomores. This was chronicled in the Chronicle because Bruce addressed the Brown University Club of Cape Cod last August. We're much too late of course, but we would have had a choice of seafood newburg or chicken St. Pierre . . . Y.

Hello everyone: B.G. Willis has made his move — to Falmouth on Cape Cod, where he has joined a law firm specializing in real estate matters. Before Grant moved last March, he said he had a nice visit with Paul and Joan Putney in Philadelphia. . . . Also on the move is Bill Rapp with his wife, Diane, and their three children. The Rapps are off to Japan for a couple of years, where Bill is to be the senior Commerce officer in Japan, handling U.S.-Japanese trade negotiations. Bill left the Bank of America last February to take on this assignment, and spent a couple of months in training in Washington before heading for the Far East. The Rapps can be reached through the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo.

For those who are passing through, George Breed writes that he is very happy running the Medical Products Program for Lifeline Systems, a new company. George says that while he is working hard, he is also enjoying his family more — which includes five kids ranging from three to eighteen. John Hansman is still bureaucrating in Montgomery County, MD, near Washington, DC, where he has assumed some new responsibilities. John dropped a note to say that he is overseeing the implementation of the cable television systems in his area as well as being responsible for local television programming, based on resident participation. John, I think you have gotten yourself into a no-win situation. . . . In reading the area acceptance list at Andover, unless I am mistaken, Bill Bayfield's daughter will be going to PA this fall. My son, Tom, was accepted for this year's Summer Session, and I hope it will do wonders for him. . . . Closing on a sad note, I received a letter from Charlie Valender last February that his wife, Constance, has passed away after a long battle with cancer. Charlie, I know all our classmates' thoughts are with you. Gee.

Steve Mochary was right. The Twenty-Fifth transcended all else, but thanks mostly to his superior organizational talents. The only interminable speeches we had to suffer were not of his making. He kept things short, sweet, and sensible, and got us the most radically useful class costumes in the history of reunion costuming.

Our class, it seems, was a class of closet radicals. Subjected to interviews by your reunion co-secretary, our classmates project an image of spectacular metamorphoses. In our teens in the 1950s we were obedient, even Tony Brown and Reg Barnes, though they don't want to remember it. For all the Establishment could tell we were Clean and Decent Chaps. (The last of the respectable PA classes, as it turned out: the teenagers of the 60s and 70s were an obvious disaster, when discipline was thrown to the four winds and disrespect masqueraded as a virtue.) But still waters run deep. In those murky depths demons slumbered. Their time has come. We are, nearly all of us, finally marching to our own drummers. Interviewing reunioners was like watching gossamer mayflies hatch on silvery wings above a sunny stream in the woods. Andover is an exquisite venue, but no one was crying in his cups for golden bygone days. Those who missed the scene will delight to learn that as a group our gaze is forward and upward. The ancient deeps whence we sprang are but a fleeting memory as we try out our new wings.

Win Orgera has long been flying on silvery wings, but for most of us who haven't it is a special thrill, the thrill of "forcing unfavourable conditions to meet one's needs," as Jon Middlebrook our erstwhile spokesman once pronounced (cf., F. Pourri 1958, p. 95: at the time we thought he was cynical, but realize now he was merely wise.) Rog Mackenzie, for example, finished the 1983 London Marathon in 4 hours 30 minutes flat and is still rejoicing. Waldo Jones is also rejoicing in new possibilities with his decision to get divorced and to expand his legal work in Tulsa with new partner—to roll his own dice, as he puts it. Andy Fichthorn quit GE after seventeen years, feeling good at breaking the mold and doing new things like selling locomotives and keeping eighteen horses. Gil Douglass has recently broken new ground by pledging Alpha Phi Alpha, with its commitment to "manly deeds, scholarship, and love for all mankind." Eric Norlin has found a new and better life with his second wife and his own business. Doug Liebhaufsky, respected practitioner of the law, has also found happiness in the triumph of hope over experience (Say Johnson's term for re-marriage.) Bruce Kaplan has also become an esteemed member of the law, but not yet married (much less re-married.) He says that being a NYC family court judge has shown him too much of the bad side of changing domestic patterns to hurry him into forging a domestic partnership of his own; even so, he says the judging has been the best experience of his life. Tom Welch has taken a big step mankind, away from the urbs to Exeter (decent folk actually live there) where he has set out his legal shingle. Scientist E. Weihofen has retired, one way or another from government employ, scaled peak physical and mental, and found serenity with Kay. Copley Crosby has spurned civil altogether and returned to his Obolovka. Speaking of which, Dan Rowland has found satisfaction and reward in the challenging fields: Russian history and heritage preservation. The mountains of western Virginia have finally revealed. Ed Frost that money is not important while his wife Roon has been making important psychological discoveries about the differences between little boys and little girls and how we'd best stop ignoring them. Mark Woodbury, John Murphy, and Fred Prahl have all found new lives with new partners. Astounding but true: a majority of us have found or are finding new freedom in changes of professional business activity, and particularly in separation or divorce from old partners chosen when we were so, so callow, and in finding of new life-partners to sustain Spirit and inspire Hope.

Not all, of course, have jettisoned the old. A few are still happily married to their first spouses. But it is fair to say that of those who have re-evaluated old partnerships have been able to stay the course: Dave Trickey, Win Orgera, Jeff Movi

The twenty-fifth reunion class in adornment to Bulfinch Hall

Bob Zeff, Steve Reiber, Chris Wadsworth, Frank Kemp, Sandy Burdett, Art Mann. They admit to good fortune: luckiness in finding someone early who would remain an inspiration still after a score of years.

These thoughts took shape while coursing the wooded trails of the perennial Sanctuary with good Sam Friedman and Bill Weihofen in the serene early, early hours of cool sunlit mornings. Serenity is hard to recapture after late night parties, and the Saturday night party at the Log Cabin was late. Monty Bissell, had he been there, would certainly have found it steamy, for we had lobsters and clams and corn by the bushel, along with drink and cheer. In truth, we were too distracted by the cheer to pursue with perfect zeal our philosophical investigations into the Great Changes in People's Lives. We managed at least to exchange greetings with successful entrepreneurs Tom Gildehaus and Marsh Cloyd, urbane lawyer Jock McBaine, virtuoso cellist Frank Hammond, polynath pedagogue Tom Cutler, down east doctor Steve Larned, professorial Mal Salter, university administrator Sam Back, enterprising investor Lou van Amerongen, ad man Derm Sullivan, engineer Ted Bailey, and oenologist and vintner Phil Woodward who is as talented as he is generous (he supplied us with wine from his own CA vineyard). We apologize to those reunioners we never managed to talk to, but all will surely agree: PA '58, collectively and individually, is no longer cynical and never was stodgy. It is an upbeat group of people whose paths happened to cross once and who made the trek back to that very path-crossing for a couple of days of unexpected fellowship. We were sorry that many old friends could not make the trek, like Monty Bissell, Paul Kelly, Paul Armstrong, Pete Perez, Peter Wells, Mack Ganson, Andy Cornelissen, Sandy Fenn, Dwight Ellis, Dave Page, Henry Munn, Larry Lewis, et alia, all of whom are undoubtedly marching in new directions too. We'd like to ask them about it. We could use some more information for our forthcoming publication, Beyond the Mid-Life Crisis: PA '58 at Large (Atlanta: Friedman Publishers). If anyone mentioned or not mentioned feels pleased or piqued by what we have said, we trust they will write in chorus or protest to this column.

What a marvelous weekend! Each time I go to Andover, I see again what wonderful opportunities are available there for the students. Wish each and every one of you could have been at our 25th Reunion.

Friday night began with a reception at the home of Britta and Don McNemar. We had most of our group in attendance by then: Sandra Castle Hull and Gary, Parry Ellice Adams and Sandy, Jane Christie Smith, Sandy Benson Calhoun, Shirley Slater Crosman, Ann DiClemente Ross, Sally Leavitt Blackburn, Claudia Sandberg Wyllie, Susie Tidd Augenthaler and Warren, and Jerry, myself and our children, Kathy and Chris. Unfortunately, Carol Greene Donnelly was recuperating from a mishap and could not be present but she was ably represented by husband, Joey. (I saw Carol on Sunday — she was just fine, and going home on Monday). Britta McNemar was presented with a certificate making her an honorary member of our class. Following the reception we enjoyed dinner in front of Commons and then our class get-together in Nathan Hale, where a few of us stayed for the weekend.

Saturday morning we all donned our class T-shirts and marched off in the parade to the gym for the annual meeting. At some point during that morning we were joined by Faith White Hyde and June Hamilton Withington and Nuff. Following the meeting our class picture was taken, and our group had our class meeting over a delicious picnic lunch under the Bell Tower. The purpose of the meeting was to rotate the jobs so that we can make an effort to be in contact with more of you. In response to the request, Jane Christie Smith and Carol Green Donnelly have agreed to help Sandra Castle Hull, who will continue for one more year, with the fund raising. Sandy Benson Calhoun has agreed to take on the job of class secretary, so please write to her from now on (3204 Circle Hill Rd., Alexandria, VA 22305). And, FINALLY, June Hamilton Withington, has agreed to be the next Reunion Chairperson — #30. Now it is up to all of you to cooperate as much as you can.

The Abbot tea was held at Morton House. Miss Sweeney was there among others, and Saturday night was our clam-bake at the Log Cabin. We were joined by Miss Judd, Miss Ritchie, Miss Goodwin and many mosquitoes. Everyone had a grand time. The whole Reunion was just great — so don't miss the next one!

My able assistants were Carol Green Donnelly (who did so much for our group as both arrangements chairperson for the class and telephoner), Sandra Castel Hull, Ann DiClemente Ross, Jane Christie Smith, and Susie Tidd Augenthaler. They made phone calls and most of you were contacted. My many thanks to all of them for their efforts. Some of the gleanings follow:

Rosemary Ozooian Arkoian has two small children, a boy and girl. In Lexington, Kentucky, Nancy Stevenson Jackson has three children; the youngest is 14. Nancy Dick keeps very busy with her health department job and was sorry to be unable to join us. She sent her greetings to all.

Greenfield, Massachusetts is the home of Phebe Sherman Elliott and her husband, Peter, who have moved into her parents' former home along with her two children, both of whom are in college. Phebe just returned from a great trip to California. She is busy with community activities and missed Reunion because she was hosting the Greenfield High School's 25th.

Kaki Lockwood Hayslip, has one son,

Nicholas, and is taking courses to be an Episcopal deacon. Rumor was that Wynnkie Paffard Delmhorst and Doris Ward Lawson were coming to Reunion but they never appeared. Wynnkie has two boys.

In New York City, Anne Nielsen Lye has an eight-year-old son and is a photographer's assistant. She is also involved at the Metropolitan Museum. Jean Reynolds Belmonte is a part-time librarian in Pennsylvania and has five children ranging from college age to kindergarten.

Mary Ann Savage is a librarian at the Library of Congress in Washington. She lives in Alexandria, Virginia with her two children and has been divorced for about two years.

As head of the Parents' Committee involved in finding a new headmaster for the Children's Country Day School, Liz Artz Beim found herself making a speech rather than attending Reunion. She lives in Riverdale, NY and has two children. Annsi Cole Stephano is remarried and has a daughter who graduated from college. She is busy preparing for the Bermuda Race on their 42-foot sailboat. Finally Judy Hart Shaw has two children and works for a clinic dealing with phobias. Ingrid Stahlbrand Kassler really wanted to make Reunion but was unable to do so.

It was great — with memories of posture pictures and days at Abbot shared throughout the weekend. My special thanks to Shirley for teaching my children how to eat clams.

This is my final column — please cooperate with Sandy as you have with me. It has been easy — thanks to all of you.

I know you will all be saddened, as was I, to learn of the death of Steffie Thrall Smith Penders this past spring after a long bout with cancer. She is missed.

Heard from two classmates too late for the last Bulletin — here is their news: Shirley Slater Crosman writes, "We are enjoying Amherst and are beginning to feel more settled now that we are entering our second year here. I am teaching some introductory art history at Smith College part-time. John and the Connecticut River Watershed Council are much involved in the acid rain controversy. Our son, Nathaniel, began Jr. High this year and daughter, Katie, a fifth grader, competes in gymnastics."

"I am employed in the Alumni Relations Department at Northwestern University as Director of Constituent Organizations," writes Edie Olson Davies. She is also on the Board of Directors of the Visiting Nurse Association of Chicago and the Women's Board of Children's Memorial Hospital. Her husband, Paul, is with the Financial Relations Board in Chicago. Their children are sixteen, thirteen, and eight.

First, let me correct a gross oversight in the last notes: I failed to mention that Paul Neshamkin had been nominated for an Oscar last year for his documentary, shown on Public Television titled, Against Wind and Tide: A Cuban Odyssey. Paul has been talking about doing another documentary on our 25th reunion, and if he does, I'm confident that this time he'll not only get the nomination, but also win the Oscar. After all, you can't beat the cast!

And already the cast for the major event of 1984 is growing: Pete Pochna, working in a small venture capital operation he formed; Jack Arnold, who was splitting wood in New Hampshire when I called, taking a break from his brokerage business which he runs from his house, with a little help from a personal computer; Bob Rosatti, teaching Cardiology at Duke Medical School; Rennie Maier, an Anesthesiologist in Cambridge; Sam Abbot, law professor at Boston University and ordained Episcopal Minister in Brookline; Steve Foss, and Dave Rogers, planning to bring his whole family (including kids ranging from kindergarten to a college senior) have all begun to make plans to star in Paul's film.

One up on all of us, perhaps, is Duffy Hughes who organized a mini-reunion last summer in Vermont with John Mason, Giles Payne, George Nilson, Bruce Coffey and their families. He reports that all were fired up, had a great weekend and are thriving.

Also thriving are Hank Higdon, still finding jobs for people, now in LA; Bob Nassau, who, after seventeen years at Ford Motor Co., became Executive VP at J.I. Case Co. in 1980, and then last fall was chosen to be the sixth president in the 100-year history of the American Hoist and Derrick Co. of St. Paul, MI; Ralph Johanson, now responsible for all the legal problems associated with Mobil's petrochemicals business, most of which revolves around a multi-billion dollar joint venture in Saudi Arabia, where Ralph has been some forty times in the last five years. On those trips he often sees Dave Warden, Employee Relations Manager for a Mobil company in Jeddah.

Also travelling some is John Dorman who spent two months last summer on sabbatical from Stanford University's Student Health Service as a medical missionary in Zaire.

Lex Rieffel reports that Scotty Thompson is deeply involved with two renovations: an old Victorian house in Washington, DC, and as Associate Director for Programs of the U.S. International Communications Agency, where, among other things, he sends Americans abroad to explain US policies and society. Such a job could lead to a brilliant house renovation, though I'm sure Scott would rather it be a House renovation.

On the other side of the aisle, so to say, but in the same village, Lee Webb is founder and president of a public policy research institute called the National Center for Policy Alternatives. The Center specializes in state and local government affairs; Lee has written several books on the subject, and is actively involved with the National Democratic party.

Finally, I too, have been quite active of late. Over Memorial Day weekend, 1982, Maureen Barden, an Assistant District Attorney in Manhattan, my daughter, Rachel, and I planted 500 Riesling vines in the Hudson River Valley; one week later Maureen and I were married in Manhattan, one week after that I went to Andover to get some on-the-job training in Maureen running, and two days after that Maureen and I went to Greece for a honeymoon.

Block out the second weekend in June, 1984, and start making plans to get back to PA: Big Brother says it's gonna be great . . .

1959, it is just marvelous to hear from you. Keep it coming! Judy Agor Aydelott writes that Gordon and she are both lawyers. Judy's firm specializes in medical practice litigation and she finds court work fascinating and demanding. Ann is a sophomore in high school and Deb is a freshman at St. Lawrence. (I can hardly believe that some of you '59ers have college or college-bound children.) Tennis, running, and skiing keep this family in A-1 shape.

Charlottesville, VA claims two of our class, Sue Calnan Bates and Dearing Ward Johns. Sue is a career counsellor at the School of Architecture at the University of Virginia and candidate for a master's in counselling there. Andrew is a first grader, Sarah is in eighth, and Ben is a junior at the high school. Golden retriever, Missy, adds to the bustle in the Bates family. A little Chesapeake Bay sailing and Cape Cod summers round out their year. Dearing has finished her Cardiology Fellowship, has been married for five years, and has a daughter Sarah, fourteen months old.

Joan Synnott Ardrey lives in Greenwich with her husband and sons, thirteen and ten. She has been teaching and translating at the Language Center after receiving her MA in Romance Languages from New York University. Joan is President of the Grace Notes, a singing group, and sees Gale Barton Hartch often and Laura McGehee McCloy once in a while.

Zee Makepeace Douhan was married in June 1982 to Rev. John Douhan, Assoc. Exec. Minister for the American Baptist Churches of Massachusetts. Living in So. Dartmouth, John commutes to Boston and Zee to Friends Academy in No. Dartmouth where she is Development Officer. Zee reports that Susie Goodwillie has opened her consulting firm in Boston after a stint at the Kennedy School at Harvard.

Cynny Nichols Travers' fourteen-year-old son is a trumpet player who travelled to Washington, DC with the New England Conservatory, and her eleven-year-old daughter is a flutist with the Massachusetts Youth Wind Ensemble. Ann Travers Butler has just moved to Elizabeth City, NC — Scott is a freshman at Purdue and Mary, seventeen, is getting her private pilot's license. Jim is a Captain in the Coast Guard.

I spent a lovely weekend at Andover in April for the rededication of Graves Hall, the music building. Melody and harmony were everywhere and the quality of student and faculty performances was striking. A few alumni were allowed to join in Handel's Messiah that Sunday in Cochran Chapel. One of the beautifully renovated and refurbished rooms in Graves Hall was dedicated to our indomitable Kate Friskin.

I hope everyone is already marking down June 1984 for our 25th.

A large and strikingly diverse portion of the Class has responded to random considerations of our more-or-less impending 25th Reunion and various personal reflections on the meaning of the Andover experience in the lives of 240 different forty and forty-one-year-olds. The depth and extent of the responses suggest, at the least, a great deal stronger feeling and curiosity for our high school experience than we have been willing to admit, at least publicly, in the last 20+ years. Please continue to consider what our 25th should be about, and communicate what our approaches to it should be. It's important. Your reactions are important. And requested.

John Cahners phoned in late winter '83 from his home in Palo Alto to express several personal sentiments about the direction of the Class and to indicate strong support for the probing attempts to define our shared experiences. Bill Sherman, who probably questions the great ends and real business of it all, has inquired why the Bulletin doesn't report on "the great Golden Bear (Berkeley) victory over the Cardinal (Stanford)": several obvious answers occur immediately, but Bill, a distinguished San Francisco securities lawyer, assisted the Bears' football team throughout the fall of '82, as a spotter for the radio "Voice of the Golden Bear" and actually wants to highlight same. Bill married Vickie McGraw in July '82, and Bill's daughter, Jennifer, from his former marriage, graduates from Andover (!) in June '83. Andover needs more football spotters and fewer barristers/solicitors.

Dave Moon, who has been a Municipal Court Judge in San Diego County for the past five years, was appointed a California Superior Court Judge in San Diego as of January 1983. Dave reports having seen Sam Givens, who is living in Leucadia in San Diego County and designing a computer program for commodities traders. Tom Campion, far blander when writing to an entire class/school than when communicating individually, writes that he is alive and well and living in Ketchum, ID with his wife and two daughters: Tom says "I practice some law, shuffle a lot of paper and try to stay ahead of the I.R.S."

Tony Lee, who lives in San Carlos, CA with his wife, Margie, and seven-year-old daughter, Teresa, changed careers a year ago and works for Creative Initiative, a non-profit educational foundation in Palo Alto. Charles Kendrick lives in Baltimore and is involved there in commercial real estate; he left The Rouse Company in Columbia, MD three years ago and became director of a federal program at HUD called Urban Development Action Grant (HDAG).

Andy Combe is still serving as Commanding Officer of the USS Flatley, guided missile frigate, where he will serve through November 1983. He writes that he spent the Christmas holidays playing one-upmanship with the Russians off the Cuban Coast, and that he is "still enjoying it all."

Ed Quattlebaum, newly returned to teaching at Andover after a year's stint in Australia, is actively pondering some armed Reggie Smith's success as a baseball player in Japan and wondering generally whether he should consider teaching history in Japan; 2) how to get his son Gus fabulous Thanksgiving day, 1981, football catch into the pages of the Bulletin; and 3) whether to be Class Reunion Chairman in '85.

Steve Hibbard, "reading about my classmates climbing up the career ladder, felt it was time to let us know what rung he son: Steve is a vice president at Bank of Boston in the Public Finance Department responsible for the Massachusetts Group as well as Utilities Revenue Group. Steve continues to live in Weston, MA, as does Nick Danforth, back from Washington, DC.

Evaluating the various ladder rungs, one is reminded that, notwithstanding a strongly felt cynicism for the endless reporting of promotions and new titles, being entirely rungless is sometimes worse than simply being materialistic and distant. Rungs pay bills, Andover helps with the rungs, and, to complete the cycle, Andover and the Bulletin are dedicated to extracting from each of us what's left over, and a little more, after the bills are paid.

Charlie Goodell wrote personally at Christmas that the Notes which appeared in December "reflected a lot of our feelings toward Andover, certainly mine." Charlie has moved to the Wisconsin northwoods where he's practicing neurology and enjoying forests and cross-country skiing.

Once every five years or so, I like to let you all know what I am doing — it's so much fun writing about the rest of you that I often overlook reporting on myself. Well, this is it:

On 1 May 1983, I got married for the second time in twenty years. My wife is Phyllis Stoker, originally from Davenport, IA, an elementary school teacher and a source of love and enlightenment to me. My new daughter is Emily, age seven, to whom I have been partial surrogate father since she was a year old. My son Randy, nineteen, PA '81, is a sophomore at Wesleyan, and Alex, thirteen, lives full time with me for the first time since my divorce from Beth seven years ago. This family is, for me, a source of love, joy and support.

My law practice is in a state of flux as I change locations for the first time since I entered private practice and renovate a building in a developing area of Denver (where I am one of the first to do the developing). We have a small firm which does mostly corporate and commercial work, with an emphasis on litigation.

Having gone through most of the near-40 considerations, I have decided not to change careers but rather to nurture the practice and help it grow. All in all, it seems that, for me, the best years are starting today.

Tom Evslin came all the way from Vermont for my wedding. I can't tell you how warm and wonderful I felt about that. The connection I have with Tom and, on a different level, all of you, through this column is also a source of joy for me. Andy Graham is practicing law in Baltimore in a newly expanded law firm. He sees John Engel and Mark Foster quite frequently. Andy Cohen is back in Israel at Hebrew University. Andy and his wife are studying Arabic and working for a Middle-East-for-everyone. E. Gibson Lanpher is now Deputy Chief of the U.S. Mission in Zimbabwe, having completed three years at the embassy in London. John Marks reports a divorce with joint custody of his son, Daniel, five, who lives with him one-half of the time. John is a founder and director of the Nuclear Network. He has always been one who knows that one person can make a difference.

Robert Trivers reports that he is "even better looking than in 1961." (Aren't we all?) Dave Murphy now holds the class record for children at PA — he has two. Jack Schmedeman is currently Vice President of Operations for an engineering/consulting company in Houston. He, his wife, and four children consider Houston "an amazingly large village." Peter Winship, about whom I would like to know some more, recently returned from a sabbatical year as visiting fellow at Trinity College, Oxford. I don't know where Peter returned to, and I hope he will read this and fill us in. Mac Rogers lives with his wife, Susan, in Cambridge. Mac is a psychiatrist based at Brigham and Women's Hospital. Mac especially asked for the whereabouts of Mike Mahoney. Dennis Cross has sent me letters from many of you which will be included in our next column. You can look forward to hearing from George Hanna, Stewart Wrede, Dennis Holahan, Belden Johnson, Bill Fay and Paige Smith, among others. Pete Mott's wife, Lisa, has asked that any contributions you feel appropriate to advance cancer research, be made payable to the Advanced Medical Research Foundation. She will be happy to receive contributions or to answer questions at 14 Louisburg Square, Boston, MA 02108.

Can any of us really believe that it has been two decades? The Beatles have come and gone; college loans gave way to mortgage and car payments. The years go on, but the memories remain. That is why we have reunions. . . .

Jon Vipond continues to serve as chief counsel for the Pennsylvania Dept. of Public Welfare in Harrisburg, "despite the rapid changes in state and federal law and funding patterns." He reports seeing "friend and soulmate Bill Hunt in NYC. Bill is in wonderful shape."

Norman Hile and his wife, Belinda, now reside in Sacramento where he manages his law firm's office in the state capitol. Long letter from Ty Shen of Wayland, MA: Three children (Christopher, six; Victoria, four and Sarah, two); a dog; a wife and two station wagons. When not car-pooling, camping and becoming more conservative ("I still have not taken up golf or voted republican, yet"), Ty is VP of Research for Cabot Advertising in Boston. He reports seeing another Wayland resident, Charles Martin, M.D.

We all owe Bruce Cleverly a great deal of gratitude for the tireless hours of behind-the-scenes work on our 20th reunion. His efforts made it happen. Thank you Bruce. More after the reunion.

Mary Stevens of the Alumni Office received word through Bruce Cleverly of Raymond Marusi's death on 28 January 1983. We have, at this time, no further information on this sad news.

"I can't believe it's been twenty years!" echoed across the PA campus as twenty-seven classmates, thirty-seven percent, of AA '63 reunited. Jackie Van Aubel Janssens came across the Atlantic from Belgium, Morley Marshall Knoll flew across the country from Oregon, and Jonell Briggs Crook put the most mileage on her car driving to Andover from Illinois. It was a glorious weekend! We all basked in the brilliant sun as we rekindled old friendships, made new ones, and compared notes on the events of the last two decades which molded our lives. The jam-packed weekend, beautifully organized by the school, Jackie Sutton Cleverly and her husband, Bruce PA '63, (I loved the umbrella!) began with a cocktail party Friday evening. Mrs. Scisson and Mlle. Barratte highlighted the party on the eve of their respective trips abroad. Sue Coolidge Wolkoff, looking lovelier than ever, was there with her seven-year-old daughter as was Meg Power with her almost two-year-old, Emily. Sue, after spending 12 years in southern Indiana, now lives in Beverly, MA and loves her job teaching elementary school. Meg lives in Arlington, VA and after spending six years with the government, is now in private practice with her husband as an energy consultant. Maria Pastoriza Bonetti, looking radiant, came all the way from the Dominican Republic. She attended the cocktail party with her husband and three children, Claudina, 12, Maria, 10, and Roberto, 8. Maria's oldest is considering applying to PA.

Our outdoor dinner found Muffie Ketcham Bozarth from Richmond, VA comparing notes with Jackie Van Aubel Janssens on raising two sons. Jackie, who looks as young as the day we graduated brought along wonderful pictures of her 17- and 15-year-old sons and handsome husband. Cindy Sorensen, who's kept in touch with most of us through the Alumnae Fund, is about to exercise her wanderlust. She has just left her school-teaching profession of the last ten years, and will be teaching sailing in Boston this summer; this fall . . . who knows, perhaps a trip around the world on a tramp steamer. Carrie Holcombe Damp, vivacious as ever, teaches fourth grade at Milton Academy and lives in Milton with her husband, Andy and six-year-old son, Alexander. Sue Burton, an interior designer at the National Geographic Society flew up from Washington, DC with Karla Haartz Cortelyou who heads the math department at the Madeira School outside of Washington. Jonell Briggs Crook gave us all a taste of her Cambridge Diet plan. Jonell looks great and is manager of a regional division of the Cambridge Plan. She lives in O'Fallon, IL with her good-looking husband, Steve, and two sons, John, 14 and Brad, 11. Barbara Hoffmann Beardsley now has three daughters — six, 4½, and six months, and an impressive new business, Art Conservation, Inc. located at her Dudley Homestead in Raymond, NH. Professional belly dancer Karen Flack Bonnell, also an entrepreneur, owns her own sewing business. She and her husband (a great reunion photographer) live in Montvale, NJ with their two children, ten and seven years old. All of Abbot '63 stayed in Taylor Hall, and "lights out" was late on Friday night.

Knoll, looking fit and terrific, started her day with a run. Morley lives in Portland, OR with lawyer husband, Jim, and two daughters Julie, eight and Jessica, five. Morley works as a systems analyst at the US Bancorp. Saturday's picnic saw the arrival of Margie Brown Coakley and family who live in East Walpole, MA. Margie is married to a Congregational minister and has three small children. Barbara Rugen, bright and beaming, from Northboro, MA arrived Saturday also. She is the mother of two children, six and three, and teaches drama and theatre at Holy Cross. Iris Vardavoulis Blackmer Osgood looked radiant as she described her new house (Newtown, CT), her new job (writer at Pepsico International), and new husband (of three years). Emily Moulton Hall was there and brought news that Bo Moulton is a bacteriologist in Australia. Debbie Fitts, picnicking on the green, told us she is now a reporter for a newspaper in Westerly, RI and lives in No. Stonington, CT. Maidy Wilkins Haslinger, husband Karl Heinz, and three children, Robert, nine, Karl, seven, and Ellen, five, came by for the tea at Morton House as did Freddie Moxon Heller, husband, son Cisco, 11, and Archie, six months. Freddie is a doctor with an Ob-Gyn specialty living outside of Reading, PA. Also at the tea were Miss Judd, Miss Goodwin and Miss Ritchie, none of whom are any different than they were in 1963. Groups of us revisited the Abbot chapel and Draper Hall, which looks shabby for its lack of use, and has been condemned as a firetrap. That didn't prevent us from revisiting our former quarters, however. Dinner in Commons, dancing in the gym, and drinks at the Andover Inn filled Saturday night.

Hilary Hayes and her family hosted Sunday's brunch ending the weekend's festivities. Hilary is a nurse outside of St. Petersburg, FL and still has that warm smile and glowing eyes that we love so well. Betsy Cadbury LaCourse, from Quebec, joined the brunch with Meg. Betsy is an opera singer in Montreal and has a small daughter. Cynthia Kimball Merriam was there and talked of her life in Lexington as a full-time mother of her three children ages 7½, 5, and 1½. Her sister Margaret Kimball was also there. Margie is a psychiatric social worker and lives in Cambridge, MA. The weekend ended at about two o'clock when we all headed our separate ways (till our 25th . . .).

The problem with these notes is that they cannot adequately convey what spark and fun we all had during the two or so days at Andover — or how great everyone looked. Also they cannot do justice to the efforts Ann Harris Furgerson put into tracking down classmates. Although not there in person, Ann joined us in spirit and via Ma Bell. Her massive compilation of information from far flung classmates (Muthoni Gitata in Kenya) to lost ones like Lisa Colby in England, in an up-dated "Blue Book" gave all who went through it a sense of really being in touch with the class of '63. Many thanks to you, Ann. We have lots of information on classmates much too voluminous to detail here. It is being compiled into an up-dated class directory and will be available through Cindy Sorenson for $3.00 to cover the cost of duplicating and mailing. The reunion was, for me, an interesting glimpse into our past and present and I look forward to another gathering of even more classmates (ahem, Ann and Helen) in five more years. Wishing everyone a happy summer, Mimi.

Judith Butler Hanson writes that she is looking forward to the reunion as we all are. Elizabeth (Betsy) Cadbury-Lacourse writes she is singing in the Opera de Montreal and has just finished a production of Fidelio in March and will be doing Verdi's Macbeth for the spring. This sounds very impressive and cultural Betsy. Hope it's fun! Her husband Rene is the Chorus Master and they have a little girl Catherine (Cate) who is two years old. Betsy also writes she is playing competition tennis in Montreal in her free time. I was particularly glad to hear from Betsy as she and I grew up in the same town and made many a trip back back and forth to Abbot together. Margaret Brown Coakley writes that she is at home now with Mary, 3 years, and Philip seventeen months. As those of us with children know, her life is filled with meetings and children but she writes that it is a pleasant change for her. She is singing in a choir at church doing Faure's Requiem just as Fidelio did. She is also helping with a youth group doing plays and activities. Fredericka Moxon Heller's life is interesting. She writes that she has a second son born 5 December 1982 and that she is completing her residency in Obstetrics and Gynecology. She is nursing her baby while working full time and says it's a real challenge but the support of her husband and ten-year-old son really help. She plans to go into private practice in July 1984.

Meanwhile she enjoys their farm, fourteen cats and three dogs! Barbara Hoffmann Beardsley has a new little girl, Elisabeth Marie, born 10 October 1982 and meanwhile she has been lecturing at schools and colleges on art conservation as a career combining art and science. Barbara also is coming to the reunion. So long for now . . . more news after the reunion. Jackie.

Reading the reunion reports in the adjoining column and elsewhere whets my appetite for June '84, which, I need hardly remind one and all, will see the Class of '66 celebrate the 20th anniversary of its graduation from Andover. Already, Doug Mansfield has volunteered for the post of Sports Chairman for the Reunion, in honor of the Olympic year. The rest of the Reunion Committee is, as they say, in formation. If you don't want to join in the planning parties, at least plan on making it up to Massachusetts in June.

Doug and Annick stopped by my office one Friday night on a visit from Wellesley. Having two young children cuts down on the exotic vacation destinations, we agreed. I had a rare visitor to my home this quarter as well: Jay Heard, whose sister happens to live in Bronxville. We were suffering through the commuter train strike in opposite directions: I was having trouble getting into the city to work; Jay, who lives in New York, was struggling to get out to see a girlfriend in Connecticut.

The press clipping of the year, so far, comes from the Bay State Business World, which reports that Mel Weinberger lives with Mrs. Weinberger in West Newton and has joined the R.M. Bradley real estate firm of Boston. I can also report that Mel has been active in condominium development and appears, in the publicity photos, slightly more serious than when last seen in Commons. Or should I say mildly.

Before the suspense becomes too unbearable, I am pleased to be able to update last issue's item on Peter Smith, Green Mountain politician. "You can fool some of the people some of the time," is Peter's modest way of announcing that he has been elected Lt. Governor of Vermont. Peter, Sally and three sons, aged ten, eight and four, live in Middlesex and welcome any voting classmates in the neighborhood.

The oldest Smith son is named Benjamin, which coincidentally is the name of the youngest of three Hay sons. Father Jon is one-half the law partnership of Rubin Hay in Framingham, MA and makes the offer to Randy Roden: "If you'll send me your address, I'll send you a wedding present." What happens if I send you the address, Jon?

Bob Cheek has provided another testimonial for Diary of a Yankee-Hater, which will be provided for a modest surcharge our 20th in place of the traditional fun hats. Bob, you will remember, is an FI lawyer in Washington, so there is no way he would have anything to do with deceptive advertising. Bob and Judy's first child, Jonathan Scott Cheek, was born last August.

Juice Lockhart has returned from Belgium with wife Cricket and two-year-old daughter Grace and has settled in Pittsborough where he is an assistant treasurer with Gulf Oil, which is probably why he signs himself "J.B." now.

And to close, our annual word on the apocalypse: "As I approach my 38th birthday, I understand what Prospero meant by, 'every third thought shall be my grave.' It's an allusion, Sartore." —John Gagne.

Jim Milmo is with General Electric and would like to hear from Tom Garner. And Bill Hagen has switched from banking to the coal business in Louisville — Clean Coal Terminals is the name of his company.

it Meade is the new VP, Finance of Laub Technicon in Detroit and reports that Mac McCabe has left L. L. Bean and is now Director of Publications for the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. Kit's former neighbor in Shaker Heights, Lou Orimer, is with the law firm of Jones & Lay in Cleveland and is in the process of restoring a century-old house. . . . Carl Ibertson and wife Rita have two boys, ages four and twelve in Fresno, CA where Carl is part owner/manager of a produce packing company. . . . Doug Karlson and Rebecca have a two-year-old daughter, Sarah. Conn. Rumor has it that Steve Devereaux is with Prince Manufacturing in New Jersey. Will someone please verify? Brink Messick married Stefania Pandolfo on 15 April. Brink is a resident associate in anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania where he specializes in the Middle East.

Harry Durham is president of the Casper, WY Symphony Orchestra and is a senior partner in his law firm. He and Lynda have two children, Laurel, six, and Chris, eight. And Dick O'Shaughnessy and Jackie have three boys: Richard, eight, Pat, seven, and Joe, five. Dick is a doctor of perinatology at Ohio State Hospital. Norv Dickerson saw John Whisnant recently in Charlotte. Norv is practicing law in Charlotte, enjoying his backyard swimming pool and children, Ken, seven and Logan, six. . . . Dave Roe has taken a leave from the Environmental Defense Fund to lecture on Energy and Environment at Harvard Law School. . . . Tim Mahoney is with Consolidated Productions in Durate, CA, specializing in the transportation of theatrical equipment.

The news is babies. Wendy Treneer Feltman gave birth to her second son, John Lawson Feltman, on 11 December 1982. He weighed 9 lbs. 7 oz. "Lawson's" older brother, Toby, is eleven years old and in fifth grade.

Faye Green Steacy gave Wendy the news of the birth of her second son, Zachary, born in January. Zachary weighed 10 lbs. 8 oz.! To complete the baby news, I also gave birth to a boy, Philip Rahilly Crawford, on 24 January. He weighed 6 lbs. 15 oz. which seems tiny in this company. He is our first child and I have been experiencing the adjustment problems of leaving the work force for full-time motherhood. Quite a change. But if the payoff is a happy, well-adjusted child, it is worth my struggle with this new role/lifestyle.

I always hear from Kathy Abler Harvey and enjoy her letters. She was in Paris briefly to see an ailing friend and was able to see other friends during the trip. Her husband, Julian, had a composition of his performed at Chicago's Goodman Theatre. Kathy is very proud.

Coincidentally, Ellen Huntington Bryant and her husband Bob were in New England on a ski trip when my son Philip was a week old. They came by to see the new babe. As always, it was wonderful to see Ellen and Bob. She is teaching part-time when her two daughters are in school.

Send me your news!

Greetings!

I received a letter from Paul Miller who relates that "NBC News, apparently guilt stricken at having sent me to Cairo for eighteen months, has more than atoned for it by insisting that I spend the next two years in France." Paul had dinner in Egypt with Rick Allen and wife Linda who are on a year-long tour around the world. Rick is on a leave of absence from his job at the Atlanta Constitution. Alex Belida is working for the Voice of America as their correspondent in Munich. Arthur Field currently has fellowships from Harvard, Fulbright, and The American Council of Learned Societies and is studying Italian and Renaissance history in Florence. In 1979-80 Arthur had a Prix de Rome from the American Academy in Rome and a research and teaching position at Notre Dame. Fran Klein is currently designing a 400-room hotel in the Algarve in Portugal. He had lunch with Brewie Brewster who is putting together an investor group for the purpose of purchasing television stations. Howard Borgstrom, his wife Carol and two children, live in Alexandria, VA and both work for the Dept. of Energy in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve office.

Carl Johnson has left Colgate after ten years, to be Executive Vice President of Campaign Communications Institute of America, the leading telephone (telemarketing) agency. Spike Tolman is still at Kohler in Wisconsin with wife and two children. In his spare time Spike practices Box Ball and is writing the history of rock & roll for the 20th reunion. Eric Almquist is living in Belmont, MA with wife Nanny and two sons. Eric works as a consultant for Temple, Barker, & Stone in Lexington. Dave Johnson has been elected president of the WPSA (World Professional Squash Association). Dave is the head pro at The Racquet and Tennis Club in Manhattan and is ranked 25th in the US and Canada. Dave lives in Fairfield, CT with his wife and four children. Matt Schneiderman, wife Janet and son Mark, announce the addition of daughter Ellen to their family and Jack and Roz McLean have a third daughter Sylvia Pratt McLean.

Lastly it is with great sadness that I announce the death of John Short on 4 April of cancer. As he did at Andover, John went on to distinguish himself as photographer, writer, and editor of The Harvard Crimson. In 1970, John won the Dana Reed Prize for the best undergraduate writing that year — a brilliant piece on the Weathermen. The piece has been included in the Crimson Anthology — a permanent collection that includes works by FDR, John Kennedy, Galbraith, Halberstam, and others.

Upon graduation John and Terry Kahn '65 went to work for the Provincetown Advocate, a newspaper on Cape Cod. John and Terry brought a new vitality to the paper and John became politically instrumental in organizing the first voter registration drive in Provincetown and reorganizing the Democratic Town Committee. He was a key factor in US Representative Gerry Studds' narrow upset victory over incumbent William Weeks. Provincetown selectman Munroe Moore said, "John Short was one of the greatest things that happened to our town." Besides being politically involved, John also started a town softball league and played hockey as well. Both the Boston Globe and The New York Times did feature articles on John and the political changes in Provincetown.

In 1973, John changed career paths and went to law school at Northeastern. After graduation, he practiced with the Boston firm of Sullivan & Worcester. In 1981 he married Carol Shapiro and moved to St. Thomas, V.I. where he joined the firm of Dudley, Dudley, and Topper. Adrian Dudley eulogized John as The outstanding trial lawyer in the Virgin Islands . . . "A federal judge stated, "John Short wrote the best law brief he had ever read."

Needless to say, John Short's search of excellence, involvement in community, and wonderful wit will be missed by all. He leaves his wife Carol and two stepchildren, Alex, eleven and Katy, nine. Regards, Skip Freeman.

As your new class secretary, I can't say that my mailbox was filled to overflowing with replies to my postcards, but I did get news from some of you and hopefully will hear from others soon.

On this subject, Elizabeth Walker Compton writes, "Maybe it's my age, but I'm getting to the point where I would like to hear about my old friends." Liz and her husband Karl, who were married in February, are about to move to a salt water farm on Deer Isle, ME. Her daughter Sarah is now fourteen. Liz is in the process of becoming a basketmaker and teacher, flower farmer, and first mate to sailor/fisherman Karl.

Marcia Watson Goldberg's second daughter Audrey Gillian, was born in February. Marcia says she and her husband are glad to be back in Maryland near family and old friends. She is temporarily on leave from teaching aerobic dancing.

Lucy Crane Draper and husband John, a lawyer specializing in water rights, have two children, Matthew, ten, and Melissa, six. Lucy loves Santa Fe, where she heads a volunteer group for the local orchestra. She writes, "I feel lucky to be able to be 'at home', though I have the usual wondering and yearnings about careers." Mrs. Crane still lives on the Cape, but winters in Santa Fe.

Speaking of working mothers, perhaps some of you saw Beverly Armsden Daniel's picture and read her comments on that topic in The New York Times Magazine last fall. Bev and several other women were interviewed about coping with careers and motherhood, something I know many of us are doing.

Lonnie Somers Stowe finished her CAGS in family therapy and is now in a doctoral program at Northeastern. Lonnie works in the Norwood schools setting up programs for handicapped children and is also in a private mental health practice as a therapist.

Peigi Donaghy Huseby and her husband Tom have two sons, ages three and one. Peigi keeps in shape playing soccer, running, and lifting weights. She and her family have lived in Palo Alto for several years, but hope to relocate in New England soon.

Mary Margaret Livingston is an assistant professor at Louisiana Tech University. Her field is clinical psychology. . . . Mary Porter is living and working as an artist in Asheville, NC. She enjoys hiking in the mountains and spending occasional weekends on the SC beaches. . . . Melinda Miller Patterson and her husband John have a year old son, Timothy. I recently stayed with them in their new home in Durham, CT. While there, we phoned Bonnie Ware Stepan, whose second daughter, Jessica, was born in March. Her older daughter Jory is fourteen.

Barbara Hazard is an assistant professor of sociology of the development of modern China at the East Asian Studies Institute, Free University of Berlin. She has taught at a Chinese University and was a consultant to an English television network for two documentary films about life in a Chinese village. Hopefully, the films will be shown on American television in the future. Barbara is considering a move back to the States, at least in time for our 20th reunion!

I continue to work as a high school guidance counselor and have two daughters, Heather, six, and Sarah, two. I see the Abbot campus fairly frequently, as it's only an hour away and my sister Kathy lives in Andover.

If anyone didn't get a postcard from me, it's because I don't have your correct address. I hope some of you will drop me a line right now, before you forget. I'll save your news for the next issue.

It isn't clear what the high point of the reunion was: Jay Drake stopping by with his 11-day-old son; John Watkins' spectacular acrylic paintings on display at the Addison Gallery's alumni exhibit; spending more time in a weekend with Abbot women than during all our years as students; or the elegant Saturday night dinner, which set a new standard for reunions: prosciutto with cantalope and honeydew to start; then beef tenderloin, cucumber mousse, pasta salad, and a beet-carrot-zucchini salad, then strawberries with amaretto sauce and praline creme-filled chocolate cake for dessert.

Two dozen of our classmates showed up for some part of the weekend. Initial speculation that Bruce Hughes would not make it — based on his recent trip to Ireland and the absence of reservations — proved unfounded of course. He hustled back from his journey, and the school apparently botched his paperwork. He made it with his bride Lauren, and was not the only one to bring a new wife. So did Rob Barber who brought his bride Bonnie. Though both Bruce and Rob are lawyers in Boston, I want to puncture one scandalous myth about our class. It simply is not true that 149% of our class practices law. Only about 40 members of the class do (roughly 15%). Bink Bacon, another Boston lawyer (and gentleman farmer), stopped by for cocktails Friday night, then left for a wedding. Gordy Baird still is publishing a musical magazine. He showed his face briefly, then went to put his boat in the water on the first weekend without rain in the Northeast in months. George Billings, a vice president of Communications Satellite Corp., also popped in for less time than he would have liked.

Harold Defelice and Peter Evans, our theater mavens, blew in from New York at about the same time. Harold left early, mumbling something about picking up antiques in Maine near where Todd Healy (who now has a hyphenated name I can't remember because I lost my notes) is working with the rural poor.

Moving along, pretty much in alphabetical order, Hunt Deming is a lawyer with the Washington, DC government Scott Gudorf, who traveled the farthest coming up from Ashland, KY, is an internal auditor for a company that needs one, Ashland Oil. Dave Johanson is a partner in a Boston law firm. Ted Kohler is about to move to Seattle, where he will continue with his specialty, vascular surgery.

Jim Lynch is an agricultural consultant in Cambridge, MA focusing on Latin America. Rod McNealy markets baby products for Johnson & Johnson in New Jersey and does a lot of empirical testing at home with his two daughters. Joe Ristuccia consults in the Boston area. Hugh Samson practices law there. Sumner Smith is becoming increasingly active in the family business . . . the marketing of a machine that sweeps up and bales textile waste. And Wurms Yule works for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts on economic development for poor neighborhoods.

Oops, found some other notes. Dur Andrews is a real estate specialist with Data General, living in Wellesley. Ke Blake lives in Pittsburgh and just cut a record of his own stuff (one daddy-lookalike son and another child on the way). Joh Carr is a lawyer in Boston. Don Ganem is moving to California where he will continue his work as an epidemiologist. Ar Ray Short works on historical preservation in New Haven. Rick Devereux, meanwhile, plans to move to Boston's suburbs to make room for a family.

Here's some info about people who didn't make it to the reunion: Bud Allen is a public defender in Burlington, VT. Re Armstrong practices law in Portland, O. John Barclay is an account exec with an agency in Winston-Salem, NC. Jim Blau is a lawyer in Orlando, FL. John Bollinger is an engineer in Nashville. John Buchanan practices law in Washington. Bill Brush is vp of the Scoular Co. in Omaha. Les Callahan is in real estate in Atlanta. Bing Chan is an associate at Northwestern's medical school. Rusty Chapman is a doctor in Greenville, SC. Phil Clinton is a pastor in Janesville, Iowa. Frank Currie is a lawyer in San Francisco. Scott Currier heads radio station in Derry, NH.

Martin Daly is a research fellow at the Univ. of Durham. Mike Deck is a rector in Surrey, B.C., Canada. Dave Dunbar develops real estate in Lewes, DE. Xavier I teves is a bank vice president in Miami. Ralph Finos consults in Framingham, MA. Al Garten practices law in Portland, ME. Don Gates is a trainmaster in Northfield, IL. Bill Gladstone is president of Waterside Productions Inc. in Del Mar, CA. Dan Goddard is an associate actuary at Industrial Indemnity Co. in San Francisco. Hank Goodman is a building contractor in Grass Valley, CA. Gary Hardegree teaches philosophy at U Mass. Henry Hart is a lawyer in a Washington suburb. Jon Hawkins is a sales manager in Solon, Ohio. Bruce Hearey is still practicing law in Cleveland. Dan Koch is a lawyer with the Federal Trade Commission in Washington. Coit Liles says he is structurally unemployed. Bernie Mulholland is an asst. in Plymouth County (MA). Jim Nadel directs the Stanford Jazz Workshop in the Bay area. Dave Northrup is a marketg manger for Cambridge Filter Corp.

Neil Onerheim is a lawyer in Lawrence, MA. Tim Overton raises yearlings in Lexington, KY. Alex Paez-Aragon is back in Mexico. Doug Payne is bureau chief of something, maybe a newspaper, in Hinesville, GA. Sid Pertnoy is a lawyer in Miami. Kit Rawson is a biometrician in Anchorage. Jim Richardson is a senior research scientist for Honeywell in Bloomington, MN. Dick Spaulding practices law in San Francisco. Dito Staley is a student in Providence. Cabe Warren teaches at Tabor. Chris Whipple is an administrator for the NYC Metropotian Assistance Corp. (His new baby prevented a trip for the reunion.) Toby White is a lawyer in Houston. Cliff Wright is equipment-economic manager for the Southern Pacific in San Francisco. And me, I'm Regulatory News Editor of Business Week in Washington.

As I write the first part of these class notes a month before the reunion, I am amazed at the lengths to which people will go not to come back for the big 15th: Steve Shu took a job with Texaco as a project engineer in Luanda, Angola (he lives in Kingwood, TX when he's in the US) . . . John Allison, currently in the Naval War College, is moving to Hawaii . . . Matt O'Meara and wife, Lisa, flew around the world.

Some people stayed closer to the old homestead, however. Howie Whitehead, for example, is in the Boston area and managed to survive a changing of the guard in the Middlesex County District Attorney's Office. He is deputy chief of the criminal bureau under the new administration after serving as first assistant in the outgoing regime.

On the bundle-of-joy front, Skip Jensen and his wife, Kitty, knew early on the sex of their baby — they couldn't resist asking when they found out the doctor knew — but couldn't tell anyone because everybody else wanted to be surprised. 'Twas a boy, Christian, DOB 27 January 1983.

Juliana "Ju Ju" Crane writes that she is still pursuing her goal of obtaining her CPA. Julie also is the mother of two boys and adores motherhood . . . Jane Brown Simeone is the mother of a daughter, Anne, born in June of 1981 . . . Daisy Schnepel is working as a freelance designer and living in Providence, RI . . . Nancy Roberts married Michael Godfrey this past September. Nancy has formed a fund raising consulting firm named Roberts & Guerro . . . Toby Dondis Farman had her second child, a son, Andrew. Daughter, Amy, is three and all four Dondis-Farmans report to be busy and happy . . . Annette Davis is living in Santa Barbara, California and deftly avoids the 9-5 work world. Annette pursues her strong interest in music, jazz dancing and surfing. She visited with Connie Coughlan recently who is living in Northern California. Annette sends special greetings to Cary Cleaver and Doffy Cheney.

Cary Cleaver is the director of the Artists in Residence program for the Georgia Council for the Arts, through which professional dancers, poets, and other artists are placed in community settings to share their art forms. Cary continues to pursue her own artistic interests as well; she sings in a twenty-eight voice acappella choir and quartet and is pursuing her photography as well.

Lynn Black Reed reports the birth of her second child, Lindsay Crocker, on 27 June 1982 . . . Paula Atwood has been working as a nurse in intensive care for the past three years. She is presently traveling with the Nurse Corp. in Arkansas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico. Diane Russell is living in Cambridge. She has worked in publishing, ran a free-lance business, and is now a graduate student and teaching fellow in anthropology at Boston University. She reports she is "short on money but full of happiness." Anne Robinson writes that she is now married and her new name is Mrs. Randall M. Moore. Anne is also a mother of a son, David Thomson Moore, and a daughter, Laura, born last September. The Moores reside in Winter Park, FL.

Karen Seaward's card tells us that she is a graduate student at Stanford University, having almost finished her second year in Materials Science and Engineering. Karen continues to be very interested in sports and is training for her first triathlon, a short series of running, cycling and swimming.

Betsy Handy McCormack is the mother of two; Billy is five years old and Sarah is three. . . . Kathy Nelson is practicing labor law in Albany, NY; and Dr. Dorothy Cheney and her husband, Robert have spent up to fifteen months studying the communication skills of primates in the wilds of East Africa. . . . Karen Urie is an investment counselor with Moseley, Halgarten in Boston. . . . Barbara Camp Gatewood had her first baby Catherine Alice, born last August.

Elaine B. Finbury Lindauer — I have one child, a daughter, Margo, who is two. I contrive to work as an historic preservation consultant/developer. I look forward to seeing you at our 15th.

Nate Cartmell's work as a lawyer has gotten him transferred from here in DC, out to the San Francisco office of Pillsbury, Madison, Sutro. I hated to see him and his wife Suzanne leave. The good news is that they're expecting their first child in August.

Chris St. Lawrence is also a new dad. Chris ran unsuccessfully for the NY State Assembly in 1980, and has since been busy as a financial planner. He's married to Nanci Toole Duffy.

Chuck Jones has left the parish ministry in Jacksonville, FL for further schooling at Drew University. He'll be getting a Ph.D. in 19th Century Studies. Good to hear from you, Chuck!

Other long-silent souls have been in communication. Doug Griggs is engaged and living in Chevy Chase, MD, where he's the Assistant Controller for the Chevy Chase Savings and Loan. Sounds like he's also been doing some travelling in recent years, visiting dangerous spots like Vegas, and safer ones like Honolulu and Montreal. Doug says that Dan Coleman is working for the First National Bank of Boston. And John Malick is still out in Portland, where he and his wife have just had their third child, a son. John's working as an associate at Skidmore, Owings and Merrill. "If anyone out there needs an office building, transit system, luxury condominium or just a country house, give me a call at 503-226-1431, collect."

Also from the West Coast comes a communication from Dr. Johnson Lightfoote, who's an Assist. Prof. in Radiological Sciences at the University of California, Irvine. Johnson asks if anyone has heard from Craig "Slim" Weston. I haven't but maybe he'll be at the reunion next June in Andover. Someone who was on campus, recently, was no other than the guy I work with here on Capitol Hill — Jim Shannon. Jim won this year's Fuess Award, and I think there's a story on that somewhere in this issue.

Another government employee is foreign service man Joe McGhee. Joe and his wife had a daughter last year, and come July, Joe will be working as a Political Officer for the US Embassy in Rome. C. Cecil Wyche writes and asks about Tom Swain. Cecil is working as a securities analyst for Liberty Life Insurance, "and trying to determine how much gravity there is left in the universe." Too much, in my opinion, Cecil.

Fred Strebeigh, who lives in New Haven, visited with me here this winter; he was in town doing some work with Smithsonian Magazine. He sure has been a traveler of late — last summer he was in, among other places, Swaziland.

Rich Nuckolls writes to say that he has started a computer support company and recently bought a house. Guess he didn't have the advantage of the book I just published, Creative Real Estate Financing: A Guide To Buying And Selling Homes In The 80's, which has just been published by John Wiley & Sons of New York. I wrote this with a friend, Garth Marston, who's a former Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and now Chairman and CEO of a savings bank in Boston.

Karl Gores is dividing his time between CBS Television, in their Print Advertising Department, and his own graphics-typesetting business. "Earlier I spent six years as a Vedanta monk," Karl reports. He says he talked with Charlie Layton, "who was associate producing some horror sequel like Friday the 13th, Part II." Dave Ensor is keeping busy as ABC's man in Warsaw. And in Palo Alto and Stanford, Dr. Dan Kent, wife Peg and Son Alex are thriving. Another doc, Bill Zimmern, is in private family practice in Gulf Breeze, FL, where he's married and the father of a young son.

Saeed L. (who asked that his last name not be used for security reasons) writes to say that life in the UK is treating him, his wife and daughter well. Dave Sedgwick is a private counselor in Denver, and hears from people like Dave Marshman and Tom McAvity. Vic Henningsen, according to the Harvard Gazette, is Director of the Freshman Outdoor Program at Harvard. I think Vic is also still in the Doctoral Program at the Ed School there.

Rick Stewart has been working with friends to set up a big herb business out in Cedar Rapids, Iowa — and that seems to be thriving. He wrote to say he was divorced, and I appreciate his courage in passing that on. It's too easy for class notes to appear all sweetness and light, and thanks to Rick for acknowledging another, also important side of the news. Rick has joint custody of the four young Stewarts, and has recently done some travelling in Central America, including a stop off in Costa Rica, where his parents are in the Peace Corps.

Hang in there, brothers.

Hello Class of 1970!

I have lots of news this time around, so with a brief aside to say Happy Birthday to all us thirty-year-olds — here's the news . . . Sandra Urie Thorpe recently participated in the Andover phonathon and sent the following news items; Tobi Solomon Halpern is currently working in word processing at a bank in RI. She hopes to return to her work in expressive therapy when social services funding is available. Stephanie Dantos is selling bonds at the Shawmut National Bank in Boston. She recently visited D.D. Rudolph who's living in Santa Cruz where she has opened her own graphics studio. Good luck to you D.D.!

Joyayne Swift Soule is happy, and her daughter is now three years old! Dorcas Chislom Blackwood is currently working as a printer. Her daughter, Tabitha, is now eight. She has kept in contact with Anne Gares Davis who is living in Peoria, IL. She and her husband now have two children, Nathaniel, four and Owen, fifteen months . . . Christina Steele is enjoying her job with Parker Bros. and is currently in the Video Game Division. Hello Frogger! Linda Moore is working at Western Electric in materials management. She and her husband are currently buying land and intend to begin building a new home soon. They have a fifteen-month-old daughter, Bridget. Lisa Sweitzer is still working as a reporter for New Hampshire public television. She was nominated for a New England Emmy for her work. And Nancy Quick is living in Cambridge, MA and has her own business as a publisher's rep.

Other news includes — Melaine Rosen is working for The New York Times as Manager, Strategic Planning . . . Sarah Bowen Blades and husband, Fred, are living in Fair Haven, NJ where Fred is an ophthalmologist in private practice. They have two children, Sarah, four and Charlie, two. Pam Mallen Carlson and husband Clair are the proud parents of a girl, Kristin, born 18 October '82. They are currently building an addition to their home. (I wonder why?) Anne Crowley went galavanting last fall, visiting London and then going to Egypt for three weeks. Just before Christmas, she ran into Prilly Mendenhall in Alexandria, VA. Prilly has recently moved to the area from France. Pam Huttenberg and her husband moved to Hong Kong last summer; he is with Chase Manhattan Bank and Pam is with Arthur Anderson & Co. They are both enjoying working and living in Hong Kong. See! dual-career marriages can work!

On a recent trip to London, Pam visited with Prissi Sandford. Prissi was fine and thoroughly enjoying living in London . . . Marcie Rickenbacker wrote to say that she's been very busy chasing after twenty-one-month-old Elizabeth when she's not involved in various activities in the Doylestown Newcomers Club.

Last but not least, I talked to Sue Cleveland Jacobson on her birthday in December. Yes, Gillette, Wyoming does still exist and Sue and husband Jake, are loving it. The two little Jacobsons are keeping Sue running, however, and fit for her softball practices.

Well, that's it for this issue. Hope the summer is happy for all. Wish me luck as I head into my thirty-first birthday. Thirty was bad enough — but now I really know I'm in my thirties! Anyone else feel the same way?

HAPPY SUMMER.

P.S. A postscript: Sandra Perkin Van Brunt and husband Jeff are now living in the Connecticut area and in fact were at our home last night for a Kentucky Derby Party. They are the proud parents of nine-month-old Alexandra. As they drove out of the driveway, Sandy and I agreed that the station wagon, kid seat, stroller, etc. were a far cry from her Spanish and tennis (!!!) days at Abbot!

As we are a non-reunion class, these notes will be brief with apologies.

Tom Chamberlain lives in Exeter, NH with his wife and two-year-old son Nathaniel. Bill Enright also has ties with "baby brother": "My partner in a real estate project is an Exie! I'd welcome the opportunity to work with some Andover grads, but there are so few of them in Texas — hope Admissions is planning to correct this oversight."

Jeff Foisie is not one to mince words: "Recently started working at Broadcasting magazine." . . . Rob Hearne now lives in Toronto, managing Banker's Trust Co.'s Canadian money market and foreign exchange trading operation. His wife Nancy recently gave birth to a nine pound boy, headed for the class of 2000!

Congratulation are due Fred Johnson and his wife Jennifer Schroeder Johnson after their marriage 29 May in Williamsburg, VA. After honeymooning in France, they returned to Dallas (4319 N. Hall St. 75219), where Jennifer works as a loan officer with Republic Bank; Fred in strategic planning at Frito-Lay.

Captain Sam Walker is finishing a tour as Executive Officer of a CH-47 "chinook" helicopter company, soon to take command of an Attack Helicopter Platoon. (AH1S "Cobras": which fly 200 mph at treetop level with no visible means of support!) Son Sam Benjamin was born 13 November.

Steve Weiner and wife Katie are also blessed with a child: Christopher Graylock, born on the 31st of January. Quite a New Year's Eve for them.

I'm an Armored Cavalry Platoon Leader in Germany, patrolling the border between West Germany and the "Iron Curtain". Anyone who feels sorry for someone assigned to the same Cavalry Regiment that George Custer commanded at the Little Big Horn River is encouraged to write. Children, marriage, new careers, and a location seem to summarize the year's news. Specifically, Alice Sweeney Miller and her husband are the proud parents of one Franklin C. Miller, Jr., born 5

November 1982, weighing 5 lbs., 13 oz. Alice has taken leave from work until Autumn 1983 to care for her family.

In August 1982 Linda Kennett Rawson, attorney for Harper & Row Publishers in New York, wed Charles Maxwell Harrison, PA '67, textile artist and Director of the Willard Galleries in New York. In her spare time, Linda is writing a chapter on publishing law, with a colleague, for a book to be published by Westview Press later this year.

Megan Shutte is acquiring her real estate license and looking forward to joining a large firm near Berkeley, CA. Aleta Reynolds Crawford writes that husband Jim, PA '72, has finished his medical training and they will be moving from North Carolina to Boston where Jim will complete his residency in pathology at Brigham and Women's Hospital. Aleta and her babes: three-year-old Brice and two-year-old Jenny are busy getting the house ready for sale and preparing for the big move North.

Susan Stone Titterton has recently celebrated her fifth wedding anniversary with Bob. The couple has a one-year-old son named Kevin and live in Elmore, VT "with a 360° view of mountains." Bob is a chef in Stowe; Susan received an MA in counseling from the University of Vermont in '82 and is working as a vocational rehabilitation consultant on a project aimed at employing more handicapped persons in her Vermont county. Jess Strauss was among other alumni/ae whose artwork was on display at the Addison Gallery this spring.

And on the homefront, I have yanked my roots from the government and political arena and have begun working for Chemical Bank as Manager of Marketing Communications. A true commuter family, I leave early each morning to go to Wall Street. My daughter Anna, almost three, goes into the nearby town to day care, while husband Peter drives off to Stamford, CT to work as a rate analyst for a utility conglomerate. Nonetheless, we still planted heaps of strawberry and blueberry plants this summer and would rather live in our Northern Westchester haven of farms, lakes and greenery than closer to the world of concrete and steel. What about the rest of you?

No sooner had I been elected Class Secretary, in what participants would agree was a very controversial meeting, when outgoing Secretary, Stuart Sawabini, informed me: class notes were to be prepared by the end of the week. For all who participated in what I consider to have been the party of the decade, five days was not enough time to recover, much less gather coherent thoughts of the occasion. Memories of specifics are sparse, so please, mates, bring errors and omissions to my attention.

I will start my recount of the Fabulous Tenth with a plain statement to those who made a conscious decision not to attend like, for instance, Jim Rydell, who thought Las Vegas to Andover "was a little far to travel for the weekend": YOU BLEW IT. YOU MISSED OUT. YOU WERE MISSED. Those names most castigated for non-appearance: Majjid Ahmed (probably back in Pakistan), Geoff Aronow (might as well have been in Pakistan), Wells Bacon, Lake Basso, George Bayoud, Hunter Boll, Dave Chase, Bill Crawford, Jimmy Dean, Fritz Drury, Don Dubain, Mike Fox, Geert Geisterfer, Greg Hatton, Dan Herwitz, Seymour House, Jeff Howard, John Ingram, Phil Kemp, Carl Lavin, Jeff Lilly, Peter Lindsay, Peter McCandless, Bruce MacCrellish, Richard Pitnick (remembered for his salad bowl antics at Big Indian), John Rogerson, Russ Selby, Al Senior, Casey Sheahan, Myles Standish, Dave Victor (Dave, three people mistook me for you. I have since decided on a sex change). To them and everyone else who didn't show: WHERE THE HELL WERE YOU GUYS?

To Stuart, Noreen Markley and Betsy (Fauver) Steuber, who organized the whole shebang, BRAVO! Even though Friday's cocktail party ran dry at 1:00 a.m., how were you to know we wanted to get drunk? After all, twenty-five gallons of beer and eight gallons of wine isn't much for fifty people!

There was time on Saturday for a soccer game, where everyone got a chance to see Craig Reynolds' perfectly fit body, for which he later won an award.

At Saturday night's dinner party, everyone showed up in a coat and tie but me, Michael Castro, and Andres Bacalao. That puts me in pretty good company.

After dinner, Blair Richardson (who claimed to have come back from the dead) and I gave awards to the following: Dan Miner, for coming the farthest (Yugoslavia) — Dan is an internist at Johns Hopkins; Marcia McCabe, AA'73, for her social contribution as an author of beauty tips in Soap Digest — Marcia is still Searching for Tomorrow; Bill Kaplan, for "oddest" occupation — blackjack counter; Brooks Roscoe, the Don Dubain award (person who most personified California in body and partial mind) — Brooks is writing movie scripts between Hingham and Hollywood; Craig Reynolds, the Adonis award — Craig is homesteading in Northern California; Bill Boeschstein, for the "J.R." award — Bill lives in Houston, but talks like he's in Dallas (incidentally, Bill is our 1988 Reunion Chairman. Bill, please plan for something more than just Tequila and lemons); Will Schutte, for the Alfalfa award (longest-standing cowlick) — Will is cavorting around New York, looking for the right woman; Kelly Wood, for the Al Pacino look-alike award (Kelly is living free in Colorado Springs) — By the way, Kelly, Hackett, Donahue, Swanson and I thank you for a fun evening. Walter (Boris) Bukawyn was given the Professional Student award by mistake. Boris, in fact, has degrees from both law and business schools. The award is given, instead, to Al Creg — cheer up, Al, sooner or later you'll discover yourself.

Dave Downes and Stuart Sawabini tied for least class notes — hence my presence. Stuart claimed he'd only missed two Bulletins. I guess those were the only two I got, Stu. Dave jets around dealing in T.V. rights for ABC Sports, and is soon to become a dad. Jim Hilbolt won the award for the guy who hasn't changed in ten years (Jim's in New York, with about 50% of our class). If you won an award, and I forgot you, I'll bet you're thankful.

Bob Bonaparte (D.C. lawyer); Craig Brickley; Boris Bukawyn; Ken Cameron; Michael Castro wrote Mykl on his reunion form — flippy, Myk); Phil Chaplin; Scott Clemson; Jon Coffee; (Westport, CT); Will Collins; Al Cregg; Gene Dallago (in the diamond business in New York); Dave Donahue (sales in Boston); Downes; Ken Ehrlich (left his law office at 7:00 p.m. to make dinner, left early to return to office); Peter Fernberger and wife, Bronwyn; Lawson Fisher and wife Christine (San Fran); Robin Foster (Nashville filmmaker); Bill Gifford; Bruce Green and wife, Jim Hackett (Brown Brothers, Boston — great weekend, Jim); Chris Haney (Becker, Haney & Armstrong, Bar Harbor, ME); Dave Harsch (passing the next bar exam. Thanks for keeping things lively, Dave); Brad Hart; Jim Hilbolt; Bill Kaplan; Dick Kaufman; John MacDonald (Merrill Lynch, Boston; — real cute daughter); Scott Midgley and wife (stud farm operator, Pheonix, AZ); Miner; Henry Mueller (where are you, Henry?); Chad Nehrt; Guy Nordenson (New Yorker); Paul Puzanghera, Reynolds, Richardson, (New Yorker); Steve Rockwell; Steve Rooney (New Yorker), Roscoe, Mark Russell (Banker, Boston), Nunzi Sappuppo (Computers, Cambridge. Nunz, Christina Landry wants to get together with you, she's at Morgan Stanley in NYC); Stuart Sawabini (Super job, Stu. The Burlington crowd says hi), Will Schutte (cavorting in NYC), Peter Shanholt, Tom Sommerfield, Steve Sullivan (San Carlos, CA); Dave Swanson (Omaha, NB — great weekend, Dave); Charlie Toy, Bobby Wheeler (criminal lawyer, Chelsea), Art Winter, Sandy Wood (Putney, VT), and Kelly Wood.

Me, I'm just a country lawyer on Cape Cod. I have an extra bedroom, and its summertime, so I expect a few calls. Especially from Schutte, Harsch and Hackett. Bring your own golf clubs.

I've run out of space, folks. Everyone had a great weekend (especially Sunday noon at the Inn), and we missed many people. Why don't all the missing write me and tell us where they are?

(Stuart Sawabini's Class Notes follow)

Tim McChristian will be married 25 June 1983. He presently works for IBM. Joseph Coner was married on 4 September 1982. After finishing Andover, and an undergraduate degree in zoology from the University of MA, he is now working for Bay State Battery in Canton, MA.

Mark Loo is in his second year of residency at the NY Hospital — Cornell Medical Center and finding life long and hard! William Adams has been married two years now and is living in Chicago working for John Noveen & Co. The musician among us, John Major, is married, hopefully moving east this summer, but meanwhile is preparing a concert tour through the California Arts Council. Has anyone heard from Steve Harding? George Oliva has recently become an assistant program director for a radio station in Cleveland.

Philip Kemp is now working for the Chicago office of Salomon Brothers. Everyone in Chicago seems to have run into Bill Gifford, except your class agent! Bill, speak to me. Brad Buchbinder is married and working through his third year at Boston University School of Medicine. They are still living in Cambridge.

At long last Tom Beaton, the super soccer star, has written! He is married to a UVM graduate, and is now finishing an MBA at the U of Virginia, and they hope to move to Boston soon. Tom tells us that Scott Mead is working hard as an investment banker at the First Boston in NYC. Guy Nordenson is now living in NYC and working for Weidlinger Associates, an engineering consulting firm.

Daniel Lasman, our European connection, is living in London and hopes to remain there another three years. He is working for Chase in the commodities division. Randy Gross was just elected President of the Board of Directors of Family Villas, a foster care agency in Phoenix, AZ. Mike Reardon has just entered the political race for the city council district seat in Boston. Best of luck to you, Mike! Rome Arnold will be graduating from the Harvard Business School this June.

ABBOT

Noreen A. Markley
24315 Hoover Ct.
Farmington Hls., MI 48018

Greetings from the tenth reunion. Having recovered from the fun-filled weekend, with excellent weather, I will attempt to report the news that was gathered there:

Dianne Delucia has a new job at the Salem Hospital in Salem, MA, working the laboratories. Dianne took a year off and participated in community theatre, wrote two childrens' books, danced, and had a wonderful time. Kim Grecoe is involved in commercial real estate lending in Baltimore, where her husband Keith Sherwood is in his residency in oral surgery. Lucinda Leach lives in Alexandria, VA and is attending graduate school in cultural anthropology and museum science.

Lorraine Utter is currently with the Peabody Museum at Yale University, but is planning to attend the University of California at Riverside to study botany in the fall. Lorraine has invited all of us to visit her. She also volunteered news of Wendy King. Wendy is in Haiti where she is organizing a coffee-producing co-operative for women. Wendy had been working for the Peace Corps in Nepal. Her husband, Billy Buffum, is working with forestation projects in Haiti.

Vicki Wood is premium buyer for a marketing company, Frankel & Co. in Chicago. She purchases items for regional promotions for United Airlines, McDonald's, and Seven-Up.

Kate Tomlinson is a self-employed consultant/specialist on the Soviet economy and East/West trade; Kate is living in Washington, DC and is obviously having a great time there. Connie Petty is a very happy account executive at Doremus & Co., an advertising agency in New York. Connie has a new address, 321 E. 91st St., Apt. 4A, New York 10028.

Cathy Von Klemperer is the managing editor of books for the Fogg Art Museum and is living in Cambridge. She said that she misses the people from Abbot and was glad to be at the reunion dinner. Lisa Keller is the director of Health Services at Kimball Union Academy, a co-ed prep school (does this sound familiar?) in New Hampshire.

Hollis Connor Gabriel has been teaching in New York City, but is moving to Louisiana, where her husband is a judge for the Fifth Circuit. Nancy Kottke Walters said she has been pursuing the good life in rural Pennsylvania, where she is still interested in art, and takes care of her family, including a little boy. Margo Laskowski Michel was at the reunion on Friday night but I missed talking to her. What are you up to, Margo?

Three Abbot 1973 graduates charmed us with their wonderful children: Ellen Hoitsma, Mary Clements Michelfelder (see Marcia McCabe's Notes) and Mardi Hudson Waggoner. Mardi and young Kate, came in from Seattle. Kathy D'Abre is working in Boston at Fidelity Management, and she helped persuade Kim Whittemore to leave American Bell in New Jersey for one weekend with us. Kim is selling systems to multinational firms.

Christina Landry came up from New York, where she's with Morgan, advising Boston banks on choices for their trust portfolios. Susan Urie Donahue, husband Paul, and Kate T. Nourse '72, came in from Boston. Susan and Paul are working on their new house, and willingly put me up the Thursday night before the reunion. Thanks! Barbara Willis Campbell (who had to cancel her reservation at the last minute) and I talked this week. Barb and Mark Campbell were married in April 1983 and they live on Mt. Desert in Maine. Barb is working in a gift shop and invites visitors.

I know that all that attended and that are not mentioned above, and those who couldn't attend the reunion, have news to share with all of us. Please write Marcia or me at the above addresses. We would love to hear from you.

Post Reunion greetings to the ladies and gents of '73!

Before I begin this column, I want to thank Noreen Markley, ("Mother Superior"), Stu Sawabini and Betsy Fauver Stueber our reunion chairmen for organizing such a wonderful weekend. Everything ran like clockwork and without this terrific trio it could easily have been bedlam!

It was definitely a record-breaking event in more ways than one. First, the weather was gorgeous and after months of rainy weekends on the east coast, that was a minor miracle. We also had a record number of returning alumni/ae. Forty percent of the Abbot class came back... the largest turnout in years! Our gift to the Andover Alumni Fund also was the most generous of any tenth reunion class. Heck! What '73 lacked in decorum, we certainly made up in spirit! For those of you who didn't attend, (or for those who were having too good a time to remember!) I want to fill you in on the highlights of reunion '83.

Friday began with registration, a barbeque and a huge party at Adams

Hall. With their usual zeal, '73 wiped out the evening's beer supply in a mere 20 minutes, forcing Stu Sawabini to dash off into the night for more. (I think we set a record in that department too!) It was a fantastic bash and just great to be all together again!

Saturday, those who were awake enough to walk, marched in the alumni parade. There was a special tea at Morton House for all the Abbot Alumnae. Attending faculty at the tea included Carolyn Goodwin, Dorothy Judd, and Shirley Ritchie. The biggest party of the weekend was '73's class dinner and dance which was held in the new (and beautiful) Abbot wing of the gym. Our special guest was Carolyn Johnston who looks so attractive and calm these days, that it's hard to believe that she once held the "unsavory" Dean of Students job. Don Gordon, Abbot's last headmaster, made a surprise appearance at midnight. He is now the Associate Dean of Bradford College and lives in Andover with his wife Marsha.

Not necessarily a "highlight" but certainly interesting were our luxurious sleeping quarters. A night in Adams Hall should be put on the "Outward Bound" survival program! I hear the sheets were provided by a nearby prison. Remember ten years ago when we would have given anything to sleep in a PA dorm? (Ho Ho Ho)

Here's the news from the "Reunion Rabbits" — Ellen Hoitsma Shelberg's adorable son Matthew, born in August of '82, spent the majority of the weekend in a backpack. Ellen sings in the choir and volunteers at shelter for battered women in Baltimore. Jane Cashin Demers just bought a house in North Andover. She graduated from Bl Business school in Health Management. Susan Macartney Bodell has a two-year old son Bradley and is expecting her second "bundle" in October. Mary Clements Michelfelder is also a Mommy. She has two children, Carol, 2, and Jay who is one. Her husband Bill is an engineer for the Olympic Facilities in Lake Placid, NY and Mary does play therapy for children when her time permits. Alison Polk lives in West Hartford, CT where she works for Aetna Insurance Co. She loves her job but misses her life in L.A.! Her address is 60 Ardmore Road, West Hartford, CT. 06119. Minda Feldman lives in Philadelphia and is self-employed marketing consultant. Please look her up if you come to the city — brotherly love. Her address: 3606 Bair St., Philadelphia, PA 19104. Anne Spad (a.k.a. "Rapunzel") continues to teach Pike School, lives in the Boston area and loves it. Also in the area is Amy Roge who, after getting her degree, spent a lot of time working in Lawrence as a reporter. She now wants to get into the television and communications field. Good luck Amy! Robin Waters gets the award for being the most physically changed alumna. She looks great and is doing various writing jobs on a freelance basis. After extensive traveling she is moving to Aspen this summer.

Josie Martin is assistant to the president of OPIC (Overseas Private Investment Corp.). She also is a speech writer for Vice President (and Andover graduate) George Bush. Now svelte and "de-frizzed" Josie lives in Washington, DC where she frequently goes to exercise class with Lucinda Leach. Judy Webster just left DC after four years and is going to Simmons in Boston this fall. These three "DC Dames" had slowout reunion of their own last fall! Wendy Gamble is at Penn State University studying developmental psychology.

Here's the news from those who couldn't make it to reunion . . . Debra Heifetz had a wonderful excuse for not coming. She just gave birth to a baby boy named Alex! Congratulations. Cathy Armsden is a student at Harvard University School of Design. She's studying architecture and hopes to have her degree by this September. Lynn Chester is in law school at the University of Denver and Natalie Zeigler '72 is earning a wonderful living doing voice overs for commercials.

Well . . . that's the way it was, June 10-12 1983. Don't forget that our 15th reunion is only five years (and a few "crows feet") away so . . . let's try to set another attendance record in 1988! I would like to thank Blair Richardson for my award . . . I'll be sure to include some "beauty tips" in my next column. (The egg yolk and peanut butter tightening masque is one of my favorites . . . UGH!)

Have a wonderful summer and please keep Noreen and me posted on your activities. It was fantastic to see everyone again so, to quote Bill Boeschstein, "Y'all come back now, HEAR?"

J. Peter McCubbin
118 Joralemon Street
Brooklyn, NY 11201

This quarterly slice of life gets easier to compose with each new attempt, especially when Scott McIsaac does it for me. He makes the following contribution: "After graduating from Yale, I worked in architecture and real estate development in D.C. During that time my parents moved to Rochester, home of Brewster Lee (who's doing famously at Cornell Law) and sometime residence of William H. "Lips" Cunliffe, who had a solid reputation as the 'King of Swing of Eastern Irondequoit' before the Midwest beckoned. I am enrolled in a joint MBA/MCP program at Penn, where I occasionally see Roemer McPhee, who's big now, Doug Stockman and Sara Wedeman, a grad in psych." Skipping on he continues . . . "I heard from the Wharton grapevine that Beth Polebaum is at NYU Law and a newlywed. My weekend visits to Brooklyn Heights took me past Claudia Rullman's ancestral home. (Where are you now Claudia?)" Skipping on . . . "my name was misspelled in the back of a joke book called Hell-bent on Insanity. You might be wondering what I could possibly do for an encore."

You bet. Thanks Scott. John Martin, a 2nd-year student at Penn's Med School, is eager to hear from "Fred, Will, Gordon and Marlin," who presumably know who they are." David James Canty, Mr. Mainstream, can solve your legal problems in North Myrtle Beach, SC, where he also serves as local Heart Fund Chairman and Demo cheese. John A. Hallberg "lives at" Lenox Hill Hospital (NYC), where he is a surgery intern. Even after nine years, Steve Miller is still trying to top 'Mother Phillips' and his even more amazing opus, 'The Hand of Man.' His latest creation is a book, Robotics: Applications and Social Implications. Bravo. Bil Zech finished Harvard BS/LS in May. He plans to move with his wife, Eileen, to a better place (SF) to practice law. Bill inquires about Kent Vogel. Any news? Congratulations to Malcolm Teschan, who married last year and is currently studying at Vanderbilt.

Michael Morgan and his bride still represent our country's diplomatic interests in Lima, Peru. Not far (enough) away, though, is Raymond Bowers, who boasts of a bar and dive boat in Belize. Lee Murray writes that he is "still single." Lee is a newly-minted MBA-accountant at Alabama Power. Charles Foxwell trades the long bond for FNB of Boston and is the proud father of a son, Taylor Shaw, who became a 'done deal' last November. Good Job. Kevin Connolly is such a sharp trader that he kept the 20-cent stamp I sent him so that he might send in some news for you. Howard Carter may have encouraged him.

John Pawlowski is a resident (anesthesia) at Mass General and a devoted windsurfer. Bob Oates is a surgical resident at B.U. Ralph Stell is studying for an EE at Northeastern and writes that he is still "working in ultra-preppy Wellesley." Ralph asks of George Ireland's doings in the "Big Apple." One of You (with a bad twitch of terrible handwriting) apparently is making the transition from rock'n roll to computer science at U. Mass.

Steve Michael O'Brien is now engaged. A picture accompanied the announcement and Miss Flynn is certifiably attractive. Congratulations. Gordon Billheimer has announced the formation of a law partnership with his father in Montgomery, West Virginia. Ellen Sullivan teamed up with Frank DeSanto last October. They live in Manhattan.

Is Bob Trehya a banker yet?

Jim Briggs sent a nice letter to you all from Frankfurt, West Germany. Apparently he is the Andover Bulletin's distribution agent for Europe, since he shares the same APO with several classmates. He wrote that Paul Kaiser is at our embassy in Bucharest. Jim seems to be having a good time over there. His tour with the military is up in April, 1984, but his future plans are uncertain. He asks for word of Peter and/or Paul Rysavy, of whom he expects great things, and sends his regards to Ted Nace. Andover alums now comprise 1.5% of Stanford BS. One of us is Grant Donovan, who is enjoying California, despite a rainy spring. He saw Peter Hawkes in Maine over the last Christmas holiday. Peter is now a budding entrepreneur in Portland.

This just in: film-maker David Fishelson has just been signed by the William Morris Agency as a writer-director as well as just having sold his first film called City News to PBS's American Playhouse. We've also learned that he had a New York Premiere recently which two classmates, Jon Meath and Peter Lester, attended.

This Peter is going to miss Stanford very much, but is also pretty keen on Lehman Brothers in New York. If you miss the last Manhattan stop on the Lex don't despair, come see us in the Heights.

I will just have to start from the bottom of the pile of correspondence which has been accumulating thanks to you faithful notersenders. Peter Sellars receives top billing in this column for his accomplishments in the theatre arts community and related fields (with Peter, that might mean ballooning) which garnered him the honor and five-year financial security of a MacArthur Foundation grant — no strings attached except the attendant publicity. I heard Peter on National Public Radio not long ago — congratulations! Now on to those lacking-in-recognition-but-nonetheless-worthy rest of the class: Lawrence Kemp is still trading grain in southern Minnesota, beans too. Cathy Chapman is in med school at the University of Miami "plagued by bugs, drugs and pathology." Al Lintel is married and working for Texas Instruments in Dallas. Dennis Pratt has graduated with a BA in computer science and is starting his masters in same this year at Northwestern. Wink Harvey sent the news about Al Lintel, and not a word about himself. . . . Tilly Woodward sounds fulfilled with a life in Illinois teaching part-time at Richland Community College, making sculpture and being married. Working backwards, she graduated from the Kansas City Art Institute with a BFA in 1980, married Steve Bell and received her MFA from the University of Kansas in 1982. Dana Halsted (nee Horowitz) has been in LA for three years. She did not detail which movie-of-the-week, TV show or soap that she is appearing in but regardless, it seems she is successful and I hope I stumble across her one day when I'm home sick. Michael Fleming wrote on a graphic design and illustration letterhead and he reported news of Peter Mitchell who is married, Dave Zelon who is pumping iron in California and prompting physique contests. Mike is a LTJG (lieutenant junior grade?) in the Navy and is serving on board the USS Ranger, an aircraft carrier out of San Diego. He's married, too. Mike also has number one daughter to look after. Sarah Davis, one of my old rowing buddies, reports in from DC that she is working in an outdoor outfitters store and enjoying it a lot more than secretarial work. She is training to be an EMT and to do ambulance work. Last summer Sarah rode cross country on her bike from Oregon to Massachusetts. Steve Bache reports that he lost his cool, and his footing at the New Orleans wedding of Mike Weill and fainted. He recovered quickly enough to escort out the appropriate bridesmaid, but I think Steve might need to practice before he takes his stand at the altar! Steve continues at Columbia B School. John Kingery is working as a controller of a startup telecommunications company in Santa Clara. Bob Thorndike has graduated from St. Lawrence, has married and is presently working as caretaker of the Glades, a large property on the Shore in Scituate, MA. Tony Nahas writes that he is finishing his MA at the Sorbonne in medieval Islamic history after spending five months in Cairo. He is going to continue studying political science in Paris. Bert Garry is engaged to be married in July to Ann Cahill. Priscilla Perry Danforth sounds very happy working at Bain and Co. as does Stephanie Curtis. Priscilla has seen Brad Geier frequently, the latter at Harvard B. School. Donna Cameron is working as an associate with the Boston law firm of Herrick and Smith. She ran into Chris Finn (how the hell are you, Christopher?) in DC where he is working on the Hill. And Donna asks why Joanie Bozek doesn't ever answer her phone.

It is about time for a new paragraph or else editor Regan will fire me for failure to be competent. I came across Bill Whiteford's name in print, tho' I might be in error if there is another Bill Whiteford who presented a paper at the May meeting of the Geological Society of America in Salt Lake City. I won't bore you all with the rock-specific details but I hope it was you, Bill, and that it went well. Martha Frederick is playing the harp, singing, and working in the Music Library in NYC. Lisa Doyle remains at Gillette in Boston, and Zareen Mirza is working 9-9 on art at the Boston Museum School. Matt Finnie is applying to business school promising not to go corporate. Phil Hueber is in marketing for Majers, Inc. in Connecticut. Geoff Richards shuffles paper for Irving Trust in NYC (Matt says that they must be important papers.) Geoff reports for himself that he graduated from Wharton in '81 and is employed with Irving Trust in the Securities Industry Dept. Pick your version. Matt asks where is Ken Meuser? Caren Ponty has her master's from Brandeis and is Special Assistant to the commissioner for the Human Resources Administration; in NYC. Carley Pennink received her degree in environmental design from the Parsons School in NYC and is working for an architect. Sagar Parikh is in med school at McGill in Montreal after getting a degree in biomedical engineering from Columbia. Jon Mudge's whereabouts and occupation were mostly illegible — I deciphered Santa Barbara County Grand Jury. More details, Jon? Sarah Gates sent me a lovely letter from Alaska. She has abandoned her Andover Admissions Officer's cap for that of a fisherman, lobbyist, waitress. She sounds exuberant. And I am off to Italy with my husband for vacation and then home for a busy summer of field work, office work, and recreation to include all that the Rockies can offer!

I am sorry that this issue will end on a sad note but as I found sad news on the top of my pile, I will relate to you a brief story about the death on 25 March 1983 of our classmate, Jay Metcalf. I received the program prepared for his memorial service held in Chevy Chase. It was a celebration of a vibrant life ended by illness. Jay completed his bachelor's in engineering at Cornell and a master's at UC-Berkeley, also in engineering. He had a great love of sailing and took time off to sail to Tahiti. Apparently he was flown back to the States with an ailment ultimately diagnosed as congestive heart disease. My incomplete knowledge ends here though I imagine that the smile I remember greeting me at the turn of a path was evidence of much courage and faith which helped him to endure such a debilitating disease. I am sure that you join me in extending our warmest sympathy to his family and friends.

Since this issue should really be dedicated exclusively to reuniting classes, I shall abbreviate wherever possible. Which shouldn't be difficult since naughty 'mates insist that I divine the whereabouts and whatuptos of the glorious '76 trombones. I shall say no more in re: Correspondence with Class Secretary.

Scott Bone scribbles from Boston, where he serves as Associate Director of WNEV-TV's six and eleven o'clock news — Monday to Friday. I guess nothing too important ever happens on the weekends anyway, except of course for the Kentucky Derby, which surprised several of the turf pundits this year around. Congratulations Chris Mullen — many more in the future!

Our West Coast contingent has a scribe in Sydnor Barksdale Penick IV, who brings long-awaited news concerning himself and others. Bardy is busy at Hastings School, law of course, and reports that Heather White lives in Berkeley running her own business, and that Derek Brown toils at ABC. Clearly the media has been the message for the Class of '76.

Cameron Douglas, whom I last saw suspended from two wooden circles suspended by canvas straps from the ceiling of the Old Gym (now the Gelb Reception area — ed.) is in his second year of the doctoral program in microbiology at UCLA. Cammy claims he's busy cloning, and dabbles a bit in genetic manipulation — but we all know what this scientific jargon translates to in real English. We all look forward to his imminent return to New England. Speaking of which, Pamela Eaton and I shall be returning to the land of four seasons in June, I to teach American government at the PA summer session, thereafter to work in the College Counseling Office and live in Rockwell, Pamela to pursue her environmentally oriented metier.

One of the true pleasures of this job is to receive a thoughtful letter from a classmate from whom I haven't heard in a while, and about whom, therefore, I have not reported for years. Chip Haslun wrote recently, and is now occupied with Citizen Group Publications in Boston. He has threatened to settle down after learning all that there is to know about the publishing industry — say in twenty years or so. I look forward to hearing more from him, and to seeing him and others in the Boston area, when we move.

Chip writes of Michael Krumpe, caught in action at the Footlight Parade — the opening of this year's theater season. Chris Bensley is pursuing a career in photography — and appeared well to Mr. Haslun. Adam Poole should be appearing in print soon — the grapevine has it that his theories for economic recovery shall soon supplant those of the Administration. Ben Rockefeller is apparently in the computer business — presumably in Silicon Valley East — the Greater Boston Area.

Chip also mentioned having seen Sang Curtis, and that Carrie McDuffy was pursuing a career as a new wave rock goddess. Watch that space!

My special thanks, again, to Chip for his heartwarming note. I haven't heard so much about so many in so long, I was beginning to think that the mail readers had slipped up.

Finally, folks, let's put our collective thoughts toward our tenth reunion. If I could get just one idea from everyone who's written since the last reunion — I'd still have to come up with the menu for Saturday night.

Ask anyone who was at our 5th Reunion and you'll get a uniform answer — It was a blast! A good mix of people which added flare to the reunion. The biggest surprise was the tall, dark, and handsome Dave

Martha Hill '78 and Connie Barrett '78

Whittemore who lost so much weight that no one recognized him. People kept arriving all weekend long until we reached a grand total of 109 classmates Saturday night at the dinner dance.

Gabriele Hagedorn flew in from West Germany, Duke Crawford arrived from Italy, and Will Mausehardt, after receiving an enthusiastic phone call at 3 a.m. Saturday morning from Mary Camp and George St. Laurent, decided he wasn't going to miss out on the fun and caught a plane from Florida! We had a good turnout from the Chicago contingent including Jim Phelps, Bob Putney, John Kukral, Pete Brennen and Rick McNerney. Stuart Fullerton managed to attend Reunion but sent regrets from his Berkeley friends Doug Ba and Charlie Schueler. It's too bad a lot of the Boston and NYC people did not make it . . . but that was their loss. Peter Tobasco and Mike Cannell made a gallant effort and hitched after having multiple car failures. I wish I could mention everyone's attendance, but unfortunately I'm limited in space.

Although Sloan Condren was not at the reunion, I found out she married Peter Casleman (a PA grad) last summer. Kath Klapkiw subjected her husband, Dave, our wild classmates, but he survived. St. Prochniak is getting married this summer. I'm relieved to announce that, so far, to my knowledge no one has any children.

During Reunion we elected Nick Stoneman as our new Class Secretary. You can reach him at 285 Ave. C, Apt. 11E, New York, NY 10009. He'd appreciate any mail otherwise beware . . . Jeff Savit and Vic Hull are our Head Class Agents. Anyone interested in being a co-agent please contact Jeff at 10 Harding St., New Bedford, MA 02740. We have recruited 15 people but could use at least 10 more. The more people who volunteer the easier the load for everyone.

After a fun weekend of softball in the sun, partying till 4:30 a.m., good food, reliving old times, renewing and establishing new friendships, we dispersed on Sunday . . . determined to make it back to our 10th year reunion. Peter Frisch departed for a trip to China and Bruce Stanley headed for London to begin an adventuresome summer traveling all over Europe on motorcycle. As for me, I'm returning to active outdoor life out in sunny (snowy) Colorado.

I want to give a special thanks to Chris Shaw and Putsy Cahill Warlick who mathe Reunion such a success and to all those who returned to enjoy our 5th. Keep in touch.

Greetings from the Colorado Rockies! Life is treating me well out here. I had an excellent winter racing, and ended up being selected to represent the U.S. in the 1984 Handicap Olympics which will be held in Innsbruck, Austria next January. Perhaps while I'm over there I'll see Liz Dunn who is studying art (painting) in Edinburgh, Scotland. She is enjoying herself there, but regrets to be missing our 5th. Susan Landy, who is still in Jerusalem, is finishing up her degree this summer and will probably move to a kibbutz in Galil. Unfortunately Landy will not be able to live up our reunion with her presence . . . she realizes it will be difficult but the party will have to go on without her.

It seems like most of our classmates have tuck with academia or jumped into the corporate business world, though several have managed to travel too. Grace Oseki is completing archaeology work for Stanford University in Peru. Also in Peru were Peter Obeason and Mike Cannell. Peter claims that Mike plans to display his recent command of the salsa beat at our 5th. As Peter says, "we always knew there was a little hico in old Mike, eh?"

On the other side of the world Mary Lamp spent last summer on a Morehead Foundation grant studying labor-management relations in London, Moscow, and Tokyo with major detours through Europe, Thailand, Hong Kong, and Japan. She presently works for Kidder, Peabody & Co. in their Corporate Finance Division in Los Angeles. Steven Kargman is a Henry Luce Scholar working with the government board in Singapore. He was a Rhodes finalist and graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Swarthmore. He will be attending Yale Law School in September. Richard Erney is working hard but enjoying himself as a first year law student at the University of Minnesota. He spent an interesting summer during college working on an Indian Reservation in Wisconsin, and last summer he did the Minnesota Outward Bound.

Bruce Conklin, who is a first year medical student at Case Western Reserve in Cleveland, spent an exciting and interesting six months last year studying and traveling in Kenya. Bruce wrote, "It was good to leave the many good friends there, and I will always have fond memories of the gentle and proud people in such a beautiful country." Then in June-July '82 he traveled in NW India spending most of his time in Tibetan areas of the Himalayas. You should give us a slide show sometime, Bruce! Also attending Medical School are Chuck Wyatt at Baylor College in Houston, Stephen Kaufmann in New Orleans, and Mike Horne, who is on a full tuition scholarship at Tulane working towards a Ph.D. in the Physiology Dept. under their Neuroscience Program.

Other graduate students include Eve Rowley who is a Ph.D. candidate in Anthropology at Yale, and Sara Shepard who is pursuing a M.A. in Student Personnel Services at Indiana University in PA. Sara is doing an assistantship in the Counseling and Student Development Center where she does career and personal counseling, workshops, and consultation with other professionals and paraprofessionals. Thaniel Bainten currently is a graduate student at Bryn Mawr in the field of Slavic Language and Literature. He is also working as an intern for the American Council of Teachers of Russian and hopes to travel for ten months in the Soviet Union with this program. Gabriele Hagedorn is coming to our reunion from Munster, W. Germany where she is presently working on an M.A. degree. Gabriele is doing bibliographical research on 18th century literature for an institute belonging to the English Department. Although she finds the work time consuming, she is enjoying the challenge.

Daniel Weld is at MIT working on developing artificial intelligence. Daniel's roommate Mike Michard is working for a computer company in Waltham and doing well. While playing ultimate Frisbee, Daniel met Josh Trueheart who is doing research in genetics. J. P. Clejan is grinding away at Cal Tech after an idyllic summer on the Mediterranean "following his old hedonistic pursuits." Pam Carter is pursuing a graduate degree in geology, but she claims she is not a pre-Exxon. She informed me that Mary Stacey got married last summer. A belated congratulations from all of us Mary!

Greenough Nowakoski after leaving Andover, spent three years at a radical farm-based school called East Hill Farm. She wrote, "the school opened my eyes, rosied my cheeks, and built biceps." She presently is a senior at Marlboro College "another great place where students design their own education." Sean Callahan graduated from Tufts Magna Cum Laude and is now Assistant Director of Tufts Conference Bureau. Clarisa Porter is working as an intern in Senator Proxmire's office in DC. Last but not least, Jim Spader who played Brooke Shields' brother in Endless Love, is now a regular cast member on NBC's The Family Tree. While he is waiting for the series to be renewed, Jim keeps busy studying acting at Michael Chekov Studios, doing auditions, and taking saxophone lessons.

Final exams, papers, an apartment full of furniture to move (where, I don't know), and no money . . . it must be time for the next Andover Bulletin article. I don't have the most recent copy around and have managed to mix up all the notes, so if I repeat from the last issue, blame it on the water in Philadelphia.

Kathy Dooley, after taking a year off and working for Art and Auction magazine in New York, is finishing up her sophomore year at Smith. She has seen lots of people in her travels around "The City." She saw Jazz Robb, Jane Sullivan, Paige Evans, Kari McCabe, and Nathalie Valette . . . over a wonderful spaghetti dinner at la Josie Iselin. She also bumped into Fred Bever who was in a phone booth outside of the West End Cafe and getting ready to dash off and see Maiya Greaves '81 and Susan and Mark '81 Canning who seem to be enjoying Barnard and Columbia. Apparently, Averill Powers, Russ Dupuy, and Avatar Kramer managed to see each other during Christmas break in St. Thomas. Teresa Kendregan is spending some time at the University of Nebraska.

Kate Conway, like Kathy, is majoring in economics at Smith; her concentration is statistics. This summer Kathy hopes to have a Phelps House reunion hopefully in Paris, with Nat, Murrey Nelson (who is in Paris this spring), and Jennifer Kimball who is presently a sophomore at Amherst. Mike Lee also in Paris; Jon Dee and Bob Feinberg were in New York over vacation and wish everybody a Happy New Year! Beckett Royce and Jocelyn Wise are sharing an apartment in Amherst and taking courses at the University of Massachusetts.

Other people abroad include Elizabeth Daley (University of Penn) who is studying at King's College in London, Sally Van Cleve (Princeton) at the University of Florence where she's bumping into lots of PA people, and Mauro Mariotti who is attending University in Rome. He reports that his "social condition is still that of a bachelor!"

Here at Penn Michele Lee and I are both comparative literature majors and Elizabeth Okun is a psychology major. Also, congratulations go out to Ilse DeVeer who won a Sol Feinstone Award "For contributions to social or educational change within or outside the University Community."

Julie Hey has transferred from Smith to Williams. She is dancing — performing with a group from Williams — helping to coach the gymnastics team at the local YMCA, is majoring in history with a concentration in Asian Studies, and is taking Chinese . . . Pam Burdman is at Princeton, majoring in Eastern philosophy and is also taking Chinese . . . John North reports from Duke that everything is great, especially the weather. He and Pat Lynch are both in the Public Policy Program and are looking forward to summer internships in DC. He reports that Justin Cronin and Connor Haugh (who asks that his alumni donation be used for the Fuess Hall ice machine) were last seen at "Rags" in Bedford Hills, NY.

Ford O'Neil, after working for a year at Connecticut General Life Insurance Co., is presently at Harvard (Class of '85). He is playing on the lacrosse team, actively involved in politics, and majoring in government. Also playing lacrosse is Rob Anderson at Yale. As of the game against Penn, he had managed to be knocked unconscious only once on the lacrosse field, otherwise, everything was great.

Sinead Bomba is studying industrial design at Carleton University and enjoying it. Her only complaint is that the skiing in upstate New York is awful. Russ Gravit, at Lehigh, is majoring in business with a minor in classics and plans on taking courses there this summer. He says hello to everybody and warns that this is going to be the year for the Mets.

I hope that everyone has a great summer and an even better fall. For many of us, we're approaching BIG decision time. I wish all the pre-med, pre-vet, pre-law, pre-business, pre-graduate school, pre-whatever people lots of luck. And I wish all the pre-"it's-senior-year-what-am-I-going-to-do-with-my-life?" people (like myself) even more!

Dear Class of 1981:

As I sit here watching the Islanders skate their way to a Stanley Cup title, beer in hand, pizza sauce dripping down my face, the remnants of notes, papers and exams scattered across the floor, I find myself with that uncontrollable urge to relate once again, to the class of 1981 our escapades and adventures of the past few months.

Jim Cleary and Drew Quinn made it back safely from Europe, even after a brief encounter with the Rome police. Another notable from Dartmouth is Doug Hirsch. Named ECAC player of the week in hockey (week of 23-30 January '83), Doug had tallied eleven goals and twelve assists by that time in the season. He notched his first hat trick in the B.C. game.

In other sports related news, Annie Yates, number four on the Princeton women's squash team, had the good fortune to play on the national championship team, as they secured the coveted Howe Cup. Annie also had the pleasure of having Brooke Shields visit her room; Brooke, who will enter Princeton in the fall, and her mother, were slightly appalled to see the post-party condition of the room: four empty kegs on the floor and a strong stench of stale beer.

In the cosmopolitan scene, Carolyn Foley and Lin Pei have been bar-hopping in New York, as they have been out of school since early May. Apparently, all one needs to do is mention either of their names at Melon's to get a table on a crowded night.

Cathy Coyle, having now completed her second year as varsity letterwoman on the Duke Fencing team, is also "managing class honors and a job with the American Dance Festival." She sees a lot of Alison Gibbs, who said she did not want to be mentioned in the Notes.

Anne Rusnak sings for the Harvard-Radcliffe Collegium Musicum, a choral group which gave a concert at Lincoln Center in April. Jennifer Ross and Jenny Greeley are working hard at Harvard and are living together. And I saw Christina Rubio at a crew race this spring at Princeton; she made it down for Houseparties Weekend — see Christina, I remembered.

To those of you who have not contacted school or me and want to have your name and whereabouts published in this ill-fated but masterful column, please get in touch.

Enjoy the summer to the max. Love and Cheers - Bill Ullman

Herrmann are both doing well. I saw Janis Mimura in New York in March and she'll be living with Karen this summer on Nantucket, too.

The Alumni Office forwarded some information that you all sent, unfortunately some of the items were xeroxed and were pretty faded, so forgive any inaccuracies.

Hilary Huber spent the summer in the West Indies and encourages anyone interested in cross-cultural exchange to go on the same program. Cathy Brenner says "Middlebury is fantastic . . . what more can I say?" Big bro John Brenner '81 is studying plant science at UNH and is still in crew. And Mark Orell spent the summer frolicking in the dunes of the Cape. He was waiting tables and recently took a job in a law firm. He ran into Rebecca Routh who was back from visiting Richard Coons '81, at Berkeley. John Kim reports "Air Force Academy is good aside from systematic hazing." Jim Donnelly was active on the U.S. Naval Academy varsity sailing and hockey team, where he saw Bill Slaney at a hockey game. Jim also saw Alex Cochran and Ellen Thompson together at a William and Mary football game. Charlie Taylor is at Illinois Institute of Technology majoring in computer science and is active in his fraternity as a treasurer. Melissa Perkins wrote that Ruth Flanagan is taking classes in the Canal Zone and milking her pony. Melissa wrote to me this past April, enclosing an M&M chocolate cookie and said that Williams life, because of its out-of-the-way location, has a tendency to attract crazy students. Scott Parrish and Dave Duquette went to visit Melissa this past winter in Ohio. Susan Philipp, at Ohio Wesleyan, writes that Tracy Twitty had a good fall term there in the Midwest. She saw Phil Berney over Christmas when they went to the Pocono Mountains and she saw Lynn Snyder over turkey break, along with Cathy DuPuy '81.

Dave Lackey says he is still good friends with Tom Strong and that he had lunch with Randy Wood this past week. Dave competed in a sailboat race from Newport, RI to Bermuda last summer. Kathy Lee is also doing well in New Haven.

Rob Tuller is in England still, at Harrow — "similar to PA but without girls." He's having a great time and is playing rugby. Jen Scheer took the semester off from Smith to work at (?) Magazine in New York . . . Dave Serena, I hear, has a band at Harvard . . . Judith Mulvihill, according to sis Naomi, is existing in Carolina but has not yet decided on a school . . . Cathy Cotins I saw in April at Wesleyan. She's coxing for crew and is pretty happy. Jen Beirnes and I met in New York this winter and she finds Hobart life lots of fun. Coury White was living with Randy Jones all year in Boston working for Greenpeace and visited New York a few times. Calista Woodbridge enjoys Duke's weather and was, at the time she wrote in, eager to visit some friends in the East.

Danny Walker wrote in just after I sent in the winter notes (in fact just two days after) but he included lots of info which is probably dated, but better now than never: Alex Hogg took the year off to work in a law firm. Kurt Timken roomed with Victor Paul last summer in Bean Town and Kurt is living the California life, playing with his new car . . . Femi Obi played football at Trinity this fall, and Danny reports that he's seen quite a few PAers at Cornell —

(Stephen Wemple, Dana Longcope, Rob Harpel, and both Maria Elias and Ellen Nordberg have joined sororities, I believe.)

Keith Lowery, Jamie Anderson, Pete Pedulla, Tom Luongo, are some of the Columbia people I see off and on. Roger Taylor plans to take next year off from school, and Peter and I might get an apartment together this upcoming year . . . Maiya Greaves had an interesting time in India and was actually visiting Wesleyan — more specifically Lisa Lattes — at the same time I was there, and I later heard that Calista was there. Patti Doykos sent a postcard from Florida where she was basking in the sun. Mike Polonsky is beginning to enjoy Stanford life but is thinking of coming East for the summer.

Again, I am sorry if I did not include some of you, but space is limited. Write soon and have a great summer.

FACULTY EMERITI/AE

Stephen Whitner
113 Wakefield St.
Rochester, NH 0386

9 April was a great day for the "pre-merger" emeriti as they gathered some fifty strong for lunch at Newman House where Ted and Marge Harrison greeted one and all and offered sumptuous hospitality.

To Ted and Marge, once again, our warmest thanks for a marvelous party.

Back from observing the whales in lower California waters, Jim and Alma Grey have headed for Europe and a reunion with son Ned and his wife. Ned is continuing his geological researches at the University in Bochum, West Germany for the next couple of years.

Spike Adriance reports that he and Ninny have recently seen Ross Gallagher who brought them the good news that Miles Malone is in fine fettle in Florida.

Helen Leete sent word from her Florida abode that she's off on a long-anticipated trip to Hawaii. Also from Florida Len and Maya James report that they're settling there permanently, having sold the house in Maine, and that they've recently completed a thoroughly enjoyable European cruise on the Q.E. II. From the southern clime came greetings from Co Banta, Jack and Nancy Hawes, and Ginn Powell. Saluting their colleagues from the other end of the Atlantic seaboard were Down Easters Dot Byers, Bill and Evelyn Bennett, and Lucia Dodge. From the Su Belt and California comes wishes from Mary Dake, Sim and Ann Hyde, Mai Gierasch, and Dick and Norma Pieter Dick, at long last, has stepped out of the classroom and into the role of retiree. Back to the East and Cape Cod came word from Stephanie Sorota that a previous commitment to an "art event" kept her and Stef from the reunion. Also from the Cape, Bettie Soule reported on how busy she and Frank have been, particularly in taking care of their young Texas grandchildren while their mother had a "fabulous three week trip to the Far East."

Heading South again, Louise Bentsen sent her regards to all emeriti from Charlottesville, VA; and from Maryland Emo Basford wrote that he'll be eighty-five on his next birthday and is busy with lecturing, ceramics and "small social activities" including visits from many former I students.

Dear Fellow 82ers:

I hope that at this time, nearly one year after our graduation, you are all pursuing your respective collegiate and non-collegiate lives with great zest and gusto, and that you are all finding that life does exist outside of Andover.

At this present moment, I am living with Mona Lim on Nantucket for the summer. Mona was living in New York this past year and has spent it engrossed in menial labor. We lived together in April and came to Nantucket a week ago. She'll be attending Yale next fall. Mona reports that Jen Lorin is transferring from Connecticut College to Berkeley, and that Ann Alford and Karen

The View from Grub Street

Bulfinch Hall

The students of satire have won. We have changed our title from "The View from Bulfinch" to "The View from Grub Street." For the full story please see the final item under Campus News.

When Felix, one of our faithful young alumni, paid us his annual visit the other day, he appealed to our bibliomaniac's heart by praising our book collection. (In The ABC of Book Collecting John Carter defines a bibliomaniac as "a book collector with a slightly wild look in his eye.") Felix approved the abundance of books in private hands on Andover Hill as conducive to thought, enthusiasm, and warm conversation. Intellectual cognac, we believe he called them.

But then we found ourselves in trouble. Amidst the splendid array of scholarly books, multi-volume sets, and university press imprints, Felix discovered a tall, thin hardback in terrible shape, its blue spine long denuded so that only the brown paper lining and the cloth netting held the back cover to the front cover. It was an atlas, our only atlas, from the 1950s and hopelessly out of date. It has ancient names like Peking, British Honduras, French Equatorial Africa, and the Belgian Congo. The very possession of this book seemed an embarrassment: a volume which could almost suggest that the owner harbored colonialist or imperialist tendencies. In 1983 hardcore pornography itself would be a more respectable possession.

Felix was disgusted with us.

We explained to him that our acquisition of the atlas was innocent enough, from a book club several decades ago. Newly married graduate students in the 1950s could afford few luxuries, and ours was a marriage founded on the modest expense of sharing the New York Times Sunday crossword puzzle. Never mind that crosswords puzzles are meant to be an individual sport; we have played doubles for more than a quarter of a century. And we allowed ourselves the illegal extravagance of two reference works—a desk dictionary and this book club atlas.

Felix conceded that, awkward as our conduct may have been, our acquisition of this unsatisfactory atlas was understandable. What perturbed him was why, now that we were better situated, we did not have an up-to-date atlas that could stand on its own on our shelves next to the works of Pope and Swift and Donne, placed among our oversized dictionaries and bibliographies.

For this we have no rational answer, except our conviction that the week after we invest our fifty or seventy-five dollars in a new super atlas, the Japanese or the Arabs will follow the lead of the Chinese by changing the English spelling of their proper nouns, Argentina or Libya will break up into seven smaller nations, and the relevant islands will by consensus rename the Caribbean Sea, thus rendering our new atlas immediately obsolete.

Speaking of the past, we had one of those wrestling matches with nostalgia last week, and we apologize for an anecdote that will register with only a few male readers of a certain age. Remember those movies in which a middle-aged Yank bicycles to an abandoned airfield in Britain where he had been stationed as a GI in World War II, and then the flashback takes over? Well, as we made our way from the baseball field to the track on the first cool morning of the fall, just beyond left field where some enormous elms used to stand, a similar flashback hit us.

In the late 1940s during the fall term the Athletic Department offered Body Building Class at 2:00 pm each day for about twenty minutes before we were allowed to go to our regular sports. We were one of those who distinguished ourselves in our various years at PA by failing the Body Building Test and therefore were required to join the class.

It consisted of calisthenics—sit-ups and push-ups, jumping jacks and squat thrusts—led by a Phys Ed instructor perched on a sturdy platform and using a megaphone. During that era both the program and the platform could be found on virtually every military and naval base in the country. By the time we came back to teach at PA in the 1950s, the platform and Body Building were gone; and we had forgotten about the whole experience for over thirty years until the right combination of season of year and air temperature brought it back to us like Proust's madeines.

We suppose there must have been some kind of humiliation for us of the scrawny or gelatinous bodies as the mesomorphic athletes strolled past us to their varsity fields; but the memory in that department is dim, and besides, the embarrassment was diminished because there were no girls around.

We would like to think that the Phys Ed instructor in charge, who has long since gone to where Body Building is of minimal relevance, finds some satisfaction in knowing that several of those imperfect bodies occasionally jog through the wet grass of that exercise area on cool mornings. □

Sexism

I have been reading the spring issue of the Andover Bulletin with an increasing sense of outrage. How is it that a school which advertises itself as coeducational, dedicating this issue to that topic, can be so slighting to the women among its students and alumnae?

For example, the photographs accompanying Fred Peterson's article on coeducation depict male students in business-like attire and an academic setting. The female students are portrayed in outdated attire and extra-curricular activity. Why not a picture of women as scholars in 1958 and men in outdated athletic clothes in 1919?

Why is it that a featured "speaker" like Alex Theroux writes about radiant, blushing female students and boys who will grow up to be President? I believe that PA is committed to developing the scholarly, athletic, and leadership potential of all its students, rather than its male students alone.

As an educator myself, having worked in coed independent schools for the last ten years (after receiving Bachelor's and Master's degrees from a prestigious Eastern college), I find the not-so-subtle sexism prevalent in this Bulletin galling and tiresome. The merger between Abbot and PA is ten years old, yet clearly the message to the girls who are today's PA students is that they are still viewed as secondary to the males. How can the school expect to attract girls of outstanding talents and high caliber intellect to an environment with such undercurrents?

When Mr. McNemar became Headmaster, I was enthusiastic about his introductory letter to the alumnae/i and encouraged by his views on minorities, diversity, and enrichment of the PA community. I deeply hope that his commitment remains strong and that we can look forward to full status for PA's girls.

I wish him success in his efforts.

An Open Letter to History Department Chairman Thomas Lyons

Dear Mr. Lyons:

I read with some interest the article by Seth Bardo in the summer 1983 issue of the Andover Bulletin, concerning the "Headmaster's Symposium," the multi-week series of presentations and discussions on nuclear arms which was presented during the Winter Term of 1983. The article says that it originated in some sense as a result of a film shown in the History courses, and so I am writing to you. I wish to set forth some comments on the Symposium, and ask some questions—some of which are rhetorical, but some of which would prompt a serious answer. I would like to contribute some suggestions which might be of use in addressing the questions of nuclear arms and foreign policy in your History courses in the future.

There is an overriding question as to whether topical political questions such as these should be dealt with at Andover. The strength of Andover and of our social and political education in general is that Americans are imbued through that education with certain common perspectives and overarching objectives which make our democracy work. One of the most basic of these is a dedication to fairness: the other side gets a fair shot at presenting its views. Another product of the shared common perspective is that democracy can work only where there is that shared perspective: because if losers do not believe that winners will respect their own basic beliefs, they will take up arms rather than lose. Thirdly, there are common purposes which unite both winners and losers, and which are most ably taught at an institution such as Andover: respect for individual persons, equality of opportunity, compassion for the unfortunate, and a belief that through intellectual inquiry most if not all social questions can be addressed, if not solved. Andover—and America—can and does instill this common system of beliefs in young people, and it is this common system which enables us to survive as a democracy and contribute as a civilization.

It is certainly open to question whether specific political issues should be introduced into the Andover community to divide the students and to claim their allegiance, pitting them against each other, before they have reached the legal age of participation in the democratic process and the educational and experiential age at which their views might have some substantive content. I believe the exercise which was reported, if the report by Mr. Bardo is accurate, did in fact intrude on what should be a shared experience and attempt to substitute a commitment to a specific policy conclusion at the time when students are not yet equipped to make those decisions. Why go to college if Andover has all the answers? "Use" of youth—from the Children's Crusade through the Hitler Youth, the Red Guards, and the Pol Pot army—is invidious. I raise the question as to whether Andover has unknowingly, and with the best of intentions, fallen into this trap.

The article on the Headmaster's Symposium describes a presentation which appears to be grossly one-sided, with mere tokens givto the fairness which should be taught as the foundation of intellectual inquiry. Fairness demands that a full fifty percent of the effort—organized by people who believe in the other side, and provided with the same resources that the original organizers have—be devoted to that other side. I find in the article no hint whatsoever that the main contrary perspective, namely the question as to how politics among nations is conducted and what are the factors and interrelations that cause war and peace to occur, was ever addressed. Half the “discussions” should have been on a “mini-course” in this subject, because it is from this subject—not a discussion of weaponry—that the answers come. Was equal time given to this area? When? By whom?

The above study would give some clue as to where the answers are to be found, but there are other issues that must be discussed at length. Could you inform me how they were handled? Was the handling fair? Among such issues are:

1. the likeness of the current “Peace Movement” to peace movements of other eras, particularly between the World Wars, to discern whether this is anything new (was Winston Churchill’s The Gathering Storm used?)
2. the issue as to whether a nation’s leaders can make any decision which would put the people in their care in possible jeopardy through inadequate defense;
3. the moral issue of pacifism itself, as to whether it is moral under any circumstances for a pacifist to refuse to fight when others are dying to protect him.

Another failure, in my view, is the failure to provide most of the program from people who have responsible lifelong involvement and training in the areas of international politics, military affairs, intelligence, and Soviet institutions. If Andover presented a symposium on psychiatry, would there be only a token psychiatrist, and the rest Air Force officers, diplomats, and government officials? Or if it presented a keynote speech on Moral Theology of Today, would it choose Henry Kissinger? But it appears that Andover believes that those who know most about the issue of war and peace are not professionals in that field, but ministers, writers, film makers, psychiatrists, and films which employ “conscious manipulation of facts.” If Andover picked a national leader of the anti-nuclear movement (Rev. Coffin), why could it not pick an equally eloquent spokesman for the other side, like Vice President Bush? If it chose writers, why not William Buckley? Was any attempt made to get people of this calibre? Did your committee ask the Committee on the Present Danger to provide half the program?

There are therefore several suggestions that I would make. The first is that Andover leave current politics alone, unless it can give the kind of fairness I have described—and even in that case, that it leave such issues to college. History is seen best in perspective. The second is that, if the History Department wishes to show provocative anti-nuclear films, it show equally compelling films on the other side. I have been so busy making a living and raising kids that I’m not up on what is available, but I recall a chilling movie, a German movie, called Tunnel 28, about an escape from East Berlin. As a former intelligence officer in Berlin I can attest to its absolute accuracy. And as I mentioned before, Winston Churchill’s The Gathering Storm puts the current peace movement into chilling perspective.

The rebuttal to my entire inquiry, is, of course, that Mr. Thompson and Mr. Newhouse served to present the other side. Mr. Newhouse—one speaker. Mr. Thompson may be well qualified and well intentioned, but he was incapable of doing the job, unfortunately. Any speaker who appears “hostile,” who insults his audience, and who is not able to answer questions, isn’t a valuable contribution. In fact, he probably confirmed exactly what the audience was led to believe: that those favoring nuclear arms are not worthy of either trust or belief.

The matters I have raised here, Mr. Lyons, are profoundly disturbing, precisely because I do know something about the subject. Is Andover the solid rock of shared values and preparatory education that it has always been, is it the “playing fields of Eton”? Or has it been captured by the ideas that gained George McGovern one state out of fifty? Do the leaders of education at Andover have the courage to provide the most convincing treatment possible to the other side, and allocate it a fifty percent shot, if they seek to address such issues?

We await your answers.

Yours sincerely,
Jonathan D. Reiff '56

Mr. Lyons replies:

Dear Mr. Reiff:

Your critique of the Headmaster’s Symposium, as gleaned from the Andover Bulletin (Summer 1983) article, deserves a response.

We agree that “through intellectual inquiry most if not all social questions can be addressed, if not solved.” We probably agree that the danger of nuclear war is the primary issue on the international agenda. You suggest that “Andover leave current politics alone” and “leave such issues to college.” In the next day’s mail you sent me a book, Why Foreign Policy? Why Vietnam? Where to the Middle East? written by yourself. You suggest that we use that book in our history courses and that you will send a “batch more.” Should we leave such issues alone or not?

The 1983 Headmaster’s Symposium on “Nuclear Holocaust or Survival” was an attempt by the Phillips Academy faculty and students and citizens of the Merrimack Valley to “educate ourselves" by a sustained and free investigation of the issues of nuclear war. We did not pit students against each other. Of the 150 student participants, 132 were seniors. The majority of them were of voting age; the boys, of draft registration age. They had reached "the legal age of participation." We did not "substitute a commitment to a specific policy conclusion"; we had an open, thoughtful inquiry in the best tradition of academic freedom.

Even the students not yet 18 have always lived in a world of nuclear fear. The overwhelming testimony of psychologists is that such fears of a terrorizing unknown leave a scar on us. Most of us put off this fear by some form of mental cloture or "psychic numbing." One might hope that knowledge helps to demystify the unknown and empowers an individual to act effectively and confidently as a citizen in a free society. These students proved capable, intellectually, emotionally, and morally, of studying the subject. You go a bit far when you compare the Children's Crusade with Hitler's Youth, the Red Guards, or Pol Pot. You would be proud to meet and know Hannah Rabin '84, the founder and leader of the Children's Crusade. That you think the faculty at Phillips Academy "uses" youth saddens me.

The Headmaster's Symposium was not one-sided. The film The Day After Trinity won international acclaim. John Hersey's Hiroshima may well be the best piece of journalism of this century. The Boston Globe's 56-page War and Peace in the Nuclear Age deserved its Pulitzer Prize for national reporting in 1982. Readings from Robert Aldridge, W.K.H. Panosky, John Newhouse, Robert Jay Lifton, and excerpts from the commentary on SALT II prepared by the US State Department provided expertise and balance. The lecturers were distinguished: Richard L. Rhodes, with a three-year Ford Foundation grant, is writing a definitive history of the making and the dropping of the atomic bomb; Yale's

Dr. Robert Jay Lifton is recognized as one of the world's leading social scientists and America's foremost scholar on the psychological and cultural impact of the Holocaust and the Hiroshima bombing; John Newhouse, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, served under Republican and Democratic administrations on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and later in the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and wrote the book on Salt I, Cold Dawn; and W. Scott Thompson, a Rhodes Scholar and faculty member at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, and presently Associate Director of the International Communications Agency (the old U.S.I.A.) is certainly qualified to articulate the Reagan administration's policy as well as his own views. We concluded on 27 February with two films that gave opposing views—War Without Winners, by the American Friends Service Committee, and Countdown for America, by the American Security Council Foundation of Boston, Virginia. We tried to have a balanced program.

In six weeks, with two meetings a week, we couldn't produce a "mini-course" on international relations. There has long been such a course offered to seniors, with many takers. As you probably know, Headmaster Donald McNemar is a Ph.D. from the Woodrow Wilson School at Princeton and taught courses in International Relations at Dartmouth.

In answer to your three specific questions:

1. We did not focus on the current peace movement; we focused on the issues of nuclear arms. If we had focused on peace movements, the advent and use of nuclear weapons in 1945 made analogies with the peace movement of the 1930s of little use.
2. A "high administration official," W. Scott Thompson, made a full and forceful presentation of this administration's concern that its leaders not place the American people in jeopardy through inadequate defense.

3. Pacifism, as a political or moral position, did not arise in any lecture, film, reading, or discussion that I attended or was aware of.

In response to some of your concluding comments, two of our lecturers, Newhouse and Thompson, qualify as experts by training and experience in the areas of international relations, national security, and arms control.

Vice President Bush was in Andover to receive the Fuess Award in 1981. I would not consider William Buckley a qualified expert on international relations. We invited Eugene V. Rostow, a founder of the Committee on the Present Danger, to be one of our lecturers. Then head of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, he was too busy to attend. His office said his assistant would speak, but soon afterwards President Reagan removed them both from office.

If you return to Phillips Academy, you will find that Andover remains a great school with a brilliant group of students and faculty from "every quarter" who pursue learning with integrity, courage, and joy. PA is not "the playing fields of Eton." Nor would you find many votes in this precinct for George McGovern. It is unfortunate that you were not able to read the readings, hear the lectures, see the films, or participate in the discussions in the Headmaster's Symposium of 1983.

We may choose to disagree on the subject at hand. But I'm sure we agree with Thomas Jefferson's First Inaugural, that you read in History 4, "Let them [both of us] stand undisturbed, as monuments of the safety with which error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it."

Sincerely,
Tom Lyons

Hope Beyond Deterrence—A Thinking Person's Vacation

by Alanson P. Stevens III

There are two prevailing attitudes in this country vis-a-vis the Soviet Union: "Let's zap 'em; find a way (force) to survive them." Or if you prefer, "Let's ignore 'em; look the other way. Perhaps they will, too." Fact is technology dictates that the fate of our country and people is inextricably tied to that of the other super power. Somewhere beyond adequate deterrence we must learn to communicate and survive together on everyone's planet, or perish together. It's as basic as that. On our part, deterrent force, though necessary in dealing with the Soviets, should not be considered an end in itself. It will neither reform the Soviet establishment nor alter its perception of us. An informed citizenry, communication, and infinite patience may. That has long been my conviction in supporting Russian studies and people exchanges.

The recent (June 1983) Abbot/Andover trip to the Soviet Union, billed as a "thinking person's vacation," was a natural. It afforded a grand opportunity for over sixty members of our community to vacation, explore, become informed, and communicate. It was a positive venture in so many ways. Ours was a group of educated Americans intent on going beyond normal tourist routes to observe firsthand the Russians, their land, and their system. Who were these inquisitive vacationers, and how did the Academy summon them together?

Well, in the beginning, there was an announcement. The Office of Academy Resources sent a mailing to all corners of the realm. Response was immediate and decisive. Within a few days, the thirty places initially planned for were taken. A waiting list took shape, then bulged. The decision was made. "Holy Toledo, stop at sixty. Achieved!"

Results were splendid, indeed. There they were, a group of Abbot/Andover graduates and affiliates representing a wide range of maturity, experience, and perspectives, characteristics of our Academy. Most gratifying to me, throughout the trip, was the example set by our graduates and affiliates of the classes '21 (Edith Bennett) through '31 (John Chadwick)—eleven of them! How wondrously they responded to every rigor of Soviet tourism. They were without exception curious, motivated, and sharing, an inspiration to us all, as was Ann Gannett '33 and her flock of four grandchildren.

But now on to Moscow!

It was early evening of 17 June. Nearly sixty graduates and affiliates along with four PA faculty representatives, Bob Lane, Vince Pascucci, Sandy Thorpe, and Al Stevens (your scribe), assembled at Kennedy's Lufthansa terminal. Jonathan Sanders, a Soviet area specialist and Assistant Director of Columbia's Harriman (Russian) Institute, his wife, Arlene, Michael McGloin and Ellen Franke were there, too, as Citizen Exchange Council's representatives to lead us through the maze of Soviet bureaucracy. Hectic? Yes, it was hectic getting through JFK. No matter! Waves of pleasant anticipation blended with first traces of fatigue as we boarded the Red Baron's night owl to Frankfurt. Airborne! In Frankfurt we rested for five hours on one foot, then the other.

After that, the flight on to Moscow seemed easy. We landed at Sheremetova Airport. Applause! Vladimir Ilyich, we are here!

Soviet customs agents, extremely young KGB fledglings in uniform, slowly, torturously appraised each passport. Our jet-lagged bodies stood at semi-attention. It was drama, a silent third degree. We passed. Not a single one of the spies among us was unmasked.

Then a time of consternation. Could it be true that the orange-ribboned baggage of a select few was still in Frankfurt? Yes! No matter. On to the hotel. Morning. Our first tour of the city. We pass the Kremlin, sixty-five acres of onion-domed cathedrals and government buildings surrounded by historic, though somewhat menacing, red brick walls and towers. There outside those walls stretches Red Square, a vast cobblestoned area, bordered on one side by St. Basil's Cathedral with its multi-colored domes, each one a monument to an Ivan-the-Terrible victory over the Tartars. Those swirling splashes of color, like a rainbow, lend a cheery note to this somewhat gloomy square, where the great red marble mausoleum of Vladimir Ilyich Ulyanov, called Lenin, stands braced against the Kremlin wall.

Sweaters, jackets, London Fogs, some with fuzzy linings, suddenly appear. It's cooler. It is cold, 50°, they say!

Sightseeing. Monasteries, museums, art museums, cathedrals, the Moscow metro. The metro is an opportunity to venture out in little groups, perhaps alone! A five kopeck piece, seven cents or so, gets you hours of whizzing to far ends of the city. There are seven lines, each station unique in its own combination of mosaics and stained glass. It is a marvelous way to observe Muscovites. It is beautiful, immaculate, and safe. Interesting!

Our people, especially the young, make constant contact with Russian contemporaries. On the metro we encounter a seventh grader. He is bright, engaging, and he speaks English well. I offer him my favorite souvenir, a Kennedy half dollar. He inspects it and observes in English, "We liked him, too." Alas! The date that such young Russians become Kemper Scholars at Phillips Academy is written on the wind. I watch as he disappears back into the mass of commuters.

Have five days passed?

One early evening we find ourselves shuffling through a railroad station. Destination is Novgorod, an eleven-hundred-year-old city to the north. Unlike the journeys of ancient Novgorodians, our trip is not by water. We struggle along the endless platform seeking the olive-colored railroad car that will serve as "home" for the night's journey.

Some furtively snap souvenir shots of our train. It is illegal. Think of it! We board. Compartment cars, reminiscent of early Hitchcock films, suffer our scrutiny. It's a picture, four assigned occupants, burdened with baggage, peer simultaneously through compartment doors. Can it be done? Yes! There are upper and lower berths. The catwalks Novgorod. We are here in a city first ruled by Norsemen. This ancient trade center lies on the water route from Scandinavia to Byzantium, that is, from the Baltic to the Caspian, the Black Sea, and beyond. My hotel window frames a 500-year-old parish church. The Kremlin (fortress) is ancient, too. We see the Kremlin's cathedral of St. Sophie. Built of wood in 989, it has stood in its present form since 1450. A November-like boat ride on Lake Ilmen brings us to the abandoned Yuriev monastery and more glorious examples of early Russian architecture. Back on the river, the Volkhov, we chat with participants of an international crew regatta. Khaki-colored army rucks loaded with brightly-colored crew shells and pennants seem strangely incongruous.

There is little time for reflection, however. That must come later. We are off again, this time to Leningrad, a pleasant five-hour bus trip to the northwest. We arrive.

Our hotel is the Pribaltiskaya (on the Baltic) a Swedish-built palatial hotel on the Gulf of Finland. The city, first called Petersburg, was founded by Peter the Great in 1703 to "hack a window into Europe." It is magnificent, the artistic soul of the country. It is the shrine of insurrection and revolution. The Decembrists were here, the Cruiser Aurora, the Winter Palace, the Finland Station, the Smolney are all here, too. It is the Concord, Lexington, Bunker Hill of the Soviet Union. Founded on marshes and tributaries of the Neva River, it has been called the "Venice of the North." In arctic-like "White Nights" of late June, it is an object of glistening beauty. We photograph a bright horizon at 11:50 pm.

Once again we settle into a rhythm of departing and returning tour buses. There is so much to see. We see so much. Above all, an evening at the Kirov Ballet's performance of Sleeping Beauty produces a magic far beyond that of the plot.

Here on the turf of our rival an infinite number of impressions and conflicting perceptions accumulate. They recede, then return reworked by additional experiences of visual, intellectual, and human contact. That is good. Vladimir Ilyich, that is precisely why we have come.

Yet, the magic of your Sleeping Beauty, the splendor of your cathedrals, and the genuine heart of your people are not enough. You have demonstrated that many times, most recently over the Sea of Japan.

Do you truly want peace and not world domination as your Pravda so ardently claims in each issue, Vladimir Ilyich?

If so, let us join together and consider the wisdom of an informed citizenry, communication, and infinite patience.

As to our group of inquisitive vacationers, the final stop was a pleasant sojourn in Helsinki. There we missed reuniting with fellow alumnus Vice President George Bush by minutes. His direction was the NATO countries, ours was Montreal and points south.

We are home now in safe and familiar surroundings, but is any one of us untouched by the experience? Did it not create a new bond for us across old Abbot/Andover lines? A recent note from the state of Virginia contains the following. "The trip was not what we expected, but it was better in every way."

Twenty Years of Photographing PA

Self portrait

by Richard Graber

Twenty years ago Richard Graber set up shop in the town of Andover as a free-lance photographer. His commissions from PA since 1962 have turned his files into a unique private archive of the school's history. To celebrate his two decades of association with Phillips Academy, the Andover Bulletin presents this anthology of Richard Graber's photographs and his own words about his relationship with the school.

We cross the border into the devastation that is Lawrence urban renewal. The front section of the phone book says "Andover." "Maybe that's where Phillips Academy is."

It is 1962, and Rachel and I have come camping to New England, looking for the right place for her to teach and support us while I become a photographer.

I grew up at a small Mennonite college in a small town in northern Indiana, light years away from a New England independent secondary school. We all went to public school, only vaguely aware of two private military schools, Howe and Culver. In our eyes, you went there if you burned down a barn, or were such a wimp that your parents wished you would burn down a barn. But having read every sports book in the local library, I had read of prep school sports and consequently of Phillips Academy.

I had always had a single-minded drive towards being a photographer. Calculus finished off my chemistry major, which became history, which became sociology in graduate school. But along the way I had edited the yearbook and, with no photographer on the staff, had flunked most of my junior year and discovered that photography and I liked each other.

Six years later I finally decided to pursue that affinity, and after two years teaching high school to provide some capital, we piled the green VW Beetle full of camping gear and set off.

In 1962 Andover was threatening to emulate Lawrence and demolish the center of town. Having barely opened a small shop on Elm Square, I was terrified at the potential dislocation. I went to my first town meeting, where the issue would be decided. A voter in favor of "urban renewal" rose to speak. The Yankee next to me grumbled, "He ought to sit down and shut up. He's lived here only fifteen years." The next speaker had lived here only ten, so it was even clearer what he ought to do. I left even before the vote.

Hart Leavitt was to lecture on jazz at Memorial Hall Library, and I begged to be allowed to exhibit some jazz photographs. Hart said he had a daughter that he wanted pictures of, and later on Pen Hall Lowell needed a Lady Macbeth, and Rachel, an actress, was delighted. I was introduced to Mr. Kemper backstage at GW. He had been on the cover of Time, but I don't read it and I was from Indiana and I hadn't the faintest idea "Do you teach here?" I asked. I thought I recovered in splendid, if smarmy fashion, "Why, then you teach everything."

Evans Hall dedication. First job for PA. Tryout. No face meant anything, but I heard someone say "Mr. Evans" and I tailed him around the building. Trustee meeting and a handsome white-haired man. Obviously distinguished. Obviously important. I was pleased with the proofs. Stott growled, "Graber, you're just like all the other photographers. You can't resist Bishop Hobson."

How many ways can one photograph a commencement for the twentieth time? What new mood can one find in buildings and grass and trees to keep Stott happy? (Having Ann Parks to collaborate with makes that easier). To pick out a handful of photographs from boxes of negatives is impossible. Looking at film against the light. Faces and faces. "Mr. Bush, would you please move to the left a bit?" (followed by a doubletake as one trustee snickered). "Mr. Chairman, wouldn't that be the end of Phillips Academy as we know it today?" And what marvelous Steinways for photographers to play on.

Richard Graber's photography show Andover's Elm Square in the 1960s will be on exhibit at the Andover Art Gallery, Park Street, Andover, from 18 November till the end of the year.

1982-83 Matching Gifts = 18 Current Scholarships

by Patricia H. Edmonds

Matching gifts have generated $92,000 in additional support for the 1982-1983 Annual Fund. That sum equals the average 1982 scholarship awards for 18 students at Phillips Academy. Alumni, alumnae, and parents—employees of America's leading corporations—have designated these matching gifts to support the operating expenses of Phillips Academy. Now that the Academy grants more than $2,600,000 annually (the 1983-1984 scholarship and loan budget—up from $2,486,200 granted during 1982-1983 to 440 students), matching gifts play an important role in meeting the scholarship needs of Andover students. The average scholarship granted in 1982-1983 was $4,927. Matching gifts for the Addison Campaign and for other capital and endowment purposes totaled an additional $33,097.

America's corporations today are creating an impact on pre-collegiate education as well as on higher education by enabling their employees to make these philanthropic decisions for independent schools. The employee has the option to designate which of his or her philanthropic contributions will be matched by the employer. Increasingly, corporations have not only supported colleges and universities, but have realized that independent elementary and secondary schools have been responsible for preparing young people well for college. Corporate leaders realize, too, that independent secondary schools have undertaken an important responsibility in shaping the values of America's future leaders. Matching gift support for pre-collegiate independent education enhances those institutions that are willingly concerned with the moral as well as intellectual development of young people.

As a great many non-profit organizations compete for contributions dollars, corporate matching gifts help to motivate alumni fund-raising and challenge institutions to encourage increased alumni and parent participation. Corporations heading the Andover 1982-1983 "Honor Roll" for corporate matching gifts include the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York for matching the largest number of gifts, 12, and Borg-Warner Corporation for matching the highest amounts, $12,000.

The General Electric Company initiated the first matching gifts program in 1954-1955 and since that time significant amounts of support have been given to American educational institutions. Today there are more than 1,000 corporations and businesses that match employee contributions to colleges and universities, and 40% of those also match contributions to independent secondary schools. More than $61,793,000 went to colleges and universities in matching gift support in 1981-1982, and secondary schools received $3,817,000.

Andover is by no means alone in the effort among independent schools to attract matching gift support. The Council for the Advancement and Support of Education—CASE—based in Washington, is currently undertaking an initiative to increase corporate matching gift support for independent schools through a committee recently established and chaired by John R. Chandler, Assistant to the Headmaster of The Hotchkiss School. Phillips Academy is represented on that committee, which will target fifty corporations annually, hoping to interest them in extending their matching gift programs to pre-collegiate education.

Edmonds, Andover's Director of Foundation and Corporate Support, look on

Corporate matching gift programs have been expanding rapidly, and each corporation sets and evaluates its own guidelines, often in response to employee initiatives. Some corporations now match on a 2-to-1 or 3-to-1 basis. Some have a minimum size of gift to be matched; others a maximum for single gifts and total gifts that can be matched. Some match only alumni/ae gifts; others match spouse, parent, and friend contributions. The details of a corporate matching gift program vary, but the intent is clear.

Through the years corporations have become increasingly concerned with the quality of life in America and the economic and social climate in which they do business. A society that fosters education, the arts, and community needs benefits business, many corporate executives have reasoned. Corporations also need to hire well-educated employees, and therefore are particularly eager to support quality education. A matching gift program is one proven way to assist education and to benefit a company's employees. Matching gifts enable corporate employees to share in their corporation's responsibility for philanthropy, and for Andover, matching gifts have contributed significantly to enhancing the diversity of the student body, one of the hallmarks, along with excellence, of an Andover education today.

The Baldwin Cloister: Alfred Graham Baldwin

by J. Philip Zaeder

He believed in that ancient vision of helping youth learn "The great end and real business of living." With his characteristic walk, sparkling eyes, and resonant voice, he brought vitality to the journey of faith, warmth to his pastoral cares, wit to the classroom and his writing, and conviction to the matters of heart that drew others to him. During his tenure as School Minister from 1930 to 1966 he exemplified what he also expressed, that the highest concerns of the spirit lie deepest in nature.

For over fifty-two years Graham Baldwin nourished the life of the spirit at Andover and found additional energies to devote to Abbot, to the town of Andover, and to that far-flung network of friends and causes that drew his devotion and all the means he could spare. While serving upon the faculty, he dreamed of a chapel less formal than Cochran which could serve as a center for worship and meditation amidst the busyness of the Academy. He became the architect of that dream whose full flowering led to the building of the Sylvia Pratt Kemper Chapel in 1963.

Artist's view of the Cloister

In the years of his retirement he and his wife Kay returned to that chapel for their own nourishment and worship. As have so many others in the Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Jewish communities, he wished for a reception room near Kemper Chapel, a place for the meetings, talks, and meals integral to the life and fellowship and faith expressed each week by those who gathered. Gray Baldwin died before that hope could become a reality.

The Baldwin Cloister

The architectural plan and artist's rendering suggest an imaginative use for the central area immediately behind the Kemper Chapel and adjacent to the newly refurbished offices and classrooms of the Department of Philosophy and Religious Studies. The idea of the cloister presents a series of intertwining corridors and rooms, each affording different perspectives of sight and use: encouraging a vision of the strength of nature in the photographs on the walls, the contribution of art which will be illuminated on various pillars, the partnership of philosophy and faith symbolized by the sitting room where quiet conversations or study are invited, the welcome of the central living room where meals or lectures, special dramas or receptions might flourish and promote an atmosphere unique to that space. As we reported in the previous edition of the Bulletin

"the design allows the room to be a lounge, a meeting room, and a 'special parlor.' The outer porch will look through pillars to an inner porch or lounge, and in the center of the thirty-by-forty foot rectangle will be an area suitable for the receptions, lectures, and even small liturgical dramatic performances" mentioned above.

The Baldwin Cloister creates the kind of exciting space that will draw students on tour as one of their first stops, a place where conviction and quiet are combined, where matters of the heart and mind can be celebrated, where faculty and students can join in fellowship together. These were the values and hopes which Gray himself embodied and encouraged. The Cloister will remember him and his work, and in so doing encourage future generations towards a life of service and celebration, the search for a vital faith in God, a deep compassion for the stranger and neighbor.

The committee overseeing the plans and construction of the Baldwin Cloister will welcome contributions towards defraying the projected cost of $50,000. Donations should be made out to the Trustees of Phillips Academy and sent to Joseph C. Mesics, Secretary of the Academy.

The Reverend J. Philip Zaeder is the Academy's Protestant Chaplain and Instructor in English on the Samuel Harvey Taylor Foundation.

Trustee John U. Monroe '30 Retires

John U. Monroe '30 retired as a Charter Trustee on 12 July following the special meeting of the Board which considered long range planning. He becomes a Trustee Emeritus.

Monro was honored by his fellow Trustees with a clambake and an evening of good talk, which included informal remarks by Donald H. McLean, Jr. '28, President Emeritus of the Board of Trustees; Frank M. Eccles '43, a member of the faculty since 1956; and Theodore R. Sizer, Headmaster 1972-1981.

The evening was low key and unpretentious, but each speaker reflected on the unique perspective which John U. Monro has given to Trustee deliberations by virtue of his code, his personality, and his career. A top scholar at Andover and at Harvard, he served in the Navy in World War II (on the carrier Enterprise), leaving the service with the rank of captain. At Harvard he was centrally involved in administrative roles having to do with the quality and variety of the student population, and in 1958 was named to the position of Dean of the College. Beyond Harvard he was the founder and first chairman of the College Scholarship Service through which nationwide standards were established for the awarding of financial aid to college students.

In 1967 he startled the academic world, and a far wider circle too, by resigning his prestigious Harvard post to accept a position as Director of Freshman Studies at Miles College, Birmingham, Alabama. In 1979 he moved to Tougaloo College in Jackson, Mississippi, as Lawrence L. Durgin Professor of Writing. He continues in that position.

When he went to Miles College, the press reported his move widely and editorialized admirably. John Monro simply said, "I consider this a very special opportunity." He has pursued his work with that thought ever in mind.

Since his election to the Board in 1958, John Monro's contribution as an Andover Trustee has been equally special. His was considered the educator's voice, and it was listened to with increasing respect for twenty-five years. Both Donald McLean and Frank Eccles touched on this point in their talks. Said McLean:

I think it fair to say that John Monro has been a kind of rudder in educational policy and institutional direction which has kept the Board on an even keel and enabled [us] to avoid the shoals on which so many schools have foundered—more often than not because of differences between the views of Headmaster and Trustees.

Added Eccles:

We've known that with a master teacher of John's stature on the Board of Trustees, the core faculty values will always be given consideration in all major Trustee decisions that affect our work. It seems apparent that the relation between the Andover Trustees and the faculty are excellent, and I think it quite likely that John's presence on the Board has contributed significantly to this healthy state of affairs.

In his career as an educator John has wrestled seriously with serious issues. But he has done so without taking himself seriously, without preaching, and without self-righteousness. He has worked with courage, compassion, intelligence, enthusiasm, and joy. As a result he has been an inspiring leader in education for the school and for the Andover Faculty. In short, he has given life to the words non sibi.

Finally, Ted Sizer reflected on the man from a broad perspective and experience:

John has been a model for many of us—as a university dean who could melt bureaucracy with wise good humor, as a Trustee who remembered about growing up and who consistently took the long, humane view, and as a person who shared that fragile dream of the best of the 1960s, that all Americans of whatever walk of life or race or place of origin deserved schooling of quality, dignity, and hope. John not only articulated his dream: he lived it.

The Year of the Coeducation Study

by Marion Finbury

This is the year, the year to celebrate! We have just ended our first ten years of coeducation at Phillips Academy, and everyone seems to be in agreement that we ought to mark this auspicious birthday. For those of us who were here at the time, we can never forget the excitement and even the anxiety that kept our emotions in a jumble in the fall of 1973 when we came back to a school substantially different from the two academies that had inhabited Andover hill.

Now a decade has passed and somehow or other a decade is a neat symmetrical package, one that is not too large to handle but one substantial enough to yield all kinds of goodies in the way of growth, attitude, and statistical information. It seems therefore natural that as the first decade of this coeducational school ends, we should take an active interest in doing a thoughtful review of what has occurred and how successful we have been in offering a truly coeducational experience. Luckily enough, the opportunity for just such a study came from an alumna donor who granted Andover the funds to proceed with an investigation which would assess whether we as a school were meeting our obligations to educate boys and girls equally, not only philosophically but in fact.

Donald McNemar was most receptive to the whole idea and asked Dean of Studies Jeanne Amster to set up a committee which would oversee this project. It was also decided that this committee would not only instigate and spearhead a period of self-analysis to see if we were "parting our hair correctly," as one wag put it; but also educate and present to our community for public consideration the appropriate information about men and women living in community in a rapidly changing world. In addition to this outline of activities the committee was finally and most joyously asked to celebrate our birthday as well as our accomplishments.

The task is clearly a complicated and challenging one which the committee relishes. Marion Finbury, the Chairman, is ably aided and abetted by Kathy Dalton, Tony Rotundo, Nat Smith, Sue Lloyd, Jon Stableford '63, Phil Zaeder, Nancy Sizer, Jean St. Pierre, David Cobb, Holly Owen '43, and K. Kelly Wise; Jeanne Amster and Donald McNemar serve ex officio. There is an almost tangible mixture of excitement, temerity, enthusiasm, and wariness as we plan out the investigation. The emotions are not like the ones we felt when we started this coeducational venture ten years ago. The job is to investigate all aspects of the school: the classroom, athletics, support services, dormitory life, admissions, faculty, staff, extra-curricular activities in terms of numbers as well as attitudes; and we hope to solicit responses from the alumni of this period as well. Clearly the task is formidable and we will need all the cooperation, good will, and help we can get from faculty, administration, and students.

We do not have any preconceived notions about what we are going to find out about ourselves, but we are sure of three things: that we are not a complacent educational institution and are therefore willing to search our souls; that everyone will benefit by a free and open discussion of the real meaning of coeducation; and that exploring these issues will create the kind of atmosphere that will allow us to respond creatively and innovatively to our findings.

If the "job description" of the committee were to read "investigate, educate, and celebrate," it would be apt indeed. And each part of the charge is equally important. Just as we know that the presence of girls in a school does not insure quality coeducation, so we know that we must continually learn about how men and women need to relate in what is clearly a society that is going through convulsive changes. If we can bring to campus those people who can help us look at this world with clearer eyes, then we all shall profit from the experience. The more we learn—the more we know about ourselves as a community and a school—the more we can help our students reach their potentials.

Our hope is that by designating this as "the year of the coeducation study," we will stimulate honest appraisals and discussions and thereby heighten everyone's awareness of those issues that surround the practice of educating boys and girls together.

Only a strong institution can bear to look into such a magnifying mirror, and Andover is such an institution. We may find that we could do some things much better, or that we may or may not need to make major changes. But we are certain of one thing: we have the will and strength to scrutinize our own behavior; and that courage, along with our obvious successes of the past decade, is reason enough to celebrate. And that we will do!

College Counselor Marion Finbury, who has served as Co-director and then as Director of College Counseling at both Abbot and PA, has been a member of the Abbot and Phillips Academy administrations since 1969.

The July Trustees' Meeting: A Special Report

by Donald W. McNemar

The Trustees of Phillips Academy met in July to examine long range issues facing the school and to establish policies which will build on the strengths of Phillips Academy and Abbot Academy to assure the future of Andover. This discussion of long term issues was prompted by a desire to re-examine progress after a decade of operation of the merged academies and after the great success of the Bicentennial Campaign. This examination coincided with the programs of a new Headmaster and the increased importance of future planning to preserve the school.

The Trustee decisions related to the quality of education at Andover, the opportunity for diverse young people to study here, the preservation of the assets of the Academy to support future education and opportunity, and the necessity of continually expanding development efforts in support of the Academy.

Maintaining the outstanding quality of the education at Phillips Academy is the prime goal of the Trustees. At the heart of the success of the education is an outstanding faculty intensely engaged with students in the learning process throughout the community. The Trustees are committed to recruiting, supporting, and developing the finest faculty possible for the Academy. In a time when the respect accorded teachers and the salaries provided them are perceived as inappropriately low in light of the importance attached to education in the nation, the Trustees committed themselves to remaining among the top schools in terms of compensation and support for the men and women who teach at the Academy, and attached a top priority to this goal.

The Andover education is built on the intensive engagement of faculty and talented youth in the classroom. The Academy provides a learning community where student and teacher learn together in the athletic program and in the dormitory as well as in the classroom. The Trustees are committed to maintaining the present high quality of the Andover educational program.

The second commitment is to assuring an opportunity for young people from diverse cultural, ethnic, racial, and financial backgrounds to study at Andover. The Trustees took decisions to assure that Andover remain a national boarding school open to the talented, not just the financially fortunate. The Board is committed to pursuing opportunities to further expand the financial aid program and to assure that prospective applicants and their families are aware of the school's financial assistance. At present a third of the student body are on financial aid and the Academy has awarded an average grant of $5,300 for the current year. This includes full support for some forty-two students at Phillips Academy. The Academy is committed to continuing to expand the financial aid program in order to meet the needs of all families of students selected to attend Andover.

In order to encourage families to consider an Andover education, the Trustees are committed to limiting future tuition increases as far as possible consistent with the commitment to offer an excellent education.

The Trustees decided to maintain the present size of the school with 1,200 students composed of 20 percent day students from the immediate five school districts.

The third concern of the Trustees was the balanced use of assets between present program and future needs. In order to preserve the future purchasing power of the endowment, the Trustees have adjusted the spending rule to reduce the level of increase in the endowment income availed of each year. This change is projected to keep the income used within four to six percent of market value of the endowment. While this adjustment forces limitations on the present operation of the Academy, it will assure that the endowment will continue to support future programs. The Trustees have also engaged four new managers of the endowment in an effort to maximize the performance of the endowment.

On 30 June 1982 the endowment of Phillips Academy was $75,464,869.09. With the increase in the stock market and the additions of new gifts the endowment stood at $102,673,969.02 on 30 June 1983.

The physical plant of the Academy is not only a marvelous educational setting, but also an important asset of the Academy. The Trustees have established a plant renewal fund within the annual operating budget to assure that maintenance and renewal are an on-going project of the Academy which is supported each year.

In keeping with the emphasis on using and preserving assets, the Trustees have asked the administration to examine a full range of options for use of the Abbot campus. Because the Academy does not require this space for its current educational programs, emphasis is placed on making the property income-producing. The range of possibilities proposed include lots for single family dwellings, establishment of apartments or condominiums within the present historic buildings, development of a life care center, development of educational programs by institutions or corporations, and establishment of a community arts center. During the course of the year the Trustees expect to narrow the options being considered while assuring that the uses are compatible with the Academy.

The fourth area of decision by the Trustees related to the development program of the Academy which has produced such success in the Bicentennial Campaign and the Addison Gallery Campaign. The future excellence of Phillips Academy is dependent on the generosity of alumni, family, and friends who share a deep commitment to the school and its purposes. The Trustees have asked the administration to study the future development program with an emphasis on the Annual Giving Program, the Planned Giving Program, the Parent Fund, and the Major Gift effort. The maintenance of quality and opportunity at Andover cannot be financed through ever-expanding tuition increases, but must be supported at least in part by those individuals who care deeply about the Academy.

Abbot Hall. At the October meeting following the meeting reported here, the Trustees decided not to sell the Abbot property

The Trustee actions establish a clear priority for maintaining the quality of the institution and assuring the opportunity for young people to study at Andover, while balancing the present and future use of the resources and support for the Academy.

Headmaster Donald W. McNemar serves as Clerk of the Board of Trustees.

Mathematics Honors

Led by senior Evan Goldberg, and uppers Andrew Myers and Vincent Crespi, Phillips Academy finished eighth in the National Mathematics contest out of the more than 6000 schools which participated. In addition to being first among private schools, PA had eight students on the honor roll, an award given to 1160 students out of the 407,000 participants. Included on the honor roll were the three top scorers plus seniors Joshua Feigon and Xiangdon Yang (of the People's Republic of China), and uppers Larry Powelson, Timothy Wright, and Edward Anderson. Over the past three years PA has finished 53rd, 33rd, and now 8th, and the prospects for the '83-'84 school year are quite bright.

For the first time in years a Phillips Academy student has won the Massachusetts Olympiad mathematics contest. Senior Evan Goldberg of Lexington, MA finished first on the second and more difficult round out of the 100 students chosen from the 6000 initial participants. Timothy Wright finished eighth and Vincent Crespi finished eighteenth. For now the travelling trophy presented by the Prudential Company sits in the Mathematics Department office, and we hope it stays there.

The Campus

As the longest heat wave of the summer broke on 9 August, hundreds of neighbors and visitors gathered at dusk near the Bell Tower to hear the final carillon concert of the summer, this one by the Academy's carillonneur Sally Slade Warner, who for seven summers has coordinated the concerts, programs, and guest performers for the Tuesday evening series. Her following is enormous. On this occasion there were dozens of groups on the Great Lawn in front of the Library (where the acoustics are best) having their picnic suppers with an occasional glass of fine vouvray or chardon-nay. Among the cars that lined Salem Street were five brilliantly polished antique automobiles; children played at the base of the tower without disturbing anyone; middle-aged couples held hands as they strolled the campus. And PA once again held hands with our neighbors, thanks to Sally.

The dedication of the new boathouse on 1 October

Health

On 3-4 October Dr. Estelle Ramey from Georgetown University Medical School visited the campus as the annual Rogers Fellow. As an endocrinologist and physiologist, Dr. Ramey spoke to the school on Monday night on the subtler differences between male and female from embryo to death; on Tuesday night she addressed the faculty on the nature and causes of stress; and during both days she met with classes and other interested campus groups.

Health concerns are thriving this year. The new students had daily sessions for a week with the Freedom from Chemical Dependency group, which was so successful last year; the faculty voted to require CPR training of all coaches; and the Headmaster announced a study in cooperation with the Commons to analyze and diminish the quantity of cholesterol and sodium in the food we serve. Over two hundred biology students are taking their own blood pressure once or twice a week for comparison in the winter term, when the menu is scheduled to be changed.

Alumni Weekends

On two separate weekends the Academy celebrated its alumni. On 30 September, 125 volunteer workers returned to Volunteer Weekend, with seminars on student life, admissions, fund-raising, reunions, and regional associations. Few could disguise their pleasure over the Friday night lobster/clam bake under a big tent next to the Log Cabin. Another tent sheltered the festive luncheon Saturday by the Merrimack River as we dedicated the new boathouse for the crew, with emeriti faculty Ted Harrison and Bill Brown—founders of the crew program—as guest speakers. Given in memory of Dr. James C. Greenway '96 by his children, the boathouse is as vandal-proof as concrete and cinder-block will allow. The entire afternoon brought back warm memories for the dozens of alumni rowers who came to compete in the regatta that followed the dedication.

Two weeks later 75 members of the Alumni Council convened for a program called "Support and Counseling: Andover's Life Outside the Classroom." Seminars included students, with sessions on house counseling, the Graham House counseling program, the medical program, athletics, college counseling, and academic advising.

Oscar

For many students the saddest event of the fall term was the death of Oscar, the Biology Department's pet alligator in Evans Hall, and the star of the campus tours offered by the Admissions Office guides. The surprise of the decade was the discovery at Oscar's autopsy by the MSPCA at Boston's Angell Memorial Animal Hospital that Oscar was a female. (No one really blames our biologists for not having discovered this peculiar fact earlier.) Twenty-three years old when she died, Oscar had grown to five feet four inches and weighed 36 pounds. As we went to press, the autopsy report on the cause of her death was not yet available. Biology instructor Tom Cone, who was her caretaker, reports that negotiations are already under way to find a replacement.

Grub Street

Readers of "The View from Bulfinch" column in our summer edition may recall the student movement to name the private road in front of Bulfinch Hall "Grub Street," in honor of the London street so named in the eighteenth century, the abode of dozens of writers who were satirized in Alexander Pope's Dunciad. Response to that news item was so positive, with particular unanimity from the English Department, that the deed is now done. In the serenity of a cloudless October morning headmaster McNemar dedicated the street, cut the royal blue ribbon, and quoted from Samuel Johnson's eighteenth century dictionary:

Headmaster McNemar dedicates Grub Street on 10 October

Grub Street: Originally the name of the street in Moorfields in London, much inhabited by writers of small histories, dictionaries, and temporary poems; whence any mean production is called Grubstreet.

"Like the English Competence Handbook," interpolated Mr. McNemar. He went on to say, "Grub Street was appropriately in the immediate vicinity of Bethlehem Hospital, later called Bedlam, London's famous lunatic asylum."

"In honor of all the writing, indeed scribbling, that goes on in this neighborhood; and in recognition of the alliterative relationship between Bulfinch and Bedlam, we are pleased to assign this heretofore nameless private way 'a local habitation and a name.' After we cut this royal blue ribbon—held appropriately on one end by the chairman of the English Department, and on the other end by a Competence student—this street will henceforth be known as Grub Street."

Crafts Exhibit

If spring is a time of awakening and blossoming, a time of bringing out brave new colors after a cold drab winter, it will be well celebrated in Andover next year.

A large-scale arts and crafts show planned for April will bring the work of scores of artisans from all over the northeast to the Phillips Academy campus. The Hand Springs Artisans Exhibition and Sale, scheduled for Sunday, 8 April 1984, will present craftspeople and their work on the floor of the Academy's athletic cage. On the upper track, moreover, Phillips Academy artisans and artists both student and faculty, will exhibit and sell their works.

Organized under the auspices of the Ladies Benevolent Society, an organization of Phillips Academy women, the Hand Springs show will benefit three charitable groups: Bread and Roses (a local food service for the poor), Greater Lawrence Hospice Association, and the Andover Community Child Care Center scholarship fund.

To enhance the atmosphere of a spring festival, the show will include music and entertainment by Academy groups. A cafe will be set up in a nearby reception building.

The Hand Springs Artisans Exhibition and Sale is presently accepting applications from craftspeople. Artisans must exhibit their own work, which must be hand-crafted. No kits or flea market items may be shown, and no dealers may exhibit. A jury will screen the applications on the basis of photographs or slides submitted by the craftspeople.

The application deadline for exhibitors is 15 January 1984. Applications may be obtained by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Judy Hamilton, Hand Springs Show Committee, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

Celebrity

Although we are always pleased to receive news clippings about our alumni and alumnae, one in particular has afforded us such pleasure that we choose to pass it on to our readers. Several weeks ago the New London Day featured the ground-breaking ceremony for the new gymnasium for The Williams School, at which Ruth W. Newcomb, Abbot Academy's class of 1912, wielded the first shovel. Miss Newcomb graduated from Williams in 1907, when it was the all-girls school known as Williams Memorial Institute. At 92 she is the oldest active alumna of that school. Although Ruth Newcomb prefers to shun the limelight, we hope she will forgive us if we pause to celebrate this loyal, active, feisty alumna who has supplied the PA archives with invaluable memorabilia.

Alumni Directory

It's coming—but a little late! The 1983 Alumni Directory has been delayed in production, but will be forwarded as soon as possible to those who have placed orders. We are grateful to subscribers for their patience and understanding.

ARTICLE VII

Alumni Trustees

A. Membership

There shall be six Alumni Trustees of whom—

1. one shall be the President of the Council during his term of office;
2. one shall be Chairman of the Alumni Fund;
3. four others shall be elected from among members of the Association.

B. Nomination and Election

The four Alumni Trustees, each elected for a four-year term from among the members of the Association, shall be elected by the alumni as provided in Article IV-C-4-a. Nominees shall be selected from among the former members of the Council and such other alumni as shall have effectively served the best interests of the Academy and the Association in one or more of the manners set forth in Article IV B1, 2 and 3. The Executive Committee of the Council shall nominate four alumni every other year to stand for election to the two vacancies. Additional such alumni may be nominated upon receipt by the Executive Secretary of the Alumni Council of a petition signed by a minimum of 50 members of the Association. Notice of Article VII shall be published every other year in the autumn issue of The Andover Bulletin. The Executive Committee of the Council shall have the power to fill any vacancy occurring among the Alumni Trustees.

- C. No individual who is in the employ of Phillips Academy may serve as Alumni Trustee. □

by Michael C. Friedman

Andover sports have started well this fall term, accumulating an 11-5-1 record (a .676 winning percentage) by the time we went to press. With one of the seven varsity squads still undefeated and none winless, this looks to be another promising season for the Blue teams.

Girls Soccer, led by co-captains Caroline Higgins and Kate McBride, won all four of its games by a lopsided combined goals record of 19-1. The team's outlook is superb.

Football is 2-1, under new coach

David Graham and captain John Best. The defense is extremely solid, and in the first four games the offense generated 67 points.

Field Hockey, paced by captain and leading scorer senior Janine Coleman, is off to an impressive 2-1 start this term. Second-leading goal scorer Kiki Thompson and goalie Kathy Mulvey provide great stability for the squad.

Boys Cross Country and Volleyball have 1-1 records to date. Cross Country, with Jim Moore and Matt Donahue as captains and featuring leading runner Chris Seville, hope to do well against strong opponents. Volleyball, coached by Bonney Hart, should also be strong.

Boys Soccer is 2-2-1 so far, scoring a 1-1 tie in the game versus the alumni. As this column goes off to the typesetter, the soccer team reports a 1-0 victory over Harvard JV at Cambridge. Tad Davis and Scott Bothfeld captain this soccer team.

Finally the Girls Cross Country team, paced by new upper Paige Cox, placed five winners in the top ten at the Milton Invitational meet.

1915 Frank E. Parkhurst, Kingston, PA; 1 May 1983

William E. Sloan, Jr., Rochester, NY; 28 February 1982

Dean K. Webster, Jr., Andover, MA; 29 July 1983. A memorial service was held at Cochran Chapel, Phillips Academy, on 2 August for Dean K. Webster, active in business, civic, and community affairs in Lawrence and Andover for over 60 years.

Mr. Webster joined his father in the family business, H. K. Webster Co., Inc., in 1922. During his years with the family business, it grew from a small, regional firm to become the second largest animal feed business in the Northeast. Mr. Webster served the company as treasurer in the '30s and '40s, was elected president in 1951, and chairman of the board in 1961.

The list of Mr. Webster's business and civic activities is a testament to his dedication to helping others, and his desire to keep busy and involved in the activities and causes he cared deeply about, including Phillips Academy, where he was active in alumni affairs, including his tenure as 1915 Class Secretary, and his term on the alumni council. He also was a Class Agent for his alma mater, MIT. His activity in industry included his affiliation with the New England Shippers and Millers Association, and the Boston Grain and Flour Exchange, serving on their boards. He also served as the chairman of the board of the American Feed Manufacturers Association from 1955 to 1957.

Mr. Webster's involvement in community and civic affairs included the presidency and directorship of the greater Lawrence MSPCC; director and secretary of the Lawrence YMCA; and campaign chairman and president of the Lawrence Community Chest. He served as president of City Mission, which later became Family Services; as trustee and first male president of Lawrence General Hospital, and as chairman of the board of that hospital from 1971 to 1973. He was also one of the founders of the Greater Lawrence United Fund. He was an active member of the Central Methodist Church in Lawrence, where he served for years as superintendent of Sunday School.

Mr. Webster is survived by his wife, Mina (Muirhead) Webster; a son, Dean K. '47 of Andover; a daughter, Joan Post AA '51 of Burlingame, California; a brother, Walter Webster '23 of Danvers; and five grandchildren.

- 1941 Joseph E. Smith, Edgartown, MA; 1 May 1980
- 1942 Ernest D. Obermeyer, New York, NY; 26 August 1983. Ernest D. "Obie" Obermeyer died at his Remsenberg, Long Island summer home of a heart attack after returning from a run. "A memorial service was held on 30 August at the Unitarian Church of All Souls in New York City. A jazz quartet played a medley of Obie's favorite tunes, including 'I like New York in June.' His vigorous life and zestful character were beautifully portrayed by his son, David, and TV anchorman and friend John Roland..." wrote his friend Russell Thomes, describing the service.

Mr. Obermeyer graduated from Yale University in 1948 with a degree in Business Administration. Before joining Fairchild Publications, he was employed by General Foods Corp. and the Sucrest Division of the American Molasses Co. His affiliation with Fairchild Publications was a long one; he was involved in advertising sales for many years, and at the time of his death was publisher of Supermarket News. During World War II he spent two years in the Pacific with the U.S. Army Air Force as a 1st Lieutenant, serving as a flight navigator.

He was a loyal and active Class Secretary: he served in this capacity from 1970 through the last published edition of the Bulletin, the Summer 1983 issue—13 years of dedicated service to a school he truly cared about.

He leaves his wife, Phillis "Bunny" (Horton) Obermeyer, of 1095 Park Avenue, New York 10028, and a son, David Douglas. Donations may be made in Mr. Obermeyer's name to the National Hypertension Association, 400 E. 34th Street, New York, NY 10016.

- 1955 Anthony Costello, Hollywood, CA; 15 August 1983 (see class notes)
- 1974 John R. Oldham, Washington, DC; 1 September 1983 (see class notes). John Oldham boarded the ill-fated Korean Airline Flight 007 on 31 August with much to look forward to. Two months earlier he had received a law degree from Columbia University, and was on his way to China to teach law at Beijing University for a year. At Columbia, John had incorporated his lifelong interest in Asia into his legal studies, and he planned to return to Washington to continue his work in Asian legal affairs as an attorney for Surrey and Morse. His last day in New York was spent calling friends to share his excitement and to say goodbye. At midnight he left New York, and several hours later he died.

This latest trip to China was one of many journeys John had made to Asia as he pursued his commitment to facilitate inter-cultural exchange and communication. John's sense of responsibility to a community, whether it was from a global or immediate perspective, was exceptional. Throughout his four years at Andover, John stood out as a person who consistently showed a special sensitivity and concern for others. During the very difficult transition to coeducation, John was an indispensable student leader—always at the center of faculty-student mediation. His limitless energy, talents, and good-humor touched the lives of all who were fortunate enough to know him, as well as those who did not.

After Andover, John received a scholarship to Princeton University, and following graduation from Princeton he traveled to Geneva, Switzerland on a Fulbright Fellowship to study international economic development. The depth and breadth of his experience was extraordinary for someone his age. In his 27 years, John was at once a spirited entrepreneur, lobbyist, community service volunteer, scholar, world traveler, and most significantly, a devoted and always reliable friend.

All of the members of the Class of 1974, and the entire Andover community extend their most heartfelt sympathy to his family, Mrs. Nan Moore Oldham, of Washington, D.C., his mother; his father, Dr. William David Oldham; and his sister, Charlotte Oldham, a student at Wesleyan University in Connecticut. A memorial fund drive has been initiated at Columbia for a program in John's name that would bring a Chinese legal scholar to the United States every year to study at Columbia. Contributions may be made to the John R. Oldham Memorial Scholarship Fund, c/o Professor Randel Edwards, Columbia University Law School, New York, NY 10027.

- 1900 Ethel Hazen Lillard, W. Newton, MA; 2 September 1983. Mrs. Lillard, who celebrated her 100th birthday in December 1982, and at that time was one of the oldest living graduates of Abbot Academy, has died in Chetwynde Nursing Home in West Newton, Massachusetts. She was a 1904 graduate of Smith College, and served as Class Agent for several years.

She was the widow of W. Huston Lillard, headmaster of Tabor Academy, and the former American representative in Austria for the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees after World War II. Mr. Lillard was affiliated with Phillips Academy from 1907 until 1917, when he left to head Tabor Academy, Marion, MA. While at Phillips he taught English, coached football, and was Assistant Principal under Alfred Stearns. While she was living in Andover, two of her four children were born. She remembered in a letter written in 1965 that . . . "These were my most delightful years; how I hated to leave Andover." At Tabor Academy Mrs. Lillard ran the housekeeping of the school as well as the meal planning and food buying. The Lillards spent 26 years in Marion at Tabor. Ethel Hazen Lillard also recalled . . . "I followed in the footsteps [by coming to Abbot] of my grandmother, Martha Vose of the Class of 1841." While at Abbot, her grandmother met Norman Hazen, a student at the Theological Seminary, whom she later married.

Mrs. Lillard made her home in Cohasset for nearly 40 years. She leaves a son, Walter H. Lillard, Jr., of Sharon; three daughters, Virginia Lillard Collins '31, of Marblehead; Barbara Powers of Arlington; and Jane Bartter of San Antonio, Texas; 13 grandchildren, and 17 great-grandchildren.

I have had playmates,
I have had companions,
In my joyous school days.
All, all are gone
The old familiar faces.

—Charles Lamb

All the 1910 familiar faces are gone except 11 who survive. You might be interested in the names of those who survive as of the fall of 1983. They are Sanford Corey, Julian Adler, John Abbott, Thomas Bayne, Charles Brownell, Paul Colwell, Len Gard, Harry Lucey, Francis Monahan, Fred Smith,* Stan Smith, Keith Warren.

Of the large delegation that went on to Yale 1914, only three survive: Stan Smith, Charles Brownell, and Keith Warren.

I have had the following letter from Peter Smith, Fred Smith's son:

"Dear Keith,
"How are you? Just a note to tell you that I sent $50.00 to Phillips in my father's name—'Frederick C. Smith, class of 1910.'

"Dad is not doing well. We almost lost him in January, but he made a good comeback. He is, however, again failing rapidly. Don't know if he can make it back this time. He's 92 and did always love Andover.

"We see him often which I think he appreciates, and he's receiving fine care at the Resthaven Nursing Home.

"Joyce and I are busy with work, church, the Nursing Home, and our grandson.

"Hope you are having a good summer."

I have also had the following letter from Phyllis Ogden, widow of our classmate John Ogden:

"Dear Keith,
"I was so sorry to read in the June issue of the Yale magazine which I have just received, of the loss of Henry Hobson.

"John was so very fond of Henry, thought so highly of him, and would have agreed with all you wrote about him.

"I met him only a few times but realized that he was a very special kind of man.

"I still have everlasting memories of the 60th Reunion in 1974.

"I hope you are keeping well."

After John's retirement, John and Phyllis settled in England just across the channel from France. After John's death, Phyllis decided to stay in England, where she has many close friends.

*As I mail these notes to Andover, I have just learned of the deaths this past summer of two of our classmates—Fred Smith and Elmer Robinson. I will write up the lives of these two outstanding friends in my next notes.

Bill Foy writes from Monterey, CA that he is walking about three-quarters of a mile a day and is doing just fine. He enjoys the weekly visits at Beverly Manor Convalescent Hospital by his son George and his wife, and looks forward to the scenic rides with them along the inspirational Pacific coast. Carmel valley toward Salinas is home for much wildlife and he makes pets of them, feeding them on his balcony. He writes, "They pay me with their presence."

Dean Dillman reports to have celebrated his 90th birthday on the Desert with many children and grandchildren joining in the celebration. Dean enjoys TV and says he has great fun watching football and baseball.

Bob Daley's widow Louisa reports: "One grandson, Bradford Daley, Harvard '86, rowed on the freshman crew; his sister just graduated from Milton Academy and enters Duke this fall. Another grandson, Alexander Chatfield, just graduated from Harvard cum laude." She continues, "Our fourth grandchild was recently born, so life continues to be full of interest, change, and above all a wonderful sense of renewal!"

A note from retired Lieutenant Colonel Sidney Perley tells us that he has been married almost 58 years to Adelane Allan Perley. He has five children, 18 grandchildren, and he spends six months each year in Florida.

Ruth Lund, widow of Fred B. Lund, reports that she is eighty-five-years old, and feels lucky to have her three sons—the eldest, Fred, Jr. is unmarried; her middle boy, Skiddy Marden, is married and has two children; and her youngest, Charlie, has two daughters and lives in Washington.

Retired Brig. General Leo T. McMahon writes, "I was fortunate to be selected to participate in the 1983 Senior Officer Oral History Program carried out by the U.S. Army War College at Carlisle Barracks, Carlisle, PA. I have been assigned to be a member of the 1983 U.S. Army War College and I have been busy being interviewed, and they have recorded my responses on tape. For an Ad Man, it has been a rewarding experience." Leo also had a large family reunion at a wedding in Philadelphia. Coming up is his 90th birthday which he said he will mark, but not celebrate.

Thanks for the 23 return post cards I have received from PA '16. My records and those of the Alumni Office show 45 names on the roster—now I hope I will hear from the other 22 to record in the next issues of the Bulletin. We did discover that Henry Keyser of Baltimore, MD does not have a known address and mail is not forwarded. John Crossley of Detroit, Michigan has moved from his old location. If anyone knows of his new address, please let me or the Alumni Office know.

We received three sad notes. Bob Conkling of Olean, NY died on 31 May; Walter Hochschild of Blue Mountain Lake, NY passed away on 1 February, and Stuart Wainwright of Thousand Oaks, CA died on 17 May. They were all stalwart individuals who had made their marks and will be missed. Our hearts go out to all of their loved ones.

Most of the group who replied expressed good interest in life in spite of being over four score years. Enthusiasm for the School on the Hill still runs very high. Dick Bassett is still painting and holding shows. He urges closer contact with his classmates. Chauncy Beasley is keeping busy at a new address—603 S US Hwy G, #131, Juno Beach, FL 33408. He has just published a new, fun book, The Magnificent Golf Four-some in Latin and English. You can all refresh that which you learned from good old Charlie Forbes. Jud Dean sends his best to all the boys and the girls of 1916. (You know his affinity.) Freemen Dyke still keeps his eyes on the golf balls that fly by his Tequesta, FL home. Having had two sons that went to PA, he is now cheering for a grandson and two granddaughters who appear to be excellent prospects for the old school. Bill Flint is still checking in daily at the famous family-owned ladder company, and spending his winters in Naples, FL in the Bear Paw Golf Club Apartments. Paul Harriman is recovering from an accident that killed his wife a year ago, but as usual Paul is planning for happier days ahead. Allen Hubbard is carrying on like the trooper he is in New London, NH since the loss of his wife, Mabel.

Fred Peck has finally moved out of NYC to 11 Round Hill Club Rd., Greenwich, CT 06830 and as you might expect from fore-handed Fred, he writes that they have obtained a plot of land by "Our Church."

A wonderful friend of Bob Schelling's sent the following reply for him: "He was admitted to the Leesburg Nursing Center, Leesburg, FL in 1981. Though completely immobile and confined to a wheelchair the past 18 months, he is reasonably aware of his surroundings and his health is good considering the aging process. He enjoys good attention and is happy when he receives cards and visits from friends." Communications may be mailed to him at Box 33, Howey in the Hills, FL 32737. Mrs. Edith Boutwell will deliver them and acknowledge Bob's pleasure.

A note from a brother of Austin Smith brought Austin back into the active file for he was considered lost because of no prior contact. Austin is not well but seemed to reflect fond memories of PA when he heard of our card. Best wishes to Austin. Harold Sherman missed his life-long annual pilgrimage to Bailey's Island, ME as his dear wife Emma passed away this spring at the age of 88. The Islanders sorely missed their old friends. Sherm has a new address: Montecello Hindsdale Convalescent, 600 W. Golden Avenue, Hindsdale, IL 60521. Walt Smith missed his annual spring cruise but sends best wishes to all. Charlie Sprague is on the move again: He is on a River Barge Tour in France with his two daughters from California—always has a member of his family ready to join him. He is surely well cared for. Rosewell Truman now makes his residence in Roanoke, VA (street address unknown). He is living a very quiet life in the Blue Ridge Mountain area. Dayton Wilmont, like a lot of other fellows, reports he had only one year at PA (he lived in Abbot House), but association with George Hinman could more than make up for the loss. Dayton is still a walking golfer and a volunteer in the local emergency program. Charles Wood is now in the Devon Manor near his daughter at Bryn Mawr, PA. There are about ten gals to each male. He must be having a grand time.

As for your secretary, he reports that he is keeping out of trouble with no deadlines or payrolls to worry about. His hope is that all of you have as much pleasure as he does in keeping busy with family, friends, and organizations that need volunteer help. He has had an interesting time compiling this data. It is great to hear from old friends. Hopefully he will have more next issue.

Response to my last solicitation for news was excellent. I thank all those who took the time to write, and I hope to hear from more of you for future Bulletins.

As the first news item, I regret to report that I broke my hip and I am recuperating in a hospital near Little Compton, RI where my wife and I spend our summers. Before my fall, I was playing golf and leading a fairly normal life for 82½ years of age.

Martha Weare Bodine, wife of the late Marc W. Bodine, wrote that her husband would have been pleased to know that the Academy has an interest in what she is doing. She keeps busy in Williamsport, PA with her children, grandchildren, and a four-year-old great-granddaughter. We are interested in the widows of our Alumni and we welcome news from them.

Mrs. Ferris B. Briggs wrote that she enjoys living high on a mountain ridge in New York State. She has six grandchildren and one great-granddaughter.

We want to send our best wishes for a speedy recovery to our Class Agent, Al Chase. Al had a heart attack in June which prevented him from attending the 65th reunion which he helped plan.

Yardley Chittick wrote a nice letter about attending the reunion. While the total Alumni attendance was the largest ever, the Class of 1918 was represented by only three members—Bill Gray, Herb Horne and Yardley. He was impressed with the speech given by the Headmaster, Don McNemar and delighted to see that the school is excellently maintained. He came across some snapshots he had exchanged with PA classmates and he took them to the reunion. Among these was a picture of a fella who was across the hall in Taylor 5 when Yardley was in Taylor 1—Humphrey Bogart! Many of the Alumni were unaware that Bogart had attended Andover.

I heard from Wally Graves in Pasadena and he is doing well. He is writing his memoirs and keeps fit with exercise, including long walks.

Herb Horne had this to say about the 65th reunion: "You really begin to feel that you have matured when you realize you are one of only three to return for your 65th PA reunion!" He goes on to say that the Schock treated them to a fine luncheon at the Inn and he is looking forward to future reunions.

Recently, I have been corresponding with my good friend Eddie Kahn. My wife and I read his book, The Journal of a Neurosurgeon and we thoroughly enjoyed it. It is a narrative account of his experiences and of the development of his specialty as he has witnessed it over the past several decades.

Gordon Marshall reminds me that we have not seen each other since tennis day at Andover. He retired to Cape Cod in 197 and goes to Brittany every fall for a month or more. He is an avid fisherman and he did some successful bone-fishing on the Yucatan last February.

George I. McIlwain wrote that he has retired from the real estate business where he had a successful career on a national scale. He is happy to report that he is in fine physical and mental health.

Steve Neiley's widow, Dorothy, sent a short note saying she is living peacefully in South Yarmouth, MA where she has many good friends.

I had a cute note from Hall Paxton's widow, Vinsoe Mushrush Paxton. She shared the following story with me: "As Hall remembers it, he walked from the station, suitcase in hand, straight to the Headmaster's house saying, 'I want to study here.' When told that there are always more applicants than we can accept, he said, 'But I came all the way from China!'" Hall died in 1952 and Mrs. Paxton informed me that a resume of Hall's life was published in Who's Who of that period.

I was pleased to get a nice letter from Bill Stevenson. He was sorry he had to miss the 65th reunion. His wife, Bumpy, has been an invalid for several years and he rarely leaves her. He is living in Fort Myers, FL and he wonders how many classmates are coping with old age, which he says is defined as "not for sissies."

Roger Woolley says that he and Virginia are doing well. They travel from their home in Claverock, NY to attend performances by the Boston Symphony, the New York City Ballet, and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

I received a note from Eleanor H. Wheeler informing me that her husband, John Walker Wheeler, Jr., died on 7 July 1983 following a tragic fall in Springfield, VT. Jack was very active in the Boy Scouts and received the Silver Beaver award. He was honorman at Camp Childs, MA where he received the Wood Badge in 1960. He is survived by his wife, four sons, fourteen grandchildren, and seven great-grandchildren.

Regretfully, I must also report that the School has been informed of the following deaths: Mitchell Gratwick, MD of Flourtown, PA, died in December 1982; John A. Hauff, Jr. of West Haven, CT, died in December 1982; Chandler W. Symmes of Winchester, MA, died on 30 June 1983.

With co-operation from Sandy Thorpe at PA, and abetted by Temp Brown, your Secretary sent certified mail, return-receipt-requested letters to a number of our classmates from whom we had not heard for many years. The responses were rewarding, for the most part.

John Cornwall moved to the Southwest in 1926, spending nine years in Oklahoma and then moving to Midland, TX, where he now lives. He was Division Land Man for Amerada Petroleum until his retirement in 1966, after which he was a broker and trader in the oil business for the next ten years. He married in 1930, and he and his wife Muriel have one son and three grandsons.

Worth English went into the Navy after PA, then spent four years at Yale, graduating in 1923. After several occupations, he joined Metropolitan Life and retired in 1962 after a career of 30 years. He says, "My health is fair for anyone 83 years old. Just the usual complaints for that age."

Allen Griffin reports some very pleasant memories of his year spent at PA and he enjoys the communications he regularly receives from the school. He himself has been in pretty good health, but unfortunately his wife Ruth has not been well, suffering from Parkinson's Disease and other complications.

Bert Mayers writes, "Please forgive this skimpy communication. At 81½ we don't make excuses—but we have them." He tells us that his son, Art Mayers '68, is making a name for himself as a playwright—his latest play is Open Wide.

Mike Young has had a long and happy marriage with his wife Laura, but both have spent a lot of time in hospitals. For that reason it is doubtful whether he can come back for our reunion next June. But he does say, "My love for Andover and the friends I had there is great."

We received contrasting views from Gel Hardy and John Quinn. Gel does not share the enthusiasm which many of us have for our education at PA, and although he brought his son Hugh (now a distinguished architect) to Andover for a look at the school, he felt the atmosphere at that time was too cold. John was a good worker for PA, but is turned off because none of his grandchildren were admitted.

Jerry Bartlett is a good correspondent. He still enjoys fishing, and back in April planned to be in Wisconsin during the summer.

In my last notes, I reported the death on 19 February 1978 of Larry Kane. Larry graduated from Yale (where he was Editor of the Yale Daily News) in 1925. After practicing architecture, he set up his own investment counselling firm, publishing his well known "Market Force Index" in the 1930s. His hobbies were golf, music, and languages, particularly Japanese. After a long bachelorhood, at age 63 he married Dorothy Noyes Sproul, who also has had a distinguished career. She remarried three years ago to a Yale classmate of Larry's, Philip S. Evans III, and she lives at 14 Charlton Hill, Hamden, CT 06518 and uses Dorothy Noyes Kane as her professional name.

Parker Dudley, a faithful friend of PA over the years, died last 9 July. He graduated from Yale in 1923 and was in the real estate business in Cambridge, MA for over 50 years. He was a former president of the Society of Real Estate Appraisers and the Boston Realty Board, was on the board of Cambridge Savings Bank, and was also very active in the Boy Scouts. His wife Anne survives him. Her address is 246 Brattle Street, Cambridge, MA 02138.

As reported in the Spring Bulletin, a close friend of many years, Stu Otis, died 14 August 1982. He was in the class of 1923 at Yale and was in the banking business in Chicago. He was a generous donor to the Alumni Fund, but in late years he did not give us information as to his activities. He leaves a son, Stuart H., Jr., who lives at 817 Ravine, Decorah, IA 52101.

We understand that Bill Romney died a year or two ago near his summer place in Rhode Island following a rather long illness. Bill went to Yale after PA, and his career was with Procter & Gamble in Cincinnati, where he was a key man. After he retired, he and his wife Mary lived in a retirement compound which he had put together. Bill had a warm feeling for Andover, both as a student and as an alumnus. His wife Mary survives him; her address is 3580 Shaw Avenue, Cincinnati, OH 45208.

Just before publication deadline, we had a welcome call from Tim Durant. After battling a cancer infection in his leg dating from his success in the Grand National, he finally had surgery and says he is now entirely comfortable. Although his Grand National days may be over, he enjoys swimming, keeps himself in good shape, loves Andover, and expects to be with us for quite a few more years.

Frances Keany Rickard and her husband are living in Media, PA. They returned to the U.S. in 1945 after a very active, interesting life abroad. Her husband was management consultant for many long projects in Europe and South and Central America. They lived in Paris, Buenos Aires, and Santiago and made extended visits to Mexico City and Bogota. During World War II, Frances worked in Buenos Aires with the American Red Cross and Committees coordinating American, Argentine, and English activities to aid the war effort.

Through Jane Allen Kilby '24, word was received of the death of Florence (Phil) Hinkley Bishop. She died in her sleep 20 March 1983. Phil had lived in England forty-five years, the last thirty years in Kingswood, Surrey. Last year she had to give up her lovely home "Tembani," and entered a rest home. She is buried in the lovely grounds of St. Andrews Parish, the church of which she was so fond.

A reminder—if you don't let your Class Secretary have some information about your activities, you won't be able to learn much about the activities of your classmates in this column.

H. Sherman Holcomb died on 14 June 1983 at the Beverly, MA hospital after a long illness. Following graduation from Yale in 1926, Sherm joined the Charles H. Tenney Co. and subsequently became an officer and director of many of the electric companies comprising the Massachusetts Electric Co. He retired from active business in 1967.

He was active at the Peabody Museum in Salem, MA, where he has restored ship models and ships' figureheads. He was a skilled woodcarver, and was active in many community affairs.

He is survived by his wife, Julia; a daughter, Mrs. Albert M. Creighton, Jr.; a son, Harry S. Holcomb, III M.D., and two grandsons.

Hoddy Cole reports on a salmon fishing trip in July with friends from the West.

Your Secretary had to undergo major surgery at the Yale-New Haven Hospital in June, but recovered sufficiently by mid-August to tour the Canadian Rockies, including stops at Banff, Lake Louise, Jasper Park, and two days of helicopter trekking in the Cariboo range—a unique and exciting experience.

Remember, if you want to see a 1922 Class column in the Andover Bulletin, you'll have to supply me with information about your activities or those of your classmates.

Ruth Dewey York was the first to send news this summer. She still lives in Marblehead, MA, participates in the senior activities with enthusiasm, and draws pictures for the senior citizen paper! She had a cataract operation and is "sort of blind," but was due for a check-up and we hope all is fine now. She is one of my faithful correspondents.

Celie Kunkel Payne fell early in April and broke a hip. She is more or less confined around the clock, but with more therapy Celie expects to be able to walk one of these days. I know you all join me in wishing her a fine recovery.

A card came from "Dorothy" early in September, and I'm pretty sure it's from Dot Moxley Pitman. They spend half the year in Florida, the rest in New Hampshire. Her two daughters are in Massachusetts so they see each other quite often. Dot has three grandsons through college and started on their careers. One granddaughter is still at Keene state—"Time marches on." We'll all agree with that!

Anne Winery and Lib Hutchinson Matthews each drive fifty miles to meet for lunch in Fredericksburg at least three times a year. Happily, she reports that both are above average with respect to aging and its restrictions. Ann is in an excellent retirement home which gives fine care and offers many activities and entertainment, as well as opportunities to assist others.

I regret to tell you that Gwen Bloomfield Tillson's husband, Ernest, acknowledged my postcard with the news of Gwen's death on 7 June 1983. She had become increasingly frail the last few years but her hospitalization was short. Gwen and her family lived in Bedford, MA for twenty years.

where Gwen was an active participant in the founding of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. Through the years Gwen never missed a reunion until the 60th, and was always an enthusiastic, warm-hearted member of our class. Jimmy Burr Sanders, also of Wellesley, and I will miss her at the 65th. Survivors include her husband; two sons, Robert H. of Wellesley; Richard N. of Pittsburgh; and daughter, Deborah T. Capra AA '57. She also leaves five grandchildren and four great-grandchildren as well as her sister, Barbara, also an AA graduate. We all send our sympathy to the Tillsons. We will miss her greatly.

It is hard to receive such notices, but I do appreciate being notified directly or having the school notified. So please educate your family.

As you know, I moved to Maine last November and like it very much, although I'm sure I will always miss my Massachusetts friends. However, each of you has proved that distance does not cut off old friendships, and I thank you for your usual fine response to my request for news. There are 43 of the 59 in our class, and I have heard from 27 of you this year! Wonderful—keep it up! All sent love and best wishes. Affectionately, Olive.

These notes will consist largely of correcting an oversight in reporting our 60th Reunion. Leo Daley, our distinguished and genial chairman of that notable event, sent me an envelope filled with letters to him expressing regrets for the inability of several classmates to join us for the reunion. Leo answered each letter and passed them all on to me for their news content. Charlie Long's wife Gladys broke her hip in the spring of '83, which put a limit on their activities. However, he hoped to attend the graduation from Harvard of a granddaughter and a grandniece. Louis Kemp '25 told of the terminal illness of Pym Epler, which nullified his fond hope to be with us in June. Louis paid tribute to Pym's courageous, uncomplaining attitude in facing the inevitable outcome of cancer of the liver. Herb Jones learned of the Reunion while in Florida but had his hopes dashed by a conflict of dates—a granddaughter's graduation in St. Louis. Herb, who must be approaching 50 years of marriage, has been wintering in Vero Beach, FL for 30 years and his whole family loves it there.

Ben and Dorothy Swartz planned to drive East in their RV to attend our 60th but events conspired to spoil the intentions. He wrote nostalgically about miscellaneous memories of his days at Andover. Ben is President Emeritus of East Los Angeles College. Retired Judge Macauley Smith was to take a Yale tour/cruise to the Hebrides, Norway, and Copenhagen on 14-18 July after returning home from Oregon in May where he went to deliver a Saab Turbo to his son John. Thus, a trip to Andover in June was precluded. We hope he can make it in 1988. Mac's father was a classmate of Jimmy Sawyer's at PA and Yale. We knew James Sawyer as Treasurer of PA in our day, remember? Harry Remington's wife Mary wrote that they had planned all year to come to our 60th, but he developed a serious heart problem, so they had to stay at home. I have found an undated, xeroxed copy of news written by Eliot Clemons. I believe it has not appeared in any past Bulletin. Since it is timeless and general, I quote: "I play golf about every day, and walk instead of riding, so I really have no complaints." Eliot, we hope that this news is still current!

Bill Gay has asked to be relieved of the duties of Class Agent and the Academy is now seeking his successor. Bill took the job in the year 1958-59. That means he has served the Class of 1923 and Andover loyally and well for 26 years. That deserves applause and cheers. Bill deserves a vote of thanks and, as your Class Secretary, I hereby record an affectionate expression of gratitude from the Class of 1923, and know I have the endorsement of that sentiment from each of you. Bill, thanks!

I have learned of the deaths of two classmates in 1983. Palmer Y. Epler, Yale '27, died in mid-July. He was a retired executive of the Orange & Rockland Utilities, Inc. of Nyack, NY. Active in civic affairs, he served as trustee and president of the Upper Nyack School and trustee and deputy mayor of the village of Upper Nyack. He was a member of the Graduates Club of New Haven and the Sachment's Head Yacht Club. He is survived by his wife, Edith Kock Epler; his daughter, Sally (Mrs. Brian Kirby); two sons, Palmer Y. Epler, Jr. and Cyrus Epler; and nine grandchildren. In August of this year Charles A. Wade died, but I have little information about his career other than that he was associated with the Metropolitan Insurance Co., apparently in its Home Office. He is survived by his wife Catherine and a son Britton. He resided in Pottsville, PA. For the class of 1923 I express our deepest sympathy to the families for their loss.

I can hardly believe how many of you have answered my last plea, and I love you for it. I also thank you for your kind words. The first note I had was from Ruth Holmes Durant, who summed up what several of you said, so I quote from it: "I'm afraid you've gone to the well once too often," (I felt myself that I was keeping after you quite often) "and I'm afraid there is nothing I can do about it—maybe next year something will turn up that is worth reporting, but for now it is just old routine—and I must admit I like it that way!" I think that is a great way to feel and hope that we all do.

Peggy Scudder Marshall also says, "No news." She was sorry she didn't get to Reunion—maybe our 70th! As always, I am sorry she doesn't get to Maine anymore—it was fun.

Ginny Maxwell Hyland wrote "No news," but feels they are so lucky to be playing golf and swimming daily—she enjoys her pool, especially during this hot weather.

Libby Thompson Henry and Mimi Thompson Kimball are always good about writing. They do things together: for instance, in June they housesat a lovely home in Woodstock (this is why they were unable to attend Reunion) where it was so hot they could not sit out on the beautiful terrace. Mimi says the pièce de résistance of the summer was a week's stay in Glen Arbor, MI for a fascinating International Affairs Symposium. Libby and two friends were also there. Among the speakers were eight correspondents from the Christian Science Monitor. Libby wrote that she and a friend are driving to Boston in October, looking forward to some color. (Of course, I think they should come to Maine!)

Martha Buttrick Rogers writes that her husband is still ill and needs constant care. At the time she wrote, their youngest son was there from Florida to "lend a hand." Martha also reported that she will be a great-grandmother in March. Imagine. I would love it. I also received a statement concerning Miriam Sweeney McArdle saying that after forty years as Director of Music in all the schools of Andover, she has retired. She is now an active member of several clubs in Andover and an honorary member of two other clubs. She surely has done much for music in Andover, which I think is important.

Edy Damon Bugbee is still happy in her apartment in Wilmington with family nearby; son Dick and busy family live just across town. Son Jon and family come from Merion Station outside Philadelphia. Kaysie is a travel agent in a nearby town, sister Kay Damon Kletzien (whom we all know) lives in Swathmore, PA. Sounds as if they could have great family reunions.

Dottie Taylor Booth writes that great-grand #5 was born in August. Score to date, three girls, two boys. In July they had a big family celebration in Indiana to celebrate the 80th birthday of her husband, Waller Booth '22. Her last line was, "Wish I could hand this to you face to face." I do too, in fact I wish all of you could.

Earlier I had a note from Sally Finch Hartwell saying that her daughter Kay had driven her on two trips—one to Deephaven Camp where she and Arthur had gone for years, and where she spent time with friends, and a second trip to Thousand Islands to visit her daughter Jane. She also said that the change had been good for her, and we are glad of that.

Liz Peck Watrous says now that we have been out of school so long, it's fun to send news, and that is good news for this Secretary. She is still in Idaho Falls near her family and still looking for some Abbot 23ers.

Benjamin C. Cutler '22

Who Doesn't Want To Be A Band Leader?

by Terry Hoyt

As a survivor of the ethnocentric parties of the 1950s, I knew all about Benjamin C. Cutler '22. He was the man in the red jacket who raised a trombone or a B-flat soprano straight saxophone along with his musicians to tunes from South Pacific, Kiss Me Kate, and My Fair Lady. As a New Yorker who grew up going to dancing schools, learning the Charleston, and wearing a polo coat, I associated Ben Cutler and his orchestra with vacations from all-girl schools, dances, hats, and boys. And that, I thought, was that.

So I didn't know what to expect when I met Ben Cutler one recent spring afternoon in the lobby of New York's Roosevelt Hotel. He had just attended a weekly luncheon of the New York Rotary Club, which he serves as chairman of the music committee, and he wasted no time setting the record straight.

"It was deadly music," he said. "What we did then we did for dollars. You had to keep up the same beat throughout the evening because that's what they wanted. It was 'society' and it was very rigid. You take a ballad like Night and Day—Cole Porter wrote it moderato, but we had to play it as a fast fox trot, just like every other piece."

As we were talking, Cutler hummed It Was Just One Of Those Things and tapped the rhythm on the table.

"Ta da dum dum ta da dee. Of course, it's great fun playing the horns and all that stuff," he said. "Who doesn't want to be a band leader?"

At 78, Ben Cutler could be confused with his neighbors in Westchester almost half his age. Like them he commutes to and from Grand Central Station several times a week, and like many of them, he runs his own business. He still has thick grey hair—dyed, he explained, because no one hires a man with white hair. His complexion was ruddy the day we met and he admitted that he felt slightly stiff after a tennis doubles match the day before.

This is not to say, however, that keeping one's business and oneself intact at 78 is a simple matter. There's more to it than daily exercise and a bottle of hair coloring.

"Dad has always done what he loves," said his son, Thomas M. Cutler, Andover '58, a teacher of economics and American history at Brooklyn Poly Prep Country Day School. "He loves performing and giving people pleasure. It keeps him healthy."

What Ben Cutler loves, of course, is music. For the past sixty years—since Andover days—he has been singing music in several languages, composing music, and playing music. As the leader of his own dance band based in New York, he has played over 10,000 engagements in major cities and towns up and down the East Coast. Over the years he and his musicians have kept two million people—debutantes, brides, grooms, the graceful, the clumsy—pumping arms around the floor and feeling like Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers.

Doing what he loves has meant living with a volatile business. From a launching pad as a star Yale undergraduate athlete, soloist with the Glee Club, and a member of the Whiffenpoofs, Ben Cutler began as a baritone singer—opera, classical, and popular music—although "deep down inside me I've always wanted to be an opera singer more than anything else." He gave song recitals, and for two months non-stop, sang the role of Colline in La Boheme on a national tour. But he gave up singing full time after playing the lead opposite Mary Martin in One Touch of Venus on Broadway in 1944. From then on, Cutler concentrated on the regular work of conducting and playing dance music.

During those years, however, musical tastes changed and the hardest hits, perhaps, were the society bands. As late as November 1961 The New York Times wrote about the demand for the four top society band leaders, including Ben Cutler, who booked reservations fifteen years in advance. But then came rock and disco music, and the debutante party business once lucrative, dropped off. In Cutler's words: "Bang, we were out."

Yet Ben Cutler, ever enterprising, still playing a full range of social and commercial events; clubs want him because, according to one dance chairman, his band produces "a perfect blend of rock, disco, and show tunes. He is also composing: his latest is a waltz for the fifth anniversary of the white tie 'Vienna in Spring' dance at New York's Pierre Hotel. And he is still singing with the Yale Glee Club Associates, the Rotary Club, and at homes where he practices scales and works his voice up four half tones on the scale in what has been a lifelong interest in vocal technique.

"My class at Yale voted me 'most versatile,'" said Cutler. "I'm not the number one band leader, or the number one instrumentalist, or the number one baritone. Maybe I'm just the number one jack-of-all-trades."

week to say that her grandson Linc, who had a very bad accident, was there and is fine now, and will be going back to Charlottesville. She was about to leave for Elmira (where she lived during the Abbot days) and with a friend from Scotland would be travelling back through the Grand Canyon. I wish they would come to Maine too.

I am going to confess that I am afflicted with telephitis, so if you receive a call from me some day, don't be surprised. And I also want you to know that I wrote to Em Holt Mucklow and apologized for calling her Eva in the last Bulletin. When I checked wack on my notes, I could easily see why my blessed daughter-in-law, who kindly types for me, thought I had written "Eva!"

This is it for now. Best wishes to you all, and thank you again.

Several classmates joined the 80 Club during the year: Stillman Hobbs in April, your Scribe in June, Bill Keator in August, Gige Mumby in September, and Paul Bixler and Norm Thorn on the same day—8 October. I'm sure "Billie" Hobbs baked a cake for "Chips," and some day we'll celebrate our 80th together as planned. Bill Keator writes from Southport, CT that Lucy gave him a blast on his 80th—about 50 family members and friends were present. He enjoyed it so much he wants a repeat every year. The Keators left for Vero Beach in October. Dick Hocking reports his 77th was well celebrated in Madison, NH. Kay had gathered relatives for the occasion. "It was an afternoon of contentment and gratitude," says Dick. He attended a service at our son-in-law's church in North Conway—a service of remembering Hiroshima and a "never again" prayer.

Dick Knight was in the East this summer, and we did much visiting of Andover people: one day it was luncheon at the Andover Inn with Jack and Helen Barss and Mary Dake. Mary had written, recently, all the news of our friends in Green Valley. Another day we had luncheon at the Publick House in Sturbridge, where Bob Hamilton joined us. Then we spent four days on the Cape. We tried to see Bill Curtis, but he was hospitalized at the time.

The Stuart Henry's were in Venice in June, and missed Stu's 55th at Harvard. Says he continues his interests as a Trustee of Hancock Shaker Community, the Berkshire Museum, and Chesterwood Studio; painting occupies a lot of his time. Bill Wadhams reported that Gert had been hospitalized but is now okay. They rented a place in Essex, CT, for the summer and hoped to see the Larsens there or on the way West. Prentiss Glazier was in England again, and was "enjoying it thoroughly." Stay away from the Tower, Prentiss; remember you only have one head. Art Tait and Frieda attended the model railroad convention in Canada. They are already planning on our 60th next 8-10 June. They sent along some suggestions, so were put on the committee immediately. Tom Ward has agreed to work on the Directory again. Thanks, Tom. Stephen Carter, who is a PA Dean and lives in the Class of 1924 House, wrote to say we could use the meeting room for our headquarters, and he, and wife Adele, were looking forward to meeting us. Vic Earle wrote and enclosed a letter to Van Johnstone (he misplaced his address). Already Vic and Ester have marked their '84 calendar for 8-10 June, and they hope his Princeton roommate has done the same. Both Vic and Joe Hutcheson were married recently. Van sends a letter along at least once a month, and one came from Nancy (our hostess, when we visit them in Palm Beach). Bunny and I were sorry not to be able to attend the wedding of Hunt and Barbie Eldridge's daughter Ann, in Duxbury in September. The Barsses celebrated their granddaughter's wedding at the Log Cabin on the Andover Sanctuary grounds. Gerry Law, the Wellesley Grad who located the Charlie Forbes bench on her campus (it had Charlie's pet Latin phrase on it), now writes that Lou Palmer is her neighbor on Mason's Island, CT. It was Bill Woodward who started me on my search for this Holy Grail. Grace and Ralph Blank paid us their annual visit in July before heading for Maine. Mary, Ken Mumby's widow, may join us after reunion on a trip to Norway. (She said it took her five minutes to decide to go.) She has a friend in Oslo. George Beecher attended a reunion of all the kinfolk of Harriet Beecher Stowe—160 strong. Can't guarantee 160, George, but we hope you and Irene will be on the hill next June. It is difficult to keep up with Gretchen Wyler, Louie and Peggy Wienecke's daughter—we heard that recently she was on the TV program Nightline, debating a famous surgeon from Stanford about unnecessary research on animals in labs. We also heard she proved her point. Laura Williamson, Scribe for Abbot '24, reports seeing Nick Danforth again at King's Chapel, where he is active. Told her he couldn't wait for our 60th. Laura was off for the USSR in June with the Andover Citizen Exchange Council. John Dixon was at the Yale 55th. He claims my "persistent encouragement" got him into circulation. His son John, Jr. was PA '53. "With the ice broken, I hope (Deo volente), to be at Andover in '84." Great news, John! Dick Vaughan asks, "How was the Yale 55th? See anyone there I know, like Footie, for one?" You missed a fun time Rich— Toddy outdid himself again. Bob Clark roomed with Johnny Phillips their first year at Dartmouth, and celebrated their birthdays jointly although a day apart. Bob's 23 April birthday is also famous for being our grandson's, Bob Hamilton, and also William Shakespeare's. Dike Howe's widow Amy came to town in August with daughter Oliva, and we dined at the restaurant and they then headed for Maine the next day. When they returned, Bunny lunched with them at the airport and they left for Conroe, TX. It was interesting to note, on the front page of the Boston Globe, that Sumner Smith '08 had parking ticket trouble in Boston, especially since he hasn't driven there for 18 years . . . We received two tickets when we were in Arizona for parking in Boston and Cambridge. I must recommend to them [the Boston Police Dept.] my ophthalmologist. John and Marge Lockett hope to be at our 60th which, with the Taits, will complete the El Paso delegation! Bill Jones feels we are not growing older but just acquiring more seniority. I hate to bring up again the blue outfit he wore when we met, but the Yale blue did become this Harvard man.

Charlie Blunt wrote about brother Bill's untimely death as being a great loss to him, as he depended on Bill for advice all through life. Bill and Helen were very loyal members of '24, and attended all of our reunions. We will miss him very much. It was Bob Redpath who first mentioned Bill's death. Bob and Nancy were in Athens in June, and stayed at the Marriott Hotel. Our nephew managed two Marriotts in Saudi Arabia, and is now managing one of the largest in Cairo. He would be glad to hear Bob's praise of the chain. The Redpaths also spent a week in Rome with their daughter. Bob has called twice as I write these notes. We have kept in touch with Morry Skinner's wife, Ethel, since her letter about Morry's poor condition. Our last phone call was even more discouraging. Dick and Mary Chace reported joining the two Mumbys—Mary and Gige—to see Henry IV Part I. After the performance the actors held a question and answer period with the audience. It was so interesting that they didn't get home until after one o'clock. Berry Grant never fails to write after a Newsletter or a birthday card arrives. I hope Berry can make our 60th and bring his tennis racquet, as he played Bill Tilden way back when.

Henry Hitchcock thinks the passage of time between birthdays goes too fast. Hitchy and Eleanor "had a great summer and too busy a one." We had dinner with Jan, Louie Rugee's widow at the restaurant. Her daughter was with her—the mother of the "Fearsome Fivesome" whom Louie always talked about. Jan lives in South Bend, IN.

Joe Smith must be referred to as "the miracle man." Even his nurses at the hospital in Florida where he was very sick can't believe he attended his 55th way up in Dartmouth. Joe mentioned in his recent letter, and via a phone call, all the PA '24 classmates who were on hand: Geoff Glendinning, Mutt Jennings, Roy Milliken, Red Sandborn and Johnny Phillips. Of course, Bob and Ester Clark, who never miss, were cruising on the Danube at the time. Bob's note mentioned the highlight of the trip was a concert of Viennese music (a private one) in the Grand Hall of Anersberg Castle. Joe ends by saying, "My next big objective will be our 60th at Andover." I'm sure Ruth and the MIRACLE MAN will be there.

Mary Harvey Kindel just called to say she is coming to our 60th next 8-10 June! High spots of her '83 summer were visits to the Interlaken Music School Camp to visit her granddaughter. This famous camp attracts students from 26 countries. Ruth Eveleth Larter says she wants to drive Kay Hart Mitchell and Olive Mitchell Roberts to Syb's reunion box lunch on 28 September. Olive tells me she just "putters," then she told me she and her fourth daughter attended a five-day geological convention in Canada and is now reading about her local geology. She calls her family a "post-card family," for all four daughters and their children write cards from all over the world, and now even her grandchildren do. Some "puttering!"

Sybil Bottomley Talman summers in Mattapoisett near my daughter, Elleda Katan. We had two visits, one swimming and one seeing slides at Elleda's and we talked Reunion. She generously offered her beautiful home for a reunion box lunch on 28 September.

Ruth Kelley Perry and Elwyn will drive to Attleboro from Chatham and they hope to bring Lila Clevenger with them. Kay Mitchell will talk about our Russian trip.

Margaret Colby Williamson writes that she and Bob had a "nice" summer in Albany and Lake Snapee. She now has a grandson at Bucknell; a granddaughter finishing her nursing studies in a private school; another granddaughter at Williams, and a husband who is Head Class Agent for Dartmouth, 1927. And Peg will bring him to Andover for our 60th!

Kay Hart Mitchell and I had an ever memorable trip to Russia with a "family" Andover group of 66 the last two weeks in June. To quote Kay, "How beautiful the flat country; how immaculate Moscow; how gorgeous the palaces and churches; how enjoyable the circus, the ballet (Sleeping Beauty); the happy Moldavian Dancers; how horrible the food except for the fresh cucumbers."

The museums and palaces were fair-land colors of soft blues, greens, yellows, with white and shinning gold. Even the long, low Kremlin was yellow; but the Hermitage a beautiful blue, gold and white. The onion-domed churches in all three cities visited, Moscow, Novgorod, and Lenin-grad, were dark multi-colors inside and out. We visited a many-roomed clinic described in Russian by five different spic-and-span women doctors; a many-roomed, spic-and-span nursery school (even the blocks sparkled!) also described in a superior way by a spic-and-span director. And Lenin's picture—a large one—was in every room. A converted small palace called Friendship & Peace was especially interesting; the three directors spoke to us in English. We learned about the free education—even for doctors and lawyers and especially for their elder citizens. When we were not "going places," we were free to walk and shop. Again and again, the people (even children) would stop us to say, "Tell your country we want peace."

Kay and I left our Andover family in Helsinki for a two-week Eurail trip through seven countries. ALONE! Kay said, "This is really designed for young people without luggage." However, the many knapsacked students from many countries had fun helping us formally-dressed and luggaged septuagenarians on all sorts of occasions. They made the endless waits in banks and ticket counters fun, and Kay made it fun for them too.

After flat, flat Russia the Norway fjords were especially impressive. And after the flat Russian food, the green fruits and vegetables and even the meats (whale steak) were especially delicious. Even the air somehow felt fresh and free and this surprised us—that one can feel something as intangible as this when out of the USSR.

With regret and sympathy we report the deaths of three classmates: Ruth Flather Sadler of Nashua, NH, on 18 March 1983; [Death previously listed, Summer Bulletin]; and Harriet Cheney Hughes of Jamaica Plain, MA, on 22 March 1983. [Death previously listed, Summer Bulletin]. Also, the death of Eleanor Ireland Saunders was reported to me by her niece, Anne Ireland. She died in February 1983 after surgery. Our sympathy goes to her niece.

Let me share excerpts from an interesting letter from Winslow Ames: (A previous item re Johnny Graetzer in Guatemala, aroused memories.) "My father returned in 1917 to the diplomatic service . . . he was sent to Guatemala to persuade the government to confiscate German and Austrian property. The Ames family took a long weekend holiday to Antigua, traveling in a carriage drawn by four mules on a roller-coaster-like road deep in dust under which stones lurked. We were always followed, at a distance, by obvious spies who would sometimes confer in plain sight and then quit for the day.

"The first of my five granddaughters to be married," he continues, "was married down South, and our one grandson enters Hunter College in New York in September."

Charlie Arnt is enjoying the good life on his ranch at Orcas, WA. "We've had the most beautiful winter and spring we've ever had on Orcas. Finally finished our calving and artificial breeding and will be getting ready for haying—busy as a bird dog. My blueberries and vegetable garden look great. If I can catch the raccoon that digs up our garbage—I've got one of his toes—all will be well."

Chuck and Lois Eeles attended graduation at Ohio State to see their son get an advanced degree. George Bush was chief speaker and his connection to Andover was emphasized. In late August they visited their daughter in San Francisco and later drove up the California, Oregon, and Washington coasts, visiting Victoria and Vancouver; then they flew home from Seattle.

Your scribe and wife had an offbeat summer: we attended an Elderhostel at Miss Porter's School in Farmington, CT and took three mind-stretching courses given by excellent teachers. Later we visited friends in Chautauqua, NY where we heard the Chautauqua Symphony, a fascinating lecture by John Houseman, reminiscing on his years in the theatre, and overamplified singing by Robert Goulet of Camelot fame and Bobby Vinton, popular vocalist, each attracting 7,000 fans who filled the Amphitheatre. It was fascinating, although a bit frightening, to see how they manipulate this mass audience of young and old. Hug McCandless reports that they like the new quarters in Hamden; he fills in as supply rector, and helped officiate at the wedding of his grandson, who was married in California early this year.

I am grieved to announce the passing of Roger S. Makepeace last June. Roger attended Yale, making Phi Beta Kappa, and Harvard Business School. He spent his business career with Scovill Mfg. Co. During WW II, he served nearly four years, first as a Lieut. and later as Lieut. Commander. He was active in community affairs, serving on the Waterbury Board of Finance and on the YMCA. He sang in the Andover, Yale and Waterbury Glee Clubs. Roger leaves his wife, Elizabeth, a daughter, and two sons.

We lost Francis G. Howarth last June. Bud went to Brown and soon after graduation faced terrible problems due to a fire destroying the family flannel mill—this in the Great Depression. He went to work to support his parents, driving a Mack truck for the WPA, which he detested. He then had a series of jobs with that agency, followed by work with a leather concern and a lumber company. He then became a librarian and ended up as Head Librarian of the Oxford (MA) Public Library, from which he retired in 1977. He's survived by his wife, Elizabeth, and two sons. To these bereaved families, the class extends its deepest sympathy.

From Tony Eastman—"I am most grateful to Andover for a fantastic basic education. I am enjoying three children and 5¼ grandchildren. I swim a quarter of a mile a day." It is also extremely pleasant to report that at this time of his life, Tony had the enthusiasm and vigor to start a new business only two years ago. He writes that having always been interested in the development of people, he founded Anthony Eastman and Associates, a consulting firm devoted exclusively to "Outplacement." Many companies recognize their obligation to assist those executives and managers whom they are releasing. Outplacement advises not only those who must relocate, but also the sponsoring company, in handling what is generally a delicate situation. We wish Tony the best of everything in what seems to be a fine humanitarian endeavor.

Chet Dudley, who seems to be enjoying his life in Columbia, SC, writes, "I hope Andover still is giving the 'growing up' values and the motivation to develop curiosity and an inquiring mind." His granddaughter, Chandri Navarro, was graduated from PA in 1982. For the past three years, Chet, who was an extremely successful advertising executive in NY as a young man, has been busy writing a book on his observations and thoughts which he is calling Stumbling for Truth.

A letter from Charlie Gill from his home in Matthews County, VA, "... a county so small that it has no stop light," relates that he and his wife, Peggy, have a small real estate office. Charlie, who was active in the radio club when at Andover, has after a lapse of 50 years, renewed his license and obtained some transmitting equipment, but "it's not the fun it was when we built our own coils, rectifiers, etc."

Although Van Wolf writes that there is nothing of interest to report, he comments that his life since retirement has been "niftier" than ever and also that he is busy doing odd jobs for an old client. Hope we can entice you away from the Eastern Shore of Maryland to attend our 60th in '86.

We understand that Reggie Parsons and his wife, Bethel, are working on a three-year retirement program, centered on a retirement home with many services and conveniences, located in his old home town, Seattle, WA. We can't imagine him actually retired as he has always been active in so many fields, particularly helping others.

Fletch and Kay Nyce took off for France in August on their 20th trip to visit and study Romanesque churches. This time, after staying at a 13th century castle for five days, they drove to the Auvergne, a hilly and remote area where people ski in the winter. There, for the third time, they toured four Romanesque churches which survived, with practically no restorations, for 800 years or more although some interior repainting has been done. Because of their locations, they avoided damage from revolutionists and the Huguenots.

Frank Spinney underwent triple bypass surgery at the Yale-New Haven Hospital in July. Your correspondent paid him a visit in Woodbury, CT a few days after he returned home. He looked very well, his spirits were excellent, and he seemed to be making a good recovery.

Pete and Laura Tully's daughter Carol received her Ph.D. in Social Services Administration in June at the Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond, VA. Pete and "Larry" drove from Brand, VT for the occasion. Congratulations are in order to both of them and especially to Carol.

We have recently been notified of the death of Bill O'Kane on 20 February 1983. On behalf of the class of '26, we extend our sincere sympathy to Mrs. William H. O'Kane. Her address is Box 740, Royalton, VT 05068. It is with regret that we report the death of Hiland D. Holt on 13 August 1983. He was born in Andover, graduated from the University of New Hampshire in 1933, and obtained his Masters at San Francisco State University. A veteran of World War II and the Korean War, he retired as Lt. Colonel. He taught at Simsbury High School, the University of Hartford, and at Watertown, CT High School. He is survived by his wife Shirley, of 222 Quassa-gaug Road, Woodbury, CT, two sons, a daughter, and six grandchildren, to whom we extend our sympathy.

As your Class Secretary I'm always hopping to run into old classmates, or at least to hear from them. However, no such luck this time. How about some news this fall and winter? I spent a most happy week in May visiting my son Andrew and family in their new home in Flagstaff, AZ. We explored several ancient Indian buildings sites and magnificent canyons, trying to imagine what life would be like for a family living like cliff swallows in small rock caves at dizzy heights above the valley floor. And we saw shy, young Navajo students studying their heritage at the splendid Indian Museum. But now to quote dear old Madame Craig: "Revenons a nos moutons!" Class-mates, do please send in news of yourselves and your doings for the winter Bulletin.

The following is a most welcome note from Bill Parsons: "I see that all of my classmates are writing books. Therefore, I must tell you that the ninth edition of my book on estate planning has just come off the press—the original edition came out in 1949. It is published by the American Law Institute and entitled Lifetime and Testamentary Estate Planning. I might add that one grandson graduated from Andover in 1981 and a second grandchild, William Chase Parsons, is presently there. In all, I have nine grandchildren. I am still practicing law with Milbank, Tweed, Hadley and McCloy in New York, but spending most of my time with not-for-profit activities."

Coly Hardy reports that sales of his annual Dun & Bradstreet's Guide to Your Investments are reaching a new high along with the ebullient stockmarket. He says the next edition will be out in January.

Dick Condon, having wintered in South Carolina, is back in Morris, IL watching his farm investments . . . Bob Crowell's Lore & Legend of Flowers is already out of print, but you may be able to get a copy of this delightful, and beautifully illustrated book, if you hurry . . . Johnny Houston was a leader in the successful fight to acquire control of his retirement community in Leesburg, FL . . . with the help of an aroused citizenry . . . You can't keep a good man down. Sam Groves, who was forced by a mandatory retirement rule to leave the board of one major mutual fund, has been named as director of a new investment company sponsored by a midwest group but managed in Boston.

In 1955, 28 eventful years ago, Nancy and I acquired Lowe Point, Robinhood, Maine, from Guy Forbush, esteemed French Dept. colleague and onetime mentor, who had lavished tasteful devotion on restoration of a lovely house and surroundings which date back to 1813. On this 1983 Labor Day weekend we are in the chaotic process of "clearing out" in anticipation of the imminent occupancy of new owners who, we have good reason to believe, will cherish and care for "Low Lea" (as Guy named it) as we have. To the many friends who have enjoyed this lovely spot with us, in person and vicariously, "Thanks for the memories."

A combination of summertime, post-reunion correspondence doldrums, and frenetic local activity in connection with the realty operation mentioned above, assures reduced longitude for this crop of notes—a blessing to the readership and to Ed. Regan and his Bull. co-tailors. ITEM: Bill Frank reported "exciting and enlightening" trip with grandchildren Ted and Diane through Rocky Mountain, Teton, and Yellowstone Parks, did not wind up thereafter in the "booby hatch," as earlier feared. ITEM: Bill Laundon and Jean scheduled to preside parentally on 1 Oct. at nuptials of daughter Jan and Croft Grantham III in Landgrove, Vermont. We wonder if Elsie may be on hand (or hoof) to moo "I Love You Truly." ITEM: Tom Mendenhall, pinch hitting for U.N. Amb. Kirkpatrick at Smith's 105th Commencement, defended the freedom of speech that was denied her, and bemoaned the lack of breadth in the current Smith curriculum, which permits large numbers of Young Ladies to eschew desirable exposure to foreign language, math, logic, and, to the chagrin of our illustrious historian classmate, history.

ITEM: George Vaill, who claims a wide range of PA and Eli class affiliations, and is ever welcome at assorted reunions, wrote of early summer week in London with Duke Henning and Alison, "witnessing the official publication of the mammoth History of Parliament job on which Duke has been working for 30 years—three volumes, 2300 pages. The publisher's party was held on the Terrace Marquee of the House of Commons—a memorable show." ITEM: Yet another '28 historian, Bob Adler, spends much time out of Gladys's hair toiling in the Rochester Library on a history of the clothing industry in that city. Unhappily for PA posterity, the official, 1928 55th Reunion Class Picture reveals naught but brow and left eye of '28 co-banner-bearer Adler, the remainder being concealed behind a "sincere" likeness of Clare Flarsheim. Fortunately, decorative Gladys was unconcealed. ITEM: Oft-quoted, ever-welcome correspondent, Egg Lewis, addressed himself feelingly to the wonders of grandparenthood after vivid description of springtime freshets on RI tree farm: "No sooner dried out then here comes the next natural disaster—the grandchildren's parade. In college though they be, every last one reverts at the front door to kindergarten days, eating only at off hours (will that quiet thunk of the refrig. door never end?), and flushing the W.C. every 15 minutes. And yet they are polite and thoughtful beyond all expectations, doing many a house chore for Mary, and all the lifting for me. Their grades are paying off in scholarships. Patiently, yet full of hope for it, they explain the new world to me as once I might've the wireless to a survivor of San Juan Hill."

Once again, it's sad to conclude this column with news of the death of another highly regarded and happily remembered classmate. Van Durell died on 8 July and is survived by wife Phyllis and daughter Susie. He and Phyl added much to the enjoyment of our 50th reunion and were missed by their friends last June.

Not much news since our 55th.

Emily Sloper Shailer has kindly agreed to be, once again, our Class Agent. She has not wandered far from home so she can keep a watchful eye upon husband Russell, who is full of ideas about keeping home and garden up to snuff.

A letter from Sue Ripley Ward mailed 31 May went around Robinhood's Barn and finally arrived 11 July. She works diligently getting ready to publish her first book and perhaps two others. Special greetings were sent to all of the Class.

Gee Gee Gay d'Elseaux wrote in August that she feels much better, is in good spirits, and is learning to breathe deeply in a pulmonary clinic.

Notice has arrived from the Academy of the death of Beatrice Lane Mercer on 27 July 1983. Her husband, Mr. John C. Mercer, O.D., lives at 2513 - 57th Street, Sarasota, FL 33580 should you want to send sympathy. Her good Abbot friend, The Reverend Helen Leavitt Fisher, lives at 154 So. Grandview Ave., P.O. All for now. Hope to have news by next news period. Best to you all. Laddie.

Hello to Abbot 29ers.

Thanks to Kay Bowden Barnes for sending in her news. Her husband has retired from Brown University, but he continues to teach a course in World Independence and work on the problems of Nuclear Disarmament. Kay still works for the District Nurses, the Providence Preservation Society, and International House. "We have a daughter in Ann Arbor and a new granddaughter Kate. Our son and his family are in California." Kay says, "Do tell any Andover people to look us up at Brown."

Gwen Jones Mallory writes that they have moved from their house and large garden to a large condominium and small garden. Gwen plans to go to her 50th at Wellesley in the spring. They will be at Tenants Harbor, Maine in August. Gwen is still active in the Garden Club, Porcelain Club, and charitable organizations; she plays a little golf and swims at the Balboa Club every February.

It is great to hear from you. Those of you I haven't heard from, try to find something to tell us! I have had a reminder from the Alumnae Reunion Chairmen that our 55th is coming up on 8-10 June 1984. It is a beautiful time of year at Andover, always fun to see our classmates and to see what the Trustees have decided to do with our Abbot Campus. Think about it and let me know if any of you could make it for Reunion!

One sad note—Ruth Bourne Heston's husband died of a massive heart attack on 6 April of this year. Our deep sympathy goes to Ruth, and our hopes that things will be happier for her this next year.

The other day I talked to my home computer and was informed that I had been writing the class notes for 52 years. Not bad for a guy who almost flunked English at Andover.

The 17 August 1983 issue of the Wall Street Journal mentions one person's opinion of classmate John Batten's presidency of Twin Disc, Inc. of Racine, WI. (He is also CEO of that company.) That person is a company director named Ralph J. Kraut. We quote Mr. Kraut's remarks in part: "The decision of the management and board thus far not to diversify into unrelated businesses is and was, in my judgment, a sound one. Look at the companies now attempting to de-conglomerate. Twin Disc's 1982-83 depression does not invalidate the outstanding 35-year management record of John Batten and his associates. Twin Disc continues to do better than larger companies in its field and has emerged financially strong after its worst year. . . . John Batten is an enlightened executive and the operating record of the company speaks for itself."

Jim Kettle, retired in 1973 and living in Hopewell, NJ, says, "Both daughters are married. One lives in Nags Head, NC and the other in Grantville, PA. We have five grandchildren and only one is a boy."

Lucius Kingman has retired as attorney for the National Labor Relations Board in Washington, DC. He reports that he is heavily involved in swimming, bicycling and playing the violin in a string quartet.

A communication from the family of Robert C. Hallett reads as follows: "The family of Robert Corwin Hallett, Andover '31 and Princeton '35, now presume him deceased. He disappeared in 1968 after a long illness. He was a champion javelin thrower at Andover, rowed bow on the 1934 Princeton crew which rowed at Henley, and was associated with Pan American Airways during his entire business life. He is survived by his former wife, three daughters, four grandchildren, a sister, and five brothers."

My husband and I are taking off this week for a seven-weeks trip around the world, with our main emphasis on the People's Republic of China! I will have lots to tell the next time I write the class notes.

It was good to hear from Lisette Mico-leau Tillingbast, who started her note last May while on a trip to South Africa! A month later she and her husband Charlie were getting ready for a trip to Europe and looking forward to taking two of their grandsons with them, the trip being high school graduation presents for the boys. They have done this for five other grandchildren and realize it is a good time to travel with them before they get involved in college and all its activities. Lisette and Charlie have moved to 25 John St., Providence, RI 02906, but maintain their country home at Meadow Lane, Little Compton, RI 02837.

Faith Chipman Parker and Ed have also moved after 20 years in Phoenix, AZ. They found it hard to leave old friends but are realizing it is wonderful to live near three of their four children. Their new address is 2315A East Ward, Seattle, WA 98112.

A card from Janet Simon Smith arrived a little too late for the last deadline. She and Bob were traveling to Maryland last May for the wedding of their youngest, Bradford Scott. Their other four children and spouses plus five grandchildren were to come from near and far for the wedding and a great family reunion. In June, Janet and Bob were off to the Scandinavian countries on a golfing trip. They have moved since then and their new address is: Bushnell II, Apt 1019, 100 Wells St., Hartford, CT 06103. Our class is on the move!

Cora Budgell Bourgeois and Ernest have been enjoying more leisure time and spending it at their lake home in the summer. They are fortunate in having their grandchildren (two girls 18, and 15, and a boy, age 12) live right across the street. Cora and Ernest are looking forward to their annual six-weeks trip to Kauai, Hawaii during the winter. She and others often mention what a great time we had at our 50th reunion. We all look forward to our 55th and hope more of us can attend.

Kay Howell Whittiem and Gordon are loving their retirement on the Cape, where they have enjoyed fishing, clamming, oystering, and scalloping. They also take advantage of being able to attend many fine musical programs and plays. Bowling and golf help keep them in shape. Kay is a volunteer at the Association for the Preservation of Cape Cod. The aim of this non-profit organization is to educate residents as to the fragility of that narrow neck of land and suggest prudent ways to make use of as well as preserve its natural resources. Her church activities and work on various committees are still her primary interests.

Do write me any time so you can share your interests and life styles with other members of the class. Retirement is opening up such interesting vistas!

For news of Classmates, Mother Hubbard's cupboard looks like a cornucopia compared to my mail bag. Not to put too fine a point on it, but I have received nothing whatever by way of useful information in the past months. Not daunted, I shall fall back upon my hitherto carefully concealed ace-in-the-hole and tell you a little about my recent activities in Albany, where I have been in private law practice for the last twenty years.

This practice has been exciting enough, but I find that its demands upon my time have gently receded, which permits me to engage in such enterprises as the Albany County Historical Association, of which I have been president for the last six years. Its principal function is to conserve and administer an 18th century architectural wonder called the Ten Broeck Mansion, in which we came upon a wine cellar a few years ago which produced its own wonders, including 24 cases of French wines such as Mouton Rothschild which had been unopened from the time of shipment in the 1870s and 1880s. Those that remained potable were auctioned off over a period of three years, providing funds necessary to restore the mansion to its former glories and attracting a certain amount of publicity from coast to coast.

Since I can now call at least some of my time my own to a far greater extent than heretofore, I would be delighted to welcome any of you to the Empire State Capitol City, give you a tour of the Mansion, or of our new billion dollar Empire State Plaza (with its millions of dollars worth of modern art by the square yard), or at the very least a number of social rounds.

In the meantime I would certainly welcome some news from you.

It was difficult to return to earth after my gorgeous weeks in France this summer, but I am gratified by the response to my solicitation for Bulletin news:

Everyone, everywhere had a hot summer and took various measures to ignore the weather. Priscilla and Austin Anderson celebrated their own 43rd wedding anniversary, along with the 45th and 50th of friends, and had a visit with their son and his family from North Carolina. They look forward to next June when Austin and the minister of South Church in Andover will lead a group to Oberammergau.

Isabel Arms didn't say a word about her computer course in South Hadley, but enjoyed her Elderhostel trip to England, in spite of day after day of 85° temperatures. Also in Europe were Suzanne Welte Aubois and two of her grandchildren, both sixteen, who were visiting their French grandmother's home and family for the first time. Suzanne said what surprised her was their unexpected attitude toward the trip—they refused to be tourists!

Kay Brigham Callanen and Gardner alternated the relative coolness of Cape Cod (introducing their latest granddaughter, aged 23 months, to the joys of a sandy beach) with the breezes on Lake George, where Gardner's fraternity, Psi Upsilon, was celebrating its 150th anniversary. Cape Cod and a beach in Maine also helped Molly Marshall Dudis escape the central Massachusetts weather for a while—a breathing space before starting the fall church and civic activities that cooler days will bring.

Do you remember the long summer days at camp in our teenage years? Harriet Wright Hight still maintains her ties with Aholia, in Fairlee, Vermont, where three generations of her family met this summer for parents' weekend. In August she and her daughter went to Dartmouth's Alumni College to "wrestle with the complex question of War and Peace—no easy answers, but a stimulating and thought-provoking session."

Amongst our newly-retired classmates is Susan Johnston Milliken. She and her husband, Peter, took the train to Lake Louise and western Canada this summer. Their daughter Frances is working for her doctorate in psychology, and their son Peter recently won a prize given by U.P.I. for the best newspaper reporting in Ohio.

Flop Dunbar Robertson spent a musical month with Randal and their son Hugh at the home they share in the summer, near Tanglewood. They went to several concerts and had one week with the Berkshire Choral Institute in Sheffield, preparing (with 140 other singers) Mozart's Mass in C Minor and Solemn Vespers. (Too late for the summer Bulletin, was Flop's report of having spent a week last spring in New York with Hugh, and two weeks in Texas with her daughters—Elspeth in San Antonio and Holly in Austin.)

At Christmas Cove in Maine, a cool place, Ruth Tyler Smith and Everett entertained their various family members, now numbering 15. And to avoid the cold in Ohio, they plan to spend the winter months at Spinnaker Point, The Moorings, Vero Beach, FL. Any classmate in the area is invited to look them up.

Va Wolfe wrote in the spring that she was in the hospital with a broken hip and she has been home all summer with no plans for traveling until "next year, maybe."

Mea culpa dept.: Betty Boyce's address, which I left out of the summer Bulletin, is: 28 Harmon Road, Portland, ME 04102. Betty Bigler deMasi's new home is in Woodsboro, MD, not Woodshore, as I wrote; her street address is 10724 Etzler Mill Road, Woodsboro, MD 21798. And Atossa Welles moved to an Albany suburb almost a year ago—new address 27 Oak Road, Delmar, NY 12054. She also wrote that her trip down the Colorado River while we were at reunion in '82 was wonderful but exhausting—"sleeping out on the banks of the river in a sleeping bag for nine days was too much for me, but well worth it."

Hooray! Peg Black Manz has agreed to take over as Class Secretary. From now on, send your news to 477B Midway Drive, Ocala, FL 32672, where Peg and Merrill live near the 14th hole of the Silver Springs Shores Golf and Country Club. "In addition to playing the usual retirement games—golf and bridge—we swim almost every day. I do a lot of church work, [she's clerk of the session] and still do piano things, even piano-organ Bach—shades of Miss Friskin! We have a great family: an adopted son and foster daughter whose families we see regularly."

Yet another church-worker, Clara Shaw Izmirian, for fifteen years Receptionist/Secretary for St. Mark's Cathedral, sends her love to all Gargoyles and Griffins from Edina, MI.

Carolyn Guptill Hansen has been traveling most of the last twenty years, helping Harry spread the expertise of Harvard Business School around the world. Lon and Betty Weaver Van Wart have "met Guppie and Harry in Manila, visited them in their castle in Wales and in their apartment in Lausanne." A good, long Abbot friendship Writing from Spain at reunion time, Guppie remembers "Bebe marching down the hall in the morning, followed by her big fat cat while we sat on the radiator waiting for the mail . . . and the time I went to her office scared to death to ask for permission to go home: 'Miss Bailey, can I go home for the weekend?' Without fail and without blinking an eyelash, she always replied, 'It is no a question of can you go home, but may you.' She was a marvelous woman; no one could touch her." You should write a book Guppie.

So should Kay Whittemore Knight about her life as a year-round resident or Isle Au Haut off the Maine coast. Last winter, her husband Jessie and their son had to put to one side their solar energy research and telescope-making because of a terrible tragedy that took the lives of three of the brightest and best young people in a boat accident returning from the mainland. Since Jake, Kay's son, had trained them to care for the island's generators, the loss was two-fold. "We've been here two years now. After Jess retired from thirty-two years of school teaching, and I from editing at Cole Spring Harbor lab with James (Double Helix Watson, we bought a 46' Rosborough ketch, sailed from Maine to the Keys a couple of times, and tried Cape Cod before coming here. . . . Weaver, Whip, Olive Peg Black, Anne Cleveland. . . . with memory unrefreshed, I think of you all."

Caught up with Ella Robinson Bode in Atlanta the day before they moved out of house they'd lived in for thirty-six year (with a poodle, a German shepherd, and a 15-year-old grandson whose mother works). Husband Bill (an MIT grad and a engineer) "retired for one week" said Ella, in a fetching mix of Maine twang and Georgia drawl, with pride and fondness showing through. "Now he thinks he's an architect, designin' and buildin' a shoppin' mall."

Kay McDonald works for Bechtel and lives in Walnut Creek, CA. "Don't ask me about George Shultz or Caspar Weinberger, either one," she implored over the telephone. So how did she get to California? "That's a long story and there are a lot of people out on my terrace." So write, Kay. Write.

Nice card from Peg Chase Johnson: Some years ago, she and Bob lived in Connecticut while he commuted to a NYC law firm. They bought a summer place in Brooklin, ME and now they live there permanently. Bob enjoys a "country" practice; Peg gardens, reads a lot, having given up volunteer work when a persistent inner ear infection made vertigo a problem. (You remember Peg—if she had a job to do, she did it right.)

Let's hope Olive French Sherman's pace has slowed a bit since May when she packed up and left Naples, FL after giving a large 99th birthday party for her mother, who peps things up at Shell Point Village in Ft. Myers. On to Eugene, OR, where one of her nine grandchildren had his 15th birthday—an even livelier affair. Olive took his mother along to Hawaii for a rest. Then home to Severance Lodge in Maine via San Francisco and a glimpse of Judy Wilhelmi '32. The weekend of reunion, Olive was heavily involved with her older son's second wedding—I'm not sure whether her great-grandson got to go to this, but everyone else did! Soon, no doubt, she'll be off to Naples for the winter. So long, dears. By the time you read this, Roger and I will be Elderhostelling at the University of Arizona. Love, Shuts.

Our recent letter to the odd members of the Fiftieth Reunion Committee has provoked a sensational response from hundreds, perhaps thousands of those lucky enough to see it. Everywhere at home and abroad members of the Class of 1934, their families, friends, and acquaintances clamor to learn where they can form lines to contribute to our giant, record-breaking Class Gift of $155,000 or more and to join the nearly 200 stout fellows who will be on hand next June to celebrate the 50th Anniversary of our release from the Academy of Advanced Hard Knocks. Excerpts from a few of their letters are printed below, as well as another tribute to the ever genial, ever successful Food Baron of '34.

Somewhere or other, it seems, Ed Torrey found himself referred to as Bill Torry, a distinction he has been quick to disown. That's non sibi in action. Still, Ed says, if he can't make the Fiftieth, he'll send Bill.

Willis Urick, writes that our letter was enthusiastically received (presumably by thousands) in his part of the world (Los Angeles) and that he'll be in Andover in June and wants to help in the meantime.

Ed Seymour from the opposite coast reports: "I finally retired from the New York hassle, just before last Christmas, although I occasionally do some assignments for them on a consulting basis. The rest of the time is more than taken up in trying to undo 25 years of procrastination, in both paperwork and yard and house maintenance. Also get mixed up to a mild degree in trying to help coordinate some of the volunteer activities here in Bucks County. This latter helps overcome one problem that I had never anticipated—that is if you have spent most of your working life dealing with people, you don't realize how much you miss it."

If you cannot remember having received one or more of our memorable letters regarding the Fiftieth, don't despair. More communications than you think possible will harass and encourage you. Now here's the big news about Sig Weis: "Sigfried Weis '34, President of Weis Markets, Inc. headquartered at Sunbury, Pennsylvania, and chairman of Bucknell University's board of trustees, was chosen by the American Academy of Achievement as a 'giant of accomplishment' from the nation's great fields of endeavor to receive the Golden Plate Award during the 22nd annual Salute to Excellence weekend at San Diego, 7-9 July 1983.

"The grandson of 'an immigrant who started in retailing with a horse and wagon and a pack on his back,' Mr. Weis 'graduated from Phillips Academy and Yale University, magna cum laude, Phi Beta Kappa' . . . then developed, over the years, a regional empire of 111 supermarkets with $800 million in annual sales (earning one-third of what Safeway does, on only 5% of Safeway's sales).

"Mr. Weis has been selected recently by Financial World as 'the most outstanding chief executive of the food industry' . . . and featured by Forbes as a 'legend in supermarket industry' . . . 'one of America's wealthiest self-made men.'"

All right, here it comes, the big one—fifty years. Of course it doesn't seem possible, and we all look so young. Come back next June and see. I have already marked my calendar and hope all of you will do the same—8-10 June. As I write this, our chairman, Ruth Stott Peters, is at a meeting in Andover making all sorts of wonderful plans.

You will be hearing from her and from Mary Rockwell Stewart, our Class Fund Agent. Trust we depression children who have lived through wars and inflation can come up with a healthy gift for the occasion.

I have heard from Ann Place Henderson, who spends summers at Chatham on Cape Cod and winters in Carmel, CA. She is planning to come to reunion. She has a son in Marblehead, MA, and a daughter, Pam, in Carmel. Her daughters raise and train horses. Ann reports a divorce in '82.

Ada "Sandy" Carlson Prescott writes that she is looking forward to reunion. Sorry, Sandy, you will always be Ada to me.

Apologies to Betty Scutt Herries and Sandy Kinsman Dexter for some news that got misplaced in my move. Betty reported the death of her brother, Edmund Ward Scutt '34. He died in Denver, where he had made his home to be near his daughter. Betty's husband, Jim, is semi-retired and they were expecting a seventh grandchild at the time she wrote.

Sandy had recovered well from hip surgery and had returned from a trip to the Grand Canyon. "Rented a mini-home/RV in Phoenix and camped on the South Rim. While there my husband and daughter joined me on a mule trip to the bottom and back the next day." All I can say, Sandy, is that after that you'd better make it to reunion!

I just spent two months in Pennsylvania with my daughter and grandchildren. Yes, it was hot but not for a Floridian. I leave in a day or so for Denver to see my younger daughter—then home to settle down for the winter. I hope to see many of you in Andover in June.

Let's begin to think about turning out for our 50th Reunion, which is scheduled for 7-9 June 1985. It has fallen into my lap to be Reunion Chairman. I am supported by an outstanding Steering Committee of Ted Cregg and Joe Dana, who will be most helpful since they reside in Andover; also Fred Griffin, Norm Cross, and Bob Cushman. Elaine Eaton Perine will represent the Abbot ladies. Dick Lederer will assist in class statistics and tracking down "lost" classmates. Put this date down on your calendars now. It should be great fun. Some classmates, like Barney Hurlbutt in Hawaii, have promised to come great distances for our 50th.

And just having mentioned Dick Lederer, I have learned that he has another book coming out this fall. It is A Glossary of Colonial American Words. The book will contain over 3000 words which are now obsolete or have changed meaning. Now he can go back to work at being Scarsdale's village historian.

It was great to hear from Dr. Jack Beaty, although he claimed that he had nothing newsworthy to report. "I turned 65 last October and promptly cut down my working week to 52 hours—great joy and relief to be able to spend full time in nutrition and preventive medicine, instead of the usual rat race of conventional drug and technology-oriented practice of internal medicine. The public is eager for the 'new' approach. Alas! most doctors are not interested or even tolerant. Cheers, Classmates!"

Recently, my wife Ginna and I visited Bill Littlefield and his wife Sally in Upper Montclair. This past winter they vacationed in Longboat Key, FL, golfing and visiting friends. Then they boarded the Viendam for a cruise to Mexico, Jamaica, and Grand Cayman. Littlefield reports that Norm Cross is trying to re-group the 1938 Yale 150 lb. crew to go to Henley again for a reunion and a nostalgic row on the river.

Also I saw Hunter Walton and his wife Jean at the Littlefields. Walton has recently sold his company and retired. He keeps in shape by walking a few miles each day. He has a summer place at West Hyannisport on the Cape and a Down East Lobsterman boat. Walton has a son Bruce PA '66, who is about to marry an attractive lady from Boston.

A few issues ago I reported on "Smitty" Curtis's retirement on Cape Cod. Now this is what has happened—he writes, "Am now 11 months into retirement and holding on. Many projects—sailing, carpentry, home handyman. Playing more tennis than ever before. Muriel and I are even taking golf lessons. Rowing machine in basement. Ultimate goal is to challenge Norm Cross to some athletic activity."

We regret very much to report (and we presume that this death has never before been reported) the death of Bill Brenner on 17 November 1978. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. William A. Brenner, 1944 So. Glenwood, Springfield, IL 62704.

Also we are sorry to tell you of the demise of Bud Witschief, which occurred on 14 March. We have no details. Mrs. Graham Witschief may be written to at 28 Dogwood Hills Road, Newburgh, NY 12550.

Cathleen Burns Elmer sent the only news for this edition. Her son Ned (PA '76) was graduated from Harvard Medical School in June. As a celebration Cathleen "held a gathering of the clan at the Elmer's mountain spread. Aunts, uncles, nieces, and assorted dear ones converged from all over New England to share a cocktail-buffet reunion in a driving rain that made outdoor tent arrangements irrelevant. Yet all remained dry and merry in the Elmer's snug 1840s farmhouse."

As Lucia Nunez Atlas has found it necessary to resign as Class Fund chairman, it is time to say thank you, Lucia, for so faithfully keeping in touch with us these past years, reminding and urging us to send our gift of support to our school. We so appreciate your time and efforts. Word has come from the Alumni Office that Ann Cutler Brecheen has graciously said she will take over the duties of Class Fund Chairman. Thanks very much, Ann.

It was a beautiful first day of August when I met Charlie Miller (PA Chairman for the Steering Committee for our 50th Reunion) in West Hartford, CT to drive to Andover for a preliminary meeting of this committee. The way time flies it is not too early to start making plans for bringing us all together in Andover for a time of fun in June 1985! Surveys of alumni magazines show that the first item read is one's class notes. Assuming you are no exception, you then have not read elsewhere that the Bulletin's publishing schedule has changed. I bring this up because I am having difficulty re-constructing what has and has not been printed. This is unfortunate because I was just beginning to receive unsolicited class news. Those who have not seen the result of their writing, bear with me. You will soon appear in black and white and be red (read) all over.

My first unsolicited item comes from the Sunday Eagle Tribune of Lawrence, MA. It is a "Biog. in Brief" of Roland Hammond, who the caption tells us, "lives with the treasures of earlier days" which are, among others, a pair of Queen Anne chairs, a 200-year-old tea table, and a $65,000 highboy. It seems we are in the showroom of Roland B. Hammond, Inc., a nationally-known antiques dealership in North Andover.

"Roly" started in the paper business at Champion International after Yale, but in 1951 switched from paper to the past and evidently has turned the past into green paper. The final lines of a long interview are, reflectively, worth repeating. "I suppose everyone, in a sense, regards immortality as a desirable attribute. But I can't say when I wake up in the morning that it's the first thing on my mind."

Bill Trafton reports that he was recent in New Zealand and visited with some Andover graduates there.

Helen and I ran into Sallie and Roy Bolton too briefly at the Yale Alumni College this June. Roy was majoring in computer science. Your scribe studied nineteenth century American heroes (gut course). Do you know that three 20th Century U. S. Presidents have "imagined" themselves in the legendary role?

A wonderful letter from Bob Hewitt starts off, "Having just sent a check to Andover, I thought I might check in about myself, an unknown classmate to most of those of 1936." Bob was on the Hill for on his senior year. As a full scholarship student, he was assigned to an Upper Middle dorm and into the Upper Middle dining room (callous treatment even for those days—Cl. Secy. note). "Thus, I never really got integrated." He went to Dartmouth and mentions Bob Clark, Bob Lambert, and Lloyd Blanchard as friends there and that he graduated magna cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa. After the war (Air Force Major), Bob spent 37½ years in the family business "manufacturing garters and distributing wedding accessories nationally." The business was sold earlier this year and Bob has retired from the "Hortense B. Hewitt" Division of Artco, Inc. As Bob has not kept in touch with Andover, he would like to make up for lost time. He promises to come to our 50th reunion and would welcome anyone to get in touch with him at 644 Hillsdale Av. Hillsdale, NJ 07642—(201)644-5063. Other classmates mentioned were Cal McCracken, Dick Carroll, and Joe Zilly.

Just received a most interesting letter from Tom Lenagh. After leaving the Ford Foundation and eighteen years of managing portfolios and lending activities, Tom has become a director of several corporations and Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Systems Planning Corporation, an int national architectural and engineering design firm. He writes, "As we approach the time when most classmates think retirement is the convention, I thought I would take Ronald Reagan as a role model and do the opposite. I've always thought that WW II and Korea took eight years away from competitive civilian opportunity, and that our generation should try to get it back. I urge 1937 graduates not to pack it in, but to get back those eight years by continuing to be productive, and adding to the system rather than being takers and/or just golfers." You're in good company, Tom!

The Glee Club's first tenor, Frank Kefferstan, retired as Medical Director of the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. on 1 January 1983. He writes, "We have been traveling both East and West since retirement—home in time to enjoy dedication of new Music Center at PA, and the Messiah—all especially meaningful to me due to Carl and Lillian Pfatfeicher's opening up a new world of personal enjoyment." Welcome, Tom and Frank, to the ever increasing ranks of the LBAR Club (Life Begins At Retirement).

Jack Ware has hit the headlines again in the Vineyard (Martha's) Gazette: "JACK WARE WINS IN TISBURY UPSET." Our man on the Vineyard, Henry Beetle Hough, describes Ware's victory in the town election for selectman over his two opponents as "Smashing." This was Jack's first political campaign. If that were not enough good news, the Honorable Jack's granddaughter, Amy Elizabeth Harris, was accepted to PA as an Upper. Congratulations to you, Amy, and to your Gramps.

We are saddened by the death of Larry White on 4 January 1983. The announcement of his passing was recorded in the summer edition of the Bulletin. Our heartfelt sympathies go out to Eleanor, who can be reached at home in N.Y.C., 150 E. 73rd Street 10021.

You will recall the past few years that Tom Regan, our esteemed editor and Master of the English language, has published two magazines, Fall and Spring, and two tabloids, Winter and Summer, each year. Henceforth we are dropping the winter tabloid in order to convert the summer edition into a magazine. I won't bore you with the reasons which are many and complicated.

Finally, because you have been very bad correspondents, I have space remaining to put in a plug for Jacobs and Quimby, our Co-Agents for the 1937 50th Reunion Fund.

I hope you have not forgotten Jake's summer appeal and plan to "build now" as he suggests. For those who can, an annual donation of $1,000 would total $4,000 by June 1987 and 20 such gifts would put us over the top.

Marjorie Boesel Van Winkle reports that her entire family now lives in Litchfield, CT. Daughter Beth Van Winkle Boynton (AA '60) has three children ranging in age from 5 to 21 years, and Beth's middle child, Meg, just graduated cum laude from Kent School. Marjorie's younger daughter, Susie Van Winkle Pollock (AA '64), has two children, Jennifer, 13 years and Chris, 8 years old. Marje's husband, Mitchell, loves being retired and not only gardens, but has two beehives and raises exotic chickens. They go to Europe once a year and are still looking for a good place to spend a month in the winter. Marje would love to see any classmates traveling through Connecticut.

The class extends deepest sympathy to Priscilla Wonson Hahn, who lost her father, Carlton Wonson, last December at age 95. Mr. Wonson was a prominent lawyer in Gloucester, MA. Pri and her husband, Cliff, vacationed at the Rangeley Lakes in Maine last summer. Pri, an avid golfer, is active in the League of Women Voters and is enjoying her position at the bookstore at the Northshore Shopping Center.

During a golfing trip to Nova Scotia this past summer, I saw Betty Inman Kirkpatrick, who had just returned from visiting her daughter in Wisconsin and attending her son's wedding in Virginia. Betty's husband, Bob, is a retired Air Force Colonel. They winter in Florida and spend the summer in Milton, NS, where they own a lovely old farmhouse which has been in the family for years.

Their three children are all married and they have nine grandchildren.

Would love to hear from each and everyone of you and look forward to more news for the Bulletin.

The Trinity College Reporter, Spring 1983, had a photo of Joe Hotchkiss (the expression: "Isn't that pitch to sell me the Brooklyn Bridge just a bit jaded?") and an article on his being named a Vice President of Reader's Digest and editor of its Condensed Book Division. He's been with the Digest for at least 25 years; was previously with Redbook, and I am now trying to line him up as photographic editor of Playgirl. Pat Flournoy's early summer card from Colorado missed the July issue, but in it he extols the virtues of Colorado, his summer home, winter in Florida, and trips to Maine and Arizona. I appreciate the offer of hospitality, but how do I catch up with you?

Phil Richard reminded me of his forcible ejection from Cuba on 17 December '59, and the apparent loss of his electronic company there. He lives in Ft. Lauderdale with his second wife. He, too, invites calls from classmates (305-462-0062), but watch his schedule—boating and trips to Europe, where he previously owned houses in Austria and southern France, keep him away from home.

Blair Hellebush is now in residence at Sugar Hollow Road, Rte. 6, Box 275, Fairview, (western) North Carolina. If I go to the Smokeys in October, as I am considering, I will call him.

The school has long advocated putting the obits at the end of the column: this one is a toughie: Marshall Scott died 29 January 1983. I learned of this at the reunion from Ron Reader, but got further details from his former law partner, W. C. Steel. I had heard nothing from Scotty in the 30-plus years I've been secretary, but Mr. Steel's letter and the obit told of Scotty's retirement from a large firm in Miami in the late '60s; obtaining an LLM in ocean law at Miami; practice on his own, and a heavy involvement in sailing and ocean racing. He leaves a widow, Cynthia.

Another of our star yachtsmen, Dex Richards, died of leukemia en route to a hospital from his home in Sunapee, NH, on 26 August 1983. Dex had been one of my better correspondents, but I have always regretted how little I saw of him over the past decades, having been so close a friend in PA days. An interesting, animated, and attractive guy, he had had this disease for two years, but typically, never mentioned it. He is survived by his widow, Anne, and a son, Randy.

Lastly, John ("Cupe") Coxe died 29 July 1983, reportedly of Alzheimer's Disease. I had a nice note from his widow, Joanna, in response to my note, but with no news. I hadn't seen Cupe since his brief matriculation at the Cornell Law School in 1946, and knew little of him. But like Marshall and Dex he was one of the nicer guys of '38, and we are all, in Donne's words, "a little diminished by their passing."

Put on your list of movies to see, Woody Allen's Zelig. It hasn't come to my town yet, but I am reliably informed that John Blum appears as one of the scholars who gives learned comments on the central character. John denies that this is the start of a new career, but might be willing to read for a few of the roles that were originally designed for David Niven or Henry Fonda.

Roger Freeman found the answer to retirement by returning to school for two years. He was formerly president of the Allendale Mutual Insurance Company and now has his Master's degree in Accounting from the University of Rhode Island. He enjoys immensely a full life that includes community service as a trustee of a college and hospital, director of a bank and president of a cemetery association. He has enjoyed 41 years of happy marriage that has produced four children, all in their thirties, and two grandchildren.

John Howland is about to put down his books and papers after 37 years of teaching in both private and public schools. He is looking forward to working for a fabric business in Rochester.

Bob Bisset is looking for advice on the pros and cons of retiring in Sitka, Alaska. It will be a big change from Atlanta, which has been home to date, but Bob sounds as if he is raring to go, describing himself as a better athlete, in better shape today than at age 19.

Finally, Tom Whelan leaves us with a thought for the day: "No news is good news when you are 61 going on 62 and feel only 59."

The forty-fifth reunion will take place 8-10 June 1984. Mark the date and come join the festivities.

hometown and is now raising a granddaughter. When not otherwise busy, she caters dinner parties! Great hearing from Woodie, who is planning to return for our big 45th reunion next June. Constance Smith Templeton writes from Huntington Beach, California, that she's the foredeck crew on her husband's sailboat (she doesn't tell how big it is) and can set that spinnaker with the best of them. (I usually hourglass ours.) Connie is a new grandmother for the fifth time—a girl—her daughter and husband are both psychologists. She hears from Nancy England Worthen, Dottie Heidrich Lockhart, Sue Long Reed '41, and Ginny Jones Hannegan '41 at Christmas time. She and her husband plan to stay in Huntington Beach after he retires next year. To set the record straight, this column last time should have listed Charlotte Skinner McCanna's name correctly. I am sure you all knew that when you read about our "Kiki." Since no one else has written, you will just have to hear about what yours truly did last summer. Bill and I were at Brown in June for his 40th and then on to the Cape, Newport, and Annapolis (yes, we like boats). In July we cruised Alaska's Glacier Bay National Park on a friend's trawler. Back home we cruised Florida's west coast in our 26' sloop, Partners' Choice (top of the Bellows bourbon line—get it?). Plan on returning for our big reunion on 8-10 June. Greetings from your new Class Secretary. Filling Jack Fallon's shoes will not be easy, but at least it will be fun trying. From the reunion scene come a few items: Charlie Arnold is apparently becoming the scourge of the Fishers Island Golf course, but no errant balls have crossed the Sound to Stonington as yet. Bud Lethbridge has acquired a piece of property in Old Lyme, CT and will retire there. Dr. Tom Haymond of Kingwood, West Virginia, is engaged in a study of alcoholism among miners, apparently a serious problem.

In St. Louis David Gardner, along with being Vice-President of Laclede Gas, is Chairman of Family and Children's Services. Mike Keeler from Grand Rapids, Michigan, sent me the covers of two Great Lakes Boating magazines featuring Mike's racing yacht, Brassy, which has coffee grinder winches, no less. In a release from the AIA I learn that Eason Cross has been advanced to the College of Fellows of the American Institute of Architects, an honor for notable contributions to architecture. A nice letter from Ted Perkins of Woodbridge, Virginia: Ted is still active in veterans' groups and now has a few ex-generals working for him, and an ex-PFC. Ted had some medical problems but fortunately they cleared up and he was able to make reunion.

From the telephone: Jack Fallon is not only among the brass at Blue Cross, and a well regarded outdoor writer, but he also lectures on fishing and has become an expert on fishing in Ireland. Jack has so taken to Ireland that he has developed a brogue you could cut with a piece of Irish soda bread. Mike Giblin has leased his seat on the NYSE for a year, and is considering changing careers. Jazz Jules reported that he just returned from a trip to Alaska, primarily for fishing. To Jazz, Alaska is "amazingly beautiful." While there, he lobbed an apple at a bear, but reminiscent of his baseball days, it went wild. Bob Parish reports from Houston that hurricane Alicia passed him by without harm and that he remains optimistic about the oil and gas business. He sees occasionally Hugh Goodrich and Buster Vandervoort.

Jack Lemmon's office reports that Jack is now shooting the movie Mass Appeal and toward the end of the year will go into rehearsal for a new play, A Sense of Humor, which was written by Earnest Thompson and will co-star Estelle Parsons. It will open in Denver and then on to New York.

Now a plea from your Secretary: To write a good column I need your input, so please write or call when you want to share a happening with your classmates.

Flash! Our Fortieth is approaching fast! Reunion committee members Pete Stevens, Ray Young, Vint Cartmell, Kevin Collins, and Charlotte Leland are planning great things for 8-10 June 1984. Mark your calendars now! Details will be coming along in the fall. (Pete Stevens' daughter Mary is Andover's Staff Reunion Coordinator, so we should have the inside track.)

Class Secretary and tracer of lost persons Bull has at last found Nick Buffington, who tried to give us the slip by living and practicing law in Washington, DC of all places. Nick was married for the third time more than ten years ago to Pamela Schaefer. Nick will be at the reunion.

Windy Briggs, married to Yda (Ettorre), resides fashionably at 1440 Lake Shore Drive in Chicago. In the last forty years he has worked and lived, among other places, in Italy, India, Hong Kong, Afghanistan, Phoenix, and Chicago. He is working for his Ph.D. in History at the U. of Chicago. If all goes well, he will have won it by December 1984. He'll be at our fortieth reunion.

John Kellet, who you may recall invited us all to visit him in the summer of 1980 in Hong Kong, is understandably vexed with his classmates. No one showed up! He is a forgiving soul, however, and wrote from Andover in June, where he was visiting his ninety-year-old mother, that he continues to guide Esso Eastern in matters pertaining to electric power generation. John divides his time between Houston and Hong Kong.

I have also heard from Chris Eatough who will attend the reunion with his wife Margaret. Chris mysteriously failed to report when John Kellet visited the Eatoughs that their dog, inscrutable and enigmatic, ate classmate Kellet's hat. (Although the dog seemed to enjoy eating the hat, Chris churlishly refused to reimburse John.)

Classmate Roger L. Strong was recently awarded the Yale Distinguished Service award. Roger, more scrutable than the Eatough's dog, still won't vouchsafe the reason for Yale bestowing this signal honor on him.

Hancock, NJ resident Vint Cartmell, who has been tolerated by Jane (Thomson) for twenty-six years, proudly boasts that Jane is of Swedish descent. (Lois Bull is too, and believe me, guys and gals, Mr. Cartmell is right to brag.) Vint, Yale '49, spent six years with the Chase National Bank, with time out for Korea, before joining West Virginia Pulp & Paper, from which he graduated as Treasurer in December of 1976. He is presently head of Souhegan Wood Products, Inc., a manufacturer of presswood products. Wife Jane runs a Scottish import business. Vint will be at the reunion.

PA '44 Man of the Month is Jim Cahill. He is the father of Jim '70, Bill '71, and Jack '74. His daughter, Mary Beth '78, is married to the son of an Abbot graduate. Daughter Ann married Bert Garry '75, in July. Bert's father is none other than Jack Garry of PA '44 fame. As Jim says, he and wife Mary have "remained close to the Andover scene." The Cahills will definitely be at the reunion.

Thirty-five handwritten postals only brought three replies! Assume you are all saving the big news for our 40th Reunion in June.

Alma Mastangelo Strabala climbed the Alps in Switzerland, toured Ireland, and then visited with daughter in NYC for two weeks before heading back to the Utah Shakespeare Festival. She lives in Las Vegas. Carol Paradise Decker is now living in Santa Fe, where she drives tourists around "this fascinating area," organizes hunger walks and other projects for church and community groups, and teaches conversational Spanish to assorted adult groups. Her husband Fred is now retired. Son Scott is an electrical engineer in Boston, and daughter Anne, who plans to be married in September, is a student at St. John's College in Santa Fe.

"Dreams are made of such stuff"—a quote from Nancy Stone Heymann commenting on her son's wedding to Bibiana Famolare in NYC in August. She then went on to Alaska for fishing in mid-August, and a float down the Stuyahok River. Their two sons, who graduated from Tuck School and Thayer Engineering School last June, both work for Drexel, Burnham, Lambert in NYC.

Your class secretary is busy sorting out the various journals, articles, and books pertaining to our educational system as indicated by the "Committee on Educational Excellence." I am serving on a state task force to reply to "Nation at Risk," and chair a subcommittee on the quality of teachers in our state. Our youngest is now a senior at Hanover High School and thinking about the plans for next year. (Shoe size now 14½ D.) Our daughter, at 26, received an outstanding undergraduate award from the University of Wisconsin and will graduate next May with a commendation for academic and artistic achievement. Son Thorn is in the forefront of the computer world with a software/hardware company. Edgar has written two more books on rail subjects which will be out this fall before he leaves for India for three weeks. I'm still glowing from our spring trip to Greece and England. More next time.

It's a beautiful September day in Connecticut as I sit down to write what will be a somewhat briefer than usual report. I'm looking forward to next weekend at PA (29-31 Sept.) for the "Volunteers for Andover" weekend and the class secretaries' meeting. I hope to see some of you among the "Volunteers."

The notes will be brief because I'm a little "pooped"! I had quadruple by-pass heart surgery in August as expected and had a remarkably quick return to the vertical. (I stuck my head in the office, hospital discharge in hand, a week to the day after surgery!) The return to normalcy is somewhat slower than I anticipated, however, and I find I need two-to-three hours more sleep per 24 hours than I used to. As far as pain, discomfort, etc., there is virtually none, and if any of you face the same problem, please give a call to talk it over. I expect to be back to regular hours in two weeks.

Montreal's George Baldwin is the celebrity of this issue. Not only did he write, but Helen Bronk sent me a cover from the Princeton Alumni Weekly of 13 July 1983 featuring George carrying a picture on a stick which I believe was his graduation picture. He is wearing a checkered jacket and an unbecoming cap; I must assume that he is in a reunion parade because there are several other guys similarly equipped in the picture. George's note contains the unhappy news of his dad's death and the pleasant news of a named-fund in his dad's memory at PA. His oldest boy was scheduled to "work in French" for the summer on the geological survey of the Province of Quebec.

Bob Dean's son Charlie PA '79 spent the last term of his senior year at West Point as brigade command sergeant-major of the corps of cadets. This is a signal honor and I'm sure Bob and Nancy are very proud indeed.

Jim Herman, whom I mentioned seeing last spring, wrote about the kids: Daughter Kerry '79 was a history of art senior at Smith, where she stroked the crew; son Jigger '81 was a sophomore at Yale, on the lightweight crew, and an engineering major; son Mikkel '83 was on the crew and was struggling with the happy choice of accepting Yale or Harvard. Jim is active in a new technology—the commercial utilization of wood chips, and he mentions that Tal Ed- man is in a related field in wood harvesting in Tacoma.

Received a great letter from Lillian Grosz with the latest news of Pete and their wide-traveling family. Pete's consuming interest is in WW I aircraft, and he is recognized as an international expert in this field. He is the 1983-4 Verville Fellow at the National Air & Space Museum in Washington and is finishing his book on the Development of Austro-Hungarian Aircraft, 1914-18. Pete is retired and they travel extensively; a trip is planned for Iceland, the Faroes, Shetlands, and the Orkneys with daughter and son-in-law joining them on the Iceland leg of the journey. Lillian says a rucksack apiece and busses, boats, or what-have-you, fills the bill. Sounds safer than a jug of wine on bicycle in France mentioned in the last notes!

Dave Baty writes that he did not run for re-election as Municipal Judge of Point Reyes, CA—24 years on the bench was enough! (Very broadening, too). He and Sue hope to make the 40th as he's been back only once in 38 years! Incidentally, Dave is in private practice specializing in "Budgetary Problems of the California Courts"—sounds like proposition 13! His office address is 520 Mesa Road, Point Reyes, CA 94956 for those of you having troubles with the California Courts!

Don't forget the Alumni Fund in your year-end planning. "Brief," as I said. Phew!

William J. "Pinky" Roome, an old friend and one of the outstanding characters of our illustrious class, died of cancer this past June at his home in Tuftonboro Corners, NH. John Friday and Charlie Smith were at the memorial. You can pay tribute to the memory of Bill by making a donation to Huggins Hospital, Wolfboro, NH or the Loon Preservation Project of the NH Audubon Society. Another sad loss for '46. Our hearts go out to Anne and her children.

On your next visit to Andover, be sure to spend some time in our incomparable Addison Gallery of American Art. Seek out and enjoy the Mel Kendrick sculpture, "Beyond the Cross" purchased through your generosity and "Given in memory of Lindsay Bradford, Jr. '46 by his friends."

At this past June's graduation ceremonies were Arnold Cohen (a nephew graduating), Dick Phelps (a nephew), Lee Nutt (daughter Jane), Ed Jones (son Thomas, now at Eton College), Bill Van Cleve (son Emory Basford, now at Princeton), Duer McLanahan (son William). It was like a mini reunion. We stayed at the Koala Inn and drank Foster's Lager.

The summer passed with nary a word from PA's '46, save a post card from Rog Neuhoft, still on flying status, winging back and forth from D.C. to Edgartown on the weekends. My East Village informant, Ed Jones, reports Mike Winton was seen on Bank Street, and P.K. Fisher on the IRT headed for a course at the New School. Late in August, while delivering Peter '83 to Vassar, who was there at Jewett dropping off William '83 but Marty and Duer McLanahan. (I had just seen them in W, snapped at the Parrish's screening of Pandora's Box.) Then, of course, only a week or so later, I literally bumped into Mac on Park posing for fashion shots in front of the Racquet. Such incredible coincidences.

I am sorry to have to report yet another loss from our class. Bob Phelan, Harvard '50, a free-lance writer and resident of Atlanta for over 25 years, died 13 July 1983. He leaves brothers Joe '39 and Bill '43, as well as his sister Rosemary Smith and many friends and relatives.

We are reaching that time in our lives when very few of us will still enjoy having offspring attending PA (except Lynch, whose Jake is there now, and P.K. Fisher, whose grandchildren should be there soon). Don't let this stifle your desire to go back to the old place. Believe me, it's as gorgeous today as ever, maybe even more so. Fewer elms, to be sure, but lots of ivy, acres of greensward, that marvelous pink brick, and hundreds of adorable girls. You needn't wait until '86 (our 40th reunion) to return. Take a weekend at Andover any time; you'll love it. When you get home you'll sit yourself down and you'll dash off a sizeable check to Begien. Bege reports that the efficiency of fund raising has been greatly improved with the introduction of the Assistant Agents. Aiding him in the annual harvest are PK Fisher, Dick Phelps, Bob Wexler, and Wally Pratt. That's a formidable operation. Look out!

If these words reach you before the end of November and you are in NY, ring me up for tickets to A Thurber Carnival at the Amateur Comedy Club, where I will be appearing with the company.

Meanwhile, a Very Merry Christmas and a Jolly Holiday to one and all. God Bless.

Bill Stopford has recently joined Merchants Bank of Norwalk, CT as vice president and trust officer, where he will be responsible for administrative supervision of estates, trusts, investments, and custodian accounts, and of employee benefit plans.

I'm sorry to report the death on 7 June of Fred Adelman. Fred was professor and chairman of Chatham College's Sociology/Anthropology Department. In addition, Fred taught at the University of Pennsylvania, University of Michigan, University of Pittsburgh, Duquesne University, La Roche College, and Community College of Allegheny County.

His academic focus was on central Asian history and ethnography, Marxist approaches to anthropology, and anthropology of women.

Fred traveled and studied in India and the Soviet Union in the 1960s. For his work he was awarded the National Endowment for the Humanities Grant at the City College of New York Graduate Center in 1978.

He served on the board of the Pittsburgh Civil Liberties Union and was a member of American Anthropological Association, American Association for the Advancement of Science, Mongolia Society, and the American Association of University Professors.

From 1969 to 1972 he served as panel chairman of the National Science Foundation Undergraduate Research Program.

Surviving are his wife, Virginia C. Es-kridge; two sons, Stephen and Jesse, both of Pittsburgh; and a daughter, Ruth of Lawrenceville.

I am very sorry to report the death of one of our classmates. Susanne Robbins deWolf died of emphysema 4 May 1983 at her home in Great Falls, Virginia. She was a former president of the Great Falls Garden Club and the first woman to be a member of the vestry at St. Thomas Episcopal Church in McLean.

Sue graduated from Smith College in 1951 and moved to Washington, DC, where she worked for the Central Intelligence Agency until 1956.

She was chairman of the Friendly Visitors and Membership Committee of the DC Health and Welfare Council and a founder of the Alumni Parents Group of the Langley Cooperative School in McLean. She was a member of the vestry and the choir at St. John's Episcopal Church, Georgetown. She sang in the choir of the First Church in Jaffrey, New Hampshire, where she kept a summer residence.

She is survived by her husband, Bradford C.; a daughter, Ainslie; and two sons, Bradford C., Jr. and Burckmaster, all of Great Falls.

Expression of sympathy may be made by contributing to the American Lung Association. Sue's family may be reached at the following address: Bradford C. deWolf, 1001 White Chimney Court, Great Falls, VA 22066.

On behalf of the Class of 1947, our deepest sympathy to her family. She will be greatly missed by her classmates.

Mark your calendars now! Our thirty-fifth—that's right, the thirty-fifth—reunion will be held on Friday through Sunday, 8-10 June 1984. Round up your old room-mates, make your plans, and be there! Details will follow.

In a recent column on advertising, the New York Times noted that Wilder Baker is "... living proof that job hopping is not the kiss of death in adland." Wilder is president and chief operating officer of his ninth employer, Warwick Advertising, a forty-year-old, New York based agency.

From Bridgewater, NJ, Steve Chandler reports that he is Associate Director of Laboratories at the Somerset Medical Center in Somerville, New Jersey. Steve's specialty is pathology, which he also teaches at Rutgers Medical School. An avid backpacker, Steve seeks pathology meetings in Colorado, California, New Mexico, and other places, with special fervor.

Clem Hastie, after several years with Inco in New York as a systems specialist concentrating on financial analysis, has formed his own consulting business. Clem combines this with a most worthy endeavor, Independence House, a half-way house for young ex-offenders and homeless children. Independence House is a well-recognized New York City institution that has received many accolades, but currently has no governmental funding. Clem, who is president of the organization, would appreciate any support you may be able to give. The address of Independence House is 366 Cornelia Street, Brooklyn, NY 11237.

Renewing his ties to New England, Larry Kelly has sold his discount stock brokerage firm, Kelly Associates, Ltd., with nine offices in the Southwestern U.S., to Fidelity Brokerage Services, Inc., Boston.

Another fan of the great Southwest, Bill Torrey, has been very active on behalf of Andover-in-Arizona, where he is a finance executive with Dahlberg Industries in Scottsdale. Bill currently serves on Andover's Alumni Council. His answer to Arizona summer heat is ocean racing, having participated in a San Francisco to Hawaii race in 1982 and, at last report, planning to race from Newport to Bermuda in 1983.

Congratulations to Nora Johnson: her novel, The Two of Us, will be published by Simon & Schuster in January and she already has another book approaching completion. Her two daughters are "out in the world," while her two teen-aged sons are still at home with Nora in Manhattan.

Mary Jane Greenwald Denzer and her family spent Thanksgiving '82 in St. Martens with Peggy Kittell Stabler and her family. After many years in retailing, at Saks and Bergdorf Goodman, Mickey now has her own women's specialty shop, "Mary Jane Denzer, Ltd.," in White Plains, NY.

Bobbie Baldwin Potter has been busy the past several years accompanying her tennis-playing daughter, Barbie Potter, on the international tennis circuit. Now mother and daughter are writing a tennis diary. Bobbie's husband, Mark Potter, is "painting madly" while he is on sabbatical from the Taft School, where he teaches art. Bobbie's and Mark's four sons are involved in various pursuits, from movie producing in Boston to canning salmon in Alaska.

Ann Johnson Sharpe lives in Norwich, CT in a remodeled barn that has been home for her family for twenty-six years. Her husband is an architect and they have three children. Ann graduated from Bennington in '54 and has been involved through the years in several different social service jobs, both volunteer and professional.

Ann Merriwether Disharoon lives in Owings Mills, MD and is fortunate in having three of her four daughters and all three of her grandchildren living nearby. When in Chicago last year, Ann had lunch with her old Abbot suite-mates, Alice Russell Farner and Sally Stevens MacMillan. Alice lives in the same house she was born in in South Bend, IN, and Sally lives in Wayzata, MN.

Mimi West MacAdoo lives in Sarasota, FL, where she is currently serving her fourth term on the Sarasota County School Board. Mimi, who was with us in Abbey in 1947-48, graduated from Lawrence University. In addition to raising two daughters and participating in various community service activities, Mimi has been employed as a social worker and has worked in her husband's electronic business.

Carol Bernstein Horwitz lives in Boston, and is involved in creating and leading art tours for the Institute of Contemporary Art and other cultural institutions. One of her four daughters, Julia Horwitz, is Andover '74.

Mary Alice Dodge is now Mrs. Stephen R. Astle. They live in Walpole, NH and are sending the last of their seven children off to college this fall. How would you like to have their tuition bills?

Gette Davis Ferrante writes that she obtained her B.A. in 1982, just thirty-two years after she started working towards that goal. Congratulations, Gette! In those thirty-two years, Gette raised a very large family—her oldest is now a surgeon and she is a grandma.

In the past two years, my three children have all graduated from college and are now gainfully employed—what a nice feeling. My husband is an attorney here in Wichita Falls, where he was born and raised. I am involved in a variety of community activities, with our local Heritage Society commanding a lion's share of my interest and energy at the moment.

It was wonderful to hear from so many of you, and I certainly appreciate your writing. But there are many more of you out there who need to share your news with our class. Please let us know where you are and what you are doing.

Thank you for your note, Frances Russell Phelps, telling us you have opened your own office for physical therapy in Hartford, CT. Fran has practiced P.T. since graduating from Tufts, and with her husband, George L., raised four wonderful children: Laura 26, Bill 24, Beth 17, and Jenny 12.

Recently, Carolyn Furst Carlson wrote saying that she and her son Dwight were going to Andover for a Summer Session '84 interview this fall. She mentioned that her daughter Margaret expects to attend the second session of the Syracuse University Summer School for courses relevant to a degree from the Newhouse School. Do hope we can meet for lunch late next spring, when they are in town.

I have heard from two other Abbot girls in this area, so thought I would pass it on. Bunty Benedict Ferguson '53 mentioned to me that their son Ted, a junior this fall, spent six weeks at Andover this past summer. He just loved the Anthropology and International Relations courses he took. Bunty said their oldest son, a graduate of Amherst, is now climbing the French Alps while his money lasts. Their third son is taking a year off from school, and is running a horse barn in Hamilton, NY. Bunty and her husband, John, live outside Syracuse and have a small horse farm. This keeps her busy along with the volunteer work she does.

Another alumna, Mary Emery Barnhill '47, lives in Cazenovia. Their youngest son, Barney, played against my husband this past Labor Day weekend in the final singles match at the Caz Club. What competition they gave each other! But Barney did win the match. This fall he will be a sophomore in high school.

A few days after returning to New York from our 30th reunion, I received this note from Nancy Segal: "The dedication of the beautiful music room in Michael's honor was an occasion that will always stand apart in the pride and pleasure it gave to me and the children. Although certain classmates were the force behind the dream, it could not have become a reality without the support of the class of '53. It is difficult to say thank you for a gift that is so caring and for one that will give Michael years that go far beyond the ones that were denied him. I thank you all from my heart. Love Nancy." For those of you who might want to get in touch with Nancy, I would add that she is now living in Boston. "I have been meaning to write," writes Mike Wood, "ever since early June, when I mysteriously failed to show up (did anybody notice?) for our rousing 30th. What happened was . . . just after I sent that questionnaire form back, my parents were in touch with me from the place of my up bringing—Philadelphia. It seems that some Morris-type people in that area, to whom I am closely related, were sponsoring a gathering of the clan at the Bellevue-Stratford and my parents were most anxious to have us there at their table, sort of representing our generation, since my siblings are too far flung. They were so anxious, in fact, that I yielded to the biblical maxim of honoring one's parents, and, after more than a little indecision and soul-searching, headed south to PHL, on the same weekend, of course, as our reunion. So, my apologies . . ." Well, Mike needn't apologize, although it is too bad that he missed the first annual Mike Wood dinner, and that we couldn't use the 100 Mike Wood t-shirts we ordered for the Mike Wood parade. . . . "was," writes Randy Heimer, "so saddened to hear of Dana Smith's death. He was special. I remember him best from the Rockwell days and our preeminence on the football field as Saxons. Judy and I are well. I'm still at Benton & Bowles (five years now working on the Texaco Account. Judy's got her hands full with two (or is it three?) magazines: Weight Watchers, American Baby, Childbirth Education, etc., etc., and also is TV hostess of the American Baby TV show. She's so good, they're thinking about her for a similar show for Weight Watchers. I call her the 'queen of narrow-casting.' We bought a summer place in Wainscott recently and should really throw a party for the Andover locals." Actually, Randy should be giving a party for overweight babies—but then (considering some of us) maybe that's what he had in mind. . . . From Peter Perkin: comes this update: "I am still working for Reed, Roberts. Son Keith '78 has graduated from MIT, daughter Monica graduated from Baylor in May, daughter Frances attending U. of Texas, and one kid still at home. . . . "Ordained Deacon in the Episcopal Church in October 1982 and awarded Ph.D. by Union Theological Seminary in May 1983," writes Doctor Deacon David Norris. Deacon Doctor David Norris? Norris David . . . On the subject of doctors, Pau Hull, MD, summarizes a few events in his life as follows: Since 1981, Chairman, Department Obstetrics and Gynecology, St. Mary's Hospital Medical Center, Long Beach, CA; wife Pamela, (Dana Hall '59 Univ. Penna.) Interior Designer, Beverly Hills and Long Beach, CA; daughter Geraldine, starts Univ. Penna., Sept. 1983; son Robert, junior in high school, Long Beach . . . and, Dr. Pat Crowther writes that his daughter Lisi is graduating (this was written before the reunion) and that he wanted to pay for everyone's room. Or does it say buy everyone a drink. Oh, well, it's too late anyway. . . . Bob Sullivan, a partner in the law firm of Herrick & Smith (it says here in the Boston Globe), and counsel to MIT, has been elected to the executive board of the National Association of College and Uni iversity Attorneys. . . . Currently working at Prince George's Community College in Largo, MD as director of Physical Plant; purchased "dream" home in La Plata, MD in October, says Al Stearns. . . . "Did you see Dave Bowman in a recent Con Ed TV spot?" asks Dan Hannon. Not only did I see him on television, but I also ran into him outside the television booth at a NY Mets vs. St. Louis Cards baseball game this summer. I was with Joe Mesics and Don Shapiro (the new president of the New York Anover/Abbott Alumni Assoc. of NY). John Aud writes, "Married 25 years to Marilyn, a real estate broker. Daughter Elizabeth, MBA student. After retiring I returned to school and am currently with Smithers Center of Roosevelt Hospital as a drug/alcohol therapist."

Merry Christmas, happy New Year. Love.

Still warm from the glow of our 30th Reunion, I begin my 2nd column with a huge apology! How could our most loyal and beloved alumna have been omitted from the list of attendees? Carol Hardin Kimball was certainly with us, looking incredibly unchanged from our Abbott years. Living in NYC, Carol has taken her fund-raising abilities to The Metropolitan Opera Company, where she is the Co-Director of the Centennial Fund Drive. Carol shared a room at the Andover Inn last winter with Anne Oliver Jackson when both were attending an Andover Trustees meeting. At a pre-reunion lunch at the home of Muffy Grant Lynch, Anne's parents were there as well as Betsey Hitzrot Evans' mother, all looking so much the same.

It was a real pleasure to get news of other classmates, and I urge you all to write me before 1 February so that I can include you in the next column. Beverly Berkey Sipes is living in Tulsa, OK and is teaching 3rd grade full time while her husband pursues a second career in music and acting. Bev played a part in Our Town and couldn't attend reunion. They have five children from 1 to 21, all very active in a variety of fields. Bev writes, "I'm very proud and delighted to have attended Abbott, and realize some of my best study skills and habits were established in those extra-silent study halls." A photograph of Libby Hollister Zimmerman was brought to reunion by Ann Irish Kennedy, as well as two Christmas letters in exquisite cards featuring Libby's artwork. A wildlife painter, Libby had a painting accepted in a prestigious bird art exhibit in Wisconsin. The Zimmermans are environmentalists, and have successfully combined their professions and leisure time activities. Jane Wilson Mann writes from Florida, that she has gained a son (in-law) after having three daughters. She has embarked on a new career as Administrative Manager for the life and health department of an insurance firm. She's planning on attending our 35th! Nancy Bailey Riegel was in England during reunion, traveling with daughter Liza, who spent junior year abroad. Son Josh is in ninth grade and very active in sports. Nancy says, "I do various things on a volunteer basis for Monomet and Observatory and Mass. Eye and Ear Infirmary, and generally avail myself of cultural opportunities such as Radcliffe seminars and museum lectures. Nancy sees Janet Bowden Wilson, who still lives in Greenwich and has two children. Dorothy Giles Ham is in New Hampshire and has her own real estate firm in Exeter. She has four children. Trish Miller Davis is still on Long Island and is bookkeeper for St. Stephen's church in Port Washington. Ann Irish Kennedy, who organized a wonderful tennis tournament at reunion, is living in Michigan, and has three girls, one boy, and one son-in-law. Ann has visited with Libby and Patty Earhart, and provided the info on Bev Berkey above. Betsey Hitzrot Evans has four girls in schools across the country, with one a junior at Exeter. Her husband Dick is a successful patent attorney, and makes furniture as a hobby. Betsy is busy teaching outdoor education to elementary school children.

Julie Gaines Phalen had invited a number of our former faculty members to join our festivities. They all sent warm good wishes which I pass along. They were Miss Hearsey, currently in Bedford, MA; Miss Arosa in Essex, MA; Miss Bockstedt in Brookline, MA; and Miss Sweeney, who is still in Andover. Mlle. Barrett did attend Friday evening despite leaving the next day to spend the summer in France. She lives in Andover and keeps busy tutoring students from the high school and adults in the community.

Please, as you read this, add me to your Christmas, New Year's, or Christmas-in-July card list, and send me information about yourselves. I've found a common link professionally with Dorothy Giles Ham, and a hobby and interest link with Libby Hollister Zimmerman. How many more common links are there among our class? It would be fun to share them through this column, or better yet, at our next reunion. My address is at the top. Please put it in your address book or card file now and let me hear from you! I've had a lovely afternoon reminiscing, compiling, and editing for space reasons, and look forward to catching up with more of you.

We signed up for an Andover-sponsored, two-week junket to the Soviet Union last June, and were pleasantly surprised as we stood in the terminal at JFK perusing the list of participants to find the name of David Driver among them. Far from one of our star correspondents over the years, Dave was part of a hazy memory of a geometry class presided over by Bob Maynard. Dave proved to be an easy-going and entertaining traveling companion. From our first morning abroad, when we teamed up with Toshiko Kohler (an attorney from St. Petersburg, FL, and a cousin by marriage to '55s Bill and Bob Kohler), as we tried to see everything in Frankfurt, Germany, during a four-hour layover, to our last night behind the Iron Curtain, when the three of us along with two other members of our group, found ourselves compressed into the tiniest Russian auto, for a free midnight lift to our hotel, given by a generous Lenin-grader, Dave proved a worthy drinking buddy and a thoughtful person with whom to compare our impressions of a once-in-a-lifetime experience. Dave is President and owner of Atlantic Alloys, Inc. in Attleboro, MA, and lives in Bristol, RI.

We were shocked and saddened to pick up Daily Variety several weeks ago and learn of the death, on 15 August, after a long illness, of Tony Costello. Tony will be best remembered at PA as a regular columnist for the Phillipian and for his skillful watercolor paintings. T.C., as he signed his paintings, was commissioned to paint the murals in the Coffee Mill where many Andover classes appreciated his scenes of Andover life over the years.

After Andover, Tony attended the Rhode Island School of Design, the University of Florence, Italy, and Western Reserve University, where he received his Master of Fine Arts. In 1961 he toured the country as a member of the Cleveland Playhouse. A longtime member of the Actors' Studio, he made his Broadway debut in 1963 in the play The Riot Act with Dorothy Stickney. He subsequently appeared off-Broadway in Brecht on Brecht. Tony moved to Hollywood in 1963, where he had featured roles in The Molly Maguires; Blue; Will Penny; Doctors' Wives; The Laughing Policeman; and Night Moves.

Taking time off the last few years from his painting and acting, Tony wrote his first novel, Jericho, which was published only last year, the first hardbound novel published by Bantam Books. He was working on a sequel at the time of his death. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Philip A. Costello, 1 Appletree Lane in Andover.

Marge's husband, George, is still with IBM in Armonk. Lynn, Marge's eldest daughter, is a senior at Princeton and spent a summer semester at the Sorbonne. Daughter Betsy is a sophomore at Williams. Mollie Lupe Lasater's son Bo, started Andover this year, so the Lasaters will be making the trek from Texas to Andover once again. Mollie and family were planning a two week trip to Austria -- based in Salzburg--when she wrote during the summer. Visions of The Sound of Music! Mollie is still vice president of the School Board, and reports that she feels that Fort Worth is making real progress in public education -- an encouraging note. Susie Wickham Grover's daughter Sarah, graduated from Kalamazoo College this year; her son is a senior at Hillsdale College. Susie keeps on with her nursing, working part time in obstetrics. She says she spent a few days with Cemmy Kelton Ryland "up north" in Michigan.

I spent six weeks in England in June and July, three of which were spent studying English country houses with the Attingham Summer School. Fortunately there are still plenty left to visit!

My sincere apologies go to you, and particularly to George Whitesides, for failing to get this piece into the last article. Last March, George presented a paper to the American Chemical Society on Applications of Enzymology in Organic Synthesis. The paper was the third of the James Bryant Conant Lectures in Current Chemistry. George's resume reveals that he has spent most of his career at MIT after having received his Ph.D. from Cal Tech in 1964. But, in 1982, he went to Harvard, where he serves as a Professor in Chemistry. While at MIT, George received an Alfred P. Sloan Fellowship in 1968, the American Chemical Society Award in Pure Chemistry in 1975, the Harrison Howe Award in 1979, and the Alumni Distinguished Service Award from Cal Tech in 1980. That's a heck of a record.

Last year at our 25th reunion someone made the comment that if our children were a reflection of our class, then we had a pretty darn good one. Ralph Weaver's son Andrew has become quite a good tennis player. Not only is he a lot better tennis player, he's a lot larger than his father—probably has more hair, too.

This summer my middle son, Tom, attended the Andover summer session and did very well taking two enrichment courses. As I recollect, I never did very well in any subject, and was terribly pleased when then Headmaster Kemper handed me a piece of paper at graduation that was not blank.

Finally, it is a pleasure to tell you that Fred Shuman and Stephanie McCabe were married last 27 August in the garden at Fred's East Hampton house. Stephanie's son Colin gave her away, while Fred's son Andy was his best man and Fred's daughter Abby was the maid of honor. The newlyweds will honeymoon later, which I would expect, after seeing the bill for 200 guests. Our heartiest congratulations.

Yours truly has resisted the marital trap successfully thus far (for the second time of course), but my will power is diminishing, and you will have to wait for the next installment to hear the thrilling conclusion. Gee

All is well in Youngstown and Ira is still in the advertising business." I look forward to hearing from more of you.

Reunion was marvelous, as our faithful former secretary, Mary Steketee MacDonald, relayed in the summer Bulletin. Let's make the class photo even more crowded for the 30th.

I returned to Andover two more times last summer. Our oldest son, Andrew, attended the Summer Session. He had a roommate from Madrid; an English teacher who made grammar fun; and a chance to rappel down the Bell Tower. We enjoyed the hospitality of Jane Christie Smith in New Haven on one trip, and saw her again in New Hampshire at her mother's home. Her son, Andy, joins brother Tim at Andover this year.

My newest venture is to become a Kingsbury tutor for the learning disabled. June Hamilton Withington also works with L.D. problems. I'm still cartooning, but was turned down for this column. Our editor wants news, so help me out. I wonder if Judy Hart Shaw's phobia clinic has a cure for reticent classmates?

Thanks and praise to "Stek" for keeping us in touch.

Over the hot summer, Artie Rogers, Garrett Kirk, Bill Snyder, and I have been as hard at work on our 25th Reunion as the elements permitted. It's going to be a great event. You'll be hearing much more from us, and others as well, as the fall progresses.

Our goal for the reunion is very simple: we want to beat all prior attendance records. Many of you have already committed to come, but in order to achieve our goal, all of you have to be there. And at the risk of being uncharacteristically serious, let me put this thought in your heads: While at Andover, many of us felt we were being judged—and found wanting—academically, socially, athletically. And the fact is, that was true. But we were teenagers, going through adolescence, and we were judging just as hard as we were being judged. Now, as we hit forty (and 1984), it's time to realize that blaming Andover for our feelings then—is akin to shooting the messenger. Make plans to join together 8-10 June to bury a few ghosts, and to have a great time. Big brother guarantees it will be worth you while.

Lolly Bell Hetherington and I are looking forward to seeing the Class of '59 in full force at its 25th, 8-10 June. If each of you persuades at least one other classmate to come, we could all be there. Lolly and I would also love to hear from those willing to help out with a piece of the planning, executing, or letter writing, and, if any of you remembers signing up for the 25th Reunion Committee back when we had the 20th, please identify yourself.

Nathalie Taft Andrews was at Chapel Hill this summer taking a business course and visiting Nona Porter. Then she was off to a conference in Denver and a camp in New Mexico. She's the Director of the Portland Museum in Louisville, Kentucky, and working hard on a N.E.H.-funded project to build permanent exhibits. She is single and happy and finds that building a community-based museum is extremely rewarding and exciting. Ben, 20, her "free spirit," is off to Paris to pursue his music.

Missy Iams Kittredge is still living in Panama, but her children are in school in the States. A little modern dancing keeps the other foot out of the grave. If anyone has heard of a tax-shelter called GOLD FOC TAX DOLLARS (International Moneta Exchange, Agent) she wants to know all the sordid details.

Sherry Weymouth Morison is hoping to make the Reunion if she can settle a few things that are up in the air. How effortlessly 25 years go by, she wonders.

I have a second child at Andover now. Charlie started 9th grade and joins Ka who is an Upper. It is such an interesting place that I urge you to use the 25th as opportunity to get to know Andover even better and to enjoy old and new friends.

Despite rumors to the contrary, the class Abbot '60 does exist and is busily involved in a wide variety of activities.

Sally Foote Hubby completed a graduate program at George Washington University as a certified Publication Specialist. She has expanded her free-lance graphic design work into a business called "Figmen" where she designs and markets greeting cards. Husband David is with the Justice Department; daughter Betsy is a senior at St. Timothy's School, Baltimore; son Peter is in ninth grade at The Rectory School, Pomfret, CT.

Lexa Crane Frishman writes that she graduated from the University of Texas at Austin, and is taking Paralegal courses. Terry Hydeman, divorced since 1980, is still living and working on Martha's Vineyard. She has seen Sue Spaulding Silva, also living on the island, and Kristi Graham, Woods Hole, and Anna Dudley Egan, Seaside, CA, who are all well.

Susie Lothrop Koster and her husband sold their Jupiter, FL deli/meat business about two years ago and have been enjoying a long vacation. They have taken extended trips and enjoyed the extra-curricular activities of their four girls, Tanya, Robin, 14; Erika, 10; and Bridget, 8.

Mike and Ginny Pratt Agar, Rowayton, CT, are about to put their third addition onto their original house. Mike is in charge of ambulatory services at St. Luke's, Roosevelt Hospital, New York City, and Ginny is "happily involved in community life." They have three children: two boys, eleven and nine, and a daughter, three.

Cindy Smith Bailes has moved from Tennessee to Kingston, NH, where she is enjoying life as a Tupperware Manager. She is in her 11th year as a National Board Member of the YWCA, and her first as President of the local Friends of the Library. Daughter Darcie, 19, lives with Cindy while working as a bank teller and attending Northern Essex Community College. Son Tim, 15, lives in Tennessee with his father and is heavily into computers.

Beth Van Winkle Boynton writes that Litchfield, CT is "heaven on earth." She and Oren, who works in New York City, just celebrated their 22nd wedding anniversary. Son William, 21, is a junior at Bard College majoring in Drama. Daughter Meghan, 18, graduated from Kent School and is a freshman at Tufts, Medford. Alder, five, attends Montessori school and "is a delight." Beth works full time as a legal ocate at a shelter for battered women in Waterbury, CT, where she says, "It is very gratifying to help women start new lives." Beth reports that she is thinner than when he was at Abbot, has had long hair for years, and is enjoying being 40.

After some landscape design courses and brief career in real estate, I am now working on several flower/horticulture shows and attempting to become a judge of horticulture. Bob's Cambridge, MA real estate business, Dudley & Borland, continues to go well. In addition, he spends a great deal of time at the Carleton-Willard Continuum of Care Facility in Bedford, MA, where he has been on the Board of Directors from the inception of the idea to the present, almost completed complex. Our daughter Sayre, 2, is in the seventh grade at The Brimmer & May School, and the twins, Andrew and Peter, eleven, are in the sixth grade at Dexter. Having spent a wonderful summer sailing, we are about to launch into tennis and hockey.

Please keep sending me postcards; it is good to catch up with one another.

Fall is in the air, leaves are on the ground, and in two days I will be 40. Fall comes around to spring, bare branches sprout new growth, and flowers bloom; I can now compete in the masters division of road races rather than racing with a bunch of kids. All in all, it seems like a good deal.

Dennis Cross, our outstanding Class Agent, sent me some notes he has received over the last couple of years: George Hanna is a partner with Moore and VanAllen in Charlotte, North Carolina. Stu Wrede continues his architectural business, doing additions and renovations in Guilford, Connecticut, and in New York. Stu does a lot of brownstones in the city where he is also an assistant professor at the Columbia Architecture School. He has also been a visiting professor at the Yale Architecture School, and has done writing on both the history and theory of architecture. Stu is married, has two kids, and enjoys living in Guilford, in "idyllic small town."

Dennis Holahan is, I believe, living in Aspen. He told Dennis C. that he has been guest star on *M*A*S*H and is in the movie Scarface with Al Pacino. At last our class has a celebrity! Dennis also reports that his son will be applying to Andover this year. Belden Johnson, who was at the Primal Center when he last wrote to Dennis, had some not-too-nice things to say about his experience at Andover. He acknowledged, however, that there were some wonderful and some human things about the school. I am always interested to hear how deeply the Andover experience affected many of us; however, I have come to the conclusion that I, and not my school, my college, or my upbringing, am responsible for who I am and what I am today.

Bill Fay reported from York, PA, that he and Laura were missionaries for seven years to a stone-age tribal people in what used to be known as Dutch New Guinea. His story of introducing education, agriculture, and religion to a primitive people is exciting. Bill now works in his family's company with his dad and younger brother as a programmer-personnel manager, and it sounds like, overall manager of the business. He is also involved in Junior Achievement, Rotary, and is an elder in his local church. Tom Phelps writes from Kuwait, where he claims that he is, "quite destitute and must filch from the office supplies." Tom is with an engineering and management consulting firm, but at last report was expecting to change jobs. By now Tom may well be back in Massachusetts.

Page Smith is looking for Kinross-Wright, George Houpis, and Mait Cuthbertson. You will find Page in Doylestown, PA. Page has a great idea for the 25th reunion (Oh, my God!): he would like to revive the "Sour Grapes" for a return engagement. Great idea!

Cary Cook left Boise, Idaho, and has moved to Menlo Park, where he is involved in investment baking and venture capital projects with an emphasis on high technology stocks. His son Keith is rapidly approaching Andover age. Cary has also made a date with Toby Hay to visit in Hawaii this December. Why don't we all meet Toby in Hawaii this December?

Tom Pollock, a lawyer, is now general counsel to U.S. Windpower, a company that specializes in harnessing the trade winds to power windmills. . . . Jobe Stevens is moving back to New Jersey from Kentucky as director of the Harry M. Stevens operations at the New Jersey Sports Complex. He will never, however, give up his connection with Churchill Downs and the Derby. Jobe is now a horse owner, so look for him in the winner's circle. He also reports that he has seen Malcolm Starr in Louisville a number of times.

Dennis sent me a letter he received from Gary Rieveschl from "the icy Eastern edge of the Western World," Berlin. Much of Gary's letter was in German, and I really didn't understand it. However, I gather that Gary has lived in Germany for quite some time. He reports that he, too, has a son whose sights are on Andover.

Finally, I have a quasi-illegible note from Dave Kirk in which he mentions Ned Cabot's shell dedication with Dave Hannon. I have no idea what that means, but perhaps it will have some significance to you. Contrary to what you just read about Gary Rieveschl, David reports that Gary was on the Andover campus recently, along with Dick Durance, Jim Knowles, and Stu Wrede.

I would like to thank those of you who have written, for the nice feedback. It means a lot to know that you enjoy the column. Please write.

Lots of news this time! And some of it just seemed to fall into my lap! I ran into Julie Owen at the Gardner Museum in Boston last spring—quite a surprise. Julie is still working for the State Department in Senegal, and was home for a bit last spring. She looks wonderful and still has that same sparkle about her. Another surprise was seeing Janie Benedict Radosevic again. She was in Boston in September to settle her daughter in at Boston University. She has remarried and has recently started up her own printing business. Janie and I were very close friends while at Abbot, and somehow lost touch due to those vague life circumstances which can wedge their way between friendships. We spent a few hours trying to get caught up on events in each other's lives—of course nowhere near exhaustively. Seeing her again was a bitter-sweet reminder that those old friendships that meant so much to us when we were very young—can so easily get tucked away, resigned to memories; but are there to be renewed today at a whole new level of maturity and depth. Maybe that's why I find reunions so exhilarating. And if you're still "humbugging" reunions, try coming back to one, and try to prove me wrong.

Yet another surprise was calling Loring Low Stevens in Cambridge the other day to get caught up, and hearing that she had just had a baby three days before—Deborah Taylor Stevens (to be known as Taylor)—8 lbs. 1 oz. So, Loring's career in real estate management has now been supplemented by motherhood. In fact, this new facet seems so appealing that Loring says, "I'm going to have another one!" Loring reports that Judy Draper Cottrell is still in California and working at the University of California, San Diego.

Ann Fahnestock is now Ann Fahnestock Cody as of November 1982. Congratulations, Anne! She writes that she and her husband, Richard, are living in Tampa, FL. Ann is the manager of the Research Department for I.S.F.A. Corp., a company wholly owned by the Saving & Loan Institutions which was approved to be broker/dealers last year. News from another Floridian—Linda Lynch Smoak: she and her husband Bill ran the Optimist Dinghy portion of the Orange Bowl Regatta. Bill is Rear Commodore of Coral Reef Yacht Club. Linda is trial judging in ice skating, training to be a USISA judge, and is also enjoying skiing with her family in Colorado. Her son Will was "Cadet of the Month" at Florida Air Academy.

Sybil Smith Smith continues to shine in her job as Director of International Programs at Wentworth Institute of Technology in Boston, traveling to Belgium last spring, and to China in July.

Karyl-Lynn Kopelman Zietz was also in China as well as Japan last fall, making a film about the Orient to be viewed next year on television. She spent a lot of the winter on the West Coast filming new programs for the German television program, Gesundheitsmagazin Praxis, a show for the handicapped. She is now working on a documentary called Jahres Unseres Lebens Dreizehner: Jahr (Years of Our Lives—the 30s.)

Sandy Nicholson Booth is the mother of four: Jenny, 14; Alaric 12; Peter, 7; and Anna, 2. She writes: "I have essentially abandoned my previous field of study—physical anthropology—in which I obtained an MA and a Ph.D. ('72). It lost its relevance for me. The area I am now investigating is learning disabilities—such a prevalent problem nowadays."

Joan Smith Bowker writes: "I thrive at what I do. Am presently an adjunct lecturer at the MFA [Museum of Fine Arts] in Boston, teach art history at the Montserrat School of Art . . . lots of little lecture stints . . . my time is my own. No money, of course!"

A note from Esther Wanning in California arrived today—just under the wire. Esther reports that she is a literary agent and writer, and her husband is a plumbing contractor and artist. "Plumbing," she says, "a subject I never gave any thought to until I met my husband, is fascinating. After all,

'the plumber protects the health of the nation,' and the workings of pipes and valves are infinitely various." Her final comment: "Carol Ule and I are already sworn to attend our 25th reunion, and will be very disappointed in any classmate who does not show up."

I second that resoundingly, and would like to see our class sweep all records for attendance at the reunion in '85.

September was supposed to be "back to school" time for me. Those best laid plans, however, seem to reflect the saying, "life is what happens when you're planning something else." The Graduate School of Design at Harvard made me an offer I couldn't refuse, and I am now the program director for the department of landscape architecture.

And to all those who took the time to respond to my plea for news for this edition, my special thanks! It was a pleasure to hear from you.

Beverly Brown Berg writes that she is living in Seattle and teaching history at Seattle University.

Molly Noyes Martin is working as an administrator, instructor, and supervisor of hospital-based Ultrasound Laboratories in Brooklyn, and living in Manhattan. Her husband Eric is chief of the angiography department at Columbia. The Martins were planning a September trip to Venice and Yugoslavia. Molly also mentioned Edie Foster Farrell -- this will have to serve as a "heaven-only-knows-how" belated wedding announcement, since Edie is still Edie Foster on Andover's lists. Please bring us up to date, Edie.

Ingrid Quark Manning is back at work as an administrator for the Waterbury, CT Foundation—a charitable organization which makes grants to local agencies. Her husband, John, has started his own law practice in Waterbury. The Mannings have two sons, Gordon, age twelve, and Philip, age nine, who keep Ingrid and John active in the local soccer organization.

Alice Helffrich Orsini was widowed in 1975 when her husband's single engine plane crashed. Alice and her daughter continue to live outside Fairbanks, Alaska in a home which started out as a three-room log cabin with an outhouse and a log sauna for bathing, but is now a lovely two bedroom house with modern facilities.

Alice was ordained a minister of the Mother Earth Church in February 1979, and is also working as a professional bookkeeper. Many of her close friends were "characters" in John McPhee's Coming Into the Country.

eloquent review of the events, I am using the contents to convey the spirit and enthusiasm of those present. Thanks, Bruce and Jackie—you contributed so much to both PA and AA reunions.

"Dear Roger:

"The reunion was GREAT! As we arranged, I am forwarding you some of my impressions to complement the facts. Between Andover and Abbot, we had approximately 40 "reuners"—20 from each class, plus families, for a total of over 90 people. The reunion was a unique opportunity to make new friends and renew friendships that have endured the trials of space, time, and distance. Among those attending from our Class: Joe McGirt, a lawyer, came with his wife Carole and son Matthew from Charlotte, NC. . . . John Faggi, an instructor at Choate Rosemary Hall, attended with his wife Sarah and daughter Emily. . . . Bill Schaefer came from Wellesley, MA with his wife Mary and two of his three children. He is an Associate Professor of Medicine at Tufts University Medical Center. . . . David Posner is a potter, and teaches art at Georgia Southern College. He drove up with his wife Barbara and children. His work is exceptional, and we enjoyed seeing the actual pottery. . . . Dick Pechter, chairman and CEO of Pershing Investment of New York, came with his wife Kayla and three children. . . . Ty Shen is VP of Marketing Research for Cabot Advertising in Boston. He came up with his wife Linda. . . . Peter Schultz is in international banking in NYC and came up with his wife Ranji and daughter Amy. . . . Bill Hunt is an actor in New York City. . . . Tony Obst of Summit, NJ is a lawyer in NYC, and attended with his wife Pat and their four children. . . . Jon Vipond is with the Office of Public Liaison, the White House. . . . John Born is a structural engineer in Cambridge, MA. . . . Charles Martin, a data systems engineer (manager) with TASC of Reading, MA, came with his wife Mardee and their two children. . . . Mike Garvan, is a forester in Franconia, NH, attended with his wife Susan. . . . Frank Hekimian is a lawyer in Lawrence, MA. . . . Vic Petzy is a program coordinator for the Wilmington, MA school system. . . . John Stableford is an instructor at PA, and with his wife Cindy, was a most gracious host. And I am marketing manager for the Gillette Company in Boston. Peter Eakland flew in from Anchorage, AL, to set the distance record for the reunion.

"While a more-than-full weekend of activities was planned, a good many of us roamed the campus in the early hours of the morning, then returned to class "headquarters" at Taylor Hall, where many of us were lodged in truly memorable surroundings. The rooms are still bleak at best! The Class Dinner on Saturday night in the Upper Commons was well attended. The food was greatly improved—we had it catered—as was the environment. I think they sand-blasted the ceilings during the renovation to remove the butter slabs! The reunion was, I believe, a real success as many of us got to learn more about our own 'classmates' under considerably less strained circumstances.

"Those are the highlights of the weekend, Roger; they should give you the flavor of the event and the excitement. Perhaps the most telling indicator lies in the fact that virtually all of us volunteered to personally round up classmates for the 25th reunion. This will ensure that we both "beat" Abbot as well as continue to fully share in the fun.

Sincerely
Bruce Cleverly

"PS: As noted, you were unanimously reelected Class Secretary, and unofficial (by me) designated #1 assistant for the 25th reunion."

Thank you, PA '63, for electing me to continue these columns. Now that I have home computer, they are almost fun! I already have a new job: in August, I became the Director of the MBA program in Health Care Administration at Cleveland State University.

Cooper Wood is busy running a motel, Estes Park near Boulder, CO. His daughter Christy (now 9) is getting PA fever. . . . Tom Harris works for the US Forest Service in the small logging town of Happy Camp, CA. He manages the business functions of the district office of over 100 employees. Charles Larkin raises Holstein dairy heifers on his farm near Middlebury, CT and seeks help for next spring's planting. . . . F. Quinby is now in his tenth year with H&Block.

I hope that the upcoming holiday season is a happy one for all of us. Write and keep your Class Secretary busy and feel productive.

The class notes this season are pale in comparison to Mimi Dean McBride's wonderfully informative and descriptive account of the Reunion, topped off with Jackie Sutt Cleverly's last notes as Class Secretary in the Summer issue of the Bulletin. I was impressed with the short-term recall of Mimi Jackie, Carrie Holcombe Damp, and Cinc Sorenson, for they were the ones who gathered to piece it all together, glowing from the effects of three glorious days in Andover.

I remember a whirlwind of fun and face and of catching up on children born, moved here and there, professional changes, travel adventures, and so on. I was totally immersed in becoming reacquainted with a vibrant and enormously intriguing group of attractive women, and was sure that I would NEVER forget that Meg Power was now in Arlington (or was it Alexandria?), that Maidy Wilkins Haslinger spent three to four years in Germany (or was it Austria?) where she met her husband Karl Heinz. I wasn't quite sure who fit what, where! Was it Miss Scarlet in the kitchen with the candelabra? I used to be whiz at Concentration, but now my five-year-old, Jessica, can beat me every time my mind a catchall of miscellaneous trivia and grocery lists with little room left for important things! And so I was truly impressed with the four of them. What I remember is a beautiful three days for which we owe many thanks to the school and to Jackie and her husband Bruce '63 who planned the whole three days and then made sure we all got where we were supposed to go! They did such a good job that they were unanimously reelected to serve in the same capacity five years hence.

for our silver reunion. Put it on your calendar. A cleverly orchestrated reunion is a harmonious occasion not to be missed.

Speaking of those Cleverlys, I heard from Jackie, who asked me to thank all who came to the reunion, but especially those who paid the full weekend fare even though in the end they were able to attend only a portion of the festivities. Their generosity allowed us as a class to break even, and she and Bruce were especially grateful to be spared the bookkeeping hassles involved with refunds. She also said they have some extra Andover umbrellas which are available, for a small fee, to anyone who wants one. For those of you who were not able to be at reunion, let me attest to the quality of the umbrellas. They are a real deal, and on this subject, we Oregonians know whereof we speak! If you're interested, contact Jackie. (Mrs. Jackie Cleverly, 197 North Street, Hingham, MA 02043.) You'll be glad you did.

There are quite a few of us in '63 who managed to cross the Continental Divide and are now scattered up and down the West coast. Come visit us, and we'll show you that even the Northwest rainforests occasionally sparkle with sunshine!

Meanwhile, I look forward to hearing from you. Mimi (address: Mimi Dean McBride, 3704 Blackthorn Ct., Chevy Chase, MD 20815) and I will be sharing the role of Class Secretary for the next five years, doing our best to follow Jackie's excellent example. A big thanks to her for keeping the Abbot '63 channels of communication unclogged, and flowing with news for the last five! Happy Halloween, —Morley.

As I write these Notes for your winter reading, my thoughts are on the summer past and the summer to come. The latter is the occasion of our 20th Reunion, which will bring, I hope, some new names to the space or, alternately, your hexannual chance to depose your faithful correspondent.

As for the summer past, we attended the Harvard 15th reunion in the hopes, realized, of encountering some Andover colleagues among the less well remembered classmates of our college years. Skipper Lee was the biggest surprise, for we assumed him to be still in the Virgin Islands, or at least cynical toward past relationships. After two days of questioning, however, we concluded that Skip now lives in New York, and is on the verge of establishing a psychiatric practice, but otherwise has a healthy interest in life and its people.

Steve Lerner was recently returned from Thailand, where he researched a future look on third-world disposal of chemical wastes. After a decade in Bolinas, California, a land caught in the '60s, Steve is looking for a foreign correspondent job, even with the Establishment.

Another lost classmate was very prominent: Howie Cutler organized and led a rab-bag of Friday night entertainment—magicians, musicians, and oldies—that kept the younger and fresher members of the class enthralled late into the evening. Howie's artistic skills are practiced fulltime for a design firm in Westchester that, if memory serves, specializes in theater work. Familiar friends of ours, Bill Matassoni and

Larry Darby, came up from New York and staked out opposite ends of the fashion spectrum. Both are thriving professionally: Bill as public relations director for McKinsey and Co., Larry in a new corporate law practice with, among others, partner Harry Hives. Those two recently voyaged Down Under together on an oil deal, but not before I had the pleasure of a dinner discussion of structuralism and other erudite topics quite unrelated to the law.

I have a hunch Harvard fund raiser and Andover trustee Steve Burbank was on the premises, as well, although your correspondent failed to interview him. I did catch spunky Bob Stempson and, for the first time, his pert, attractive wife, Sandy. They proudly told of their premature first child, who, through the efforts and courage of all, was a year old, and well into a normal life. Bob's multimedia consulting business, called Programs for Human Development, is located in Cos Cob, Connecticut, and appears to be a CIA cover.

Fellow runner Jeff Huvelle, who may be Stempson's Washington contact, was as well muscled and tightly spectacted as ever. A disappointment of the reunion, in fact, was how recognizable all the Andover classmates were.

Boston lawyer Doug Mansfield and Boston architect Don Grinberg, reunion mainstays, were there in force. And it was great to catch a glimpse of Bear Barnes, who was in Cambridge that weekend attending the Radcliffe reunion. Bear has left California and is starting a law career with a judicial clerkship in Massachusetts.

"In August Dell Books [published] the original mass market paperback edition of Tom Seligson's new novel, Kidd, a riveting adventure novel about the search for the notorious Captain Kidd's legendary treasure in modern day New York." If Henry Winkler, as promised, stars in the movie version, you'll see a review in these pages.

Dewey Fulton called in from the news desk of Channel 12 in Providence, where he has gone to work for that ABC affiliate, forsaking print journalism. Of equal import, the head hornet of the Swarm won a wind-surfing race in choppy waters off the shore of Boston, and gathered some honey for his yellow-jacketed compatriots in the pages of the Boston Globe.

Meanwhile, the prep school rock revival cultists have tracked down both Fulton and IBM's advertising guru, Randy Hobler, for their contributions to the still forgotten Torques. Funny how the good you do off lies interred with your bones, etc.

Already laying the groundwork for the Longest-Distance-Traveled-to-Reunion Prize is Doug Everett, who is leaving his Air Force station in Phoenix, for two years for some place in Turkey whose name is indecipherable, probably for security reasons. His family will join him there, and he looks forward to sailing the Aegean and, somewhat more problematic, trips to Soviet Georgia, Damascus, Beirut, and Iran, "if things quiet down." Doug doesn't exactly mention Andover, but he hasn't failed us yet.

Bruce Phillips is farther away—Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, where his second daughter, Katherine, was born in October 1982—but I suspect he has not seen PA the last twenty years. Bruce's reunion spirit, is nevertheless, strong, as he asks, "Has anyone heard of or from Joe Chaisson, Chris Roper or Al Rubenstein?" Please respond through this column.

Finally, the big news: Jennifer Anne Swihart '86, is the fourth generation of Swihart to attend Andover. Her great-grandfather Homer was class of 1910, grandfather James was '35, and her father, would you believe, is Jim Swihart '64. The beat goes on.

Jose lives in Menlo Park, CA, and regularly commutes across the Pacific.

Ed Samp lives in Brookline, MA, and is co-founder of International Materials Exchange. Ed reports that he occasionally sees John Whisnant, a consultant with Bain & Co., in Boston, and Phil Aranow, with whom Ed jogs at Harvard. John Samp continues to teach high school and lives in Woburn, MA.

Rick Keyworth has left the Duke Library to join his family business in Oklahoma. Rick and his bride of a year, Amy, are eager to know of any classmates in the area.

Nick Marble is, to this correspondent's knowledge, our first tri-athlete, having successfully completed such an event in Denver. Nick lives in Boulder, where he is a trust officer with the Bank of Boulder. I continue to survive in Manhattan and occasionally talk with Mark Melamed, an ophthalmologist; Mike Hudner, who runs a shipping company; Jon House, head of the physician's union; and John Fox, a film producer.

Anyone who has again been disappointed by not finding his name mentioned can immediately rectify the situation by dropping me a line.

Shelley Erwin reports that she and her husband Bryan are both teaching music history, Shelley at UCLA and Bryan at USC. They live in Sunland, CA and have a one-year-old daughter, Anne Marie. Shelley was surprised to learn that I live in her hometown, which she sorely misses. It is a beautiful place.

Kaye Roan Hamilton-Smith works for IBM in Toronto, and her husband is a business professor at Northeastern. They like the commuting life and travel extensively, having been to China, Japan, Thailand, and India.

Various classmates are in Washington, DC and get together through the Andover/Abbot Association. Lucy Thomson writes that she is a trial attorney in the Fraud Section, Criminal Division of the US Department of Justice. She's been assigned to the Miami White Collar Crime Task Force for the past year, and prosecuted and convicted, for Medicare fraud, the owner of a medical clinic and a doctor. Lucy is also secretary of the DC bar. She sees Barbara Timken often, and had a recent visit with Ellen Ross Ebersole and her husband.

Nancy England, who was at Abbot for prep year, is Director of Program Underwriting at WGBH, Boston's PBS station. She says, "It's a fascinating job with just enough travel."

Nancy Byam Moussa has returned from a year in Greece to become, once again, Nancy Byam. She has spent the last ten years doing news and technical writing, and is contemplating a career change. Nancy lives in Hancock, NH.

With the start of another school year, I'm back at my job as a high school guidance counselor. I'm hoping that those of you who have enjoyed reading about our classmates, after a full of some time, will be inspired to contribute your own news. We want to hear from everyone!

Greetings fellow alumnae! Sorry it's been so long between reports, but it's hard to report news without any! I have, however, heard from two classmates, Candace Howes and Laurel Brown Bowser.

Laurel is living in Orlando, FL and is engaged to be married (she probably is married by now). She has two sons, ages four and six, from a previous marriage, and she is "furiously working on a degree in data processing."

Candy is living in Berkeley, CA, and apparently can hardly wait to get back East. She plans to have her Ph.D. in economics by the spring of 1984, and plans to look for jobs in New York City only. She is currently teaching economics part-time at Santa Cruz. As I recall, Candy, that is one of the most beautiful college campuses in the country.

That's all, folks! Hope all is well and hope to hear from lots of you soon.

Media-savvy people know that if they want to get big play for a story, they should make an announcement or leak information on Sunday, a slow news day, then hope that no airplane crashes divert attention. The Alumni Notes equivalent of this shrewd tactic is to send the Class Secretary news of one's whereabouts during the lull following the appearance of lengthy Class Reunion notes. The time after the reunion is your basic slow news period.

Appropriately enough, a former journalist took advantage of the slack months to write in and grab the limelight. Eric Douglas reports that after stints with a band, and work on several newspapers, he is now caring for his two daughters and writing a science-fiction book on a 50-acre farm in Earlsville, VA. His wife, Deborah Krum, is co-director of the blood bank at the University of Virginia.

Bob Selander says that he moved to Rio in August 1982 and is in charge of Citibank's individual-customer operations for most of Brazil.

I ran into Jim Ross (at a Tom Rush concert) in New Bedford, MA, where he is practicing law. (Ever notice that about the only things one practices are law, medicine, and witchcraft?)

Scotter Libby is still at the State Department (France is still dead), but has switched from policy planning to Asian affairs.

I guess it's O.K. to have a short set of notes following the last ones, but if I don't get more goodies for the next issue, I may have to follow in Gordie's footsteps and start writing fiction.

(1 July 1983.) It was a great party—a special time to catch up and regroup. We had a chance to get to know our Andover brothers, and we shared our life experiences with one another and celebrated that occasion. I am happy to report that we are most assuredly getting older, but the process seems to have improved us all. For those of you who couldn't make this celebration, we missed you and, for those of you who did, it was a joy to share stories and experiences. Needless to say, the class of 1968 continues to be a quality act.

Annette Davis flew in from the West Coast. Annette is just as energetic and beautiful as I remember. She continues her interests in dance and singing, and is managing a restaurant. Bonnie Cook arrived from Philadelphia. Bonnie has achieved much success in the journalism field. One of a handful of reporters asked to join the Inquirer from the now-defunct Philadelphia Bulletin, she has worked in a variety of areas. She is presently covering the suburban beat and mothering two teenage daughters.

Cary Cleaver came to the reunion complete with a rabbit costume. The designated Abbot Rabbit, Cary, did us all proud in the class parade. Cary is working for the Georgia Council of the Arts as the director of the artist-in-education program. She places artists of all disciplines in schools and institutions around the state. Kathy Wies Dietz brought her two blond and beautiful sons, Stephan (three), and Carl (eleven mos.) to the reunion parade. Kathy and her family reside in Andover. Kathy is working part-time as a staff analyst for the Health Data Institute.

Lee Sullivan is working and living in New York City. She is a vice president in the real estate division of Salomon Brothers, Inc. Lee works and travels most of the time, but she still goes to New Hampshire to relax with her family. Florence Newcombe Verrill is also working in the Big Apple. Florence is the divisional merchandising manager for Specialty Store Association. She is the chief organizer for her company, and is involved in all facets of merchandising from buying to public relations. Lynn Black Reed and her husband, Brad, joined the reunion class for dinner. Lynn is the Director of College Guidance at Northfield-Mt. Hermon School, and Brad is in charge of admissions. The Reeds have two children, Tyler (three) and Lindsa (one).

Juju Crane celebrated our class reunion. Juju is working on her C.P.A., is the mother of two boys, Joshua (five) and Benjamin, Jr. (three). She is also working part-time for TRC—environment consultants in East Hartford. Toby Dondis Farman and her husband, Barry, kept us all laughing. Toby has two children, Amy (four) and Andrew (one). She continues to run her gift business from her home with the help of a computer and a four-color brochure.

Karen Urie was our group leader, and she organized a fabulous weekend for us all. Karen is the N.E. Director of Marketin at Mosley, Hallgarten, Estabrook & Weede in Boston. Karen bought a house in Melros and is busy feathering her nest. Ann Fin Mayer is teaching at the Holy Name High School in Worcester. She and her husband Robert, a financial consultant, are contemplating a move to New Hampshire. Miss Judd, and Miss Minard, all put in appearances over the weekend.

I continue to work as a historic preservation developer. I have spent much time in the last seven years of my life walking through abandoned buildings and construction sites. My daughter Margo is two. She spent time with my husband, Ken, of the Andover campus, meeting old friends and playing with Brandon Blake, Kenne Blake's (PA '68) son. With the reunion weekend now over, Margo has repeatedly asked me where the Abbot rabbit went. I reply that she has gone home, but only until 1988, when the team of Wies-Dietz & Sullivan will bring her back for another great time.

It was a great reunion—a time to share with special friends, reminisce and laugh about an experience we all have had in common. We have all gone in various uncharted directions, making a place and statement for ourselves. The variety of our lives I found to be truly inspirational, and yet our common bond—the Abbot experience—remains intact.

Cher Lewis will be assuming the class secretary position. Her address was 14 West Broadway, New York, NY 10013, but the alumni office reports mail sent to her. This address has been returned. Cher where are you? I apologize for the irregularity that has characterized my secretarial correspondence. Much love to all—Lanie.

Not a lot of news this time around—let get those letters flying. After many mentions about DD Rudolph's whereabouts, DD sent the following information: "Still living in Santa Cruz, CA, where I've put together a rapidly growing (help!) advertising/graphic design agency. We're doing everything from books to corporate image packages, for clients that range from lumber companies to wine merchants and commercial banks. It's crazy!" Good luck, DD—sounds terrific!

My second piece of news is reported just tad late—Debbie Naman Meyer wrote to announce the birth of her daughter, Laura Jean Meyer, born 30 May 1981. Sorry I missed this, Debbie—but better late than never! Congratulations!

Finally, I saw Sandra Perkin Van Brunt recently. Sandy, her husband Jeff, and daughter Alexa, recently moved to a lovely home in Bridgeport, CT, right on Long Island Sound. Sandy—yes Sandy—has decided that aerobic dancing is terrific!

No new news from me. I have discovered her delights of windsurfing, however. It's wonderful—but very conducive to the development of multiple black and blues!

Have a great fall! And write!

It was a dark and stormy night. I woke, uneasy, and my gradually clearing vision gave counsel to my fears. The door to my "Closet of Anxieties" stood open. I watched, transfixed, as out of the closet leaped, not Yuri Andropov, not Bloom County, but, but,—the Editor!

"Class Notes must be postmarked no later than 15 September," he intoned, "May the Force be with you." "Star Wars, Bar Wars," I replied, "I need news!" But he was one, and I was left to write them by myself with only my trusty Android, RU18?, as companion.

Lasar hologram #1 depicted Chris Breslin, recently having left Congress to join the Washington liaison staff of Price, Waterhouse. He now lives in Maryland: 202 Whitmore Tr., Silver Springs, 20901.

A visit to an isolated ice planet (New Hampshire) found Bill Cahill. He's busy travelling the US and Canada for the family paper concern, and working on the Governor's transition team. Soon he'll taper down his activities, for he and wife Wendy expect their firstborn in October.

Scott Hughes runs a commercial and industrial real estate brokerage firm in Boston. His job as Class Agent for the Harvard and keeps him in touch with Tom Foley, Paul Finnegan, and Dick Green '72.

A real letter from Stan Livingston, finishing his family practice residency in Wisconsin (2703 Tower Rd., McFarland 53558). His wife, Anne Hughes, is a part-time artist and counselor for delinquent teenagers. They are beginning their search for a good location to set up a family practice, which Stan says is a well established specialty in the Midwest, less so in the East. He thinks back on Andover days to recall, "Great classroom teaching . . . great football and crosse teams."

Light speed cruising via Millennium Falcon caught up with Rick McHarg, Officer, gentleman, and possessor of "The Right Stuff." Recently moved to San Diego, still single, vacationing in Honolulu, skiing in Alta. Being a Navy Flight Instructor has its advantages." Jeff Rheinhardt is enjoying a growing legal practice in a small town in upstate New York. His family now includes his wife, Dorothy; son Joseph, age four; and twins William and Sam, four months.

If you write comments on the back of your Andover Giving form, I usually get them, provided that the comments, name, and class are legible. However, the extra handling means six months until that news gets into print. The best way to communicate with this column is with me directly, at the above address. Your other classmates will surely appreciate hearing from you. My three yearly columns are due 15 September, 15 February, and 21 May, for the Fall, Spring, and Summer editions, respectively.

Athletics for All, Ted Harrison's book on the school's athletic past, mentions no fewer than thirty members of the class of '71, such was our prowess. Interesting reading concerning the philosophy of the program, as much as teams or individuals.

Like Star Wars, these notes also proceed in endless sequel. Thanks to those of you who responded, and hope to hear from more of you the next time I loose my clichés. Non Sibi.

It's autumn again, and I find myself jotting off these notes on yet another "first day of school!" I'm taking a trip down memory lane this year by doing a fellowship in college psychiatry, and I find it quite remarkable that though some of these kids were born in 1965 (!) things really haven't changed much . . . On the first-day-of-school front, Nancy Cohen, has by now, braved same at Columbia University Business School; Bonnie Levine Kravitz has just started her last year of law school. She has also just had her second baby, Deanna Lauren.

Mary McCabe thanks those of you who came to her aid by soliciting contributions, as well as those who contributed. She's in the market for more co-agents and claims that it will be lots of fun. Greetings Tovarichni:

The saga of Alice Sweeney and her mysterious baby goes on: Bob Soule writes from the bowels of "that eight-sided building with the hole in the middle in Washington" where he is employed in bureaucratic capacity, that he knows the aforementioned Ms. Sweeney, who is married to a classmate of Bob's from the Woodrow Wilson School at Princeton. He reports that he has seen the baby and it is pink. He also goes on to point out that Vermont has but one congressman, and so wins the five bucks offered last issue for this information. The check's in the mail, Bob.

A Mrs. Peter F. Fleischmann (Jeanne Cowles AA '40) writes: "There can't be two Alice Sweeneys—or maybe there can. The one I know is a retired English teacher, one of the two best teachers I've ever had, who taught me at Abbot. It seems unlikely that she would have just had her first baby; she must be well into her eighties by now." Oh, well . . . To all the Alice Sweeneys of this world, reunion's only four short years away. Come. Bring your children. Bruce Poliquin will give them beer. Mrs. Fleischman, by the way, is the mother of Dave Wilson. She lets the cat out of the bag about the boy: Phi Beta Kappa from Berkeley, Hastings School of Law, three circuits of the sun with the SEC, and current associate with unnamed law firm in San Francisco . . . She cautions that she gives no permission for me to print this, but look lady, prep school boys got no honor, y'know?

Sam Butler and Marea Adams-Butler have, to the consternation of all, procreated beautifully—Little Eliza Adams-Butler—also pink. I've seen this one, and poked it in the stomach. It cried. Nice fontanelle, though.

Seen on the street and in the gutter: Andy Russem, now living on Roosevelt Island in the middle of the East River . . . Quelle Bourgeoise, Andy! And on the corner of 44th and Madison: Arnon Mishkin working for a political consulting outfit. He gave my girlfriend a pen. Nice guy.

And in the funny little letters from the Alumni Office: Mike Muldrow, from St. Louis, works for a transit company and does purchasing and bookkeeping for his parents' beauty and cosmetic products company. I've taken the liberty of sending him Mace's address and photograph. Morgan Flaherty will shortly finish a medical residency at U. Vermont, and start a research residency in Immunology at U. Rochester. Jon vonSchlegell is at the Stanford School of Capitalist Consolidation and Merger Finance: wife name of Jan and son Evan. If only they knew their loved one is prepping for the Tri-Lateral Commission. Jon's been up to Maine at some time in the indefinite past; saw Danny Bolduc and went white-water canoeing with Dick Dolan.

There are also rumors racing through the Northeast that Tad Spurgeon was recently seen on the Andover campus, cleverly disguised as Jorge Luis Borges. Mr. Spurgeon regaled students and faculty alike with a reading from his latest novel, Los Horizontes, a story about sensitive adolescent love during the Falklands Crisis. Kelly Wise is apparently in hiding these days, and Big Al Theroux has promised not to publish anything for a year in penance . . . Spurgeon strikes a blow for literature. The class of '72 applauds.

Finally, what ex-television junkie is reliably reported to be on the verge of nuptial bliss? More on this later . . . Keep those cards and letters coming in.

As Labor Day weekend descended on frantic Cape Cod, so did Will Schutte, Jim Hackett, and David Harsch. The problem was, Hackett was in my hometown and never called me, so he didn't get to see Schutte or Harsch (who was Will's host). Of course, Schutte and I barely got to see Harsch, because poor Dave had to work all weekend. This made Dave the host of the year in Will's eyes. Anyway, Betsy (Roscoe '76) and I took Will out on the golf course with a case of Heineken, so Will didn't miss Dave too much, and Hackett missed everything.

Ah, what a summer it has been since the Tenth (see previous notes, especially Charlie). As we were fighting a fearsome gale to get out of Edgartown Harbor during race week, we rescued Wells Bacon's jib sail bag from the tides. Wells was sailing with his brother Eric; both of them have utilized the summer to get married!

I also saw Kent Vogel ('74) bending his elbow at "the" Yacht Club. He is racing professionally on the Class "A" I.O.R. circuit, and is entering the Air Force soon. Off he goes. . .

Also on the I.O.R. circuit has been Matthew MacIver ('72) whose urban planning between Cambridge and Cleveland has turned him gray and given him a fearsome sense of humor.

Also missing over Labor Day weekend were Dave Donahue and Michael Pierce. Dave partially celebrated his recent engagement to Sue Pitt on my porch one languid July afternoon, then went back to Sue's place to spend a quiet evening with the folks (sure, Dave).

Pierce is upset that I overlooked his presence at the Tenth, and charges me to rely on memory of the events of that weekend. So what do you remember, Michael?

Michael couldn't make it on Labor Day because his new date dragged him to some pooh-pooh party on Long Island. He made Schutte drive up alone. Michael's architect firm jets him between NYC and Aspen to design houses for punk rockers.

Speaking of Aspen, how is Kelly Wood doing in the Springs? Ray Stecker is also in Colorado (S. Denver), where he is a manager for Proctor & Gamble. So reports Jerry Chadwick, who was trained by Ray to become same in Annapolis, MD. Congrats to Jerry, who also just became a dad to young Christopher on 16 August '83. Ray tells us he just married Candace Elizabeth Dillon of Winchester.

John McDonald and his lovely wife Melissa are having a ball watching their child, Caitlin, grow older, as Mac continues to wear out his wing-tips at Merrill-Lynch. Miss you, guys!

Betsy reports that Brooks Roscoe will be personally delivering his latest movie script to the muckety-mucks in Hollywood this fall, and will return to New England after his first million.

Brooks reports that Al Cregg, my beloved defense partner, has just begun his first year at Duke Law, y'all. Don't mean to discourage you, Al, but it's not worth it.

Walter (Boris) Bukawyn was also nominated by Brooks for the Professional Professional award (see previous notes) for his recent landing of a very impressive title at Merrill-Lynch (New York).

Very happy to hear about Rome Arnold (see previous notes), who suffered with me in Abbot Stevens in 1970.

News comes from mysterious sources that Craig Reynolds is now returning to Stanford after absence caused by a family illness. In the meantime, he was running his own lumber company in Northern California. Love to hear from Craig.

Randy Gross writes from Phoenix. He is now President of the Board of a foster care agency there, and otherwise devotes a great deal of time and energy helping others. Bravo to you, Randy.

Finally, it was a pleasant surprise to hear from Charlie Toy, who wondered if anyone bothered to read the news that comes into the Alumni Office. We do now, Charlie—I'd love to tell everyone what you're up to, but you didn't say!

As for the Cape, I fear that I will be here forever. The season is changing, the throngs have all gone home, the sunsets are better than ever, and it's nice and cool on the golf course. As December approaches, I'll be gearing up for another run at the Massachusetts House of Representatives. Anyone who wants to spend next summer on the Cape, I have plenty of non-paying positions you will not be interested in.

Come on, mates. You don't have to give money to get your name in the Notes. Just write to me directly. Yours will be the first pleasant mail I have gotten since my PA diploma arrived in 1973, C.O.D. Yours in fraternal alumnity, Peter B. Morin.

A mostly-cheery call from Howard Carter just returned me from a Saturday-after siesta and reminded me that the Class Notes are, once again, due. Time to take that quarterly stroll down Memory Lane.

In a 1981 edition of the Bulletin, it was reported that Howard was in some way involved with the strawberry trade. Now, depending upon one's age and habits, that could have had a variety of implications. For his sake, therefore, let me add that Squire Carter purchased a bounteous patch in Lambertville (NJ), where he produces jams and fresh berries for an exclusive New York clientele. This group includes Ted Maynard and Alex Stille. Ted is now in his last year at NYU Law School after a torrid summer in LA. Alex has apparently kept his Italian publishing connection, but is now also working for Newsweek.

Just ahead of Ted at NYU was Bob Treuholt, who dropped off a card while enroute to join the faculty of law at the University of Singapore. Perhaps his next card will reveal a definitive Sling formula. Hearing a not-too-different drum is Mike Cameron, who has taken his law degree to Korea, court-testy of the U.S. Army's Judge Advocate General Corps.

Another set of news clippings featuring Entrepreneur Terry Dorman has come my way. His firm is now eight years old and well past the hobby stage, as it employs 100 people in Andover to handle the needs of an impressive group of blue-chip companies.

The FCC sent a press release announcing the appointment of Tom Herwitz as legal assistant to that agency's chairman. Not going, Tom. Another future nominee to the Supreme Court is Tony Pietrafesa, who practices law in Syracuse and handles legal matters for a N.Y. State Senate Committee. He says he also "dabbles in Republican politics and ran unsuccessfully for a seat in the State Assembly this past fall."

Douglas Stockham wrote that he will be completing the MBA program at Wharton next May. . . . A "once-a-decade letter" blew in from Chris Leverett out in North Carolina's sticks. Chris is a computer guy for IBM and specializes in supermarket check-out systems. Margaret Ellen Lever was born in July 1982, to Mary Jo. He sends his greetings to everyone and invites us to watch the roses grow in "the best nople on God's green earth." Not a bad idea.

Priscilla Martel would like us to check out the vittles at her new bistro, the Restaurant du Village in Chester, CT. She even sent a French menu (sans prices), so the place must be great. Also in the envelope were a ton of favorable gourmet reviews, one of which helpfully said that the cuisine is "haute." Bon appetit.

Gordon Billheimer is expecting a new addition to his family sometime early next year. He hopes to show him/her off at next June's reunion. Perhaps fellow Wall Streeter Hope Woodhouse will come with her new husband, R.J. Canty. . . . George Iland is now a globe-trotter in Asarco's finance area, and is sometimes in touch with New Yorker Ann Blumberg. Kevin Connolly and Bob Trehy have both taken me to Harry's. Now for the sad part.

Howard's phone call also relayed some tragic news which added a sad, personal dimension to an already horrific international incident. John Oldham was among those who died on KAL's flight 007. That a talented, vibrant friend could be taken from us in so abrupt and inexplicable a manner is truly frightening. John had been on his way to study in Beijing. An often-expressed wish of his was to provide the means for Andover students to study the Chinese language and culture. Perhaps we can make this worthy goal a reality through our class reunion gifts. An acknowledgement of gifts made in John's memory will be sent to his family.

With time, some tend to slip into stylistic grooves. Sometimes this scribe takes careless liberties without professional reflection. For such falls I apologize. It is my wish to serve in a positive fashion, and shall do so only so long as I enjoy your support.

Overdue news first. An unmarked card with a smudged postmark brought news of Priscilla Porter's June 1982 wedding to Hold Brenner. The same clipping included information of her position—administrative assistant in the asset management department of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith.

A bit more recently, Richard Nichols has finished BU School of Law, Paul Schwartz, U Conn School of Law, John O'Donnell, University of Iowa Law School. Julie is by now off to Minneapolis to clerk for the Chief Judge of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mark Fraker has transmitted some news—though not of his own whereabouts. Instead, he informs that Adam Pool is in New York working for the Industrial Bank of Japan.

Class scientists include Brad Rockwell—recently finished with his third year at Washington University Medical School and looking forward to a surgery residency. Steven Erban works toward the MD at the University of Pennsylvania. Rob McCabe is now conducting gravity and magnetic surveys for a Denver-based geophysical information acquisition and analysis concern. The perfect field for such a down-to-earth fellow. Thanks again for the flag, Rob.

Barry Rolett is on his way to a Ph.D. in anthropology at Yale, and specializing in Polynesian archaeology. Field work will include a stint at the Bishop Museum in Hawaii.

Barbara Rifkind has been recently engaged to Todd Warren Boli. She is an editor with Triad Publishing Company in Gainesville, FL; he a professor of Italian at the University of Florida.

With the 1984 Summer Games only a few months away, I think it appropriate to report on Hope Barnes, who at last telling planned to participate in the world championships in rowing last summer. I hope we see her in Los Angeles next.

Jill Hartwell Geoffrion will continue her job as hospital chaplain while finishing her studies at the Princeton Theological Seminary. She reports faithfully and always brings good news of her life and work!

Pam Eaton and I recently celebrated our anniversary, which prompted a call from Michael Krumpke in Boston. He is anxious to get rolling into the opera and symphony season—enough of this vacation, back to the social circuit! Pam and I are settling in here at school—and enjoying it and the students and the teachers quite well. We look forward to learning of you soon.

Having to follow Martha Hill's performance for the past five years is not going to be easy, but here goes nothing It seems that all of the reunion news has been covered already, unfortunately, so it's to the letters, phone calls, and general gossip (true or not) I must turn.

The beloved Joe Tatelbaum is charming the Chinese in the People's Republic of China. I have here a story that claims he recently received national acclaim for returning money which was not his to a local bank in Shanghai." Carol O'Donoghue, while on the topic of the Asian world, is going to Japan to "spend a year, possibly two, teaching English at Sei Shin University in Okayama.

Meni Crawford writes that she is doing graduate work in comparative literature at UNC-Chapel Hill, specializing in medieval literature. Stuart Shaw is presently working for General Electric's Space Systems Division. Apparently the job is really "taking off" Ned Bent is working for General Dynamics in San Diego, and Mike Batal is in the commercial lending program at Philadelphia National Bank. . . . Erika Hartmann graduated from UVM with a degree in elementary/special education and is presently looking for a job in Vermont.

Those are all the facts. Now for the gossip. John Starosta is currently trying to save the world, and is living at home in Falmouth, MA hoping to come up with a plan. All charitable donations should be made out to him and sent to his home address. Victoria Hull is working for Goldman Sachs. . . . Pete Saltsman, rumor has it, is selling telephones in Middletown, CT. . . . Connie Barrett is living with Vicky Hull and working at Duncan Fitzgerald, an advertising agency. The two of them share an apartment with Sue Jenkins '79. Chris Bonbright was in New York for a few weeks. He is selling real estate in Hawaii and is still "cool." (Sorry, Chris, I couldn't resist.) He had a party at which I saw George St. Laurent, but I forgot what he said he was doing. Maureen Walsh, as far as I know, is gainfully employed by Morgan Guaranty. Maevie Walsh is a legal assistant at Rogers and Wells in New York. Lee Apgar is my boss at Saloman Brothers and had made me promise not to say anything "distorted" about him. Matt Palmieri is down here somewhere working in the world of finance for McKinsey, and getting out of work earlier than Lee and I. As far as I know, Sloan Condren is, unfortunately, living a happily married life. Matt Salinger is on the West Coast heavily involved in a play. Peter "Pub" Frisch, as far as I know, is teaching in Oyster Bay, L.I. Jimmy Demetroulakos is going through Brown's seven-year med program on his way to being Dr. D. Rumor has it his smile has gotten even bigger. Jesse Drury is going the legal route working for Brown, Wood, etc. in New York. Anna Schneider is getting a charge out of working for General Electric in New York. Rich McNerney is managing a top swing band here in New York, but I can't remember its name. Ken Mackenzie works for Combustion Engineering and has not yet been able to explain to me what exactly he does for a living. Whatever it is, he seems to enjoy it.

Finally, it is with sorrow that I must report the death of Stephen Barton, by his own hand, on 27 May 1983. His parents feel that "Stephen's three years at Andover were happy years and probably the high-point of his academic career." They therefore wish "to honor Stephen's memory with a memorial in his name at Andover." I am sure I speak for the entire class in extending our deepest sympathies to Stephen's parents.

Yes, the class of '79 does exist! My sincere apologies to you all for the recent disappearance of this column. You will all have your chance to impeach me next 8-10 June, our first reunion. Our reunion chairperson, Sarah Moore, welcomes all help. Please be in touch with her if you're interested: 24 Sturges Common, Westport, CT 06880, (203-259-0934). I have heard lots of enthusiasm for the gathering, so I hope that everyone comes!

Due to limitations of time and space, the article that I had written for this space cannot be printed. For your personal copy of the 'news' just write and ask me. Also please send me more news of yourself and others, because I promise that our class notes will appear in the next issue!

Dear Class:

Only two more of "the best years of our lives" remain. Isn't that encouraging?

A number of our classmates have decided to take a leave of absence from college. Not satisfied with classes at Georgetown, Tom Kinsky "can't wait to get out of the U.S. and study in Sevilla, Spain during 83-84." Tony Bienstock and Tim Clark, tired of paper deadlines and exams, are heading south to Brazil, to spend the year teaching English to Brazilian businessmen and proofreading the English version of one of Rio's papers.

Every class has its political activists, and we are no exception. I received a wonderful letter from Cathy Monk, who, after taking a year off to work for Ralph Nader, is now at Columbia majoring in political economics. While summering in San Francisco, she helped out at a left-wing newspaper called Mother Jones. The publication covers issues ranging from the availability of alfalfa in mid-western towns to the environmental problems caused by surfing in the Bay area.

Disgruntled that he had not appeared in the notes, Sean Rynne supplied me with plenty of anecdotes about himself when I spoke to him in Martha's Vineyard at Bill Kummel's house. Of particular interest was Sean's sojourn to a nude beach near Newport, RI.

While in Martha's Vineyard, John Burgess and I bumped into Pete Anderson, who was teaching tennis at the Edgartown Yacht Club. I also had a beer with Cindy Donahue, who had just finished interning for a state senator in Boston.

April Niessen has found life at Skidmore "fantastic We work hard and play hard." She worked at the OWH library at Andover for the second summer in a row.

Jennifer Marron, Bruce Rader, and I had the good fortune to watch our younger brothers graduate from Andover this June. Even after two years, Bruce did not have the nerve to apologize to Jennifer for ruining her dress on prom night. While Jennifer travelled across Europe with Wendy Pulling and some Princeton buddies, Bruce commuted to NYC this summer, as he has for the past two summers, to work for a law firm.

Mike Marrus has been running laps around the reservoir to prepare for another year on the under-touted but highly successful Brown crew team. Mike spent the summer in a suit toiling for a prestigious law firm in NYC. I understand that Mike can photo-copy a legal brief quicker than any first-year law student in New York.

I received a terrific letter from Anne Brownstein and although she simply wanted me to relate the marginally interesting details of her life, I am including part of her letter because I enjoyed it so much:

"Dear Mr. Bill Ullman,

"1. My name is still Anne Brownstein. (You see, people change very little over the course of two years.) 2. I still go to Bryn Mawr. Last year I lived in the Spanish House and ate off Fiesta-ware. (Off the record: ask your grandmother what Fiesta-ware is if you don't already know. Another thing, just for the joy of harboring this information, some of the dormitories are co-ed.) 3. I am taking my junior year in Paris on the New York University program . . .

"P.S. Oh, by the way, I have found that life has many puzzles. Cheerio!"

Back on earth, David Parker worked for the Harvard Crimson this summer. He ran into some trouble when he had a car that was blocking the entrance to the Crimson towed at the owner's expense. It turned out that the car belonged to a faculty member, who, after finding out what David had done, proceeded to become angry and then re-arranged David's face. David is suing.

I heard that Tom Sylvester is becoming a fighter pilot, going to flight school over the summer. It's good to know that we will be ready for El Salvador.

Please write. I wish you all success and happiness in your endeavors this year. Love and cheers, Bill Ullman.

Yes, it's that time of the year again folks. Andover Bulletin time!

Mona Lim was manager of the Rose & Crown this summer on Nantucket. I waited there (half the summer), Cathy Cotins cooked there and Scott Corry (who is taking one year off) bounced, dishwashed, and did everything else there. Yes, four Andover grads in the same restaurant.

Jennifer Beirnes lived with Cathy Cotins and worked at a gourmet food shop. She now makes an excellent chicken salad, as well as many other delightful goodies. Karen Herman, who was a chambermaid, and Janis Mimira, a receptionist, frequented the Rose & Crown and I even waited on a few other past and present Andover people including Charlie Gildehaus, Andy Morton, and Steve Frank. Very early in the season I saw Scotti Parrish (who was going to be in Ireland for the summer) with Dave Duquette. Dave had a different job every time I saw him but, at last report I believe he was doing construction.

I saw Paul Hochman sitting on a Main Street bench. He was visiting a friend and told me he and Chad Rosenbeger were in the big Dartmouth Frosh Cabaret and that Paul was on the ski team which placed second in the NCAA slalom in Montana. Patti Doykos came to visit me on the island this summer; she too was a glorified waitress in Rye, NH. . . . Lynn Snyder was also on the island—the Vineyard, working in a gift shop. She said she saw Walter Devine and tons of other PA kids.

Mike Polansky worked pounding nails this summer in Boston, living in Andover with Pat McCormick '83. Peter Pedulla painted and told me that Jamie Anderson transferred to Harvard.

When I got back to NY, I discovered that there was some news forwarded from the Alumni Office as well as some letters, including one from Charlie Taylor, who is doing very well with his studies at Illinois Institute of Technology. He is a treasurer of his fraternity and is majoring in computer science. He even sent a computerized letter and told me that he has started a small computer consulting firm. Bruce Barnhart will be rooming with Harold Kim this fall at Harvard, where Harold has "started partying heavily (for him)" according to Bruce. Bruce "sees Gabrielle McDonald from time to time—she also lives in Scituate when she's not at William and Mary" although he has "not seen the Gaziano twins around town." John Crespi is a possible bio major and is going to room with Mike Liou and Nat McIntosh next year. Bruce said, "There are about 35 Andover grads here—probably too many, but I shouldn't say anything because I'm probably the first one they'd ask to leave." He also said that Scott Todd is arranging music for an act at Williams.

Robert Briggs had a good year at Vassar and spent the summer working as a butler for the Earl of Spencer, Princess Di's father. On the less glamorous side, Catherine Connor worked for Minnesota State Senator Boschevitz and went to Italy this past summer. Susan Philipp was also in Italy with Phil Berney and said that she bumped into Pierre Valette, Elinor Westerlund and Gordy Goldstein in Venice. It's a small world. Tom Luongo was working on Wall Street and Rosy Elliot did photo research in the city. Art Small has resurfaced in NY and is taking the year off. Jeff Arlee is learning Greek and spent the summer in Europe with his girlfriend. Andy Ahn was an orientation supervisor for Columbia and looked psyched for school when I saw him last week.

Unfortunately, I must report the news that Mark Orrell died 22 August due to injuries he sustained as a passenger in a car accident. Mark had been serving as a legal aid in the law firm of Morrison, Mahoney, and Miller in Boston. Mark was a very active member of the PA community participating in many activities involving the music department, and I would like to extend my sympathy on behalf of our class to his family. Memorial contributions may be made to FOCUS (Fellowship of Christian Universities and Schools), 139 East Putnam Ave., Greenwich, CT 06830.

My love to you all. Please write, call, or better yet, drop by. Take care. Ciao.

From under a heap of boxes, clothes, trunks, etc., little scraps of paper have emerged and I am now, finally, trying to assimilate all your lives before me. Organization, not being my strong point anyway, seems particularly difficult here in the middle of my floor but, however disorganized, I have been able to keep track of some of your summer escapades.

Susannah Hill spent the summer in Buzzards Bay, teaching sailing and soaking up the sun. Jamie Hedlund worked as a messenger in Paris, where he may easily have heard tales of Electa Sevier and Liz McHenry, who launched an attack on the French social scene in August.

There were those particularly industrious people like Laura Culbert, who became a "workaholic" holding down jobs in an art studio and restaurant. Sarah Rosenfield also falls into this category for handling hordes of screaming children (for a "ridiculously small" sum of money) at Tabor Summer Camp. The little monsters chased her to Colorado, where she stayed with Lisa Cochran, who worked as a busboy in Keystone before going off to William and Mary.

Jon Wetherbee travelled to Mexico with Pat Powdermaker, who had earlier worked with the Summer Session's Music Dept.

Both Carolyn McGowen and Robin Harutunian unleashed their talents on the fast food business, each wreaking havoc with the system and terrifying the management. Amy Kellogg also entered the restaurant business for awhile but found her parents store more peaceful employment. She reports to have seen a lot of Jason Bernhard who was in Beverly Farms for the summer.

Rob Long stationed himself in Providence, RI, where he worked for Career Insights Magazine as well as frequently bumping into Ann Ree, who is now off to London. Rob had a chance to interview many celebrities. Striving for stardom on her own, Mia Kelly worked at a Minneapolis TV station, appearing occasionally on the local show she helped produce.

In Boston, Polly Warner worked for publishing firm while living in Cambridge. She spent time with Cindy Reid and the two are planning a winter trip to Australia.

John Harpole expanded his driving skill and worked for a bank in Milwaukee, while Hison Won ("Where is my green sued jacket?") ventured to Korea and recently popped up here in Hanover.

As of June, both Phillipa Whalen and Laura Roche were off on independent journeys to England and Rachael Abramowitz was in Vienna working for the State Dept.

Closer to home, Macky Alston worked in Princeton, heading off to Maine for the end of the summer, and Hillary Blake announces that she has moved from Connecticut to Osterville, MA—please forward all fan mail!

Bob Weisbach, after working for AT&T in NJ, may now be heading for an acting career in LA. Bob reportedly ventured to California in early September to discuss a possible TV role.

Though news is a little sketchy, Emory Van Cleve has supposedly been accompanying classmate Brooke Shields around Princeton and New York (we couldn't however, find him in People Magazine yet).

Mark Vita and Jeff Curley just couldn't get enough of old PA, so Mark returned to typeset for the summer Phillipian while Jeff got a job working elsewhere on campus.

Alec Hugo kept up his rowing skills last summer, and reports to have seen Jeb Doggett and Ellen Stier on a trip to Trinity. Angelo Iasiello relays from Holy Cross that he's made the varsity soccer team.

Tiffany Cobb and Adam Wise both worked near Squam Lake, NH and report that Jennifer Cray visited after working on the LA Times.

The communist crowd, consisting of Laurie Steel, Tamar Gendler, Sheri Caplan, John Weiss, Ted "Wildman" Muftic, Tom Ullman, Dan Heiter, Vivian Bache, and Tanya Paul ventured to Russia with Vic Svec. Aside from Tamar and Sheri's adventure with the KGB, the group appears to have had a great trip. Cori Field was also in Russia with Anja Hanson on another trip.

On Martha's Vineyard, Jeff Rossman, Ned Rosen, Thomas Jones, and Andy Morrow grouped together for the summer while Janna Gaberman went on Outward Bound in North Carolina.

Well, space is running out, so I must wind it up. For those I've missed, we'll get you next time. Info should go to Amy Kellogg, Tom Ullman, (both at Brown) or here to me. I hope you're all settled and enjoying yourselves. Please keep in touch.

A. Graham Baldwin

Sir:

I met Gray Baldwin only once — for just a trifling few moments — but he made an impression on me that endures to this very day. It was but one brief encounter, and yet I have forgotten neither it nor the man who initiated it.

Several years ago, a friend and I were walking on Holt Road en route to the town library. An elderly gentleman, accurately sensing that we had come quite a distance and that our destination was yet far away, pulled over and kindly offered us a ride. He introduced himself as Gray Baldwin, retired Minister of Phillips Academy. He was warm, considerate, and delightful, and reminded me of Joe Dodge, another extraordinary PA teacher.

The car was positively aglow with the joy and goodwill that he radiated. As the car rolled to a stop in front of the library, he wished us the best of success. I never saw Gray Baldwin again.

Sexism

Dear Hot-Seat Occupant:

I would like to associate myself with the sentiments expressed by Margaret S. Lord '69 in her letter in the Fall Bulletin. ["I find the not-so-subtle sexism prevalent in this Bulletin galling and tiresome."]

No one seriously believes it is easy to shift over from life-long and generations-long attitudes and habits, but after ten years . . . ! I trust that PA will be able to improve its record for being nonsexist in the future.

The "Nuclear" Symposium

Sir:

I read with some interest the exchange of letters between Mr. Lyons and Jonathan Reiff in the Fall issue of the Andover Bulletin. I think Mr. Lyons got by far the better of the exchange, and I congratulate him for it.

As I was showering this morning, two thoughts crossed my mind which I'd like to share with you, as long as I am writing.

First, it seems to me that the horrors of nuclear war are one of those things upon which one can have but a single opinion. Facts need not be presented from two points of view . . . What might be a question of fairness is how one is to deal with the ridiculous position the world finds itself in, to wit, both super powers rapidly building super weapons that can only result in both nation states being obliterated as they now exist, with maybe some of their citizens existing for a bleak brief period of survival. I do understand that there can be more than one point of view about the best way to get out of this situation; but can there be any question but that it is at best dreadful? Perhaps I missed the point of the dialogue, being unfamiliar with the symposium itself. But I feel anything you can do to make the student body thoughtfully aware and thinking about the problem will be worthwhile. As soon as anyone has a truly believable plan for a way out of the dilemma, please let us all know, and that includes Mr. Reiff.

The second observation is the all-too-ready disclaimer that "in this precinct" you wouldn't find many votes for George McGovern. Is there any similar feeling that there are not "many votes in this precinct" for Richard Nixon? I would hope there is still room for a few of us Democrats on campus, and that the whole show hasn't turned into the likes of a Scarsdale Republican Country Club. A case could be made that the Utopian, perhaps impractical ideas of McGovern might be superior to the pragmatic cynicism and total immorality of the Watergate crowd, or did I misunderstand the underlying message of Mr. Baldwin when I was at Andover in the mid-forties?

Harry Hall '44

Sir:

In the Fall 1983 Andover Bulletin History Department Chairman Tom Lyons responds to Jonathan D. Reiff's concerns about the fairness of the Headmaster's Symposium on "Nuclear Holocaust or Survival." In his reply, Mr. Lyons asserts that "I would not consider William Buckley a qualified expert on international relations."

Mr. Buckley founded National Review magazine in 1955 and continues to act as its editor today. Current Biography (1982) states that the National Review "in time became regarded as the most important publication of the American Right." Buckley has studied, written, and lectured widely on foreign affairs. Since 1962 he has written a syndicated column which appears in over 300 newspapers (including the Washington Post). Since 1966 on Public Broadcasting's Emmy-Award-winning television show "Firing Line," Buckley has hosted such guests as Ronald Reagan, Jimmy Carter, Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, and Henry Kissinger.

From 1969 to 1972 he served as a member of the United States Information Agency's (USIA) Advisory Committee. He has written over twenty books, including United Nations Journal: A Delegate's Odyssey (1974), which was written after he was appointed a U.S. delegate to the 28th General Assembly of the UN

Mr. Buckley is more than qualified to speak as an expert on international relations.

The Andover Artist — Expanding Our View of Art

I. Jed Dixon '69

"I'm a member of an extinct social class: the artisan."

Upper right: In his workshop Jed Dixon '69 discusses his craft with authors Sandra DeJong and Gerald Shertzer

by Sandra DeJong and Gerald Shertzer

I can just hear Ted Sizer's booming voice, "Oh, sure, Henry, I don't think that will be a problem. Gerry Shertzer could carve that in a minute." What Ted and Henry Turner, Master of Davenport College, Yale, were looking at was the one remaining four-foot ornamental wooden urn that had once with its partner graced the entrance way to the college's dining hall. The other had been stolen, and Henry was having a devil of a time finding anyone to carve a replacement.

When I received the request and photo of the urn, I was taken aback by the challenge of such a task, but absolutely fascinated by the possibilities. The photo revealed a classic nineteenth-century urn in form, something quite similar to the finial on the top of old rockers, and in miniature I'm sure you could find four of these atop a grandfather clock of the same period. This urn in particular, however, was more striking in that the scrolls and wreaths and birds, all clustered in very choice scale variations, were set against large curves of uncarved surface, giving the urn a powerful face from a distance. Indeed, when I arrived at Davenport College, I realized how important the urns were as a concluding punctuation to the vast array of carving all around the walls of the hall. And not unlike icing on the cake, the urn concluded with a striking free-form flame, symbolizing knowledge, the quest for it, or even the fervor of the carver himself as his final stroke.

I accepted the commission in less time than Ted Sizer took to commit me to do it. In contrast, however, there then began a long, arduous, ever more irreversible sequence of judgments and choices. What wood had been used to make the original urn? Since the remaining urn was stained, varnished, and about fifty years old, even an educated guess could be wrong. Was it laminated? It was, but how was it laminated? Which direction of graining would be more advantageous? It clearly was turned on a lathe and carved, but which came first? Should the wood be selected for turning properties or for carving? Clearly both, if that were possible. Could I find nowadays pieces of wood that were wide and thick enough? Wood today is at such a premium, not only in price but in existence.

On the return to Andover, carrying the other urn in the van, I struggled with these scary questions, even as they became inextricably mixed with images of beams of white clean wood, cutting, gluing, clamps, wood chips, smells, steel chisels up against the rouge wheel, and the click-click-click of the mallet against the chisel handle.

Before all these scenes could take place, however, I knew I would need a large lathe, larger than any I had worked on, and I began the quest at a cabinetmaker's shop in the same building my studio was in. "I think I need a lathe with at least ten inches of clearance, probably more like twelve." Mike, the red-bearded, white-coveredl woodworker, smiled, and after a pause gave me the familiar response: "No way. I haven't seen anything that large outside of Grand Rapids, and that's probably fifty years ago." I smiled in return, but more in despair than in irony. "But wait. If anyone has a lathe that big, it's probably the Dixon Brothers."

Jed and Andy Dixon's shop is located in a square, red-brick building that was once an old button factory in South Boston. On the first floor, workers, both men and women, outfitted in overalls and face-masks, operate the various machines, some of which date back to the beginning of the century when Boston was a woodworking center of this country. The walls exhibit models of work — different designs of balustrades and moldings — and provide storage space for the seemingly infinite array of cutters which shape the pattern of the molding's design. Strangely, in a place packed with and smelling of wood, no piles of sawdust are evident; the entire 4000 square feet of floor space is continuously vacuumed by an elaborate system of pipes that run throughout the building.

Jed's "office" on the third floor is in fact a smaller, more intimate shop where Jed does his own work. Clad in the same dungarees as his employees and accompanied by his sheepdog Sammy, he works at carving the oak leaves on the oak door for a South Boston home, stopping only to refuel the wood stove that heats the room. Looking at Jed, one easily forgets his four-year career as a prep school student.

Jed graduated in 1969 from Andover, where he was particularly interested in math, physics, and art. Although he did make a few pieces of furniture, including a music stand, his woodworking at Andover consisted mostly of sculpture. In terms of his woodworking skills and interest, Jed acknowledges to some extent the importance of the beautiful woodwork in Andover's buildings; but more importantly he thanks Andover for the excellence of its education which allowed him what he describes as a self-indulgent college career: "I got a college education in high school, which left me free to pursue in college what I was interested in."

Because of credit he obtained for Andover math and science courses, and by taking more than the usual number of courses at once, Jed received a degree in Fine Arts from Brown in three years. In fact, though, he took about half of his courses at the Rhode Island School of Design, and wonders whether he would not have been better off going to art school.

At Brown (and at RISD) Jed's interest in making furniture grew. As he explains it:

I made a lot of sculpture there, but I also began to be interested in furniture, partly because the more I tried to pare my ideas down, and the more I ended up with function rather than form, the less reason I could see to design anything with any purely visual reason for it. In my own mind I was sort of going through what architecture went through in this century. I kind of went through my own international style period then. I couldn't see any reason to put anything decorative on anything.

His interest in art was really an interest in making things: "That's really my love in life, I guess." Ironically, the last course he took at Brown was Art I — the required introductory art history course for Art majors.

The tumult of the late '60s and early '70s served as an important backdrop to Jed's college years. His first year at Brown was the year of student strikes and Kent State. Jed himself took half a semester off to work in RISD's poster-making project, a group which made silk-screen posters which they pasted all over Providence at night.

Jed does not see his decision to become a woodworker as a political statement, however. Like his Andover education, the '60s offered him the freedom to pursue what he wanted. "My reaction in college was against repression, against capitalism; its effect on me was to prevent me from doing something I wouldn't have been happy doing."

Immediately following Brown, Jed went to work at a big wood-working firm in East Providence. Having thus far been exposed only to artistic woodworking, Jed's eyes were opened here to the nature of commercial woodworking, which he describes as "pretty uniformly atrocious." Yet Jed was forced to swallow some of his arrogance when he learned that while commercial woodworkers might not produce beautifully crafted pieces, they are often nonetheless skilled artisans: "I learned that these guys, who were probably mostly putting formica on plywood and than making plywood cabinets, were very capable of cutting dove-tails too."

After six months in Europe, Jed returned, bought some machines, shared factory space with some friends and, as he puts it, "started making things." He helped supply a store in Boston which sold Shaker reproductions, a style he was attracted to because of its functionalism. Two years later, he decided to set up his own shop. His twin brother, Andy, who had graduated with a Bachelor of Science and Architecture degree from MIT, and a friend, established with Jed a cooperative shop in four hundred square feet of basement on Albany Street, Boston. Gradually the shop became less of a cooperative, and Andy and Jed bought everyone else out. In the beginning, they made mostly furniture, about which Jed had learned a good deal in the previous three or four years. Soon, however, his work focused more on architectural woodworking — staircases, cabinets, doorways, and any custom building.

One of the projects Jed recently finished is a curved staircase for Chelmsford City Hall. A piece of the bannister still lies on his countertop, rejected because of what to an uninformed eye is an almost imperceptible slip of the blade which resulted in too thin a section of the curve. The piece reminds one of the patience that must be involved in such work, for as Jed says, "mistakes are part of it." He recalls some classic mistakes he has seen repeated over and over again, like trying to be more accurate with the tape measure by starting at the "one" instead of at the beginning of the tape, and then forgetting to subtract one inch from the total.

Another great one is that carpenters always write dimensions in feet and inches — 12' 6". The cabinet maker is much more likely to write in straight inches, so 12' 6" would be 150". So, let's say you've got a dimension 4, 6, four feet six inches; if you cut 46 inches, you're going to be a foot short there.

But if the Chelmsford balustrade is testimony to the need for extraordinary carefulness and planning required in woodworking, it also represents the fascination with problem-solving that makes woodworking so compelling for someone interested in mathematical puzzles. A curved staircase is in itself an elaborate and complex geometrical problem of fitting the elliptical shape of each level's bannister into the helix of the whole structure. Jed spent "literally weeks" trying to figure out the Chelmsford problem, with the help of a calculator's trigonometric equations. He has, in fact, discovered a more efficient system for solving such problems, and he hopes to discuss what he has learned in a couple of articles for woodworking journals.

A staircase in Boston's Back Bay. Jed steps in when other woodworkers despair of solving three-dimensional problems like bannisters that demand impossible curves.

The combination of aesthetic decisions with technical problem-solving, a combination which so aptly fits Jed's academic interests of science and art, seems to be part of what draws him to his craft:

In any visual art or sculpture, every line you draw is a decision to make. Woodworking is that way visually, but it is also that way technically. There are a lot of technical decisions to make in woodworking — well, in anything, but woodworking is one of the few places where you're starting with a very raw product.

This "raw product" is in itself part of the fascination. Wood is an infinitely complex medium. Not only does the variety of trees seem endless, but each tree produces different wood according to whether it has grown in a moist environment or in a dry one, surrounded by other trees or in an open, well-lit space, in years of great temperature variation or in moderate weather. Each different set of circumstances will produce a different grain and texture to the wood, and thus can result in different textures and grain patterns in the furniture.

The variety of techniques involved in woodworking also boggles the mind. Carving, bending, veneer work — all are distinct skills which require knowledge and, Jed emphasizes, years of practice. While modern woodworking machines have been refined to be as exact and accurate as possible, the older machines which Jed uses are far clumsier, and require greater control and skill from the operator. Responsibility for success thus lies much more with the craftsman in the case of the older machines.

Woodworking requires discipline; Jed compares the process of becoming a good woodworker to becoming a brain surgeon:

To learn enough about woodworking — to really be what two hundred years ago would have been a master woodworker who just started from scratch — would have been just as hard as learning to be a brain surgeon. Well, maybe not quite as hard in an academic way, but a lot of people don't have what it takes to be a really good one. And you can spend years and years learning.

Jed suggests that very different, maybe uneducated but highly intelligent people can have what it takes to be a good woodworker. His own best employee was an inarticulate youngster from a nearby high school. The boy's shop teacher, a friend of the Dixons, told Jed to hire the boy as soon as he graduated from high school. Jed describes him as a "fantastically talented person; very, very gifted. Very few people could have learned as much as he did or gotten as good as he did" — good enough, in fact, to set up a shop of his own.

The fascination with technical problem-solving, and visual decision-making, the pleasure of working with wood, the satisfaction of making things — all seem to explain at least in part why Jed so clearly likes his work. To Jed, these qualities of his craft suggest how intricate it is:

How much there is to woodworking is demonstrated by the fact that it's got to be one of the least boring things to do. I think in the years I've been doing it, I might have gone through only a couple of hours of being bored every six months. It's absolutely fascinating.

To be sure, Jed sees some drawbacks to his work, one of the most practical being the lack of money. The problem is certainly not unavailability of work — he always has more than enough to handle — but rather the necessity of consistently underpricing his work. Even at such prices as $900 for a door made from scratch, or $1,000 for a one-story stair rail, Jed ends up actually charging only $4 an hour when his rate should be twenty. If he charged even a reasonable fee, his prices would seem exorbitant. And it is labor which makes up the bulk of his expenses; materials are only a fraction — around one-third for a door and one-fifth for a stairwell.

Yet even while he is in effect undercharging those customers who can afford custom-made work, Jed recognizes that people in his own income level could never afford to buy what he makes. The audience for his work is in fact very limited: "I'm willing to live with it, but I don't like the fact that my work is really for only a few people. It's not really something that's accessible, not even to go around and look at." And he doubts whether the market for his work will ever grow, partly because of a lack of visual education in Boston ("They knocked all the art classes out of the schools because it was a frill they couldn't afford"), and partly because he believes society is not set up to return to an age of artisans.

To some extent, too, Jed suffers from the feeling of being an anomaly in his own time, a maverick in an age of professionals. "I have to deal with the fact that I feel a little bit, in spite of myself, that I'm wasting time, that I'm Jed and they're Dr. So and So And I really do feel that I'm a member of an extinct social class: the artisans."

The top story of this curved balustrade was created by Jed Dixon when the owner added another level to this 19th Century Beacon Hill townhouse.

Jed's modesty and selflessness make him feel also that persisting in his work despite its drawbacks is self-indulgent. Clearly he believes in what he does, more than as a means of satisfying his own interests; he sees a moral value in trying to "bring a visual consciousness, a visual beauty, back into people's lives." But as a husband and a father, he feels he is pursuing what he loves at his family's expense: "I'm really sacrificing not my lifestyle but my family's in order to do this thing that I want to do, and I'm making twelve or fifteen thousand dollars a year doing it or maybe, if I really work hard and am lucky, twenty thousand dollars a year . . . It is a self-indulgence; there's no question about it."

But just as you have to have a sense of what is good enough in your woodworking, or else you can just go on forever trying to perfect every joint and every curve, Jed resigns himself to the conflicts of his work, commenting, "It's just the way it is, I guess." Instead of striving for greater commercial success, he and his family have decided to move to the country, where he will eventually set up his own shop.

Clearly stronger than any doubt or frustration is the sheer love he holds for what he does. "I absolutely love what I do. God knows, I'd like to make more money. But I can make a reasonable living doing this." He speaks without gesture, without inflection, but with the quiet sincerity of a man whose words speak for themselves.

Even Jed's lathe needed to be enlarged. He made two hardwood spacers that traveled along the bed of the lathe and increased the clearance by an inch and a half. As we tightened bolts, he above the lathe, me desperately trying to get a square-headed bolt into a slot underneath, I remembered when Jed first worked in the sculpture studio back at Andover. His quiet, half-serious, inquisitive, twinkling, dark, wide eyes searched out every piece of equipment in the shop, wanting to know what wonderful things came out of them. He had discarded welding metal early on for the possibilities wood might offer. He turned pieces on the lathe, then discovered the unusual shapes which different colored woods, laminated and then turned, could produce. He seemed much less interested in producing a finished product than in the range of solutions any single piece might have. It was as though he was building a catalogue of samples to draw upon later. Before he finished one piece, he was already planning the next.

He was in the shop before anyone else and the last to leave. I often wondered if he did any other school work. In fact that would have been a concern, except that in most of our conversations, Jed talked more about science and math problems than art, and when the question arose of where the ducks in Central Park go in the winter, unlike Holden Caulfield, Jed knew the answer.

We were now, fourteen years later, somehow in a very similar situation. At lunch around the community shop table, ten to twelve of the woodworkers in the building shared food and drink and the latest article in Scientific American, or some new way to lay out an intricate joint for a curved window frame. My intrusion into the group caused no ruffled feathers at all. Although I was interesting as Jed's former teacher, the real interest was the piece I was turning. Everyone at some point made the journey up to the third floor to see the urn in progress and find out the important details of the "job."

I had estimated the time on the lathe to be about thirty hours, but that slid easily into three weeks — time spent trading funny commission stories, or Jed showing me his latest complicated layout for a balustrade, or guessing about the future of Boston in terms of condominium conversion versus restoration. I ran into quite a few snags on the lathe, and Jed (in a manner I hoped he stole from me) taught me how to get this or that kind of edge, or some trick of sharpening the chisels in a way that achieved an undercut I would never have been able to figure out.

I finished the carving in my own studio, and the two urns are now returned to the entrance of Davenport dining hall, quietly (I hope gracefully) completing the design of the room. Ironically, if the urn is successful, it won't be noticed after an initial period of time. In a way this must be the highest praise for a woodworker — enhancing the space we live in, not intruding, but always remembered.

I did not want to go back. Ever. When the announcement for the fifth reunion came in the mail, the images and resentments tumbled around Fellini-like in my head: four years of a closed male society where the BMOCs were cliques of brawny athletes to whom the rest of us were "flits" and "fairies" — even though I knew in my gut that once the cheering stopped and there were no more football games, we would all be equals in the market place . . . the memory of Joe Cannon, a sensitive, fastidious, conspicuously homely boy with a titanic intellect, woefully misplaced in Andover, who, during the summer following his first year, hurled himself out of a building to his death . . . American History, vaunted as the finest college preparatory course in the country, which was like unwrapping a mummy compared to the thrilling drama created for me five years later in a classroom at Columbia College by Professor James Shenton, whose legendary end-of-term lecture on the 1920s included readings from Hemingway and Fitzgerald and an old wind-up phonograph blaring jazz as a Barnard flapper in raccoon coat burst in the side door doing a wild Charleston amidst cheers and applause of the SRO audience . . . the pain and inferiority complex of unending D's and F's awarded me in algebra and geometry by smug men who in monotones would demonstrate the same problems and theorems year-after-tedious year . . . a school that continually patted itself on the back for its liberal philosophy when at the time there was on the faculty not one black, not one Jew, and the only adult Catholic on campus was one instructor, along with one varsity coach and one administrator, neither of whom had faculty status.

Except for Patrick Morgan and Dudley Fitts, Andover was, for me, fours years of grades so dismal that my return was a semester-by-semester question mark. It was not a happy time.

On the date of our 10th reunion, I was on a bookselling trip in the midwest . . . by the 15th reunion, I'd lost touch with everybody, and besides, had had five jobs in seven years and couldn't face all the hotshot athletes and others whose wondrous accomplishments were religiously chronicled in the Class Notes.

Then the sledgehammer fell on my head.

In 1968 I was going through a divorce. Rather than spend $50 an hour on analysis (which I could hardly afford), I started getting up at 5:00 a.m. to work two hours on a novel before going off to work and giving what was left over to a job. After three years of this insane schedule and five separate drafts, the book was accepted for publication . . . sold to the movies . . . sold for paperback reprint . . . reviewed favorably in the national press, including TIME magazine. So I sent a copy to the editor of the Andover Bulletin; instead of the brief mention I had hoped for, someone named David Cobb ripped it to shreds in an astonishing three-quarter page review — the only real pan this harmless, marshmallow-fluff of a novel received anywhere.

Thereafter, any communication from Andover — be it for a reunion or money — was answered by a copy of the review. Just seeing the Andover logo on the corner of an envelope roiled up all the anger, frustration, and hatred all over again. Especially galling was a request some years later from the Andover librarian for free autographs copies of my three published novels. Finally I wrote and ordered my name taken off all mailing lists. Except for an occasional lunch with Bill Kaufmann, our class secretary (we are both in advertising in New York), the break with Andover was absolutely clean and final.

Then in 1982 Patrick Morgan died. We had been friends on-and-off for thirty years and had been in close touch throughout the last year of his life. I was moved to write a remembrance of Pat and sent it to Diz Bensley for possible inclusion in the Bulletin. I had seen no obituary, and Pat had touched too many lives for his passing to go unnoticed. The piece ran as a cover story, and the response to it from alumni all over was positive. Further, on page 3 of that same issue, whose puss should be grinning out at me but my old classmate, Joe Mesics, who had suddenly acquired the lofty title, Secretary of the Academy.

Following publication, there was an apoplectic phone call from Bulletin editor Tom Regan, who had just seen my file with his publication's review of my novel and the steamy correspondence that ensued; he assured me on behalf of everybody it had all been a ghastly mistake and he was sorry as hell and how much he appreciated the Pat Morgan piece. Would I consent to being put back on the mailing list, even though I would start being inundated with requests for money? I did and I was.

There was a cordial exchange of letters between Mesics and me, followed by his phone call asking me to come up for the 30th reunion . . . lunch with Bill Kaufmann in New York, who also strongly urged me to return for the reunion. My wife, Peggy, and I talked it over and we agreed to go.

The schedule announced that there were to be three full days of events, beginning at 1:00 p.m. on Friday and including a tour of the New Athletic Complex, the "8-n'-1 Octet" making the rounds of class cocktail parties, and an Annual Meeting of the alumni/ae, including the Annual Report from Headma$ter Don McNemar and other dignitarie$ in the Memorial Gymna$ium. We decided to get there on Saturday in time for the class photograph and the picnic lunch.

We arrived at Andover around 11:00 a.m. and registered. After getting good and lost looking for Stimson House in a building complex resembling Lompoc minimum security prison, we found that the rooms assigned to us were already occupied; apparently some class members arrived late the night before and took whatever empty rooms they could find. Across from the dorm was a battered Checker

I was ready to leave then and there airport stretch limousine, painted white with crude blue lettering all over it: "MIGHTY WHITEY" . . . "CLASS OF '53" . . . and the names of many former classmates scrawled on the doors and fenders. Across the hood was emblazoned: "ANDOVER 59 — EXETER 0," the score of the 1952 football game, which was so lopsided the administration considered it an acute embarrassment. I regretted having come at all; it was probably going to be two days of drinking with a bunch of middle-aged bores reliving That Championship Season. Peggy and I repaired to the Andover Inn to make reservations at the Sheraton and have a very dry vodka martini.

Before joining the class at noon, I wanted to show Peggy the Addison Gallery, supposedly one of the great small museums in the country. I especially wanted to pay a call on Winslow Homer's "Eight Bells" and that splendid collection of ship models which included J.P. Morgan's ("If you have to ask how much it costs, you can't afford it") Corsair. I thought also that since my piece on Patrick Morgan had been so well received, and the Bulletin had reproduced his "Double or Nothing" on the cover, perhaps it too would be hung. And since the Class of '53 was back, there would probably be a Carl Andre, as well as a Frank Stella, whom many of us knew from the Class of '54. Alas, there was no "Eight Bells," no ship models, no Patrick Morgan, no Andre, no Stella. Many, many rooms were closed off, and only one picture really sang, the Edward Hopper. I was ready to leave then and there, but Peggy persuaded me to hang in.

We arrived at the Gymnasium a little after noon as people were pouring out of the Annual Meeting. I began to recognize some of the faces from thirty years ago, many of them dimly remembered. It was irritating, to say the least, to see Zeus Stevens and Tom Shoop with full heads of hair, trim and muscular, not a wrinkle in sight, looking for all the world just like their graduation portraits in the yearbook. Mercifully there were some paunches and bald heads other than mine. When it was time for the class portrait, we assembled on the steps amidst jostling and joshing. The lady photographer ordered us to look at the camera and stand up straight, whereupon some wag shouted back, "I'm as erect as I can be!"

Peggy and I stood in the lunch line, said a few shy hellos to former classmates, and then sat under some trees near the Bell Tower. Dexter Olsson, whom I had known very slightly, asked if he could join us, and we suddenly found ourselves in a spirited discussion of American industry in general, steel in particular, the productivity of workers and the future of unions. Dexter, heavyset and jovial with a gravelly John Bartholomew Tucker voice, began to take on an intensity as the conversation progressed. Olsson was living in Bucks County and worked for Bethlehem Steel. With steelworkers making an average of $27 an hour, with antiquated open-hearth furnaces, with efficient high-tech mini-mills springing up around the country, and with cheap, government-subsidized foreign steel coming into this country, big steel was on the ropes. Yet he and his management were damn well determined to streamline Bethlehem and make it profitable again. There were too many jobs and too many stockholders depending on the company to just give up.

Later we drifted back to Stimson House, where I sat in on the Class of '53 meeting. I gathered that Don Shapiro and his bully boy were on the hustle; I also gathered that they were told to give me a wide berth, considering my precarious attitude. At any rate, no one asked me for a penny the whole weekend, for which I was grateful; I was not at all ready to make the grand gesture.

At 6:00 p.m. the class assembled at Graves Hall for the formal dedication of the Michael Segal Memorial Music Room. Segal had died of cancer the previous year, and his friends in the Class of '53 had raised money to create a room in his name devoted to electronic music. As we stood in a semi-circle on the lawn outside, Bill Kaufmann made a gracious speech and then presented the plaque with Mike's name on it to the Chairman of the Music Department, William Thomas, who I was surprised and delighted to see was black, and later learned is an absolutely brilliant teacher who inspires students to heights of achievement far beyond their normal capabilities. Andover had come a long way from the bland WASP faculty of the 1950s; I was thrilled with the change.

Following the ceremony we got into a conversation with Tony Lopez, recently retired from the U.S. Air Force as a colonel to a farm in western Tennessee, who cries "Shazam!" and turns into the Manager of Business Development for the Vollrath Company, Sheboygan, Wisconsin, traveling constantly throughout Latin America, doing his part to restore America's sagging balance of trade. And I caught up with Tim Draper, a Massachusetts boy, who has fetched up in Spokane, Washington, where six months of the year he works his tail off buying and selling wool — and loves it.

The class dinner that evening was to be a catered clambake at Cooley House, which we found with the aid of a campus map and the sighting of Mighty Whitey — the tacky graffitied white airport limousine — parked in the driveway. As we stood outside, drinks in hand, Shelby Tucker wandered over. Still rail-thin, the crooked grin and old outrageous charm undimmed in thirty years, he was originally from Alabama and was now living in Oxford, England, where he had cultivated the most extraordinary of accents. Tucker wanted to know about getting published, as his time in Oxford was spent "writing novels that no one will publish, and Ah am, at the same time, a passionate vegetable gardener."

Still over cocktails I chatted briefly with two of the doctors in the class, Neal Robinson and Ralf Cestero, learning a bit about their practices. Joel Davis, whom I remembered as a wizard of a mathematician at Andover, waxed ecstatic about the grand passion of his life, tax law. It would have been edifying to learn about the satellite tracking business from Bill Ridgeway, a scientist with Bell Labs who was also back for the first time in thirty years, but instead exchanged some delicious and scandalous gossip about mutual acquaintances on Fisher's Island, where Bill has a summer house.

After a gorgeously drippy dinner of steamed clams, boiled lobster, and corn on the cob, we were treated to a thoroughly professional and delightful concert by Carson Parks accompanying himself on the guitar, and his wife, Gaile, who has one of those wondrously sweet, pitch-perfect soprano voices. Parks, a country boy out of Nashville, Tennessee, with an authentic cornpone Andy Griffith mien and owner of the fabled Mighty Whitey, had attended Andover for only a year or two. But it was evident from his patter between songs that the school in general — and Dudley Fitts in particular — changed his life. Crediting Fitts for priming the creative juices running within him, Parks achieved great success at a very young age when his Saying Something Stupid Like I Love You was recorded by Frank Sinatra. In the crowded, happy room his and Gaile's repertoire was seemingly endless, each song more poignant and affecting than the last. I particularly remember Johnson vs. Johnson, which said much to every person who had ever been divorced (and there were a lot of us) or who had ever thought about it (probably a lot more). Then the Parks' adorable, bespectacled twin boys did a hilarious rendition of Me and My Shadow with all the elan of seasoned vaudeville troupers and received a standing ovation. It was a splendid evening.

Following the dinner party at Cooley House, we eased across the street to Moses Stuart House, where Joe and Sandi Mesics hosted a class party. While a cheering clique of ex-jocks sat in the darkness in the main salon, watching the flickering black-and-white films of the Exeter game — that 59-0 debacle memorialized on the hood of Mighty Whitey — I said a passing hello to Paul Hull, a gynecologist who looked exactly the same as he did thirty years ago, and connected with Gordon Mackenzie, who had been with IBM in Paris, and who knew a good friend of ours, another IBMer stationed in Paris, at whose house in Le Vesinet we had spent a memorable Christmas in 1980. I talked with Zeus Stevens, a hospital administrator in Potsdam, New York, about the rising cost of health care and the enormous and unending problems of running a large facility, and how he relishes every minute of it. Ken McDonald, class of '50, who had been my proctor at Williams Hall, sought me out and came up with the single-most startling line of that or many other weekends; when I asked him what he was doing, he replied matter-of-factly, "I'm with the CIA." Nobody — I mean nobody — admits to being with the CIA, not even CIA people talking to each other. Yet Ken shrugged it off and said he was writing the definitive history of that organization. "The history I can buy and read, or the real history?" Peggy asked. "The real history," Ken said quietly.

The party at the Mesics was still going strong when Peggy and I faded and returned to the Sheraton Rolling Green.

The following noon was the class tennis tournament and barbecue at George and Margot Bixby's handsome new contemporary house on Abbot Street. The crowd had thinned some, but there was still a good turnout. Bixby, who loved Andover and decided long ago to make it his home, had just gone through moving his shoe factory to a new location, and spoke of it so calmly, it sounded like the kind of thing he did every week. I saw Al Pearsall — incidentally winner of all the marbles in the tennis tournament — who turned out to be a neighbor of ours in Stamford, Connecticut, and who was running a computer installation for Texaco over the border in Westchester County. When I learned Ken Sharp was a judge in Florida, I commented on the terrible back-up of cases in the court systems. "I have no problem," he said. "I work hard to make sure there's no back-up in my court." Which is quite likely one reason why it was announced this past December that the Honorable Kendall Sharp had been appointed Judge of the U.S. District Court in Florida.

We wandered over to the tennis courts, where a series of fierce encounters was under way. I briefly talked insurance with John Scranton, who has his own agency in New York, and then was particularly happy to see Flor Kist, now

Dutch Consul-General in San Francisco. Relaxing under the trees, Kist told Peggy and me how he had come over to this country as an exchange student from Holland, fully expecting to stay on a farm and attend public high school in the mid-west when, for some miraculous reason, he wound up at Andover for a year, and the experience changed his life. We talked about the balance of trade, the U.S. economy, the terrible problems many European countries were having with the socialist system sucking their treasuries dry, and how the United States was irrevocably hurtling down that same disastrous road. Both Flor and his wife, Lyda, were enormously intelligent and

. . . there was an extraordinary common denominator among the people I met

had that laid-back courtliness that make European diplomats among the most civilized people on earth.

Back at the barbecue, I got caught up with J.D. and Barbara-Ann Watson, bubbly as ever, whom I used to see occasionally when we were all just starting out in New York and who were now in real estate and construction in Annapolis, Maryland. I talked marketing with Dave Craton, who flew in from London, where he has his own agency, and exchanged business cards, agreeing that one of us might be useful to the other at some point. Carson and Gaile Parks did a few more songs, and the boys did an encore performance of Me and My Shadow — again to a standing ovation. Finally, after exchanges of addresses and many good-byes, Peggy and I left for home.

At a dinner party in New York in the late 1960s, I found myself in conversation with a mathematics professor from NYU, a natty little man with a Vandyke beard in his 30s named Al Novikoff. As we were talking, some woman nearby said loudly, "Oh, yeah? Well let him who is without sin cast the first stone!" Suddenly Novikoff looked out the window and went into a fascinating reverie. "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone," he said. "Let x who is without sin cast the first stone. In any mathematical equation, x is the pronoun. Teachers make a terrible mistake calling x the unknown. It scares kids; it's like putting up a big mud barrier and making students fight their way through it. There's nothing unknown about x; it's just a pronoun — the thing you're working with at the moment." Novikoff looked at me. "You know, probably the reason why kids have such a tough time with mathematics is they can't handle the English language."

It was one of those marvelous mental leaps that immediately separates a great teacher from the morass of ordinary ones — the conceptual thinker who can make all knowledge relevant to all other knowledge, rather than allowing himself to lead you down the mine-shaft of a single, narrowly-defined discipline. Alas, when I was at Andover, x was always taught as the unknown, and algebra was a big mudfield through which I slogged — a series of signs, cosines, and symbols which, for me, bore no relationship to the real world. Thanks to a wizard of a teacher at Columbia, I once knew what calculus was and gloried, albeit briefly, in the heady precision and logic of higher mathematics. But at Andover, not only was math a mudfield for me, but so were history, physics, and many English courses.

Yet, if I did not respond to the teaching, Andover provided an incredible environment that far tranrick Morgan . . . the studio of the Addison Gallery, which Frank Stella recently described in The New York Times Magazine as a wondrous place where any student could squirt whole tubes of cadmium yellow and cobalt blue at $5 a pop on a painting and nobody would blink an eye at the gross extravagance of it all . . . John Ratte, now headmaster of Loomis-Chaffee School, who spent hours practicing on the organ of the Cochran Chapel . . . and there was always a well-tuned Steinway for Frederic Rzewski, who began his distinguished career as a composer in Phillips Hall.

And there were great teachers — Dudley Fitts, Emory Basford, Latin teacher Jack Colby, whose lists of verbs that take the dative and prepositions that take the ablative (or is it vice versa?) I can still recite, and the quintessential Dean of Students, George Grenville Benedict.

There was Park House, where Pat and Maud Morgan ran a perpetual houseparty for students and alumni in the lavish style of Sara and Gerald Murphy on the Riviera; surrounded by the works of such artists as Picasso, Calder, Hans Hoffman, and the Morgans themselves, you would find your adolescent brain grappling with discussions of Kierkegaard, Dylan Thomas, Wagner's use of recitatif in Der Ring des Nibelungen, of the religious symbolism in Paul Klee's Around the Fish. There were other salons on campus where equally good conversation was to be found — where x was the pronoun and you found yourself correlating the Parthenon to a snail shell and where someone could explain in English the physics of music and then demonstrate it on an instrument — at the homes of Diz and Naut Bensley and Dutch and Joan Wolff and others.

As for the syllabus, all the course material was given full — if often uninspired — coverage, and our perception of it was accurately measured. Star athletes got into just as much trouble as the rest of us for poor grades, for going AWOL, or for walking on the grass. The system was, above all, fair. And almost everybody got into college, even scended its classrooms. As students, we were kept under a tight rein. We did not get out at two every afternoon and spend the rest of the day and every weekend tomcatting around the village green in souped-up cars in the tradition of the Fonz, Sha-na-na, and American Graffiti (although God knows we would have loved it!).

Walking by George Washington Hall, I remembered recitals by Rudolf Serkin and Percy Grainger . . . a performance by the First Drama Quartet made up of Charles Laughton, Charles Boyer, Tyrone Power, and Agnes Moorehead doing a reading of Shaw's Don Juan in Hell, the Vienna Choir Boys, the Margaret Webster Shakespeare Company's full-dress production of The Taming of the Shrew . . . lectures by Buckminster Fuller, the American Communist Party head Gus Hall, and civil rights leader Bayard Rustin long before civil rights had exploded onto the national conscience. I remembered the Wednesday Night Film Society with wonderfully informed introductions by Pat-those of us who probably shouldn't have.

So we come to the bottom line. Will I go back in '88? Will I give money to the Alumni Fund?

You betcha.

It's very fashionable now — especially among the jet set — to quote from George Herbert's 17th Century book Outlandish Proverbs, "Living well is the best revenge." A few years ago, when I was groping for the meaning of life, a top executive at Pepsico said to me, "All you owe this world is one death and all the taxes they can squeeze out of you."

For me, this has never been enough. At least once a week over the past few years I have been overtaken by guilt and wondered if I shouldn't cash in what chips I had and take on the problem of world hunger. It's a stupid idea. I'm good at what I do, and I love it. In no time I would turn into just another out-of-work bum; my two evenings a month at Stamford shelter for the homeless continually remind me where that can lead.

Then I returned to Andover last June and realized there was an extraordinary common denominator among the people I met. All of them — executives, doctors, lawyers, a judge, insurance brokers, marketers, investment advisers, educators, writers, a scientist, builders — all were deeply committed to what they were doing. Each one was filled with enthusiasm and determined to make a success out of whatever he or she had taken on in life. Even Shelby Tucker, growing cucumbers in England, said he was a passionate vegetable gardener; so were Gregor Mendel and Barbara McClintock.

On reflection, it became obvious that giving money to Andover is not the usual case of the haves giving to the have-nots. If the Class of '53 is any criterion, every dollar given will eventually be multiplied many times over as it goes into educating men and women who will, in turn, go out in the world and create jobs and profits and national wealth and order and health and education and new technology and buildings and a positive balance of trade and the betterment of the human condition and the expansion of the human spirit. And there in that remarkable institution is also the chance of producing the leaders that this country — and the world — so desperately need.

This past December I went to the 50th Anniversary party of the NBC Page Staff, an organization I had worked for during my years at Columbia. I obviously had a lot fewer hang-ups about that reunion than the one in June. It, too, was a whale of a bash. There, one of my former colleagues, Rob Nelson, executive editor of The Best Report, told me David Brinkley's answer to the Outlandish Proverb and my cynical friend from Pepsico. "You owe it to yourself," Brinkley said, "to make as much money as you can and then give away as much as you can afford to worthwhile causes."

Our check is in the mail.

RETIREMENTS

Dorothy Y. Judd

Stepping into Room 24 in Samuel Phillips Hall is a cultural experience. Meticulously-arranged displays offer a revealing glimpse of the vast and varied Spanish-speaking world. Hats, streamers, and posters are just some of the examples of the great collection of crafts and colorful regalia that Dorothy Judd has amassed to bring the language and culture alive in her classroom.

If you are lucky, Juddie will be there and will gladly give you a personal account of climbing those steps pictured in the poster of the ruins of Machu Picchu in the Peruvian Andes; or you may get a lesson on the use of perspective in Dali's painting of "The Last Supper." Whatever the story, you will learn much not only about Spanish-speaking cultures but about Juddie herself.

Although Juddie was born in New Jersey, her early schooling took place in the Canal Zone of Panama. The Spanish language influenced her deeply, leading her to continue her study of Spanish on the college and graduate level. She combined this interest with her love of sports, majoring in Physical Education.

An avid field hockey player herself, she was able to develop her background and love of sports in her position as Head of the Abbot Physical Education Department in 1948. In that position she not only directed the sports program, but also helped raise funds for, and indeed participated in the planning of, the new George Ezra Abbot Gymnasium.

It was in 1950 that Juddie moved into teaching Spanish, her other love. Pinch-hitting first for a teacher who was unexpectedly called away permitted a new focus for her talents as a teacher. Gradually she moved totally into teaching Spanish. As with everything that Juddie has ever done, the move into teaching Spanish was done with tremendous energy, enthusiasm, and thoroughness.

Juddie led student groups to Mexico, became active in professional organizations, continued reading and traveling on her own, and ended up co-authoring a Spanish textbook. There was no half-way involvement for Juddie. She engaged in her profession totally.

Juddie was a pioneer in co-education between Abbot Academy and Phillips. Before the merger took place, Juddie, then head of the Spanish Department, had already set up an exchange of teachers and students on the two campuses.

These past years since the merger have continued to be active ones for Juddie. Her students enjoy extra-special attention and consideration. Although she is a firm believer in "meat and potatoes before dessert" (one of her favorite sayings regarding the need to demand the hard work before rewarding with the more pleasurable), she gives freely of her time to individuals. Her "clínicas" for extra help are well known within the department. In addition, her cooking sessions or "sesión de cocina" have involved many students. Two or three times per trimester she invites specific classes to the Underwood Room to cook up specialties from the Spanish-speaking world. Then the classes are invited to partake of the delicacies. This Wednesday afternoon activity reaches students in a

Robert E. Lane

Unlike Rodney Dangerfield, Bob Lane gets respect around here and lots of it. Like the well-known brokerage firm, he gets that respect the old-fashioned way — he earns it. How? Well, an ancient psychology text I once used states that social accord begins with respect for oneself, from which emanates respect very special way — through their hands and stomachs — a sure way to impart a cultural message!

Even Juddie's free time seems to have centered on professional pursuits. She is a great "aficionada" of travel, and as a part of that, photography. She has traveled extensively in Europe and Latin America. She researches her trips, takes full benefit from them (by visiting ruins, by dining in exciting places), studies the people, then documents them in photos. She leaves the Department a wonderful collection of slide-tape programs featuring monuments and ruins of Latin America and Spain. In all her travels she never forgets to bring a part of her experience back to her "colegas." We of the Department always receive some clever "recuerdo" of Juddie's trips.

This sharp, lively, talented woman leaves us in June to retire to the Northampton, Massachusetts area. Her colleagues and students will miss her very much.

for and from others.

Respect for oneself. Did you ever observe Bob Lane moving around campus? Everything about him, the clothes he wears, the way he wears them, his pace and posture, his manner of listening to others, the way he reflects before replying, the tone of his reply, all these things tell one that this man has developed a genuine sense of self-respect.

Resultant respect for and from others. Ask his students about this. As a long-time academic adviser and a fellow member of the classics department, I have had repeated occasion to hear about Bob from pupils in his classes. The one appraisal I always heard from them, explicitly or implicitly, was: "Mr. Lane is a hard taskmaster. He always demands the very best from us out of respect for our minds and our characters. And we respect him in return."

This may sound like rather flinty stuff, so let me add that no student of Bob's was ever in more kindly hands, nor any colleague, either, who came to him for advice or assistance. The benign substratum of his deceptively sober mien is best reflected by the flowers that still bloom each spring in the august shadows of Pearson Hall. Years before the official practice of complementing the campus shrubbery with floral planting was adopted, early one spring croci suddenly raised their multicolored faces outside Pearson Hall to be followed in due time by numerous hyacinths and tulips. My suprised question about how they got there elicited the reply: "They are the work of Bob Lane." For years thereafter, these bright harbingers of spring festooned the general area of Flagstaff Court, and always they were the work of Bob Lane — his quiet way of bringing a note of cheer and beauty into the lives of all those around him. And if I live to be a hundred, each time I see a flower blooming on the campus of Phillips Academy I shall see shining upon its corolla the name of Bob Lane.

This man of many parts came to us from Iowa by way of California,

Alfred J. Coulthard

We were sitting on the shady beach of a friend's house on a New Hampshire lake when Al Coulthard, in his bathing suit, marched out of the house and into the cold water without breaking his stride, dived in, and swam across the lake with the strength of a motorboat and the rhythm of a machine. He left a wake behind him. The neighbor sitting next to me studied his beer can for a few moments and muttered with affectionate irony, "Obviously he has never swum before."

Tennessee, and Vermont. Born in Iowa, he graduated from high school in Fullerton, California, earned his BA and MA at the University of California at Berkeley, then taught classical languages and Russian at the Universities of Tennessee and Vermont before coming to PA in 1955. Here, in addition to a host of other duties over and above his superlative teaching, Bob has been Director of the Bureau of Self Help (1962-1966) and Editor of the Commencement Program (1968-1982) and has produced two in-house texts, one for Russian 10 and the other for Etymology. This latter text was the origin and still is the bible of Etymology at PA. Formal recognition of his overall service to the school was given in his appointment to the Alfred Ernest Stearns Foundation in 1971.

To revert to Bob's making the environment of PA more pleasant and, yes, more beautiful by his presence here, walk down Salem Street some day this summer. Stop at number 23 and scan the yard of Wendell House. See its garden? It bespeaks many years of living and working together by Kathleen and Bob Lane, it bespeaks their love of flowers, of all nature and of each other. Watch the fronds and blossoms bowing in the breeze and hear them whisper: "Two good and gentle people have passed this way."

—William J. Buehner

I am not sure why that minor incident sticks in my mind after all these years, except that it captures so much of Al's personality. He has an extraordinary physique that has been a model of athletic prowess for his students in Phys Ed. First and last he has the courage of the Marine that he was literally during the war, and figuratively ever after, even if it is expressed merely in the way one approaches cold water. Possessed of a deep sense of humor, he encourages humor in those around him. And surely the impeccable rhythm of his swimming stroke has some remote ties with his love of music, especially jazz. If we all had several lives to lead and we could call our shots, one of Al's choices beyond Andover would have been to play sax or drums in Count Basie's orchestra.

Since 1962 Al has been a Trainer and Instructor in Physical Education in PA's Athletic Department. The respect and affection that both his colleagues and his students have for him is probably best epitomized by the observation of Ernie Adams '71, now a coach with the New York Giants: "Al Coulthard was always the faculty member whom anybody could talk to — the unofficial school shrink. You always got a hearing from him."

In his earlier years at Andover Al spent considerable time coaching football and track (shot and discus, primarily). But as the school grew in size, the demands in the Trainers' Room grew, and his afternoons in more recent years have been dedicated to his skills as Head Trainer and Physical Therapist. As an Instructor in the Department Al set up the PAT (Preliminary Athletic Training) testing program — a program that is so well balanced that it has caught on outside of PA and is widely copied. Al also developed a program for those who simply are not physically gifted in a school that requires athletics — an exercise, skills, and jogging program that has benefited hundreds of students. Others will remember Al as Athletic Director of the Summer Session for many years.

Not the least of Al's achievements in the community was his establishing the Faculty Club, virtually single-handedly, in the basement of the Inn. For ten years his colleagues had that ideal place to enjoy each other's company in leisure hours, but finally circumstances like the Inn's understandable need for more space and the rising costs of everything made the Club financially unfeasible. Many of us have warm memories of live jazz on Saturday nights at a price even faculty could afford.

Born in Birkenhead, England ("I fear my ambition was stifled at an early age when I realized I could never be president of the United States"), Alfred J. Coulthard came to America with his parents when he was two. He grew up in Lynn, Massachusetts, attended Lynn High School, and served with the US Marines from 1942 till 1946, retiring as a Platoon Sergeant. He served two stints overseas in the Pacific — the Solomons, Saipan, and eventually Nagasaki. "I might have been the first American to see the devastation of Nagasaki," Al says. He was in the first US group to arrive in that city, on a warm night six weeks after the atomic explosion; the Marines established a headquarters in the police station, and Al took a jeep ride at dawn the next morning — there had been no warnings issued to anybody about the dangers of radiation. He remains silent about what he saw. A far happier experience took place on a troop train several weeks later: at one station a little old Japanese man knocked on the train window and asked how the Detroit Tigers had done that season — he had spent several years in Detroit in the 1930s.

After the war Al returned to Lynn, where he worked at the General Electric plant before entering Physical Therapist's school under the GI Bill. For two years he was Assistant Trainer at Harvard, followed by twelve years as Head Trainer at Brandeis, a job that included three years as Assistant Baseball Coach and eight years as Head Track Coach. During this time Al earned his degree in Education. There were no degrees in Physical Therapy or Training in those days, except for nurses and those enrolled in the all-girls program at Boston University's Sargent School of Physical Education. Sports Medicine was unknown in 1950. Al rejoices at the superlative programs available now, producing specialists who are extremely well trained.

Though Al jokes about his memory ("I've got a good memory, but it's short"), he remembers details like how fast a Patriot fullback ran the hundred yard dash in full equipment in 1968. He remembers song titles and the personnel of jazz bands as if he were a walking reference book. And because he remembers people for their achievements rather than for their connections, his friends are legion.

Ruth and Al Coulthard have left a mark on PA in ways they modestly never dream of. They have been teachers to the entire community — of humor, of patience, of friendship. In adversity they have shown courage and — there is no better word for it — class. The picture of Al striding into the cold New Hampshire water is simply an understatement of the spirit of both of them. Once a marine . . .

Their multitudinous friends wish Ruth and Al well in their retirement, which, we are happy to report, will be as close as Lynn.

Editor's note: In our next issue we shall feature two faculty who have chosen early retirement: Shirley J. Ritchie and John G. Tomlinson.

The Abbot Heritage

One of the handsomest examples of the Abbot heritage at PA has been the awarding of grants by the Abbot Academy Association to faculty who submit the best proposals for innovations in curriculum, for improvement of the quality of life at the school, or for ventures that will help the direction of the Academy over the next few years. Specifically, the Association states its interest in providing initial support in the following areas:

1. Exploratory approaches to education, particularly in the realm of human behavior;
2. Studies in the learning and development processes of youth;
3. Social and recreational opportunities for the individual student and for groups of students not otherwise provided for, particularly in sports, the creative arts, music, drama, and the humanities;
4. Opportunities for increased informal communication among and between students, faculty, administration, and community;
5. Such other projects as may benefit the quality of life at Phillips Academy.

For example, in recent years the Art, Theatre, and Math Departments have been funded to offer summer institutes to acquaint their PA colleagues in other departments with their programs — and in every case the results have been both increased knowledge and mutual esteem. Several years ago the counseling services at Graham House became a vital institution at PA, thanks to several AAA awards to develop their program. The Headmaster's Symposium in the winter term is another such successful venture. Of less human interest, but of crucial concern to the Academy financially, have been grants to organize the school's multiple but almost chaotic acquisitions of computers — each office or department was investing considerable sums in different and incompatible systems until the Association funded a temporary consultant to coordinate computer purchase and use at PA. The pattern for the grant was perfect: within three years the school wisely hired out of its own funds a permanent Director of Computing, whose efforts are already rewarding the entire community.

Founded ten years ago at the time of the Abbot-PA merger, the Abbot Academy Association is a board of eleven Directors, each usually chosen for a term of three years, who meet at least once a year to examine the faculty proposals and select those with the most merit to receive awards. Operating with a current principal of about $1.5 million (one million from Abbot's unrestricted funds, the rest from donations over the past ten years), the AAA has disbursed just under one million dollars in the past decade. This year's grants total $50,000 so far.

The AAA is oriented towards the future. Their focus is not necessarily on coeducational programs, because that campaign was won years ago. Before each meeting the Directors confer with the Headmaster to acquaint themselves with his and the Trustees' most recent ideas about the school's direction, to determine how they can be of most help. As the current chairman of the AAA Board of Directors, Sybil P. Smith '61 says, "In these times of financial constraint, with creative thought the AAA grants can help to keep the institution vital and working together. We want to provide an opportunity for the faculty and administration to lead the school into the future. We are a sort of underpinning of planning and effort for what should happen at PA in the next five or ten years."

Happily for the entire community, the AAA Fund is an "open" fund: the principal is augmented by current gifts from those who have a special affection for the Abbot heritage and name, and from those who find its aims a high priority in their own view of how an educational institution should grow. In answer to several inquiries, we are pleased to report that donations, made out to the "Abbot Academy Association," may be sent to Mrs. Cornelia Weldon LeMaitre '53, Office of Academy Resources, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

Here is a list of the grants awarded so far this year:

J. Elaine Adams, Instructor in Chemistry and Astronomy: for a summer project to prepare a series of suitable problem sets for use throughout the Observational Astronomy courses.

Jeanne E. Amster, Dean of Studies and Instructor in History and the Social Sciences: a continuation of previous grants to the Dean to support small projects for students and faculty, like the previous aid given to the literary magazine, the UN Club, and the Massachusetts General Hospital Exchange.

Priscilla K. Bellizia, Associate Dean of Residence: a continuing grant to continue her research on health issues at PA, including the training of house counselors, and workshops for peer support leaders

Ann H. Harper and Jeanne Bussier Stephens, Instructors in English: continuing support for revision of the English Competence program, including publication of new materials.

Paul Kalkstein, Associate Director of Athletics and Instructor in English: for three projects in the Athletic Department to familiarize new coaches with the rules, including the production of a new handbook updating of the gym library, and lectures by professional referees.

Nicholas Kip, Instructor in Classics: to develop a program of language instruction using computers

John K. McMurray, Chairman of the Art Department: to purchase hardware and software for computer graphics, for use in such classes as Animation, Filmmaking, Graphics and Photography, Two-Dimensional Design, and Architecture.

Donald W. McNemar, Headmaster: continued partial funding for the Headmaster's Symposium, to pay for lecturers and films.

Ruth Quattlebaum, Archivist: to conserve and restore the Phillips family papers, involving washing, restoring, and possibly microfilming.

Hale Sturges II, Chairman of the Foreign Language Division: to purchase video cassette recorders to record and exchange video tapes with students in foreign high schools, to expose our own students to European television programs, and to aid in teacher training by recording classes.

Alexander Z. Warren, Instructor in Mathematics: to create a course in programming the IBM personal computer and to change the computer language in Math 47 from Basic to Pascal.

As we go to press, the AAA is convening to have a special birthday celebration honoring ten years of contributions to education at PA. And while they are together, they will distribute more awards for appropriate projects, and the name and spirit of Abbot continue to help shape Phillips Academy's future.

Addison Campaign: a final report

A campaign is not a work of art, although it needs design, distinctive shape, and lots of color. Unfortunately, a campaign lacks universal appeal, yet is strengthened by many hands, not just one. The Campaign "Homered" to a "Stella" finish.

The Addison Gallery Campaign surged to its goal of $4,765,000 on 21 December 1983, earned the entire $1,000,000 Challenge Fund put together by Trustees and close friends of the Gallery, passed the $5,000,000 mark on 4 January, and gathered a total of $5,044,916 in generous support to insure a strong future for the Addison Gallery.

The Campaign was launched in May 1981 on the occasion of the Addison's 50th birthday. During the late 1920s, visionary Trustee Thomas Cochran '90 assembled a collection of important American paintings and conceived the idea of a gallery. Cochran's architect, Charles Platt, designed the Addison Gallery. Cochran paid for it and even endowed its upkeep and a fund for purchasing works of art. For close to fifty years the endowment enabled the collection to grow and the museum to be well cared for. However, the 1970s brought inflation, and the Gallery's program had to be curtailed within a stringent budget.

In October 1982, Andover alumnus Frank Stella '54 exhibited an extraordinary show of recent work at the Gallery that attracted more than 10,000 visitors during its two-month showing and became a catalyst for fund-raising. Prior to the Stella show, the Campaign had raised $1,849,312.33. That show created considerable national attention from the New York Times to the Los Angeles Times, giving potential donors a chance to understand Andover's nationally acclaimed arts education program as well as to realize the first-rate quality of the Addison's collection of more than 7,000 works. It also provided an opportunity to announce a $1,000,000 Challenge Fund organized by Trustee Chairman Melville Chapin '36 and senior member of the Board of Trustees R.L. Ireland III '36. Twenty close friends of the Gallery — alumni, alumnae, Trustees, and one philanthropic foundation — participated in the Challenge Fund. Andover/Abbot alumni, alumnae, and parents responded with astonishing enthusiasm to earn the 50% dividend from the Challenge. Without the Challenge Fund, which provided the immediate incentive to give before the December 1983 deadline, Andover could not have won this Campaign.

Throughout the Campaign, leadership from Chairman Robert M. Walker '28, and volunteers earnestly seeking response from true believers, brought the effort to its goal. The Major Gifts Committee was headed by Edward E. Elson '52, and the National Committee for the 50th and the Special Gifts Committee were co-chaired by Robert A. Feldman '54 and Josephine Bradley Bush '57. At Campaign end, there were 1,514 donors and 1,782 gifts, remarkable numbers for a museum — albeit of national stature — on a secondary school campus. As Christopher C. Cook stated to the press, "It was a stunning response to the real needs of this museum."

Merrimack Valley

The newly-formed Merrimack Valley Andover/Abbot Association (MVAAA) is enjoying its first full year of activities. On 27 January 1984 two hundred association members attended an "Evening at the Addison" to hear Curator Chris Cook's commentary on the special exhibition "STICKS" and to tour the Gallery's permanent collection.

The second successful event, a 10 February "Evening With the Faculty," was enthusiastically received by the membership. Doug Crabtree, Ed Quattlebaum '60, Tom Regan '51, and Jean St. Pierre shared their own "Andover Experience," each as different as the personalities involved, yet bound together with the care and sensitivity characteristic of all good teachers.

We are now looking forward to hosting a reception following the Sunday, 29 April Student Dance Recital under the direction of Cristina Rubio.

Newly admitted students and their families who reside in the Merrimack Valley will be welcomed to the school at a 6 May reception. It is an opportunity to become acquainted with present faculty and students and to begin to establish friendships which will be comfortable as the school year commences in September.

Mid-Atlantic

The Mid-Atlantic Andover/Abbot Association begins its second year with an active agenda for the winter and spring months of 1984.

In February we held a wine and cheese party at the home of Leslie Veasey Schade '65, with 30 alumni and parents on hand to meet Peter McKee, Associate Headmaster; Jean St. Pierre, Chairman of the English Department; and Mary Stevens of the College Counselling Office.

In March a reception for newly admitted students will be hosted by John F. Smith III '59 and will give our younger alumni and some current students from the Philadelphia area a chance to meet applicants who have been accepted for admission in the fall of 1984.

On 2 April, our Annual Dinner will feature a talk by former Headmaster Ted Sizer, who will describe the findings of "A Study of High Schools" which he has completed after three years of work. The dinner will be held at the Rittenhouse Club in Philadelphia, and we hope to attract 75 guests.

Also in April we will conduct a phonathon for Andover's Office of Academy Resources, to help increase the number of contributors to the Alumni Fund.

In support of the Admissions Office, we are working with officials in the Philadelphia School District to identify minority candidates for Andover. Under the leadership of a recently appointed Superintendent, Constance Clayton, the Philadelphia School District is actively upgrading the quality of its education, and Superintendent Clayton has directed her staff to give us all possible cooperation in identifying students who can qualify for admission to Andover.

During our first full year of activity, the Mid-Atlantic Andover/Abbot Association was supported by 59 paid members, and we expect to expand our membership during 1984 with a wider range of programs and activities. Alumni interested in joining our Association or attending our events should write to Peter Stevens, President, Suite 1632, 1315 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, PA 19017.

New York

The Andover-Abbot Alumni Association of New York, which has been going strong for almost a century, is headed this year by president Donald L. Shapiro '53. There are 180 alumni from the Greater

New York area who are 1983-84 dues-paying members, each contributing $15 to "AANY."

In November we held an Admissions Forum for prospective students and their parents. Josh Miner brought down three current students (each had come to PA from New York) to discuss their Andover experiences with the applicants.

The upstairs rooms of the Williams Club of NY may well become Andover's version of Fort Knox. Many times during the year the Club hosts Andover phonathons, and during the last twelve months such efforts have raised approximately $60,000.

The best-attended function "AANY" has hosted of late was our January reunion dinner with Ted and Nancy Sizer. Ted, the featured speaker, captivated 175 alums and guests with an overview of his two-and-a-half year study of secondary education in America. Special guests from PA included Don and Britta McNemar and Chris Shaw.

What's up in the future? Our annual picnic for newly-admitted students from our area will be held in May. Thirty-two alums will get a tennis workout in February at our second annual Andover Tennis Night. March features an Italian dinner in Little Italy, and in May we'll walk it off on a geology tour of midtown Manhattan buildings. Our season will end with Andover Night at the Mets.

For details about membership and events, please call Don Shapiro at (212) 581-2400.

Southern California

Six able emissaries from the Academy ascended into Southern California for three days last October, spreading the gospel to diverse congregations. Jack Richards, Jean McKee, and Jan Burton representing the Admissions Office covered eighteen junior high and magnet schools, six of which were new converts to Andover. The trio's main crusade, the "Evening with Andover," drew seventy prospective students and parents, alumni, and educators to the Japanese-American Cultural Institute in downtown Los Angeles. Jack impressively presented a recruiting slideshow on the School, and Jan shared the response end of a long question-and-answer period. This was the most successful "Evening" presentation we've seen in Southern California.

The following night the Association hosted a lovely evening at the Caltech Athenaeum in honor of the visitors. Of particular interest to local alumni was the opportunity to meet Sandi and Joe Mesics '53 and Connie LeMaitre '53 from the Alumni Office. Eighty-five attended the cocktail-buffet and heard our local bishop, Bill Farley '28, handle the introductions with total aplomb and humor. Able assistance at the ceremony was rendered by many, in particular Louise Farley, Nancy Roberts '68, Jeff Hiroto '77, and Mary Camp '78.

Upper Midwest

The Andover/Abbot Alumni Association of the Upper Midwest (AAAAUM) has just completed a most successful year of activities. Paid membership has reached approximately fifty percent of the available alumni through six states encompassing 786,000 square miles. These members have participated in a variety of Andover-related activities.

In March 1983 a party was held for all admittees, attended by alumni reps, recent graduates, and current Andover students. Of the admittees who attended (92 percent), all but one chose Andover. This effort was followed by a Back-to-School Festival, at which four "prospective" Andover juniors were included. All four subsequently did apply for admission to PA.

In November, all members of AAAAUM were invited to a dinner and public speech by Ted Sizer, former PA Headmaster, on the subject of "High Schools of the 80s."

Thirty-five Association members attended the dinner, and 150 listened to the talk, which was replayed twice on Minnesota Public Radio, and which received significant press coverage. On top of those achievements, the evening proved to be a substantially profitable evening for the Association.

Future events include a Lake Party Extravaganza, a Back-to-School Gathering, and an evening at Chanhassen Dinner Theatre. Additionally, the AAAAUM has accepted Josh Miner's challenge to find the "best and brightest" minority candidate (American Indian) in the Upper Midwest to attend PA in the near future. Count on a "major leaguer" from Minnesota!

Alumni who would like to join the Association should get in touch with Mr. R. Rand Ross, 4037 Heathcote Road, Deephaven, MN 55391.

Washington, DC

The year 1983 was a bit low-key for the Andover/Abbot Alumni Association of Washington, DC, especially when compared to 1982, when the Club sponsored a string of four smashingly successful events, highlighted by a turnout of 250 local alumni in an affair honoring Chris Cook of the Addison Gallery and Don McNemar at Dumbarton Oaks.

Even so, the Club helped arrange a highly successful visit of the Academy's Choral and Cantata Society over the spring recess, engineered a record-breaking phona-thon for the Andover Alumni Fund, and hosted an Andover Night for prospective Andover stu-

The Face of Phillips Academy

During her Upper and Senior years (1981-83) Mia Kelly was often seen with her 35mm Nikon camera around campus, but that was no surprise since our Art Department has made photographers out of thousands of students during the last three decades. But Mia was a little different.

She was determined to publish a book of photographs of her school, "a place of singular physical beauty in architecture and landscape," as she says in her dedication. Mia took 3,000 slides, mostly Ektachrome 64, exceptionally rich in color, and selected ninety that she thought best represented Phillips Academy in all its seasons. By Christmas 1983 Andents at the home of the Club president. In addition, the Club continued to assist the school in its Adopt-a-School Program.

In 1984 the Club will again "go public," beginning with the return visit of the Choral and Cantata Society at the Dumbarton United Methodist Church the evening of Friday, 16 March, and a reception for area students. In May, the Club will host an Andover Day at the renowned Virginia Gold Cup steeplechase in Warrenton, Virginia, and follow soon thereafter with a wine-tasting affair for graduates of the classes of the '70s and '80s (although this will not be strictly limited to this younger generation).

Finally, the election year spirit will be captured in a rousing debate between two prominent Andover graduates in the Washington area (TBA) who have made their mark on the political scene.

Other plans are in the works and Club President Nat Semple will keep all informed. The Club wishes to extend its continued appreciation to Club Secretary, Alicemary Leach '76; Vice President, John Engle '61; and Treasurer, Joannie Bozek '75, for all their help over the past two years.

Photographer and author Mia Kelly '83

dover: the Face of Phillips Academy was published, photography and text by Mia Kelly, with a Foreword by Trustee Thomas H. Wyman '47.

The ninety-five-page book in large format (9 by 12 inches) depicts buildings, people, landscapes, athletic events — Abbot as well as PA, in greenery as well as in snow. Although the faces are those of 1981-83, the scenes are classic and evoke memories for graduates of all ages. Mia's prose text is the result of her close study of local histories, especially the bicentennial histories of PA by Fritz Allis and of Abbot by Sue Lloyd. Her own text offers an epitome of the history of the schools, with special notes about the buildings in the photographs.

Born in New York City, educated at the Brearley School in New York and the Blake School in Minnesota before she came to PA, Mia Kelly now makes her home with her family on Lake Minnetonka, Minnesota. She is currently a student at Dartmouth College.

As Mr. Wyman says in his Foreword, "For those who are involved with Phillips Academy it is a matter of special pride that Mia Kelly took these pictures and prepared this text while she was an undergraduate at the school. I am grateful to an old friend for taking us on such a good walk."

Readers who are interested in purchasing a copy will find a display on our outside back cover, and a coupon on our inside back cover. PA benefits from all sales of the book made through the coupon. □

In the winter term there were so many guest speakers, drama productions, dance recitals, concerts, art receptions, and visits by celebrities that even an editor on a moped could hardly keep up with them all. The guest speakers were especially legion, many of them appearing as part of the Headmaster's Symposium on "The American Dilemma Revisited: Racism in America," others under the auspices of specific departments or clubs. In our next issue we shall offer a thorough review of this Symposium, but to give our readers a notion of the scope of the program we must mention that it included a performance by the Alvin Ailey Dance Company and speakers like James Meredith and the Reverend Peter J. Roger Welch's sculpture Drive-In: Second Feature, 1982 in the Addison Gallery show "STICKS"

ter. Senator George McGovern, the only one to accept, spoke on 5 March to a packed auditorium. The purpose of the ASPU is to interest students to educate themselves politically in order to make informed choices as voters or as future voters.

The Addison presented two major shows this winter. "STICKS" showed how twelve artists created different works from this most modest of raw materials. In conjunction with the Headmaster's Symposium, "RACIAL REALITIES" showed photographically three major stages of racism in America: the beginnings of the problem, the activists days of the '60s, and the aftermath. Twenty-eight photographers' works provided powerful viewing and useful assignments for English classes whose skills in detecting verbal ironies were applied to analyzing visual ones.

The Theatre Department offered six productions this winter, including The Time of Your Life, The Me Nobody Knows, and a spectacular rendition of A Midsummer Night's Dream, the last directed by instructors Robert MacDowell (on exchange to PA from Dulwich College, England) and Kevin Heelan. The Music Department offered an average of three concerts a week, from solos, chamber groups, and jazz, to orchestral collaborations with the Dance Department. Phillips Academy is not what one would call a cultural wasteland. Athletes met their celebrities, too: in early January world squash champion Hashim Kim spent a day giving lessons and playing squash with students.

Business

At their January meeting the Trustees raised next year's tuition by only 3.4%, as opposed to 8.5% and 13.9% in the previous two years. For 1984-85, tuition will be $9200 for resident students, up from $8900 in

Pamela B. Paresky '85 as Titania, and Jonathan D. Higgins '84 as Bottom, in A Midsummer Night's Dream

1983-84. Day students will pay $6975, up from $6750. At the same time, financial aid will be increased 5.5%. Dean of Admissions Josh Miner said, "I applaud the step taken by the Trustees." Josh sees the low rise in tuition as a measure to prevent PA from being attractive only to wealthier families. "We have been able to keep our charges lower than the rate of inflation only because of the generosity of donors to our highly successful Annual Giving Program," reports Headmaster Donald McNemar.

Neighborhood News

The gap left by the death of Oscar, the Biology Department's twenty-three-year-old female alligator, has been filled. Freddie is a one-year-old alligator who is seventeen inches long and will grow about one inch a year. Although we shall henceforth follow the students' policy of calling Freddie "he," his sex will not be determinable until he himself undergoes an autopsy, which we all hope will be decades away. Freddie comes to us from the parents of senior Julia Stallings, and we are grateful to them for obtaining the proper permissions from both the State Game Warden and the Governor of Mississippi.

The Faculty

One would have to be isolated from all television and periodicals not to be aware of the attention former

Headmaster Donald W. McNemar, Spanish Consul General Andres Drake, and English Instructor Randall S. Peffer at the reception for Mr. Peffer

Headmaster Theodore Sizer is receiving this season as his report on American High Schools, Horace's Compromise, reaches the book stores. Ted, his family, his staff, and his book have been featured all over the country on television, in magazines, and in both local and national newspapers. The Sizers have also been the celebrated guests at several PA Regional Association meetings in the past few months. In February Brown University announced that Ted has been appointed Professor of Education and Chairman of the Education Department, beginning in the academic year 1984-85.

Among the current faculty who have achieved more than usual distinction recently is Art Instructor Gerald Shertzer, who had a show of his illustrations of I.B. Singer's short stories at Ahmed's Gallery, Harvard Square, in February and March.

While he taught at School Year Abroad in Barcelona in 1982-83, English Instructor Randall Peffer wrote an article for the January 1984 edition of National Geographic, entitled "Catalonia: Spain's Country within a Country." In response, the Spanish government on 12 March honored Randy at a reception at the Cambridge home of Spanish Consul General Andres Drake, a close friend of PA Spanish Instructor Angel Rubio.

Now that the Addison Campaign has come to a successful conclusion, Campaign Director Patricia H. Edmonds has been appointed by the Trustees to a newly created post, Director of Capital Development. Although there will be no major fund-raising drives in the immediate future, Pat will be working on special development projects.

The Kenan Grant program is one of those blessings that make teaching at PA even more than a pleasure and a privilege. The grants are designed to enable busy teachers to take time off from teaching in the summer to pursue their own intellectual needs and professional growth. There are twelve recipients this year.

For those writing books, Kenan grants were awarded to Math Instructor Donald Barry (on problem solving), Music Instructor John P. Swain (a textbook for Music 20), English Instructor Randall Peffer (a book on New England coastal ferry boats), and French Department Chairman Natalie Schorr (a French text on conversation and composition). English Instructor Kelly Wise will continue a project of photographing significant writers and scholars in the United States, for a book; Art Instructor Elaine Spatz-Rabinowitz will continue working on a series of seventeen paintings. Separate computer projects will occupy the summer for Physics Instructor Victor C. Young and Art Department Chairman John McMurray. Other faculty will pursue individual research projects. English Instructor Ada Fan will study five turn-of-the-century playwrights; Father Richard Gross, S.J., will study the changing patterns of secondary education for Catholics during the past decade; Psychology Instructor Margaret Jackson will focus on the complex interactions affecting women's achievement motivation; and English Instructor Elwin Sykes will design a therapeutic program for the Adolescent Parenting Program in Cambridge. □

Alumni Miscellany

This spring the Athletic Department and the Alumni Office will sponsor a lacrosse game and a baseball game between the varsity boys' teams and alumni from any era who can return to play. The lacrosse game will be held on Saturday, 19 May, at noon, and the baseball game will be held on Sunday, 20 May, at 2:00.

Last year's lacrosse game was won by the varsity 10-6, despite some fine play by the class of '71. In 1982 the alumni won 6-5 on an overtime score by Hal Sizer '80.

If you would like to return to play either game, please call Paul Kalkstein, Assistant Director of Athletics, at 617-475-3400, ext. 191.

The Alumni Hockey Team of 1984

On Sunday, 4 March, twenty-five alumni returned to play the varsity hockey team. The warmth of the reception following the game helped to make up for the 12-10 loss to the students. The senior returnee, of course, was Ted Harrison '38.

After embarrassing delays which we sorely wish we could blame on sun spots or Mexican volcanoes, our printer informs us that the Alumni Directory is expected to be printed and available in June. If you have already ordered one, it will be in the mail shortly. If you would

The first All Volunteer Weekend was such a success last fall that it has become an instant and happy tradition. Volunteers should set aside 28-29 September 1984, Friday and Saturday, for the second All Volunteer Weekend. Specific information will be mailed to you in the summer.

On 15 January professional pianist Melville Brown '70 played a concert of works by Haydn, Brahms, Chopin, and Ginastera in the main gallery of the Addison. In a review of the same program that Mr. Brown played in New York a month later, the New York Times praised the "panoramically conceived and, for the most part, skillfully executed performance of the Sonata No. 3 in F minor by Johannes Brahms. This is one of the most difficult pieces in the repertory . . . His interpretation had both momentum and scope." At the Addison it was particularly moving to see and hear this talented alumnus, trained by our own late Albion Metcalf, performing directly in front of a painting by Winslow Homer.

Former Director of the Addison Charles H. Sawyer '24 was honored on 11 November 1983 by the University of Michigan Art Museum, where he served as Director from 1957 to 1972. Among the dignitaries and guests were all the Presidents of the University who served while Mr. Sawyer was Museum Director, and many of his former students, including some who have become museum directors themselves. A bronze bust of Mr. Sawyer is now on permanent exhibit at the Art Museum.

It will not come as a surprise to the 125 alumni, alumnae, and friends of PA who attended the "Andover in Arizona" weekend in November 1982 that the New York Times Travel Section of 5 February 1984 has listed the Arizona Inn as the premier resort in Tucson. It is owned and operated by our host or that occasion, John Greenway '42. The Times states, "The landmark among Tucson's hotels is the elegant Arizona Inn, built more than 50 years ago in traditional Southwestern adobe style. Surrounded by landscaped gardens and trees on 14 acres, the Inn has 85 rooms, the majority of which open onto private patios."

Although plans for the A. Graham Baldwin Cloister in the Cochran Chapel basement proceed apace, and almost half the cost of $50,000 has already been donated, Committee Chairman Alexander B. ("Sandy") Trowbridge '47 wishes to remind alumni and friends that further donations will be eagerly accepted to honor the man who served as School Minister for thirty-six years. Please make checks payable to the Trustees of Phillips Academy, and mail to Joseph C. Mesics, Secretary of the Academy. We also draw our readers' attention to the letter to the editor by Robert A. Muldoon, Jr. '77. □

Wrestling Captain Jason A. Anderson '84 pins his opponent from Vermont Academy

Last fall, Andover Varsity sports ended in a tremendous surge, as every Blue team defeated arch-rival Exeter. This feat was climaxed when the football team travelled to Exeter and trounced the opposition, 28-6.

So far this winter, Andover's teams have performed well. Girls swimming has the best record to date, standing at 6-1. Team captain Susan Deer and the fine swimming of Amy Pritchard, Edna Wong, and Sara Hazelwood led to this success.

Alpine skiing also has an impressive 6-1 record. Captains Steve Hochman and Katie McBride have contributed excellent performances and leadership to the team. Nordic skiing has also raced very well. At the Interschols, the boys placed first and the girls third. Team captains John Ogden and Joy Clendenning have been consistent performers for the squad.

Boys swimming has reached a 7-2 record. Led by two-year co-captains Randy Burke and John Mayoock, and equipped with matching crewcuts, the swimmers have only the Interschols left at press time. Girls squash has also played well, and stands at the 7-3 mark, with especially fine performances by team captain Janine Coleman and number one player Upper Whitney Stewart.

Wrestling stands at 7-5 going into the Interschols. Excellent wrestling by captain Jason Anderson and undefeated Paul O'Boyle at 152 and Dave Castle at 115 has led the team. Girls hockey also has a 7-5 record, paced by captains Laurie Nash and Susan Deeds.

Girls gymnastics holds a 4-3 record. Excellent performances by team co-captain Torrance York have spurred the team, but the injury of co-captain Stephanie Boyko has hurt the gymnasts. Boys track stands 5-4, led by captains Stefan Kaluzny and Jim Moore.

Boys squash has played to an even 4-4 record, with John McCarthy and Dirk Murphy as the captains and Bob Hopkins playing in the number one position. Girls basketball has won four of its nine contests. Captain Melinda Pierce and leading scorer Nancy Colbert lead the team.

Boys hockey has played to a 6-9 record, led by captain Sean Flanagan and prolific scorer John Matterazzo. Boys basketball stands at 5-9, having been up against very tough opposition. Senior captain Kent Lucas has turned in tremendous leadership and performances for the team. Boys gymnastics stand 2-4, despite excellent efforts by co-captains Mike Skinner and Jim Driscoll.

DEATHS

Cornelius G. S. Banta

Cornelius G. S. Banta, 81, schoolmaster at Phillips Academy from 1944 to 1968, died of a heart attack at his home in Winter Park, Florida, on 25 January 1984.

He devoted most of his life to coaching, counseling, and teaching boys. After graduation from Yale University in 1923 as the youngest member of his class, Con spent twelve years working on Wall Street. He began his teaching career in 1935 at the Cranbrook School in Michigan, where he taught for six years. From there he went to St. Paul's School in Concord, New Hampshire, where he taught for three years before coming to Phillips Academy.

Twenty-four years later when he retired in 1968, Con and Lorene continued to live in Andover. He still had plenty of enthusiasm for working with young people and taught an Advanced Placement Calculus course at the Brooks School in North Andover until he moved to Winter Park in 1978. Con never lost his love for learning. He was getting ready to attend his French conversation class when he had his attack.

Many of his friends both on the hill and downtown can attest to his expertise as a bridge player, but one who never made a less skillful and nervous partner feel embarrassed or put down. Con showed this same concern for young faculty members fresh out of college. When he sensed that an inexperienced teacher was frustrated or discouraged, he was very generous in giving encouragement, making sure that the advice was given in a private and caring manner. His fine sense of humor and his ability to deflate pomposity and enliven a faculty meeting by making the right remark at the right time will long be remembered by all his colleagues.

His students will remember him as a patient teacher: encouraging the slow, prodding the lazy, coaxing the discouraged, pushing the able, always seeking to have each student do his best. His classes were always enlivened with wit and humor. Expressions such as, "Even rabbits can multiply, Wickham!" were waiting for the inattentive or careless scholars.

Those of us who had the pleasure of teaching with him in the math department still marvel at his unique teaching style. Connie loved to send his students to the board so he could see the mistakes, promptly correct them, and note the progress of each individual. Thus he always knew where each one stood and could report to colleagues and parents with insight and accuracy. He was never inhibited by the prescribed course outline. If the truth be known, he probably threw away the syllabus when it was handed out at the start of the term because he was always borrowing a copy in the last two weeks to make sure that he had covered everything.

Whether we think of him as tennis coach, adviser to the Pot Pourri, faculty deacon at the chapel, housemaster, or teacher, we recall his sharp insight into a youngster's motives and his concern that each boy be recognized as an individual.

He is survived by his wife, Lorene, who served as the school organist for many years.

Edward M. Harris

Edward M. Harris, a retired career Army Colonel and former teacher at Phillips Academy, died on 19 December after a brief illness. He graduated from the Military Academy at West Point in 1935 and then was stationed at the Presidio in San Francisco and at Fort Benning, GA. Later in his career, he returned to West Point to teach Spanish.

In 1942, during World War II, he was assigned to the operations division of the War Department's General Staff in Washington, DC and in 1945 he joined the staff of General Robert C. Richardson in the Mid-Pacific area.

After the war, he returned again to the Pentagon for two more tours as executive officer in the office of the Chief of Military History and later in the office of the Secretary of Defense for Internal Security Affairs.

He began teaching Spanish at Phillips Academy in 1961 after his retirement from the Army. In 1963 he was named the director of the program known then as Schoolboys Abroad (now named School Year Abroad), a program that sends students to Spain and France for a year to live and study. He retired from the Andover faculty in 1973.

Col. Harris was a well known figure in Andover, serving as an Andover Selectman for two terms, a position from which he retired last year. He also served on the board of the Historical Society and was active in many other civic and social organizations. Col. Harris also authored a history of Andover.

He leaves his wife, Alice S. (Rice) Harris; two sons, Maj. Edward M. Jr.; and George R. Harris; four daughters, Susan, Priscilla, Eleanor and Martha; and seven grandchildren.

A memorial service was held in the Cochran Chapel and burial was at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

Ellen Olivier

"Alas, I have done nothing this day! What? Have you not lived? It is not only the fundamental but the noblest of your occupations." —Montaigne

Ellen Olivier's life exemplified Montaigne's ideal of living as the noblest occupation.

She died on 28 February, leaving her husband Dan, Instructor of French at PA, and children Dan, Tom, Robert, and Ellen.

Ellen was a life artist. That her imagination transformed the stuff of daily life was witnessed most clearly in her illustrated journals displayed at the Addison Gallery's "Show of Hands" exhibit last spring, a different page turned each day of the show. After seeing these journals, even those who did not know Ellen could realize how fully she lived, by experiencing her witty, wise prose style and clear-sighted illustrations.

While at Andover, Ellen (a professional actress) directed plays, counseled students, taught English As a Second Language, and used her fluent knowledge of Spanish and French to serve as Language Department secretary. With Dan, Ellen also sailed the Mediterranean in White Jacket and enhanced the quality of life at both the Barcelona and the Rennes campuses of School Year Abroad. Her short stories and letters from abroad captured the texture of her life, always including humor. She fascinated children with her Splish Splash Book, a printed book that expanded from a tiny packet to a large folio. With children she was uncondescending, with adults always direct. She paid people the compliment of telling them exactly what she thought. Her friends will miss her. May her delight in the life of the mind stay with us.

1919 H. Templeton Brown, Winnetka, IL; 26 September 1983 (see class notes)

H. Templeton Brown, prominent Chicago lawyer and senior partner in the firm of Mayer, Brown & Platt, died at the age of 81 after a long illness.

Mr. Brown, after his graduation from Andover, received an A.B. degree from Yale in 1923 and was graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1926.

He practiced law in a family firm in St. Joseph, Missouri from 1926-1942; he then joined his present firm as a trial lawyer. A recognized expert in anti-trust matters, he participated in many important trials involving the packing, cheese, and publishing industries. Mr. Brown was well known as an authority on aviation law, and advised United Airlines for many years as its outside counsel and as a Director of that corporation. He served on the boards of Scott, Foresman & Co. and A. M. Castle & Co., and for several years was a member of the Board of Passavant Memorial Hospital. Mr. Brown was a past member of Andover's Alumni Council and also served as a Class Agent.

He is survived by his wife of 55 years, Jessie McLaren Hosmer Brown. The couple had two children, H. Templeton Brown, Jr. '48 who survives his father, and Jessie B. Evans, deceased, and five granddaughters.

1920 Stewart Sanders, Whitefield, NH; 15 September 1983 (see class notes)

1921 Kempton Clark, Little Compton, RI; 13 October 1983 (see class notes) Mr. Clark, upon graduation from Andover, majored in economics at Yale, graduating with a B.A. degree in 1925. He then joined Hollingsworth and Vose Co. becoming director of technical control in the paper mill. He subsequently became chief chemist at American Seal-Kap Corp. in Natick, Mass. He was granted several patents on caps and covers for containers used in the dairy industry and also for paper manufacturing machinery. In 1943 he became manager of the fiber and leatherboard mills of the George O. Jenkins Co. of Bridgewater, Mass. In 1946, settling in Little Compton, he was a self-employed owner/salesman/wholesaler of Kempton Clark Advertising Specialties, covering Rhode Island and South-eastern Mass.

On a school questionnaire Mr. Clark filled out in 1970, he responded to the question: "What in your current life is of greatest interest to you?" by answering, "Finance and Phillips Academy." Mr. Clark's long-time devotion and interest in the school was attributable to the fact that nine generations of Clarks, from his great-great-great-grandfather, Peter Clark, who graduated circa 1801, to his son, Warren K. Clark, who graduated in 1965, received diplomas at Phillips Academy. He is a direct descendant of Jane Aikens Clark(e) whose son, James '89, set up one of the first scholarships in her memory in 1870. Mr. Clark took great pride in his family's association with Phillips Academy.

Mr. Clark was on the Alumni Council and was a Class Secretary for over thirty years, fulfilling this task with enthusiasm, skill, and love; he reveled in learning of the comings and goings and the life stories of his classmates. He also devoted his time and energy to, being Reunion Chairman for many successful class reunions over the years.

Besides his wife, Janice (Cole) Clark, he is survived by a son, Warren K. Clark '65 of Vineyard Haven, Mass; two daughters, Susan C. Westin of Brockton, Mass., and Nancy Clark of Little Compton; and four grandchildren.

Irving E. Rogers, Andover, MA; 17 November 1983 (see class notes)

Irving Rogers, chairman of the board of the Lawrence Eagle Tribune Publishing Co., and publisher of that award-winning paper from 1924 until 1982, was a distinguished and dedicated member of his community who served the people, the business community, numerous institutions and charitable groups in the Merrimack Valley since he began his business career in Lawrence over 40 years ago. He was a benefactor to a host of community groups — best known were the Lawrence Boys Club, which he served as a board member and president, and the Bon Secours Hospital. In 1976 the hospital named its new acute care facility after him. He was the recipient of scores of awards, honors and citations for his good works. Death came at his home in Andover, at age 81, after an illness of several months.

Mr. Rogers was a Lawrence native and attended Lawrence High School before transferring to Phillips Academy. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1925 and then attended the University of Wisconsin Journalism School. He went to work for his father, the late Alexander H. Rogers, beginning his career as a reporter/photographer for the paper then known as The Lawrence Daily Eagle Tribune and The Evening Tribune.

He leaves his wife of 55 years, Martha Buttrick AA '23, and two sons, Irving E. Jr. and Alexander. A third son, Allan B. Rogers, died in 1962.

John H. Porter, Jr., Newport Beach, CA; 27 July 1983 (see class notes) John H. Porter, former United Airlines pilot and race car driver, has died suddenly of acute cardiac arrest. He was 64. Mr. Porter was known in Newport Beach as "Mr. Philanthropy" having given to many local charities over the years. Hoag Memorial Hospital Presbyterian recently held a ceremony dedicating the hospital's new cardiac unit — The John H. Porter, Jr. Memorial Cardiology Department — in his memory.

In 1979 he endowed the John H. Porter, Jr. Bicentennial Instructorship at Phillips Academy for "a teacher in his or her early years at the Academy who shows great promise." The Instructorship rotates every three years and at the present time is held by French Instructor Henry Wilmer.

He is survived by his wife of 12 years, Marcella; two sons, John H. Porter III of Kittery Point, Maine, and Larry Porter of Australia; a daughter, Susan Murphy of Fallbrook; and four grandchildren.

- Kimberly Hillier, class of '85 at Cornell University, was the victim of an automobile accident. She was the daughter of James Hillier and Susan Baldwin Smith Hillier of Princeton, NJ.

Miss Hillier had a great interest in Andover and had expressed her wish to help her school, especially as an Addison Gallery Campaign volunteer as her special field and abiding interest was art. She was the recipient of the Morse Prize in Art in June 1981.

Besides her parents she is survived by her brother, James Hillier; an uncle, Nathaniel Smith, faculty member at Phillips Academy, and a cousin, Scott Smith '81. The family has asked that donations in her memory be sent to Phillips Academy.

ABBOT

- 1904 Elizabeth Schneider, Huntington, NY; 29 December 1983. Miss Elizabeth Schneider, 98, born in Lawrence, Massachusetts, has died at the Hilaire Farm Nursing Home in Huntington, New York.

A woman of outstanding intellect, Miss Schneider, a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Vassar College in 1909, headed her graduating class of over 200 members, earning straight A's in every subject for every semester during all four years of her college career — the first time in the history of the college that any woman had attained such high standing. She was also chosen to deliver a commencement address at her graduation.

She modestly referred to her occupation as "author's assistant" when, it seems, she was indeed the actual author of many published works. In an article written for the Andover Bulletin in 1936 she says, "... for instance, one of them [professors] handed me a mass of unsorted notes out of which to construct the book in my own way. ... another had not a thing on paper; he asked me to attend his lectures at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and take notes, which formed a basis for the book I wrote for him." She free-lanced an assortment of subjects: parliamentary law, industrial microbiology, sanitation, English grammar, harmony, mineralogy and crystallography, art, travel, physics, psychology, education, philosophy, a treatise on the manufacture of worsted, and a study of the principles of word formation in ancient Greek.

She was active in the Abbot Alumnae Association and the Boston Abbot Club; also the Boston Vassar Club and the Boston College Club. Her father, Franz Schneider, owned a jewelry shop in Lawrence, and Miss Schneider, between her job as author/editor, traveled weekly from her residence in Boston to Lawrence to manage her father's shop.

Her mother was Elizabeth Sweeney, and her first cousin is Alice Sweeney, Andover resident and former English teacher and administrator at Abbot Academy for many years. She is also survived by her brother, Franz Schneider, of Oyster Bay, New York, who graduated from Andover in 1904.

- 1909 Helen M. Hazelwood, Plaistow, NH; 1981

- 1916 Dorothy Pillsbury Bartlett, Severna Park, MD; 14 April 1983. Mrs. Bartlett was very active in community affairs in Annapolis and Severna Park, MD, having served the League of Women Voters, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Colonial Dames of America, and the YWCA, among others. She also served as a hostess in the Maryland State House in Annapolis from 1951 to 1958.

Mrs. Bartlett was a very active and interested supporter of Abbot Academy, having served for several years as Reunion Chariman, Class Secretary, as well as Class Agent. She had mentioned many times in her letters of her affection for Abbot and her fond memories of school days. Her mother, Annie Watts Pillsbury, as well as aunts, a sister and nieces all attended Abbot.

She is survived by her husband of 65 years, Richard, a former Naval Officer; four sons, Richard C. Jr., Joseph P., Dr. Thomas B., and Peter G.

Concord, MA 01742

As I sit down to write these notes, I suddenly realize that since our class graduated, 73 classes have left Andover Hill to start the serious business of life. Some have become famous — some have become rich, but all have in one way or another been influenced, whether they realize it or not, by their association with a school that for more than two hundred years has left its mark on those who were privileged to be a part of it.

I am sorry to have to report the deaths of several more of our classmates. Fred Smith, whose grandfather was one of the founders of Abbot Academy, died last July at the age of 92. He was born in Lawrence, MA, and during his active life was in the insurance business. He was very active in civic and church affairs and was a life-long and devoted Episcopalian. After spending most of his active life in Andover, he moved to South Yarmouth, MA. He is survived by a son, Peter; six grandchildren and one great-grandchild. His wife was the late Louise (Wright) Smith.

Elmer Robinson died in July at age 92. He was born 20 September 1890, in Providence, RI. After graduating from Andover in 1910, he went on to Dartmouth where he was a member of the class of 1914 and served for some time as Class Secretary. He lived for a number of years in Concord, MA, and before retiring owned Pollard Opticians, Newbury Street, Boston. After his retirement, he took up woodworking, and was the originator of the "Dartmouth Clock," a timepiece much in demand. He also enjoyed writing, and contributed poems and prose to the Argus-Champion. He leaves a daughter, Margaret Manning, Wilmington, DE; two sons, John M. Robinson, Wellesley; and James V. Robinson, Dallas, TX; eight grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren. His wife, Christine (Drysto) Robinson, died 12 May 1980 in Hanover, NH.

I have also been informed by the Alumni Office of the death of our classmate, Sanford Corey, on 9 November 1983 in Olney, Maryland. I do not have on file any recent information, but the following is a brief biography which I received when I first became your Secretary:

Sanford was an accountant with Lever Brothers until his retirement in 1956. Since then he has had several jobs in the accounting field until his final retirement in 1966 due to a heart attack. He was interested in philately, light gardening, and ornithology, and was a member of the Maryland Ornithological Society. He was born 27 October 1891; was married in 1927; has one son and two grandsons.

Just as I was about to mail these notes to Tom Regan, editor of the Bulletin, I received word of another death in the rapidly diminishing 1910 family: Stan Smith died at his home in Longmeadow, MA on 30 November 1983. Stan and your Secretary were the last two survivors of 1910 to graduate from Andover and then go on to graduate from Yale in 1914. If I survive myself for another quarter, I will write about Stan's 93 years in more detail.

A few days later I have learned of another death, which now leaves only seven of us. Sic transit gloria mundi. Thomas L. Bayne passed away on 16 December 1983 in Fairhope, Alabama at the age of 91. Tom was born in New Orleans and attended Yale for two years after Andover. He went on to receive his degree from North Carolina State College in 1914. After a stint of high school teaching and army service, Tom got his masters and doctorate degrees at Cornell. He remained at Cornell as a professor in the department of education for 31 years. He is survived by his wife, Janet Bayne, of Fairhope; four daughters, 13 grandchildren and 16 great-grandchildren.

It seems that the Class of 1914 is not very good at writing and giving information to the Class Secretary/Agent.

However, those of us who read the Bulletin will be glad to know that a swell note came in from Bill Foy who is living near Monterey, California. He walks a mile and a half every day, and particularly enjoys the big patch of woods where he has made friends with a lot of the wild inhabitants including a number of deer. Bill's present address is, 320 Pleasant Valley Road, Aptos, CA 95003. I know he would be glad to hear from any of you, and so would I!

Mrs. Elsas and I celebrated our 60th wedding anniversary in Winter Park, Florida with friends for three days. It was a great time!

Don't forget our 70th Reunion next June. All of you will hear further from me and Andover, but plan for it!

Your Secretary hoped that this second report of Classmates would account for all those living members, but regretfully no replies have come from Bailey, Barnhart, Blank, Carpenter, Ellis, Gamble, Gellalty, Haughton, Riesenbergh, and Upton. The Alumni Office is still trying to locate the fellows whose names were listed as "Lost" in the last Bulletin.

I received a sad note from Mrs. George Nevitt of Oshkosh, WI. Her news, which we had not learned before, was that George passed away on 18 December 1981. We certainly send our most sincere sympathy for her loss. George was one of our stalwarts.

Paul Dodge's card was returned from Providence, RI with the notation that he no longer was at our mailing address. If anyone changes his mailing address, he must notify those he wants to continue to contact, for the postal regulations limits the forwarding of mail to only 12 months, and after that mail is returned or sent to the dead letter office.

We did hear from Maurice Gould, Harold Thomas, and Charles Wood on the first request, but news arrived too late to be included last issue. Maurice is living alone in Wilmington, DE, but as always he is interested in his fellow classmates. Harold Thompson, in Hightstown, NJ, sends his best wishes and is keeping busy. Charlie Wood's card was forwarded to 235 Lancaster Ave., Devon Manor, Devon, PA 19233. It sounds as though he liked this location, but maybe we should set up a plan of chaperoning his "120 gals and only 12 boys."

From the second mailbag, James Carter in Hampton Highlands, ME, writes he is taking an active part, at age 85, in town affairs, which is wonderful. He is already planning to attend our 70th reunion in '86. It is great to have an optimist among us, for it will not be too long before we must start making plans for another happy get-together. Charlie Durant, from his new address at 2448 Columbus Drive, Clearwater, FL, writes that he is finding life still worthwhile due to a lovely and cooperative wife and his own desire to continue to be part of this fast-changing world. Bud Fisher still plays a good enough game of golf so that he does not fear joining a good foursome. Bob Haff on Sanibel Island, FL, comes back into the fold. He says this card was the first contact in 20 years. I can vouch that he is hard to find on the island, for there are many different areas there with the same street name. Bob is active and busy at 86. Marston Heard has been busy marrying off a grandson and a granddaughter. For the history buffs, he reports that one wedding was in the old Landmark Church in Center Sandwich, NH and the other in a still older church in New Market, NH. To us old descendants of the Mayflower and the Arabella, such old landmarks are few that remain for the younger generation to know.

Chuck Swan writes from a new address, 907 30th St., Apt. #2, Parkersburg, WV. He is sure a happy classmate at 90. He is enthusiastically coming back to participating in a fairly full life. A recent eye operation has restored sight in his left eye. We can cheer for him. His patron saint, Paul Revere, did not make his goal, but Chuck says he will.

I hope I will have more news from those that are missing. May 1984 be a good year for all of us. Gilbert H. Hood, Jr., Secretary.

It is good to hear from Stan Cheney, who tells us that he retired in 1966 after 30 years as an officer of Southbridge (MA) Savings Bank. He has been an active Mason and has received a 60-year pin. He reports nine grandchildren and three great-granddaughters. At age 85 he had a knee operation, but gets around nicely with a cane.

At this writing (Feb. 12) it is a little early to prognosticate the attendance at our 65th Reunion, but already Joe Chatman and Leo Poor have indicated they will be with us, with their wives, Geri and Mary Margaret, respectively. In due course, we will all get the details, following which we'll have a good idea of the assemblage.

A good letter from Russell Houghton tells us that he is o.k., except for emphysema. For a long time he was an expert on English Country, Square and Morris Dancing. More recently, he says, "Dr. Pfatfeicher's Harmony Course is paying off. I find myself making obligatos and descants to all those lovely 16th and 17th century tunes," which he hopes to get published before too long. His wife died two years ago, and he keeps house for himself at 161 West Street, New York City.

As I wrote our fellow members, our Class suffered an irreparable loss when Temp Brown died on 28 September. As a loyal son of Andover as well as our Alumni Fund Agent, he revitalized the interest of many people in PA. On a broader scale, he was recognized as a leading citizen of Chicago, the Middle West and the legal profession generally. After Andover, in 1923, Temp graduated from Yale, and Harvard Law School in 1926. He then practised with the family firm in his native St. Joseph, MO. In 1942 he was called to Chicago to join a 102-year-old firm which eventually became Mayer Brown & Platt, and he rose to become the first non-family member to head the firm. He was a recognized anti-trust expert and authority on aviation law, serving as a Director of and Counsel for United Airlines. Also, he was on the boards of A.M. Castle & Co., Scott, Foresman & Co. and Passavant Memorial Hospital. For a while Temp was involved in the Yale Alumni Fund, but his affection for Andover was even greater, and he not only became our Class Agent but also was constructively active in the Bicentennial Campaign. He was a crack golfer, a raconteur and a valued friend. In 1928 he married Jessie McLaren Hosmer, who survives him at 1010 Hubbard Lane, Winnetka IL 60093, as does their son, H. Templeton Brown, Jr. '48, also of Winnetka, and five granddaughters.

Bill Romney died back on 9 August 1980. Since there was no published obituary to do him justice, it has taken a little time to get everything together, but his wife, Mary, and daughter, Mary Ellen Baude, have been most helpful. Bill spent two years at PA and was active in music, leading the Jazz Band and singing with the Glee Club and Choir. He went on to graduate at Yale in 1923. His entire business career was with Proctor & Gamble, mostly at their headquarters in Cincinnati, where he was a respected and beloved key executive. In the five years prior to his retirement in 1966, he ran P & G's college scholarship program, which took him all over the US and proved most interesting. He was a dedicated Episcopalian and was close to the late great Bishop Henry Hobson '10. He was instrumental in setting up the Majorie P. Lee Home for the Aged in Cincinnati, where he and Mary eventually lived. Also, they built a house on the southern shore of Rhode Island for vacations; and he died while being there after a long and painful illness. His daughter Mary writes: "His years at Andover were special ones to him. He loved going to reunions and often planned business trips to coincide with their dates." He is survived by his wife of 50 years, Mary Elizabeth Romney of 3580 Shaw Avenue, Cincinnati 45208, and three daughters, Mary Ellen Baude of Denver, Emily C. Romney of Cambridge, MA and Frances N. Baude of Cincinnati.

Although the death of Charles S. Parker was reported in the Class Notes of the April 1981 Andover Bulletin, it was not picked up in the school records. Charlie was a loyal son of Andover and with his wife, Ginny, were highly congenial attendants at Reunions. Virginia survives him and has moved from their long-time home in Meriden, CT, to 29 Pointina Road, Westbrook, CT 06498. There is also a son, Charles B., also of Westbrook, and a daughter, Sally P. Allard of Southington, CT. Ginny writes, "I hope the new grandson of 2½ years can go to Andover. His father says, "yes."

Very little news of any classmates. Each month I see Derick January and Ed Greene at our Yale '24 luncheons at the Graduate Club in New Haven. Allan Carmichael, who used to attend the luncheons regularly, has been laid up with serious back trouble and has not been able to attend for some months. Your scribe is busy transcribing Audubon letters from 1841 through 1855 and thereby getting a glimpse of what certain aspects of life were like over 102 years ago in the U.S.A.: Letters traveling from NYC to Philadelphia arrived the next day, as did those from NY to Boston. Coal in Cleveland in 1855 cost $3.00 a ton; you made your own goose quill pen with your pen knife and your iron based ink is as clear and bright today as it was when you wrote a century ago.

I am busy at the moment getting out a letter to classmates at Yale, exhorting them to return to their 60th Reunion, 31 May-3 June.

It is sad to have to close our notice with the death of Stew Sanders who served the class so long and so well. Mrs. Sanders' address is Whitefield, NH. The sympathy of the class is extended to her and their children.

It will be hard to take over for Kemp Clark

after his term of over 25 years, but I'll try, especially if you all will keep me informed of your activities from time to time. Along with the congratulatory messages I received, and notes on Christmas cards, I have gleaned the following:

From Youngstown, NY comes word that Ted Booth is planning a week's skiing this winter with his daughter in Steamboat Springs, CO. He is just getting over an operation!

During this past year, Gerald Dorman celebrated his 80th birthday, made a trip to Venice for a World Medical Assembly, received a distinguished service award at the New York State Medical Convention, and survived the birth of his fifth great-grandchild.

Al Wilson writes that he lives on a high bluff on Martha's Vineyard, and, on a clear day, can almost see Kemp Clark's home over the water at Little Compton, RI.

It was nice to get a congratulatory note from Abe Clark who is still in Canton, Ohio, after many years in the steel business, as I was too, but in the Pittsburgh district.

Just before Christmas (to transfer Kemp's records to the new Class Sec'y), Jan Clark made a trip to Orleans, driven by Ted Harrison '38 and his wife, Marge, who live near Jan. They stayed for a lunch (on Pleasant Bay scallops. . . m-m-m-m). My wife, Mary Lee, and I enjoyed their visit very much.

And now for the sad news: the death of Joseph Small, occurring about two years ago, was reported by Barrett Nichols. Also, we have lost Gordon Macgregor, who died a few days after Christmas, as reported by his wife in a note to me. Gordon and I had been friends both at Andover and at Yale. Irving E. Rogers died, after a long illness, on 17 November 1983. Irving was a well-known figure in the Merrimack Valley, having been editor and publisher of the Lawrence Eagle Tribune for many years, and active in town and civic affairs. He certainly will be missed by the community and his family. He is survived by his wife, Martha, and their two sons, Irving E., Jr., and Alexander H.

And lastly, I know we are all saddened by Kemp Clark's death in October of last year. He had long been our class secretary, and as such was our general factotum at reunions and such, and always did a grand job, even though in the last years he was not as mobile as he once was. He will surely be missed, especially by your new secretary.

On behalf of the members of the class of 1921, let me extend sympathy to all the families of our deceased classmates. Do let me hear from you.

A Christmas card from Harry Brandman says that he is enjoying life in Florida despite the handicap of failing eyesight.

Jack Watson is back home after surgery in a New York hospital.

Ben Cutler says that he is in good shape, physically, and plays tennis regularly. He says that what he cares most about is his singing which is getting better, and he says "sounds crazy."

Hoddy Cole reports the recent death of Shad Osborne's wife after a long illness. Shad is also on the sick list himself.

Your Secretary was hospitalized three times during 1983 and has been undergoing chemotherapy for some months. As of this date, he is in good shape and carrying on his several interests. He continues his interest in Yale undergraduates and enjoyed the company at dinner recently of Tom Giella, the 1983 football captain, and Mike Curtin, our promising young sophomore quarterback, one of the nicest kids you'll ever meet. He was captain of football, basketball, and track at his high school in Salt Lake City. He'll stick to football and track at Yale.

Inadvertently, the name of one of our most loyal alumni, Les Sherrill, was omitted from our NON SIBI Associates listing of Annual Fund donors in the 1982-83 Giving Report. Les has been a most industrious and loyal worker for the Alumni Fund for many years and should have been recognized as an outstanding '22er.

Fifteen cards went out and just see how many answers were returned! Each and every one of you is very special. Through the years I have come to know many of you better than I did during our years at Abbot. Don't turn down a job like this — it surely has its rewards!

The first reply came from Kay Gage (Sister Mary Anselm.) It took her months to learn to graduate from a wheelchair and walker after she broke her hip last year, but now uses a cane only when outdoors! A daily two-mile walk is possible much of the year. Calling herself the family scribe, Kay arranges conferences and retreats at their center, and writes most of the letters that go out. She was glad to hear from Bea Goff Dowell at Christmas.

Jane Baldwin says that "in spite of my appalling age [oh, come now, Jane!] Abbot is very much alive in my memories" and a chance to reminisce gives her quite an attack of nostalgia.

Gertrude Franklin Callahan, whose husband died last year, is adjusting as we all must do at such times. She keeps busy with her usual commitments, church involvements and interesting social ones as well. It all helps.

After hitting the deck when the Rotterdam gave a lurching pitch during her world cruise last year, Juliet Haskell Carrington decided a ship was no place for a woman with a game leg who's used a cane since '79! She travels to see her daughter Juliet in Wayne, PA, who is a geologist and Assistant Curator of the Bryn Mawr Mineral Collection and who is otherwise busy with other geological interests. Her son George is a professor at Northern Illinois University, in the English Dept. Her grandson has just received his MS in Computer Science & Math, and is working in Bedford, MA. Our Julie reads the Class Notes avidly and declares that we are a durable lot. Guess she is right!

Marian Rugg Caywood sent news at Christmas of her daughter Abby who lives in California and whose two daughters live in Portland and Seattle. Since Marian doesn't travel far these days, they "burn up Ma Bell's lines!" Her card that came in February said she has no news but sends love to all. I don't care when I receive news, just having it come is a joy.

What a pleasure to hear from Marian Saunders Cheesborough's middle son, George, also living in Ashville, that his mother is fine, but finds writing difficult. She now has two great-granddaughters in addition to three grandchildren. 18 February will be Sandy's 80th birthday. Congratulations as you join the crowd, my dear! In May she will make her usual visit to Myrtle Beach, SC. Our sincere thanks to George, please, Sandy.

Flip Phillips Cooke says she and Ted thoroughly enjoy being in the north country in their own home, contented and happy. The grandchildren are growing older, getting to college age, or finishing and getting started out in the world.

It was good to have a Christmas card from Anne Vanderslice Cagno. She speaks of remembering when Ruth Hill English had a job at Hampton Institute, where Anne lives, before Ruth was married. Anne had kept in close touch with Alice Tower Kirkby and will miss her.

I am sure that you all heard from Ruth Hill English about donations to the Academy. As she has lived on the Hill, she sees both sides of the combining of the schools better than some of us. Her studio is still open twice a week but she finds that she is not as energetic as she wishes; has been battling a mighty virus. In March she will be going to Sarasota to recuperate. Our wishes for a complete recovery.

Barb Goss finds there's never a dull moment being retired and 81! She has joined those of us in the hearing aid brigade (me too), but the arthritis in her neck is so improved that she "feels like a new woman." With a father (1890) and a brother (1919) that graduated from Phillips, and a sister Gertrude (1917) from Abbot, Barbie feels a close attachment to Andover.

It was a delight to receive news about Mary Polk Overstreet from her daughter Lynn Chatfield of Kansas City, MO. She has a second daughter in St. Louis. Bug's health has improved, and she is now living in the Care Center of the Retirement Village, 500 N. Murray Rd., Lee's Summit, MO 64043. I am sure she would like to hear from some of you. There are now five grandchildren whose ages range from twelve to thirty years!

Isn't it great to hear from our friends' children? I had a letter from Jimmy Burr Sanders' daughter Barbara Dadmun (Abbot '42), telling me that Jimmy has moved to a lovely condominium on the Cape. Her address is 19-1 Cranberry Knoll, Dennis, MA 02638. I hope we will hear more about it when we get to the "S" list later this year.

Do remember that I have up-to-date addresses and would be glad to send them to you. The Bulletin Office keeps me notified as they receive them. I did not know of Alex Wilkins Talmadge death until the word came from there. I know it was hard to lose three of our class in '83, but they will not be forgotten while they are in our hearts and memories. Perhaps it is because I am well over eighty-two (I think the oldest in the class) that I feel we cannot truly "lose" those we care for. While we live, they live!

All of the people who answered my cards sent best wishes and love to each of you as I do, my dears. Olivia

Howard Moody is a 79-year-old dynamo who denies he is interesting. He works with SCORE (Service Corp of Retired Executives) who helps small businesses. He is Secretary-Treasurer of the Country Squires (retirees from the New London, NH area). Other jobs of service: Treasurer of Library; Director of NH Library Friends; and Treasurer of the local Red Cross. Mitch Posey continues traveling, doing architectural photography, despite such activities as two weddings, three reunions, two graduations, touring the Canadian Rockies, visiting Calgary, New Mexico, and Ireland. Mitch and Sue are in good health and will attend granddaughter Lisa's graduation from Harvard. Class Notes in the Bicentennial issue of 1978, relate how beautifully Lisa '80 danced at that gala.

Frank Newman, in a note to Bill Gay, who has been (and still is) our excellent Class Agent for these many years (26), quotes the words of the Psalmist "there is strength, labor, and sorrow, for it is soon cut off and we fly away." His feeling is that so long as there is another day, we can thank God and try to make this a better place for the next generation. Concerning the awfulness of nuclear war, he mentions Lincoln's argument that the best way to get rid of enemies is to make friends of them. He has not indicated whether a government can make friends of enemies who fail to abide by treaties—but then, that's another keg of worms! Last July Al Buttrick had pins removed from his legs broken two years ago. Five mornings a week he works the switchboard and does general office work at the local Episcopal Church. Quote from him: "considering the alternative, being 80 is not so bad."

Bill Hutchinson still sells Real Estate after retiring as a Sales and Marketing Manager in industry. His progeny: five grandchildren, all college graduates; two grandchildren still in high school; one grandchild just entered U. of New Hampshire; two great-grandchildren (one boy, one girl). Macaleuy Smith, retired judge, gave the only clue to the list of lost classmates published recently: Briggs Gettys changed his address and now lives in Chapel Hill. He and Mac were childhood friends in Louisville. Briggs was a scholar in Soundology, was involved in submarines in W.W. II, and was associated with G.E. at Pittsfield and Louisville. Apparently a hobby was painting.

Through the Yale Alum News, it is revealed that Eric Haight, and wife Frannie, took a holiday in Bermuda with an entourage of 12 children and grandchildren.

It is immodest and mercenary to mention that by the time these Notes appear, my book, titled Adventures and Misadventures in the Stock Market, will be in print. If you buy a copy, that will make two — the author will buy the other one.

Bob Hamilton '24 was kind enough to send a clipping from the Hartford Courant and reported the death of Harry G. Remington on 21 December 1983. His alma mater, Brown, will remember his activity in boosting the Brown football teams. He was associated with the Mutual Life Insurance Company of NY and the Massachusetts Mutual Insurance Co. over a period of 35 years. Besides his wife, Mary, he is survived by a son, David, a daughter, Katherine Delventhal, and four grandchildren. For the Class, your Secretary extends heartfelt sympathy to Mary and all Harry's family.

I have been racking my brain to think what I should write this time and I have decided to start with a confession, the content of which you might already know — I didn't send out any post cards. I took to heart what Ruth Holmes Durant said on her last card — that I had "gone to the well once too often." I agreed with her and decided I would give you a rest, and in talking with Paula at the Bulletin office, we decided I would just send along whatever came in. Not much has come in, and it is sad.

In December I had a letter from Martha Buttrick Rogers saying that her husband, Irving E. Rogers PA '21, had died after a long illness. I believe I had mentioned in a previous report that Irving was very ill. I also received a copy of a beautiful tribute written by a close friend, and a copy of the obituary in the Andover Townsman. Irving was certainly a fine person, very much interested and active in his home and in the Andover and Lawrence communities and must be very much missed. I am sure we all join in sending our sympathy and love to Martha and her family. (Please see his obituary elsewhere in this issue).

I recently received word that Betty Chapman Babson's son had reported the death of his mother on 25 October 1983. Betty lived in Leesburgh, VA. We express sympathy to her husband, George J. Babson, and their son.

Please, would someone like to take over the job of Class Secretary for Abbot '23? Truly, it is fun hearing from our classmates and I am sure that you would enjoy it too. Please think it over.

And again, thank you all for your help all these years that I have been sending SOS cards. I love you for it — in fact, I love you period. I hope next time there will be more news — maybe some new great-grands!

We had hoped to see the Locketts but John and Marge had to go out of town. Both the Taites and Locketts plan to be at our 60th. The Locketts were vacationing on Padre Island again. Later from Key Largo, FL came the Ottaway's card. Their son is President of Campbell-Ewald Advertising and his office is in Miami. Jack wishes he and Roberta could attend the 60th. In any case, if they do, his dislocated finger would prevent his piano playing. Jack sure could play at our 50th! We'll miss them. Art Schulte wrote that the card showing Bancroft Hall being moved brought back a "few nostalgic moments." Thanks for your luncheon or dinner invite, Art.

Charlie Sawyer was in Andover in September and made a tape about his reminiscences of the Cochran era — a book will eventually be made of all his contributions to PA. Charlie reports being busy in Ann Arbor with fund raising chores and he also wants to finish his book on Architecture of the German Americans in Texas which will be published in '85. Charlie and Kitty will go to his Yale 55th and a week later to our 60th at Andover.

Norm Thorn thinks my 80 years are showing — I sent a letter to the old folks home where he and Lo had signed up, but found the people were too old for them, so they resigned. Sorry, Norm. Ed Thompson in Lake San Marcos writes that sometimes his golf is a delight, sometimes a disaster. The Thompsons were in the East this Christmas visiting son Tony and family.

The Dick Vaughans had a busy Christmas with their sons arriving — one from Toronto — and they all gathered at the other son's new home which is complete with hot tub! Afterwards they took a trip to Sun Rise Springs. Adele recommended two books: Jack Parr's biography and Martin Luther King by John Ansbro.

Too bad Tom Ward had to give up working on the 1924 Directory. He did such an excellent job on our 50th. The Wards also gave up their usual Florida vacation. And the Les Hickses cancelled their trip this year to Bradenton, FL. He feels the trip seems longer and longer although his "odometer" is about the same. Les and Florence have only skipped two of their twelve winters. Their granddaughter went to Sydney, Australia as part of her college program. Reg Holt's widow, Helen, thought the Yale 55th was "a grand occasion." She's still busy with her Drama Groups, also readings for the elderly. Son Steve and wife produced a granddaughter on 10 July. Congrats are in order!

A surprise card from Cary Haskell's daughter — now Peggy Moss — tells us she reads the 1924 news — she was Abbot '71. She sent along a picture of her latest news — Michael Moss, born in October of 1982. Ralph Blank writes, although retired he seems to be busier all the time. "It is amazing how many activities a senior citizen can be involved in; especially chores around the house. I don't know how Grace finds so much for me to do." Gardie and Betty Brown had an outstanding trip abroad. Two weeks on the Argonaut in the Mediterranean and a week motoring in Southern Spain — "not a cloud in the sky the whole trip." They'll be in Santa Barbara again this winter.

Roland Walker's son David (the geologist) has moved from Harvard to Columbia's Lamont Lab. Roland drove down to see him but mainly to look over his new grandson. Roland had them all for Christmas, and daughter Helen who lives in Cambridge, MA also joined them. Roland says he's been doing much snow shoveling this winter. Bill Wadhams and Bob Clark make their own Christmas cards each year. Bill the artist and Bob the photographer. Bill and Gert like their new home in Sarasota, FL. They entertained the Larsens while in Florida. Bill reported Grant Flynn's death on 26 October 1983. Bob Clark's card was a picture he took on the Rhine. Says he also made this trip 51 years ago. They plan to look into Norway, Denmark, and Sweden this summer — we hope after our 60th. Bob says he's cutting down on his community activities to only three boards. Isn't it always the busiest people who are asked to head up projects and charitable organizations? Esther keeps busy with her jazzercise classes and and needlepoint. Dick Chace and Mary had a visit with George Mumby who had just returned from the East visiting his daughters.

The Bob Woods also saw "Gige" in San Diego while they were visiting their daughter. Bob and Gige played golf together.

We heard from two Profs who taught in Vermont, Don Ballou who was at Middlebury for 34 years as a Math Professor, and George Beecher who taught at Goddard College. George winters in Clearwater, FL, but still summers in Vermont. We were sorry to hear of George's wife's death.

Jack Basham says he uses the New York Times as his calendar these days, but when the breezes start across the lake he knows his outdoor chores start — getting the house and grounds ready for winter. The last item are the leaves. Why not leave them as Terry Keeps does — he likes to walk on them.

Maggie Block, Phil's widow, was sorry to miss all the big events at our Yale 55th, but read all the accounts. "Let me know when you come through Chicago. All's well here."

As I mentioned in the newsletter, Morry Skinner died on 2 November 1983. He certainly is missed by his wife and family. The sympathy of the Class is extended to them.

Dinny Harriman wrote two letters to find out the date (8-10 June) of our 60th. He and J.P. have planned a trip to Naples, Italy so they will take in both. Their daughter wants them to cruise around the Mediterranean. Dinny's son-in-law is a commander of subs (U.S. and Nato) in the Mediterranean.

Had a letter from Air Marshall Sir John D'Arcy Baker-Carr. He writes, "I never have been able to be responsive to Andover recollections because I was there such a short time. Such was the instability of my mother and father that I attended no less than eight schools in the United Kingdom and the U.S." John, it is surprising how many classmates remember you!

Dick Knight reports the temperature in Freeport, IL was 30° below zero with a chill factor of twice that. We have been trying to get Dick to visit us in Green Valley and we hope his cold weather will help to convince him. The Bill Keators were in California to spend Christmas with their daughter and husband. Bill and Lucy were sorry to hear of Morry's death. "He made me [Bill] managing editor of the Phillipian and helped me with legal matters in Hawaii." The Keators are enjoying their home in Vero Beach again this winter.

A Christmas card arrived from Palm Beach from Nancy and Van Johnstone and four letters from Van during the fall season. Van was shocked to hear about Morry, his Princeton roommate. He was pleased to get a letter from Vic Earle, another roommate.

He still follows Andover baseball and football news. Jean and Phil LeCompte reported a busy time in England. "The weather was great until we got on the QE II." Phil writes he had his birthday dinner at a local restaurant. "It had pillars in front — very good! You should try it." Of course, it was the Larson's Pillar House!

Dave Mdivani writes: "I'd love to be at Andover for the year 1984 and see you all." We hope son Michael will be with you, Dave. Bud Mordock ran his 55th reunion at Cornell. Said he should have hired a bus to take the feeble around. "Age is creeping up." Couldn't be any Andover '24s, Bud!

Ed and Maddie Munroe in Treasure Island, FL, report, "The summer months were hot, humid, and dumb-dumb, and since we endured them we are entitled to be classed as 'survivors.'" Their card had a great picture of Maddie and Ed.

Just learned through the Alumni Office of the death of our classmate Bob Tweedy on 2 October 1982. Bob was a doctor and lived in Winona, Minnesota. Bill Curtis died on 12 October 1983. We used to stop and see Bill and Sally during our trips to the Cape. We will miss him as he was always interested to hear about Andover and especially the classmates. The sympathy of the class of 1924 is extended to the families of the deceased members of our class.

14 Abbot Alums coming to our 60th from far and wide!

Dorothy Converse is attending and bringing her nephew too. Ruth Larter Eveleth is coming too. She is happy to be in Concord, MA with her daughter Pat Buchanan for two of her three are away matriculating. Her grandson, is a sophomore at Columbia U; her daughter Pat is at Kenyon in Ohio, where she hopes her sister Nancy will attend. Ruth leaves for Sebring, FL to visit her brother and her very own new grandson in the new house, instead of their trailer of last year.

Polly Bullard Holden says her back is so much better she will be able to attend our 60th, especially now that she is swimming as often as possible at her brother's off Bahama's coral sands. Six of their family had three weeks of Christmas theatre treats. John Sr. acted in four different plays. Their daughter Martha who is house sitting and writing "down the road" has seen John's Devil's Disciple twice.

Jane Allen Kilby will be driving from Kingston, RI to stay for the whole weekend.

Mary Harvey Kindel is coming from Grand Rapids, MI for her first AA Reunion. She will stay on for a visit in Boston. Come and hear about her lovely daughters!

Susan S. Lockhart is sorry she cannot come up from Lakehurst, NJ. Did she know we can have our own AA Reunion in one of the clusters which consists of five rooms around a living room? And we hope to have an Abbot table where we can share and record our Abbot memories and pictures. (I have only two!)

Kay Hart Mitchell is now an expert at cooking her huge raspberry-velvet-$100.00-recipe cake. After making two triple-deckers in one day for sick friends, she made one at 11 pm. She will be driving two of our classmates to our Reunion.

Sybil Bottomley Tallman's fall party in her lovely home was a surprise dual-birthday party. Ruth Kelley Perry had a birthday three days before, and I had one four days after. Still Kay's huge cake more than sufficed. We would love a repeat next year, Sybil, to usher us into the 80s. Sybil has found several momentos of her Abbot days, even a list of her works, for our own 1984 memory book.

Marian Shryock Wagner "affectionately" writes that it is about time she attend a reunion — "to return to her youth" and have fun recognizing old friends after 60 years. She will be ready to celebrate for she is trying to sell her home to move into a condominium.

Margaret Colby Williamson and Bob sent regrets for our 60th, unhappily, for they had such fun at our last. Ruth and Elwyn will find transportation from Chatham too burdensome this year. Wish we could have an AA bus for me too!

Laura Scudder Williamson. My one daughter, Elleda Katan, has moved to Boston now that her son Boris and her daughter Laura are through college. She has just started with the Mass funded Cultural Education Collaborative, which works with all public schools in all the arts. See 15 of you soon.

Chuck Eeles kindly relayed an interesting letter he received from Bob Hazard, who is active as a Tax Consultant in Towson, MD. Bob recounts, "In spite of (or perhaps because of) my increasing senility, I keep busy doing a couple of hundred people's tax returns during the winter, and in the remainder of the year I'm kept busy with SCORE (Service Corps of Retired Executives) and just completed my 35th case since April 15." Bob feels very grateful for his three years at PA and believes that its aims and influence shine with the very best in the entire field of academics.

In the travel department, Charlie and Pat Arnt drove through Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Maine, and New Hampshire last fall. A New Year's card from Charlie portrayed "Snow Boy", a gentle 2,700 pounder, taking his ease on Charlie's Orcas Isl. ranch. Your scribe and better half are taking off for Mexico to escape the wintry blasts of New England.

I'm grieved to report that we lost George M. Hampton and George H. Bowen last November. George Hampton graduated from Yale and was in the insurance and mutual fund fields for all of his business career in Little Rock, AR. George was a lifetime golfer and during his career made two holes-in-one.

George Bowen, well known as an athlete and football player, graduated from Cornell and worked for Pratt & Whitney for 40 years. After retiring he was a consulting engineer for T.R.W. and Central Engineering.

And sad news from John Case. After a brave battle of eight years, his beloved wife, Fanny Moore Case, died on 16 February 1983.

Another blow — John L. Drummond was taken from us on 28 January of this year. Johnny was a prominent member of the class, active in sports and Manager of Basketball our senior year. He came from a noted Andover family; four generations of Drummonds attended Andover. After Yale, he was the treasurer and founder of the Jiminy Peak Ski Area in Hancock, NH.

Our heartfelt sympathy goes out to all members of these bereaved families.

Huck Aldrich invited Don Dunham and your correspondent to lunch recently. Both looking hale and hearty. More about Don and his New Guinea mask collection in another issue.

"Jim" Hoyt and Ben Gilbert got together on a yacht to watch some of the America's Cup races last September. Even they couldn't root our boat to victory.

From "Pop" Popper — "I have made an interesting and rewarding second career as a volunteer in Health Planning and Advocating for the Aging. Unlike Eisenhower's famous quote, 'Things are more like they now are than they ever were before,' every day with me is different, meeting new people and new challenges. Helping plan for people who can't do it themselves is necessary and fun, too."

Charlie Hyde says he is partially retired but works three days a week as an investment consultant for the endowment fund of the Christian Science Mother Church in Boston. He and his wife, Jean, have two sons and two granddaughters.

Bill Carter, an ex PA soccer star, reports he is organizing a nationwide competition for the Albert Gallatin Fellowship in international affairs and planning the centenary celebration of the birth of actress Ruth Draper.

Jim Eiseaman has traveled extensively all over the world since his retirement. He tells us that he sees Paul Maloney from time to time and meets up with Fletch and Kay Nyce in Arizona every February. Tom Ford is another extensive traveler, having visited 46 countries in the past four years. His doctor suggests no more overseas trips (he is shopping for a new doctor), but he went to Pompano Beach, FL this January.

Stan Pigeon and his wife, "Billie," enjoy life on Cape Cod, seldom leaving it. Plays golf, with a cart, a couple of times a week, and used to play bridge with "Zeus" Brenner's nephew before he passed away a year or so ago. He writes that he stays active in church affairs, Shrine Club, Men's Club, and even does some bowling. Dr. Dan Hardenberg writes he is 90% retired and still enjoys traveling. Last fall he and his wife, Betty Jane, cruised down the Tennessee River from Chattanooga to Kentucky enjoying the autumn foliage and visiting the Shiloh battlefield.

We regret to report the death of Suzanne Emerson Wilmot, wife of Noyes Wilmot, on 26 November 1983, in Seymour, CT. Sue showed great courage and optimism throughout a long illness, an inspiration to all. Besides her husband, she is survived by two sons, James and John Wilmot; a daughter, Penelope Whiteside; and two grandsons. It is also with regret that we report the passing of Marian W. Stekettee, wife of Paul Stekettee, Jr., on 26 September 1983 in Grand Rapids, MI. She had suffered from rheumatoid arthritis for over 30 years and never let her spirits flag until she finally ran "out of steam." In addition to her husband, she is survived by a daughter, Sallie Warner; a son, Peter Stekettee; and six grandchildren. One grandson is now attending Andover. Our deep sympathy to Noyes and Paul and to their families.

Walter F. Holmes died on 30 August 1983 in Cranston, RI after a year's illness. He was a widower and is survived by two daughters, Jeanne H. O'Malley and Valerie H. Mantecon; a sister, Edna Rogers; and five grandchildren. Walt graduated from Brown University in 1931, Columbia Graduate School in 1934, and Ohio State Graduate School in 1943. During World War II, he was an officer in the Navy. He taught and coached at Tilton Academy and later at Cranston Schools for some 30 years. He was also District Chairman for the Cranston Boy Scouts and a former Chairman of the Board of Christian Education at Phillips Memorial Baptist Church. We remember Walt dashing across the countryside when he was captain of the PA cross-country team. Our deep sympathy is extended to his family.

Howard T. Walden, Jr. died at age 75 on 14 October 1983 in Larchmont, NY after a long fight with cancer. He was graduated from Yale in 1930, and Fordham Law School in 1933. During World War II, "Howie" commanded a LST 128 through two months of amphibious assault landings in the South Pacific. He left the service in 1945, having attained the rank of Lt. Commander, U.S.N.R. He then resumed his law practice in New York City. An ardent yachtsman, Howard was a lifelong member of the International Star Class and a longtime member of the Larchmont Yacht Club. He was extremely active in both Andover and Yale affairs. He served as warden and legal counsel for St. Thomas Episcopal Church in Mamaroneck, NY. He is survived by his wife, Moira, and six children — Virginia, Robert, Howard T. III, Henry, Moira M., and Daniel. The class of 1926 extends its sympathy to his family. The loss of Howard will be felt by so many who knew and admired him.

John Lobb passed away on 10 November 1983, of leukemia, in Holyoke, MA. His wife, Nancy, pre-deceased him in 1978. Always a brilliant student and a fine gentleman, at Andover he won first honors in upper middle for all three terms and was graduated cum laude. He received both his BA and Ph.D. at Yale, where he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. He taught at Mt. Holyoke College for 36 years, retiring in 1971 as Mary Lyon Professor Emeritus of economics and sociology. A specialist in anthropology and sociology, John was instrumental in developing Mt. Holyoke's sociology department. During World War II, he served with the overseas office of the Office of War Information. He is survived by his daughter, Linda Timmons, and two grandsons. We wish to express our sincere sympathy to them.

Elizabeth Butler Allen keeps busy with community and church activities and takes great pleasure in the companionship of her eight grandchildren. From Peg Stirling Baer, who claims she is not doing anything newsworthy herself, we have news of Fuki Wooyenaka Uramatsu. Her husband died two years ago and she has moved to California to be near one of her daughters, Kiyo. Fuki has joined a Chinese cooking class taught by a Hong Kong woman who speaks Japanese. Her classmates are young wives of Japanese businessmen. The travelingest of all our classmates is Sylvea Shapleigh Curtis. Early in '83 while she and her husband were in the South Pacific, after exploring New Zealand and Australia, they encountered a typhoon in Tahiti. Undaunted, they flew to Norway in May and now they plan to go to China in March '84. Needless to say, Sylvea is in the best of health.

Kerry Blues are still the full-time occupation of Helen Larson, but she finds trimming and grooming the dogs increasingly energy-consuming, so she is teaching her skills to two of her young fans. Through her sister Miye we have assurance that Saye Hirooka Murakami's health is much better than it was last year; she may soon be moved to more cheerful, less hospital-like surroundings. Fonty Flagg Sanborn and husband, George (PA'24), celebrated their 50th anniversary last summer and made merry with many guests including George's sister Lucy (Abbot '27), their children, Ann '52, Patricia '54, Scott '58, as well as nieces, nephews, and grandchildren. Winter brings a birding trip for them to Florida. Elinor Mahoney's son Philip Chadwick Foster Smith '57 is a maritime historian, long connected with the Peabody Museum in Salem, now with Philadelphia's Maritime Museum. He has written many books in his field, the latest The Empress of China, to be published in time for the Bicentennial of the U.S.'s first sailing venture to China (2/22/84).

Another frequent traveler is Gretchen Vanderschmidt who went to London in March '83 and then explored Oxford, Bath, and Wells, as well as Canterbury. "I just had to see the spot where Thomas Becket was done in!" In June, another trip to Vienna for Music Festival and chocolate.

Received a letter from Sibyl Kidder Paris just before the deadline for these notes. Sibyl lives in Kealahou, Hawaii and reports that she is to have a show of her paintings in May. Wish we were there to attend!

Your Class Secretary has spent a studious and enlightening autumn auditing a course on "American Art Since World War Two," a new insight into the philosophy and motivation of artists whose work we encounter in museums of contemporary art: Pop, Minimal, Funk — whatever. Great fun.

Bob and Doris Kimball have announced the marriage of their daughter Mary Frances to Steven Leo Klosterman on 24 September 1983 in Charlottesville, VA.

The following words of wisdom are from Tom Frazier: "A as in ANDOVER. A is the spiritual root of our language. The Bible sees it as the mystical revelation on Sinai which Moses translated into human language. The Hebrews called it 'aleph.' It is the note sounded to the members of a symphony at the beginning of a concert. It is the title of a story by J. L. Borges where 'aleph' signifies a single point in space that holds images of all other points in space. My current preoccupation with this is the only news I have to offer."

Notes From Traveling Classmates: Buck Huxley writes: "Still able to navigate under my own power — play golf or platform tennis once or twice a week, depending on the season. Made a five-week trip across America in August."

Luke Fichthorn reports: "During January Marjorie and I took the Royal Viking Sky Cruise from Los Angeles through the Panama Canal to San Juan. If you have never done the Canal, it is a beautiful trip and well worthwhile. We made stops at Puerto Vallarta, Acapulco, Cartagena and Willemstad."

Field Rush says, "I'm still in good shape for 76, quite active — tennis all year, and lots of travel — Cape Cod in Summer (Wianno Beach Club), Mexico most every winter for awhile, Balboa Club; Mazatlan; sometimes Villa Montana, Morelia and a few days spent in other parts of Central America and California. We are getting old and lazy enough for cruises, too, the last few years — various parts of the world, one or two a year. Retired, obviously, lots of exercise, gardening and maintenance in West Hartford and Osterville."

Jim Reynolds, Dave Vipond and I have been very active in our Williams class of '31 affairs. Jim is Vice President, Permanent Reunion Chairman; Dave is Class Secretary, and I am President. We have been very successful in our fund raising, also have lots of fun socially. We all have very attractive and congenial wives. Hope to see you and all the rest of us remnants, some year soon."

In the last issue of Class Notes we reported that Bob Crowell's Lore and Legend of Flowers was already out of print. We hasten to correct this statement. The fact is that it is very much in print and selling fine. Some people, even in the book business, confuse "out of stock" and "out of print." If a book goes out of stock for a while, it is selling. If it does not sell it goes out of print.

Jack Keogh was recently elected President of the Shorehaven Golf Club, East Norwalk, CT.

Regretfully, we report the death of Dr. Gordon A. Donaldson, a senior surgeon at Massachusetts General Hospital for many years, on 7 September 1983 in Hamburg, Germany where he was to address a medical symposium. He had been a member of the surgical staff at Massachusetts General since his residency in 1941 as well as having served as President of the Boston Surgical Society, the Harvard Medical School Alumni Associations, and the Massachusetts Chapter of the American College of Surgeons among others; was associated with many other medical groups, including the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary and a number of other northeastern hospitals, and had served on the Lincoln, MA Board of Health for 27 years. The Concord Journal stated, "Dr. Donaldson's commitment to the medical profession extended far beyond his association with Massachusetts General Hospital." He received his bachelor's degree from Harvard in 1931 and his medical degree from Harvard Medical School in 1935. He leaves his wife, Elizabeth, of Old Lexington Road, Lincoln, MA, as well as several sons, daughters, grandchildren, brothers and sisters.

Another classmate, Woodruff Wallner, a diplomat who witnessed Franco's victories in the Spanish Civil War and had been interned by the Germans for two years in World War II, died at his home near Caen, in Normandy on 1 January 1984. His foreign service had included Naples, Spain, Paris, Belgrade, Rio de Janeiro and, in 1942 when Allied forces landed in North Africa, he was interned in Baden Baden where he met his future wife. He also served in many high-ranking posts in the State Department, NATO, and various embassies, and until his retirement in 1970, had spent two years evaluating the performance of American embassies and consulates throughout the world. He was a graduate of Columbia College and had also studied at the Sorbonne. He is survived by his wife, Monica, a son and a daughter.

Fulbrighters create understanding among people, and people who understand one another don't shoot each other. I'm also chief actor in an effort to create a museum of the Jewish heritage at a house built in 1714 near Newburgh, NY, by Lewis Gomez (an ancestor). This brought me in contact with Herb Elsas, who is helping raise some funds in Atlanta. We may have seen each other once in the last 55 years, but not more. It's been a pleasant reunion."

And from Atlanta, classmate Elsas' report of a trip to England last June with Edith "to celebrate our 50th, accompanied by Louis J. Elsas II, Class of '54, and his Louis J. III, Class of '85. . . other family members were involved, but Andover led the parade. Our children and grandchildren put on a memorable dinner at the RAF Club in London, to remind me of the 1942-45 stint in England and on the Continent." . . . Two rewarding communiques from Ken Brett reported celebrations last year of 1) acquisition of Pleasant Lake, MA, property by Ken's grandpa 100 years ago, planting of commemorative sourwood tree, many toasts. 2) 50 years of Ken-Jo matrimony, more toasts, ingestion of a "delicious thing out of skinned chicken, pistachio nuts, et al," concocted by daughter Judy, who knows a thing or two about exotic concoctions in her role as Julia Child's personal secretary, and as mother of Sam Averett PA '83. When not engaged in such gala exercises, Ken and Jo are active garden-clubbers and he, "as an artifact" is president of the Harwich Historical Society, "and enjoying it." Communique #2 was a terse note ("Here are copies for you and/or any other reputable '28ster, if living"), accompanying two Pleasant Lake General Store calendars for 1928, with each month topped by "Liberty Magazine, 5¢, A Weekly for Everybody" cover artistry and noting that "1928 dates are same as 1984." Each fascinating calendrical page is backed by timely articles, advertisements and pictures, including somber likeness of '28's Father Figure, Calvin ("whom Vice President Dawes calls 'our first business President'"), and editorial advice on the Hoover-Smith face-off to "Forget party affiliations this year and vote Wet or Dry as your conscience dictates." . . . From Globe-girdling '28sters Jim Ames and Joe Byram reports re. Amesian India and Nepal visitation, complete with Taj Mahal, Gandhi's Tomb, elephant ride; Byramian 22-day tour of the Orient, with emphasis on China, which impressed them mightily, to the point of recommending that classmates visit that vast land "on a tour, where you stay at State Guest Houses, as they are excellent." . . . Winnie Dudley Burnham, when contributing to the Alumni Fund, enclosed a note hoping all is well with Classmates and was sorry to miss the 55th.

Bunny Bliss Billings sends the good news of becoming a grandparent: "Our daughter Linda and her husband adopted a baby boy in August '82, and in August '83 produced a baby girl. Adoption working its usual miracle."

Betty Jackson, now almost blind, has found it difficult to adjust to this situation, but still is able to do some housework and to cook. Dorothy Jennings Crocker reports, "We are enjoying Charlie's retirement of a year ago, getting acquainted with more of this beautiful big-little country of ours, and I tuck gardening and quilting in along the way. Gee Gee Gay d'Elseaux has hit some more health snags and is most grateful for the loyal care from her two devoted daughters. Helen Leavitt Fisher's loving letter: "My Abbot roommate, Bea Lane Mercer, was my very close friend all through the years. We visited back and forth during Abbot and afterwards. She even paid us a visit in London during our stay there for eight years while my husband was studying for his Ph.D. and I for my Master of Philosophy degree in New Testament. The last few years she was, unfortunately, battling a heart ailment to which she succumbed after an operation. She had a son, three daughters, and eleven grandchildren. It was my pleasure to officiate at the marriage ceremony of her daughter Mary Alice. Bea's great delight was in attending horse shows, where she showed her Morgan thoroughbreds, one of which she raised, winning many first prizes. As a token of my love for her, I conducted, with my husband, her funeral service in July in Sarasota. She was a wonderful friend to me during and after our Abbot days."

Eleanor Thompson Snedeker saw Louise Hyde Reilly when Louise was in San Diego. While Margaret Nivison and Austin "have kept out of mischief in their retiring years, last summer they attended a string quartet workshop in Sugarloaf, Maine, run by the Portland String Quartet. He plays violin and I play cello. Each of us plays in different groups here (Little Falls, NY) on a weekly basis. I continue as organist of the Presbyterian Church in Little Falls, and serve as a church elder as well. Little Falls has a new Arts Center of which I am a board member."

Thank you for your many replies to my postals. Keep the news coming, as news for the summer Bulletin must be sent to Andover by 15 May. Through the ice and snow of this winter, I look forward to the month of April in Sierra Madre, California. A good place to thaw out the old bones. Best greetings to you all. — Laddie.

As usual, classmates have supplied me with practically no news. At the Yale 50th Reunion in May, the largest turnout ever for a 50th Reunion, I didn't get to see all of my Andover classmates, but I did see the following: Jim Bannon, Charlie Buek, Dick Davis, Jack Kane, John McGauley, Dinty Moore, Quigg Newton, Charlie Reed, George Rowland, Art Rogers, Mac Taylor, Bill Taylor, Joe Ullman, and Gil Wright. If I have left out anyone, it would be a good opportunity to write me so I can put the information in my next notes.

Speaking of Quigg Newton, Tom Lasater sent me clipping from the Denver Post comparing Quigg, who became mayor of Denver at the age of 35, with the newly elected mayor, Frederico Pena, aged 36. The article ended with the statement, "As of now, however, Newton easily wins the comparison contest. (His picture, when he was 35, was glamorous.)"

A note from Bill Taylor says he was surprised by the number of Yale classmates who told him that that was the only reunion they had ever attended, and asked if the others had been as good. You will never know unless you plan to come to our 55th Reunion at Andover in 1984.

A note from Carl Burnham relates that he has retired and is living next to a golf course at Black Butte Ranch in Oregon. "Play a little golf and run the rural fire district (first time I ever ran for an elective office) which keeps my mind from complete atrophy."

The only other news of recent vintage is my own: Barbara L. Sizer, an aunt of our former Headmaster, Ted Sizer, and Andy Rogers were married 14 December 1983. After a great trip to Hawaii, Australia, and New Zealand, we will be living in Maine at the above address. Happily, she loves the pine tree state even in the winter, provided I take her out to warmer climes once in a while, before cabin fever sets in.

I have to report the sad news of the death of four classmates: Hedge Wickwire, a classmate on the Alumni Office's "Lost" list, was reported by Bill Chamberlin to have died in June of 1975. Don D'Arcy on 4 July 1983. Mrs. D'Arcy can be reached at 26-H Piscassic St., Apt. 106, Newmarket, NH 03857. John M. Murray on 18 July 1983. Mrs. Murray may be written to at 4 Kenwood Circle, Bloomfield, CT 06002. Manlius M. Perrett, Jr. on 10 May 1982. All four were loyal sons of Andover, active in their communities with distinguished records. We shall miss them.

Hello, Abbot 29ers!

Are you thinking about coming back for our 55TH REUNION? It is always great fun and we will be the privileged class which will be housed at the attractive Andover Inn. Several of our classmates have already responded and Betty Hulse Freeman hopes to be in the East at that time and is thinking about joining us. Do plan to come and join the fun. Let me or the Alumni Office at the school know.

Mary Macdonald writes that her "active retirement continues with birding, boating, and travel as the highlights. I remain in Copper Harbor, Michigan until the snows of November and return with the uncertain spring in May. I spend winter months in Evanston, IL. In March I hope to go to England and Northern France." "Duffy" Newcomb Smith and her husband are great travellers — "Just returned from an annual junket to Bermuda. We spent some time in Newport during the America's Cup Races excitement and also in Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard."

I hope to hear from many more of you. Any chance of Gilley or Jane or Kay Barnes or Roz or Deppy coming back to reunion? Think about it and let me know.

After many years of devotion to PA and its Alumni Fund, Gene Mintkeski is turning over his responsibilities as our Class Agent to Stan Kellogg. Gene has done a terrific job to put our percentage of givers each year in the highest category. Your support of Stan will take it up from there. Right on! And meanwhile your Class Secretary has volunteered to keep you in touch with PA's Bequest and Endowment Program to make sure Andover is not omitted from the list of bequests in your will; or that you have presently considered a life income gift to PA's Endowment. With another necessary hike coming in tuition, our dollars are badly needed on the Hill.

PA '30 has lost a good friend. Ruth Kimball, wife of Dick Kimball, who died last November. The Andover Press and Book Store were in her family. She had many friends on the Hill.

Jack McLanahan says, "See you in '85," and now makes his major project The Central Appalachian Peoples Federal Credit Union in Berea, Kentucky, a "people-owned-and-controlled finance system across eight states of Appalachia."

John Young is now "of counsel" at his New York law firm, Carter, Ledyard & Milburn. His great interests are the International Bar Association where he's Chairman of its Tax Committee and a member of its

Council, and World Peace Through Law, where he serves on the Planning and Goals Committee.

Retirement? Yardley Beers says it's a dirty word. He's just enrolled as a freshman at the University of Colorado, majoring in history.

George Schlotterer reminisces from his home in the Pittsfield, MA area: "When I was at school, I used to sit in a room in Draper, read Robert Frost and feel happy that I was in New England. Am well and happy here, love the mountains and lakes and think often about Andover."

Chad Braggiotti offers the following commercial: "Am still Country Director of IESC (International Executive Service Corps) in Ecuador, a not-for-profit organization which has completed more than 8500 projects in 74 Third-World countries helping their economic development. Our volunteer executives are retired businessmen (some in their 80s) who are motivated to serve their country without pay, changing the image of the "Ugly American" to one of beauty. My wife, Charo, a lady farmer, shares my duties with me as a Country Director's Wife. If any of you guys would like to get off the golf course for a couple of months, please write to me to enlist in our noble activities." The address is D. Sam Bicknell retired in 1974 to Dallas after having lived in Europe and Asia. Over the years, Sam's activities have included market researcher, naval officer, salesman, teacher, and librarian.

Richard Abbott sold his steamship company in San Francisco in 1979, and with his wife as crew, started a cruise that has lasted almost five years. They sailed their 38' boat down the west coast of Central America, through the Panama Canal, up the western Caribbean to Florida, down the eastern Caribbean to Antigua, and finally up the East Coast to the Chesapeake and back down to St. Augustine. For 1984, they are planning a trip across the South Atlantic to the Mediterranean. Home port for the Abbotts is North Fort Meyers, Florida.

We regret to report the death of Julian Gravely on 12 November 1983 in West Chester, PA. The class extends its deepest sympathy to his family.

We have all come through a hard winter even in Florida and Georgia, but today it is like spring here. Afraid that general class news is as scanty as warm weather!

Mary Smead Homlar has been content to view the winter from inside, enjoying the children at play in the snow as she relishes the heat from a new furnace. She keeps busy with committee work in her church and with Zonta, an international service club. She, as many of us have, has started a "semi-career with aging friends who need a hand and some cheer."

Eleanor Royce Witter keeps busy with volunteer work and various activities. Her two sons, daughter, and grandchildren are a real comfort since she has been widowed. One grandson spent five months in the Rockies in an Outdoor Leadership Project. Other grandsons attend Yale, Juniata College and Rochester Institute of Technology. Two granddaughters are close by attending Stuart County Day School in Princeton. Two others attend School in Vermont and are active and successful in cross country skiing.

Emily Bullock, our faithful Class Agent, wants us to be sure and notice that in the 1982-83 Giving Report more Abbot alumnae gave to the Alumni Fund than ever before. We were a part of that and it's great!

Kay Howell Whittum is active in alumnae work at Mount Holyoke College. Along with other duties, she is Treasurer of the Reunion Committee for her and my 50th Reunion in 1985.

Faith Chipman Parker wrote on her Christmas card that her move to Seattle has not been as pleasant as anticipated because Ed had had to stay in Phoenix to finish up business there.

I promised to tell about my husband's and my seven-weeks trip around the world last fall. Our first stop was Athens, Greece, where we had visited eighteen years ago, but there's always so much to see that experiencing it again is rewarding. Side trips along the seashore to Sounion and up in the mountains to Delphi were beautiful. We then boarded a ship at Piraeus for a seven-day cruise to the Greek Isles and ports in Turkey, including Istanbul. Weather was gorgeous and sights fascinating. Ancient history came alive. Cairo was next on our itinerary which we enjoyed immensely, especially the museum and the sound and light program at the pyramids. We were happy to survive the taxi rides. . . they all try to play "chicken" so we preferred the slower, though bumpier gate of a camel. The boat trip up the Nile with stops at Luxor, Karnak, Valley of the Kings, Tutankhamen's tomb, etcetera, vitalized many a history lesson. The dam at Aswan and the resulting maneuver to move the huge temple of Abu Simbel so that it wouldn't be swallowed up by the Nile was a feat that was incredible.

New Delhi and Agra were our next stops. This was actually my fourth visit to the Taj Mahal and I was afraid it might be disappointing, but it was just as breathtaking, if not more so, than the first time.

We flew on to Hong Kong and a short visit before we went into the People's Republic of China. In spite of some hotels that aren't up to our standards and food that made you wonder what on earth you were eating, and the weather that we hadn't ordered, we really enjoyed China. The people were happy, friendly and helpful. Children were adored and adorable. Beijing is a huge city with millions of bicycles, and massive government buildings close to the large but picturesque Forbidden City. Devotion and reverence towards Mao was inspiring. The scenery in the parks was right out of a picture book.

A visit to an agricultural commune was startling; one was made to realize what dire poverty still exists. However, the people are hard working and are getting enough to eat; it was not too many years ago millions died of starvation.

The Great Wall, built along the very crests of high mountains, was even more impressive than we had anticipated.

The visits to Xian where peasants have begun the huge undertaking of unearthing life-sized terra cotta figures of ancient warriors was very impressive. Thousands of soldiers, horses, and pieces of military equipment, all hand made from clay, which were buried with the Emperor Win Shi, still are in remarkable condition after 2,200 years.

We made visits to bustling Shanghai and other cities with their silk, carpet, cloisonne, and porcelain factories. But their jade and ivory carvings showed us that skilled and dedicated workers still produce beautiful items, made by hand.

Quilin and a boat trip up the Li River afforded the most beautiful scenery imaginable. We had always thought those sheer, hump-backed mountains were the product of Chinese artists' imaginations, but they are "for real" and unbelievably lovely.

In spite of having a National Guide, who, incidentally, was a very likeable and friendly young man with a good command of English, and also a local guide in each city, we didn't feel the press of Communism. We visited many gorgeous Buddhist temples whose priests and devotees were free to worship.

A stop over in Taiwan was China all over again but much more modern, affluent and gaudy.

Now after reliving our marvelous trip it is very sad that I have to report several deaths of our class members: A good friend of Wilhelmina Woodbury Stewart wrote about her death from cancer on 17 July 1983 in Winter Park, FL. "She was such a special person and had many friends; she is missed by all of us" her friend wrote.

Monica Keith Langill died on 31 October 1983 in Merrimack, NH. Skip Allen Carroll and her husband attended the lovely service. The minister mentioned her affection for Abbot. She is survived by her husband, Louis.

Audrie Griffiths Miller died 28 August 1983 in Sarasota, FL. She had been very active as President of her Garden Club, also of the Ladies' Golf Association and a board member of the Ringling Art Museum. She is survived by her husband, John.

A friend of Elizabeth Chapin Howe wrote that she had died "two years ago." Her address was unknown and she was listed as "Lost" in alumni files. Does anyone have details? Our sympathy goes to the families of all these members.

Hope you will keep me informed about yourselves, your spring activities and summer vacations. We all like to keep in touch.

We commence on the positive side. Bill Beinecke (with wife Betty) revisited, for six weeks last spring, some geography with which he first became acquainted during World War II, commencing at the New Hebrides (now properly called Vanuatu) off Australia about 1200 miles at two o'clock and thence northward to Papua/New Guinea. Many of you will have recollections, mostly grim, of such exotic locals as Guadalcanal, Henderson Field, Tulagi, the Slot, New Britain, Bougainville, et al, but Bill's trip was by no means as bleak as you might suppose. Herewith one fragment of a terrific journal:

"Rabaul was the capital before 1914 of German New Guinea, then the Australian capital under a League of Nations mandate, until the Japanese took it. The other one-quarter of New Guinea, Papua, the former British Colony, was administered from Port Moresby by the Australians. Since WW II, the Australians have administered the combined area from Port Moresby. Since independence (1975) that city is, of course, the nation's capital. The western half of the island, formerly Dutch, is now part of Indonesia.

"Rabul
Monday 3/21/83
9 a.m.

Weather beautiful. Bright, sunny day. Fleecy, white clouds, blue sky. Temperature hot, probably about 90°. While there has been some rain and an occasional heavy tropical downpour, most of the time the weather has been excellent.

"The Japanese have placed more and better war memorials in these parts than the Americans or even the Australians. The American war memorials are practically non-existent — a few in Guadalcanal. At the airport (Henderson Field) there are three simple granite stones erected last summer on the 40th anniversary of the initial landings. These, I'm told, were privately funded. And that's about all.

"The Japanese memorials are quite beautiful, quite simple, and quite touching. The inscriptions, in Japanese, in English, and here also in Pidjin, embrace all those who died in the Pacific War; it is not limited to 'our boys.' This seems to say something as well as indicate how far against war the Japanese have turned.

"There is a simple, Australian cenotaph in the middle of town dedicated, as is the one in London, to the memory of 'our men who died in the Allied Cause in both wars.'

"But I have mixed emotions about the Japanese. It is difficult for me to reconcile the way they conducted themselves in war — cruel, ruthless, rapacious, unfeeling — with the way we see them today as tourists, worldwide, with their cameras, in New York as successful businessmen, always bowing, always polite. And withal, a very peaceful nation speaking forcefully in the cause of peace internationally. It's a paradox."

This surgery does no favors to the full flavor, wit and wisdom of the original journal.

We end with the gloomy news of the death of Bob Mayo who left the Academy for Princeton, then to radio, to television (principally with CBS in New York and London, and an interim fifteen years with WOR) and a couple of war years enroute — amphibious assaults from Normandy to Okinawa — as a Navy Lieutenant during WW II. Our deepest sympathies are with Bobby and their children.

The cards dribbled in so slowly this time (did I give you too much advance notice?), that I wondered if there would be a column at all, but lo and behold we have news from ten classmates, roughly divided into three travel and seven general.

Atossa Welles took a tour of India in October, a fascinating but completely exhausting trip, which included an elephant ride. I hope to see her this summer when she comes to visit a cousin on Lake Sunapee.

Some people do more than one trip a year: Patty Hall Staton had a theatre tour in London, a two-week quickie in Florida this winter, and next summer a cruise in Puget Sound with visits to their daughters (number unspecified) who live in various parts of Washington.

Louise Wallburg Kneeland and Tom have been married for 51 years! I wonder if anyone else can reach or top that record? She still works for the IRS in Andover from February through August, after which they will fly to Hong Kong. They have ten grandchildren and Louise says none seem to want to get married and present them with great-grands.

Cards from the twins — Marie Holihan Foley and Betty Holihan Giblin — tell of visits to and with each other in Florida, where they see Jane Sullivan '31. Betty is still looking for a Class Agent; she is grateful to our many loyal contributors to the Alumni Fund and hopes someone will take over the job.

One new address in this bunch: Isabel Arms has bought a "delightful, all-on-one-floor house and hopes to move 1 May . . . thereafter it will be: 28 Wiltshire Drive, Worcester, MA 01609.

Oops. I forgot one travel card. Dorothy Richardson and her brother went on a Masonic tour in November — "deluxe all the way" — and in February to California for ten days.

Flop Dunbar Robertson and Randal seem to stuff their days even fuller than I do — they are going to San Antonio and Austin for a week this month (Feb.), are attending a four-session course on "Eternity," and Flop is in a six-session course on Mozart symphonies as well as rehearsals of Mozart's Requiem, although she will miss the performance, because they will be in New York to hear the Canterbury Choral Society sing Bach's St. Matthew's Passion. Wow!

Dorothy Rockwell Clark is finally retiring for good this June — no more teaching legal and English hopefuls how to get into grad school. I hope to see her in Washington this April.

And finally, close to home in Andover, Clare O'Connell Sullivan says her kids gave her a trip to Hawaii for her last birthday — "one of those with a zero at the end" to visit her #1 son who is a civilian lawyer working for the Navy.

Since I obviously can't count, next time I won't try to divide the messages between trips and stay-at-homes. Shalom.

Must have been The Summer of Summers for 1933. Our crystal ball shows PA '33ers scrambling joyously up and down mountains, yo-hoing on the briny, enthusiastically excavating the golf course, floating in the pool, dozing in the shade — not one anywhere near a pen nor a typewriter, nor even a word processor — but we don't need a crazy glass sphere to tell us our mail bag is completely, starkly, EMPTY.

We could spin you a yarn about the Attack of the Giant Cherry Tomato Plants, but we'll save that for a cold, wintry night in front of the fire. Besides, we'd like to forget about tomatoes for the present, thank you. Anyway, our noble Postal Service has come to the rescue in its own peculiar way. Clutched in our hot little hand are two pieces that arrived too late for our June notes — both of our benefactors were at Reunion, but herewith their news in a bit more detail.

Bill Dwyer, retired since 1976 in Merri-macport, MA, is devoting full time to raising a second family. Bill says, "At this point in time one is enough, especially if he is 5-1/2." Since Bill's wife is an attorney, he writes, her schedule "makes it possible for dad and son to know each other in a way that mothers usually experience. A rare opportunity." And one that obviously agrees with Bill.

And Ed Folk. We enjoyed a too-brief visit with him and Mary, got an impression of a full life since PA, but didn't realize just how full until we began to thumbnail the Curriculum Vitae he had mailed us. From PA Ed went to Harvard, going on, ultimately, to his doctorate there. Following terms as an instructor at St. Mark's, Research Associate at Harvard's Fatigue Laboratory, and Assistant Professor of Biology at Bowdoin, he then went to the University of Iowa as Professor of Physiology, where he has been since 1965. But the additional activities, numerous appointments as Traveling Fellow — we'll spare you several ill-conceived puns — have taken him to the Universities of London and Nottingham, Alaska, Holland (Fulbright), Israel, and Sudan; and seventeen consecutive summers and several winters at Point Barrow, Alaska. Along with participation in about four inches of professional societies and national committees in the field of physiology and biometerology, and consultant work for the U.S. Army and the U.S. Navy in Environmental Physiology, he has also managed to dash off some 360 papers and reports and a textbook on Environmental Physiology. We are hoping in 1988 to add him to the list of "Guest Speakers at PA '33 Reunion."

Saw our hard-working Reunion Treasurer, Dave Haviland yesterday, looking tanned and relaxed after a summer in the Thousand Islands. Dave spent part of the time completing the accounting for our Fiftieth and tells us that not only are we solvent, but we show a small surplus. (PA '33 was more abstemious than we had projected!) We trust all hands will concur with the committee's decision to add this amount to our Reunion Gift. And speaking of Reunion: FOUND, in the pay phone in Stearns House lounge, one United States ten cent piece. (Never let it be said that we didn't clean up!) Owner may recover by proper identification — stamped, self-addressed envelope must accompany claim. If not claimed, it will be added to Reunion Gift.

Inadvertently, the name of James Toohey was omitted from our NON SIBI donor list in the fall. Jim was a strong and early supporter of the 50th Reunion Fund and should never have been forgotten. The Alumni Office apologizes.

Regretfully, we must close with news of the loss of classmates:

Robert B. Carr, in Tampa, FL, on 8 February 1983. He is survived by his wife who lives at 334 Danube, #106, Tampa, FL 33606.

George S. McElroy, in Columbus OH, on 17 April 1983. Mrs. McElroy is living at 15 Sessions Drive, Columbus, OH 43209.

Henry W. Russell, in Little Rock, AR, on 3 June 1983. This one hit us just a little bit harder, for we had just had a nice phone chat about reunion with Rusty two or three days before his death. Mrs. Russell is at 6 Broadview Drive, Little Rock, AR 72207. We extend the sympathy of our class to their families. We shall miss them.

Wanted: news notes for the new secretary! This is a good job, but how good depends on you. There are now 28 of us. From the report at the time of the 50th, we have been reduced by ten. About two weeks ago Alice Schutz Valkenburgh and Roger joined Merrill and me for lunch at Mission Inn. It was a beautiful Florida day and there was so much to talk about. Any of you near Ocala or Winter Park, send out a message, we'll have another mini Abbot day.

Holiday greeting brought the following news. Betty Weaver Van Wart and Lon expected Carolyn Guptill Hanson and Harry to spend Christmas with them. I can hear it now! Betty Synder Cady writes that their four are scattered about the U.S.; and there are nine grandchildren. They have retired to the Cape and they enjoy golf, clamming, and oystering for fun and exercise.

Martha Whipple Davis wrote about the 50th and was disappointed not to see more of the class in attendance. To quote from her note "I keep busy since Albert died 11 years ago. I built a small house and have three daughters all living nearby. There are four granddaughters plus two step-grandsons. (That is how I get boys!) I haven't played the drums lately — but I could."

One sad note from Mariatta Tower Arnold — her husband died 26 June 1983. In November she moved to a studio apartment near Sarasota and has room for overnight guests. Her new address: 8400 Vernon Rd. Apt 1203, Sarasota, FL 33581.

I seem to have bad luck this time on telephoning. Last week we were in Naples and I tried to get Olive French Sherman many times. I shall continue calling and hope for a chance to talk to some of you. We seem to be a more traveled group these days.

Please keep notes coming our way. Have any of you been of help on the "Lost" list? My best to all of you. Peg Black Manz.

50th! REUNION

With slight expectation that it will do any good, I note for my classmates' consideration that I am writing this edition of the Class Notes, which you will probably read sometime in May or early June, on 3 February. Because of the fuss stirred up by our upcoming 50th reunion (What's so great about a 50th? We'll be celebrating our 75th in almost no time!), I've been hearing a good deal more about members of the class than I usually do. You know, of course, that we're expecting back a crowd of well over 100 and also expecting to smash all previous PA reunions of any year in numbers returning and in the size of our class gift. We can't do it without YOU, though, so if you've been at all uncertain about the trip, make up your mind to DO IT. And, if you haven't already, send in a handsome check toward the 50th Reunion Class Gift. Cam-pion will never lift his head again if we don't make $175,000, and it won't be easy. If you need transportation, call Frank Belcher, reunion transportation chairman, who has just turned up an old-but-good-as-new ox cart.

Wally Richardson won't be able to make it because of a serious illness in the family; but you'll all be glad to know that he has now attained the distinction of class poet as a result of the recent publication of his epic entitled My Buddies, copies of which will be available at headquarters. Wally has been asked to write another one for Joe Fox to recite at the class dinner on 9 June. Wally's news isn't all bad, though. He has raised a gaggle of delightful daughters, and, after a long career in space missions, is living in the house he designed in Sun City Center, Florida. Steve Powelson has just about finished memorizing the Iliad in the original Greek and has promised to recite it (or at least in part) at the class meeting on Friday, 8 June. He has practiced at N.Y.U., Harvard, and PA.

Joe Simmons may not make it. He's had a tough problem, a complete laryngectomy, but will drop in if he can. Walt Snell, for reasons that I cannot understand, has at last come home from Paradeisos (Greece) to take up residence in Annapolis. He'll be back. Paul White is back from another long tour in Spain and has taken up a Washington, DC position as Director of International Trade to the Small Business Administration. He'll be back too, and will, with Harlan Cleveland and the Headmaster, take part in the foreign affairs seminar. Bob Adamson is also on his way. Now the much-admired founder and director of Fordham's College at 60, he served many years as professor of philosophy at the University of Connecticut.

Ed Hedley apologizes for not taking a more active part in the 50th, but besides his other MIT commitments, he's been elected 50th gift chairman. He started five years ahead of time and thinks Andover might get more money if it started a couple of years earlier and beat out the competition. Roger Huntress writes, "I retired early in 1980. My wife died in December '80, and early in '81 I moved to McKinleyville, a rural town on California's beautiful north coast. Spend much of the summer dredging for gold in the New River and South Fork of the Trinity river — both in Trinity County. And I get some gold, too. Have two daughters living in the area and spend much time helping fix up older homes that they own. Keep busy the rest of the time with wood-working and golf." Frank Wallace is in Berlin for the winter. "My wife in common" will pay for the trip. "He does water colors and woodcuts and is very busy exhibiting."

Bill Platt will do his darndest to be back, and I think he'll make it in spite of two operations in 1983 to replace knees and one in February to replace a hip. I doubt if Bill will be prevented from returning by little things like that. You will remember that at PA he got just about everywhere.

So, the ball's in your court. Most of you will have signed on by the time you read this, but if not, why not throw aside every rational consideration and come to join us at this once-in-a-lifetime event, the class of 1934's 50 reunion? Even if you should be prevented by an earthquake, at least send in something no matter how small it may have to be — for our Class Gift to PA because we want to break the all-time participation record, too.

One more classmate planning to attend reunion — Barbara Ritzman Devereux, who lives in Ponte Vedra, FL, hopes to come and is only sorry that "it won't coincide with reunions of either of my two alumni sons, Stephen E. Devereux '65 and E. Richard Devereux, Jr. '68. Andover has been a big part of my life over the years."

Hope that many more of you will make plans to be in Andover 8-10 June for our 50th reunion. Kay Damon Reed had lunch with Molly Savage Van Stone, who spends winters in Florida and summers in Maine. Molly will be among those present in June.

Kay and I will meet there. Others attending are Mary Rockwell Stewart; Ruth Stott Peters; Ada "Sandy" Carlson Prescott; Ann Place Henderson; and, I trust, Sandy Kinsman Dexter, who writes, "had more surgery last summer, but new hip holding up beautifully. A trip to California and a day cruise to Anacapa Island gave it a real test. Climbing in and out of tender between waves and a scramble over volcanic rock to the south shore were achieved with a great feeling of satisfaction." After that, reunion should be easy.

Mary Rockwell Stewart reports that she has at last been able to join the travelling bunch, "having been lucky enough to go to Italy in 1981, to Greece in 1982, and to Florida in 1983."

Ann Place Henderson chartered a ketch last summer and had a great family reunion.

Sandy Carlson Prescott had a total hip replacement in 1982 which was "most successful." Her mother, who is 93, is in a nursing home nearby.

Cards have gone out to everybody asking for news. Going over the list I was struck by the variety of occupations that we, unliberated females, have had: Publisher, teacher, free-lance writer, lawyer, engineer, public health physician, hospital lab worker, management consultant, executive secretary, free-lance photographer, church deacon, and dairy goat breeder, among others. Add to this all the volunteer work for fifty years: hospital auxilliary, United Way, Scouts, PTA, community and church activities of all kinds — we had our training at Abbot working on Abbot birthday, dolls for the mountain children at Hindman School and those suppers where we ate a simple menu — but you know we didn't go hungry!

Finally, five of our daughters have gone to Abbot/Andover.

You will see by the address that your secretary has moved again. Still at Park Shores but to a second floor apartment. My lawyer says it will take the burglars longer to find me, but I do feel more secure in this one, although the effort of moving gets worse each time.

I look forward to seeing many of you in Andover in June. . . and at least let us hear from you if you are unable to make Reunion.

In planning our 50th Reunion, 7-9 June 1985, I have picked up a lot of recent histories of our classmates. Very probably I won't be able to squeeze all these into one column; some will be held over for my next one.

From Texarkana, Arkansas, Ken Dickey writes, "Count me and wife in for June '85. Since returning, we have restored three Victorian houses near our home of 35 years. Moved into one and rent others. Plenty of travel also." And from Hal Furber: "Retired at the end of '82 after 40 years with DuPont. Continuing interests include cabinet making, gardening, sailing, both on the Chesapeake and at Cape Cod; together with volunteer work at nearby Wintherthur Museum."

Here's a brief one from Ernest "Al" Johnson: "Now on phased retirement from Amherst College. (Romance languages.) Preparing for 45th Reunion here." Jim Bird drops us a card from Tulsa. "I have lived now for 25 years in Tulsa; have four children and nine grandchildren. I still work every day and hope I will be able to for many more years, because I seem to have a lot of things I would like to do yet. Hope to be at Andover for the Reunion."

Joe Dana, who lives in Andover and will be the treasurer of our 50th Reunion, tells us, "Still working — hoping to get daughter Laurel through the University of Maine. Having her associate degree in Engineering Tech., she now wants a BA in business. Looking forward to retirement in June and gathering addresses of all those who live in good places to visit." Be ready, classmates. And that fine passer and backfield man, Lennie Vines, writes that he was separated from the service as a USAF Lt. Col. in May 1946. Then he went into the insurance business in San Francisco rising to Ass't Regional Manager on the Pacific Coast for Commercial Union. Retired from that firm and joined an insurance brokerage firm. At the end of 1983 Lennie retired again and "shall go off and smell the flowers."

And a nice, well-typed note from Arch Speers reads, "Living alone in Brooklyn Heights for the past four years and keeping in touch with two daughters' families by means of annual trips to London and more frequent ones to northeastern Maryland. And there's always Newsweek, literally. November '83 began my 43rd year at that shop, continuing a unique sideways career motion. Very sobering, all of it, including a week about a year ago in which I registered for Medicare and was bitten by a stray dog near the old Fulton Ferry Landing."

I hope that you all saw in the December 1983 issue of Town and Country magazine, the picture of our classmate and PA trustee, Charlie Meyer and his family, taken in Vail, CO. . . . A short note from Harry Ward from Santa Barbara, says that he will be glad to help our 50th Reunion Committee. Good! Then, too, he wrote that he has just celebrated his 50th at Thacher and that he hopes to be with us in 1985. We hope so, too.

I quote from a portion of a letter from

Charlie Swartwood, whom you will recall is a Justice in the Supreme Court Chambers in Elmira, NY. "As you can see, I'm still hard at work and hope to stay that way as long as I can. Everything creaks, but it works still." . . . And here's some good 1935 class spirit. Jim Swihart writes that he will try to help out with our 50th Reunion, but medical problems will probably prevent his attendance, despite the incentive of having a granddaughter at PA. A note from Newt Burdick, written on his new personal computer, says he will support our 50th. Then he says that there are going to be a lot of birthdays in his family. "So Dixie and I are taking the whole crew and their mates to Round Hill in Jamaica for a couple of weeks. We have never done this before and I think that it will be great fun."

Now here's one that is hard to believe. A move from Hawaii to Kansas. Barney Hurlbutt writes, "After retiring from Permanente Medical Group in 1976, I became Medical Director for Hawaii Planned Parenthood for the next seven years, and have just retired from that this year. I am moving to Lindsborg, Kansas to teach and lecture at Bethany College. Am chairman of the McPherson County Hospice Program and keeping my fingers busy, non-gynecologically, playing the piano several nights a week at the McPherson Country Club."

So many of us are retiring to Cape Cod. Now for the latest. I hear from the grapevine that Dave Williams is planning on selling his home in Springfield, MA and moving to East Orleans on the Cape. I have no further details at this time.

Lastly, we regret to report the passing of Wes Pullen on 16 December 1983. Wes was a retired vice-president of Time, Inc. and a president of Time-Life Broadcast, Inc. He leaves his wife, Mary Potter Pullen; a son, a daughter, and a sister. Mrs. Pullen may be written at 6 Lieutenant River Lane, Old Lyme, CT 06371, and contributions may be sent to the scholarship fund of Princeton University.

"Happiness is" getting positive responses that you plan to return to our 50th reunion! There are 56 now on the class roster, 23 of whom are planning to return as of this date. Only a few had any "if's" attached. Thank you for all accompanying news notes. Especially, I thank those of you who volunteered to help. You will be hearing from Ellen or me as the time gets closer. Even our loyal, faithful Skippy Murphy Garrison, who said her health may not permit her returning in '85, offered her services! We will hope you can make it! To make this a super 50th, breaking all previous records of 50th reunions, I hereby appoint each of you a member of the Class of 35's 50th Reunion Committee! Those whose names appear on the stationery are those who responses arrived in time for the printing.

We are in those retirement years as the next reports indicate. Shirley Powers Haseltine is "retiring in June '84 from 17 years of teaching French and the past three years as a Guidance Counselor, hence 20 years in education." Ellen Rivinius Hill writes: "Husband and I both happily retired though still 'keep my hand in' with my real estate firm. Her daughter Nancy '62 and daughter, six, live in Winchester, MA; bachelor son in NYC, and doctor son with two little ones in West Hartford, so all, fortunately, nearby. Tennis, gardening, weekends with old friends, and traveling make the days fly by all too fast."

Christine Barnes Nelson's husband, Harvey, took early retirement, Nov. '82. He had spent 30 years in the defense industry but now loves playing more golf and playing with his new computer, so Chris went back to school to the University of Arizona for more music. She's happy accompanying singers on the piano!

Barbara Symonds Day speaks of her memories of Abbot as being vivid, most of them interesting and happy, all of them a real learning experience. She says she is still learning, and enjoying a happy and full life that encompasses semi-retirement and grandchildren with driver's licenses. Barbara Chamberlain MacCready wrote that her daughter Ann has taught art in Lexington Jr. High School for 16 years. Ann's husband has a computer company in partnership with a professor at MIT. Their children are Tracy, five, and Peter, three. Barbara's son Bob is in financial management in a large jewelry manufacturing company. His wife, Linda, listed in book, "Outstanding Young Women in America in 1983", is manager of an accounting department for a large chain of department stores in the South. Bob is now getting his Masters in Computer Science and Linda her MBA. No wonder Barbara is a proud mother.

When Katharine Scudder Fraser wrote, she was off to Seattle for a Christmas reunion with four of her five plus a new daughter who joined her family via a great wedding to her youngest son in September. More reports on families — Doris Schwartz Lewis has two grandchildren, Seth and Amanda. She, of course, thinks they are the most fantastic in the world. Evelyn Chapel Swayze's five children are scattered from MA to MD and West to California. Virginia Page Thorp who resides in Asheville said her daughter has moved down to enjoy the beautiful mountain scenery.

Betsey Armington Arms' notes took on a serious mood. "Nothing unusual except that as we enjoy the beauty and peace of this Southeast corner of CT we feel the pain and stress of today's unrest and terrorism throughout the world and are trying to understand and be constructive in our lives as best we can." Elizabeth Morgan Foster keeps busy. She wrote: "In October I attended the 43rd annual meeting of A.A.S.L.H. in Victoria, B.C. Great seminars, walking tours, and bus trips! I am one of several writers preparing a series of historical articles for the Beverly Times. I serve on the Board of the Beverly Historical Society, Beverly Improvement Society and the Essex County Historical Association."

Several classmates wrote of their travels. Lucia Nunez Atlas had a lovely month-long trip to France in the fall, a present to herself. She "hired a little Peugeot and drove on the back roads in the Pyrenees and the Côte Basque and the Dordogne in clear, golden blue weather." Mary Dee Wickenden Schmonsees and her husband "enjoyed an Elderhostel in England last summer." She went on to say, "We studied Dickens at Canterbury, canals in Birmingham, theatre and art in London." They have four grandchildren in college. How's this for adventure? Anne Cutler Brecheen wrote: "Retirement leads to hiking and that to exploring some wonderful country. Three days in the High Sierras in September — glaciers and rushing streams, incredible vistas and no trouble with the 10,000-foot elevation. Then in October we (six of us all over 60, two over 70) hiked the Grand Canyon, 7.3 steep miles down, 10.3 endless miles up. A glorious adventure. I would do it again!"

Thank goodness for modern medicine! Georgeanna Gabeler Selden last summer underwent vascular grafts on both legs and Doris Anderson Clark is recovering from a double, total knee replacement. We'll expect to see both of you on the dance floor in June '85.

Wes and I recently spent a glorious week in Carmel with my sister who told Wes he would have to come to collect his Christmas present, a grandstand seat for the Crosby Clambake! An ankle sprain three weeks before kept me from being too frisky as I followed the players. Weather couldn't have been better, each day nicer than the one before, a great change from last year! I returned to the office with work piled high and a new Wang computer/word processor on my desk which I am in the process of learning. Fun! Having to get these notes put together has added to the pressure and I'm not pleased with the composition. Bear with me. Hope I make the deadline. I think perhaps it is time for a change of authorship! Any volunteers?

This story comes from a most reliable source — a classmate who has, as yet, not shown any signs of mental deterioration. It seems he had lunch with Mike Jennings in New York last December. Mike entertained with the horrors of being a Rolls Royce owner. Had to take his to West Palm for repairs. Dealer did not have a "loaner" (my word). Mike could not be without a Rolls, so he did the logical thing, bought a second one — not second-hand — a new one. However, on a recent visit to New York, he had to rent an ordinary limousine. Driver, when taking Mike from Yale Club to Brooks Bros. — a trip of one block — got lost in midtown Manhattan.

Bill Shallow reports a first grandson as of 25 November, and that he (Bill) summers at his home in Wexford, Ireland, and "any classmates passing through or nearby should give him a call."

In our campaign to hear from Ted Sharretts, at long last, the following from a letter received not too long ago: "Recounting to you my last 48 years would be more than any Class Secretary should be asked to bear. To be brief, I live a pleasant and happy life with my wife, Ann. The aforementioned life consists of practicing law — quietly, racing lightnings — slowly, fishing — avidly, hunting/shooting a lot — all on Long Island. My health seems to be good, weighing in at about 10 lbs. more than I was at Andover, not on any pills as yet and on rather good terms with my doctor. I do miss seeing classmates, or even schoolmates. George Seabury has been my most constant contact. I will do my utmost to be at the 50th."

Lou Waters has retired from San Jose State University where he was Professor of Comparative Literature. He is marketing a book, Powers of Earth and Sky: Mythologies of Nature. He is now working on a second book and was "amicably divorced in 1970; one son in business, another at Harvard."

Took a sentimental journey back to the Hill last October. Andover does not go in for plaques or historical markers. There are two, however, of interest to PA '36. One in honorable memory of W.W. II deaths. Our class had the longest list. And another which one might miss. It is just inside the front doors to George Washington Hall and lists winners of the Aurelian Award. The first name is William D. Hart Jr., who was previously mentioned in these notes. My visit coincided with the dedication of the new Boathouse. There, were Bill Trafton and Mel Chapin — tall and lean enough to have just stepped out of one of the shells.

This is generally a lonely, one-way communications job, so it is nice when you get a note like this: "Hello, after many years. I am a senior partner in the law firm of Rosenman, Colin Freund Lewis and Cohen in New York City, specializing in anti-trust law. Am presently a widower with three grown children — one a college Professor of English, the second a maker of documentary films, and the third a law student. Regards." — Ace Sokolow.

To those three score who went on to Yale, your Secretary will be your 45th Reunion Chairman, 30 May-2 June 1985. Make a note of those dates now, and be sure to attend.

The following words in memory of a roommate were sadly submitted by Louis Dolbeare. "Leonard 'Bus' Burdett died 19 October 1983 of complications of chronic diabetes. His humor, faith, and courage did not fail.

"What else would be expected by anyone who knew him at all well? The fact that he was recognized for his good nature did not mean that he was a person of mindless good humor. But, cheerfully optimistic in his approach to life, he was admired and loved for his cheer and the thoughtful consideration this solid citizen habitually brought to his relationships with others.

"He was a popular member of our class. He indulged his lifelong love of baseball by playing, and earning letters at PA and Yale. He also took pride in having won the football 'A' and in singing in the choir and glee club.

"His W.W. II service was in the army, ending up as a lieutenant. He married Dorothy Nesbitt in 1944, who survives him. Their marriage was enriched by a daughter, three sons, and two grandsons.

"Bus was a native of Swampscott, MA, the son of 'Lennie' and Mildred Burdett, and will be remembered by all as the coach and official scorekeeper of the PA baseball team.

"Buster's working career was spent in management positions in industrial firms in Connecticut. After his retirement, the family moved to New Hampshire, where they renovated a house that in previous centuries had been owned by a family ancestor.

"We are the richer for having loved him; the poorer in his loss."

Happy New Year to all! We congratulate Bob Ewing, who was awarded an Honorary Fellowship in the American College of Hospital Administrators. The text of the citation noted Ewing's work in creating a "vigorous and visionary philosophy of hospital trusteeship that includes service to local institutions; participation in state and national associations; and involvement with health-care policy issues." For the past 25 years, Bob has served as a member of the Board of Directors of Moore Memorial Hospital, Pinehurst, NC and from 1973 to 1979 as director of the Carolina Hospital and Health Services, a non-profit, shared services organization serving hospitals in the Southeastern U.S.

Also helping people is Bud Robie, who writes from Haiti . . . "a country of considerable fascination and wonderment. I am here as a member of the Board of CARE which is having a meeting to observe a number of our projects in action: food, water, education, crafts, forestry — altogether an impressive effort for a poor but proud people. . ."

John Deming — "Big news at the moment is that our oldest, Hunt Deming, is going to marry Katherine Goodbody in September." John has a new job as AYA's class rep.

Jack MacDonald in characteristic MacDonaldese writes, "Jack MacDonald walked into the bar at the Beverly Wilshire in L.A. one day in May, and the first person he saw was Jack Lemmon. So he said, 'Mr. Lemmon, I went to Andover.' That introduction, although corny [Jack hates to sound preppy at our age], nevertheless did the trick and much pleasantries followed."

Lou Wiggin gave a lecture at the Litchfield, CT Historical Society on the British Origins of the American Revolution and the extent to which the British were blameworthy in bringing about the Revolution. In addition to a career of teaching history at Yale and NYU, Lou spent some years in the publications field. He currently is the proprietor of the Cobble Court Bookshop in Litchfield.

Joe Machell — "Miriam and I took an interesting and restful boat trip on the Main River in Bavaria this past summer. This fall both of us had serious surgery but have recovered well and are looking forward to the holiday season. Best to all." And our best to you both and sincere hope for a complete recovery!

Bill Quinby writes, "By lucky chance the Quinbys and George and Adrienne Schreiber spent several weeks in Europe in September and October. We managed to meet once in Colmas, France and once in Lech, Austria as we went our separate paths." In the final summary of the '82-'83 Annual Giving Report, Bill's name was not recorded under the 1937 NON SIBI Associates list. For this error of omission the Academy is embarrassed and the Class is sorry. Our apologies, Bill.

Living in Plymouth County (Mass.), American History at Old PA notwithstanding, I've always assumed it all started here. Not so! This fall Winnie-Lou and I attended the Princeton Alumni College in Santa Fe, New Mexico where we studied four centuries worth of three cultures. We attended classes, participated in panel discussions, and visited museums, missions, and pueblos. We were captivated by the vastness, beauty and complexities of our Southwest (our first visit) which Willa Cather described as "the bright edge of the world." But the bright moment for us was seeing Ann and Sim Hyde who showed up from Albuquerque to join us for dinner. Sim is putting his artistic and architectural skills to good use as a solo practitioner in neighboring Corrales. With Sim's new-found freedom and independence they now have the time to do the things they were not able to do including reunioning. Sim and Ann promised to be with us in '87 for our fabulous fiftieth!

We sadly report the death of John Porter who died on 27 July 1983 and of Paul Metcalf who died on 6 November 1983. Our heartfelt sympathy goes out to John's widow, Marcella, who lives at 16 Harbor Island, Newport Beach, CA 92660, and to Paul's widow, Marsha, whose address is 21 South Street, Pawtucket, RI 02860.

At least three of our classmates have moved during the past year; if there are more changes of address, please keep me posted. Betty Swint McFarland wrote from Stuart, Florida that she and Malcolm have been happily retired for eleven years — Florida in the winter and Maine in the summer. Their four children visit them each summer in Maine and occasionally in Florida.

Bar Randolph Bowman and Gus sold their Houston home and moved to Seabrook, Texas, a little fishing village on Galveston Bay, thirty miles south of Houston. They have a great swimming pool and their house is only a block away from the bay. Both of them are now enjoying their retirement in these peaceful surroundings where Bar loves to garden. However, the hurricane, Alicia, did a great deal of damage in Seabrook last fall, and they went back to Houston to escape the storm. Fortunately, their home suffered only minor damage.

Cynthia Holbrook Sumner has moved to Sacramento, California. Warren retired and they arrived in California on 21 November. They found a house only five miles from their son Charles who is still a bachelor, and drops by often for meals. Warren plans to work part-time after the holidays. Their first granddaughter was born 15 September to son, Steve and wife. Cyn spent nine great days visiting them in Ohio last October.

Kay Forbush Bass and George sent a lovely card with a sketch of their attractive new winter home in Moss Creek, SC, near Hilton Head. They have just returned from a Bermuda holiday celebrating their 45th wedding anniversary along with children, spouses, and grandchildren.

Martha "Skeeter" Ramson Tucker and Art are still enjoying retirement — they switched from a sailboat to a cruising power boat last summer. They took their first trip to England last fall and found it fascinating to see the land of their ancestors. This winter they plan to visit San Diego and to travel to Baja, California and Mexico for whale watching.

Betty Inman Kirkpatrick writes that she had quite a summer. Both boys were married again, one in Virginia and one in Nova Scotia. Kirk's mother passed away last August. Betty traveled to Milwaukee last autumn to take care of her daughter and her new son, her third. Betty and Kirk now have nine grandchildren. They expect to recuperate in Florida this winter and will be there from November until the end of May.

Keep the news coming. It is such fun to hear from all of you!

The class must be in a condition of deep freeze since I only got one response to my request for information. I did have a few leftovers. The one respondent, Johnny Day, says he and Priscilla spend their time between Annapolis, Maryland and Cutler, Maine, and a lot of that time is spent cruising and day tripping on a Seawind-30 with exercise on a pulling boat. The Day's son, Tom PA '62, is an Annapolis grad but is now out of the Navy and working for P & G.

One of my perennials, Nat Abelson, writes of being in Portugal, Spain and Morocco last summer. While retired from the Naval Reserves as a four-striper, he writes of being honored by several military orders; and a retirement full of activity. . . . Worthy Adams left the Reunion to take a 3-week canoe trip 500 miles north of the Arctic Circle in Alaska. Another traveler is Gene Curtis who had been in the UK playing golf and last I knew was headed for Kenya.

John Morris and Ted Harrison were at the Yale '42 dinner before the 1-1 hockey game with Harvard on 18 February. Both looked prosperous and active, but the evening was too hectic for me to spend much time with John, whom I had not seen in some time.

Dave Williams wrote another book about the black armored troops he led in WW II, entitled Hit Hard. Dave sent me a copy of this which I read with great interest and admiration. He is an interesting writer and obviously shows a combination of research and extraordinary memory. I loaned the book so I cannot tell you who published it, but commend it to those of you who still have an interest in "our" war.

On 16 February our Class Agent, Tom Burns, had a dinner meeting in Boston to plan, of all things, for the 50th Reunion gift (1988, in case you have forgotten). I missed it due to a trial in New Haven, but present were Pike, Fred Kent, Adams and Harrison as well as Joe Mesics '53 and Connie LeMaitre '53 from the school. Pike and Adams were held up in the tunnel fire under Boston, and the resulting extended cocktail hour reportedly clouded the discussions. Nevertheless, the result was a plan for an expanded committee and a proposal to the class to make contributions, in addition to the annual Alumni Fund giving, which would accumulate for our 50th gift. The earnings from these gifts would also accumulate. Obviously, neither we nor the school want the annual giving to suffer, but given the amount of time and faced with the prospect of retirement, this was felt to be the best approach. You will all be hearing from one or the other of us with the usual thoughtful arm-twisting.

Please do a bit better for me on the next round of inquiries for news and gossip.

Greetings — and thank you all who wrote with news. A card from Jean Cross Maier in November told of Maier family reunion in Boston. Connie Thurber Prudden's big news was selling old (1734) colonial home after 35 years, and moving into a new house next door! Please note change of address: 1 Button Cove Rd., Box 155, Hingham, MA 02043. Also a new granddaughter with one on the way — for a total of thirteen!

Jeanne Sawyer Stanwood spent the summer moving by degrees into a new condo in Kennebunk, Maine (my old hometown). She will continue to spend summers at Squirrel Island. Daughter Cindy, 33, lives in Cambridge and works for Blue Cross-Blue Shield in Boston. Son John, 38, teaches English at Choate-Rosemary Hall, has a daughter Emily who was two last August and is "a strawberry-blond bombshell," and a son Matthew born this October. John had his 20th reunion in Andover in June.

Marian Lawson Archer has retired and was busy moving so couldn't make the 45th — built a new house in Port Saint Lucie — went up to New England in the summer when her husband became ill. David, their son who is an R.N., helped care for him in the hospital, and when he was well enough to travel they went to their quiet mountain-side in Vermont. The last week of August they flew to Europe to visit their fourth son, Robert, who is an army major stationed in Berchtesgaden. Also visited various other children in Vermont, Massachusetts, and Tennessee, finally arriving back in Florida in late October. Hopes to make the 50th. Summer address is Archer Acres, RR1, Box 228, East Hardwick, Vermont 05836.

Phyllis Saunders Barton almost made the 45th but "decided I'd better get a face-lift first!" Still working in Interior Design after 22 years and still enjoying it. Has almost eight grandchildren. During last ten years has traveled a lot — Egypt, Africa, New Guinea, Bali, Australia. Marjorie Coll Fields, after a visit on the Vineyard with your secretary and Jean Cross Maier, went out to California to visit with son Arthur and his family. Was there for grandson Cory's 3rd birthday. Arthur's stepson Charles won a week's trip to Switzerland in the Pepsi Music Contest (he is a very accomplished young musician). He is now attending school in New York.

Susan Darling, a retiree from the U.S. Foreign Service for the past ten years, keeps busy with volunteer work, and was planning a trip to China in the fall, says, "years of foreign duty have made me a gypsy traveller." Sue is now living in Guilford, Connecticut. Connie Abbott Schwab, after almost 30 years of marriage, was divorced about ten years ago. She went back to work as a nurse at a small hospital (Ob-Gyn) as assistant director of nurses, did some teaching — loved working with the young people. In 1979 had a pulmonary embolism and six months later a coronary! Retired from nursing in 1980 and lives in a lovely one story town house. Connie has three grandchildren. Oldest son George, lives in New Orleans, and is very involved in Worlds Fair 1984. She is doing some volunteer work at hospital, plays bridge regularly and is active with Schenectady Visiting Nurses. New address is 32 Carrie Court, Schenectady, NY 12309.

Carol Whittemore Fowler's son-in-law and two teen-aged grandchildren are living in Fairbanks, Alaska. Had hoped that Carol could come down to the Vineyard last summer but she was unable to make it — maybe next summer. Carol has been having problems with emphysema and finds travelling is difficult.

Diana Greene Helfrich has finally managed to graduate all the children! Three degrees in '83! Hope went back to school and got her degree in business in January, and took her C.P.A. exam in November. We have our collective fingers crossed at this time. Will hear about results in February! Dave received his Master's in E.E. and Dan finally decided to graduate in December with his B.S. in Mechanical Engineering — so now we have a civil, electrical, and mechanical engineer, plus a possible future C.P.A.! Dan was married in September and has moved down to Melbourne, Florida this month (January) to work for the Harris Corp. designing antennas for satellites! I am looking forward to going South to see them in the winter.

Thanks to all who wrote such newsy letters. It was great hearing from you and only wish I had more room to quote more from each of them. Hope that the rest of you will take pen, typewriter, computer, or what have you, and write for the next column. Happy New Year to all you lovely people, and do write in '84.

From a February vantage point, it is not easy to predict how events that are to occur 8-10 June will turn out, but the early signs indicate that all systems are go for our biggest and best reunion, our 45th. The Arrangements Committee, chaired by Marsh Kates and consisting of Marsh, Bob Hearn, Ed Kendrick, and Jim Kittredge, has matters pertaining to food, drink, and entertainment under control, the School will offer its traditionally fine program, and the turnout promises to be tremendous — as of this early date, almost 40 hope to attend. If you have been holding back for fear of being lonely, now is the time to sign up and join the fun.

I was disappointed when one program idea fell through. It was hoped that Harry Anderson might be induced to talk about last summer's Cup Races off Newport and explain how we are going to wrest the Cup back from Australia in 1987. As you all know, Harry is a Commodore of the New York Yacht Club, Executive Vice President of the U.S. Race Union, and very much involved in the management of these exciting events. Alas, Harry reports that he will be engaged in a race in Canadian waters over the reunion weekend and will be unable to join us.

Marsh Kates has found time away from his duties on our behalf, for foreign travel. Last November it was Italy and this February Israel. If he adds a visit to Ireland, he will be set to run for mayor of New York. I am grateful to him for information about PA 39ers who attended the Harvard fortieth reunion last June. This year-old item doesn't qualify as hot news, but a recital of the roster will make it difficult for those named to fink out on our reunion. So, Win Bernhard, Bill Binnian, Dick Cutler, Dau Davenport, Al Levine, Dick Mintz, Joe Phelan, Bob Sherwood, Mel Shoul, and Rufe Walker (plus the aforementioned Marsh Kates and Bob Hearn), we will see you in June.

I have good news on several of our company who have been temporarily disabled. Last summer, Pete Anderson was waiting in a proper lane to pay his toll at the toll plaza on the New York Thruway outside of Albany. A car from an adjacent lane swerved out of control into Pete's car, causing terrible damage to Pete's left leg. For Pete, this has meant months of hospitalization in Albany and Boston. He is now convalescing in Chicago and sounds great, reporting that the therapy is torture but seems to be working. Anyone for membership in the Ban-the-Tolls Club?

In January, John Blum underwent a successful heart by-pass operation. When last I saw him, he was home and in excellent spirits. Both Pete and John plan to attend the reunion.

John Robinson, who, in November was installed as the 81st President of the Association of Life Insurance Medical Directors of America, has been plagued with eye problems, requiring cataract surgery and hospitalization for a detached retina. His cryptic comment: "Some fun!" Congratulations on his new high office and best wishes for a speedy recovery.

The mail brings news from Frank O'Brien who writes that his wife, Muffin, and daughter Dede are thoroughly enjoying their educational counseling business, O'Brien Associates, at 264 Beacon St., Boston, advising families about appropriate day or boarding pre-preparatory or secondary schools. Dick Whittington forwarded photos of his latest road race. Great as Dick looks, resplendent in an Andover t-shirt, the competition looks fresher, cuter, and more fit — that comes from them being ten and under. Dick did a kilometer in 4:11, but is a little vague about the final order of finish.

The Class will be sad to learn of the death of Peter Fraser, Jr. last summer at his home in Weston, CT. After graduation, Pete attended Yale and the Harvard Architectural School and served as an ensign in the War. As a designer, Pete specialized in the field of conservation, and used sculptural curves, colors, and modern furnishings to give a contemporary air to the renovation of old townhouses. Buildings in New York, Minneapolis, and Hartford are monuments to his expertise. He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Peter M. Fraser, and a sister, Aileen Fraser Alberts, both of Vero Beach, FL.

1984 — Our 45 REUNION YEAR. If "Woodie," Mary Woodman O'Hagan, can come all the way from South Africa for our 45th, you can make it too. Let's have a good turnout on 8-10 June (Friday to Sunday). For many of us it will be our first time back in over 40 years, so it should be fun. We'll be there from Sarasota, Florida so plan to join us. Bring your husband, children or grandchildren, or a friend, but COME.

Remember to bring those pictures — of trips, family, and especially grandchildren (or great-grand children). We are working with the PA '39 reunion committee, so we should have a good group. See you in June!

Non-appearance of Class Notes in the last issue of the Bulletin was the result of a comedy of errors, mainly mine. Somehow notes from the Alumni Office, usually forwarded to me, were sent to the Class Secretary of Abbot '40 with the result that Gene Schnell and Walt Curley were featured as members of that group — shades of Miss Hersey.

Susan loaned her portrait by Grant Wood to exhibitions of that artist's work, and pleasant results were invitations to the opening at the Whitney Museum in New York city last June and at the Chicago Institute of Art a week ago. Our Manhattan meandering brought us together with Walt Curley, John Kubie and "Butts" Macomber. These denizens of the "Big Apple" never cease to extend kindness to visiting classmates. John gave us lunch and acted as a pro-tem banker and Butts gave us a personal tour with lunch at the Metropolitan Museum.

Chicago: "Ah, bitter chill there was" resulted in phone conversations with Blake Flint, still active in the business world, George St. George, whom I had not seen since graduation, and now a lawyer with the Department of Labor, State of Illinois; and finally Frank Carr, whom after much tracking through MA Bell, or rather her 'Mid-Western dwarf,' I found in a seminary in Wisconsin studying for the priesthood. I know we all wish him well, and perhaps at next reunion or our 50th we may ask Father Frank to pronounce the blessing.

With the thought in mind that some of PA '40 would be there, I attended a somewhat premature 40th reunion at Yale held over the weekend of the 100th anniversary of THE GAME in late November. Perfect Indian summer was in attendance along with many classmates, who some unknown bard best described: "Some retired, some rewired, some rewedded, some retreaded." But all, jolly good company!

Butts Macomber was officer in charge of a most successful operation ably assisted by John Kubie and Phil Walsh. Walt Curley and Dave Gile received citations for exceptional service to Yale. In attendance were: Mort Brody, Pres Bush, Gerry Castle, Jim Caulkins, Mabe Childs, Bill Coles, Tracy Dickson, Jay Drake, Fuzzie Furse, Nick Greene, Tom Healy, Tim Hoopes, Ham James, Charlie Larkin, Tom Lewis, Jack Malo, Harve Moore, Gerry Reed, Tom Rowen, Len Tucker, Bill Wallace and Junie O'Brien. (The Alumni Office will be pleased to know Bill Wallace is now a resident of Madison, CT after many years in Trucial, Arabia.)

So many sons of Phillips attended, that one could forgive a Yale classmate who asked, "Is this an Andover or Yale Reunion?" All have promised to be on hand for our 45th! Best joke, as always, from Bill Coles — sitting-up exercises to the words, "Mary Had A Little Lamb." Ask Bill for the original version!

Sad news received in late fall from both George Semler and Jim McCaffrey of the passing of Arthur Barber, Bruce Benepe and John Brennan. I had heard of Bruce, who died last Easter, from Libby during her visit to Bermuda this summer. Art passed away 9 October after a long and harrowing illness. One bright note — Art was awarded the U.S. Army Air Medal early this September in a military ceremony at his bedside, with his wife and children present, at the Veterans Hospital in Lyons, New Jersey. The award being for "meritorious achievement" as an aerial observation pilot during the Italian Campaign in 1945. Having seen for myself, in Italy, the great gallantry of those brave men who flew light, unarmed planes over the Panzer Divisions while "spotting" for the artillery, one can only say: "God Bless you Art." Art's friend, Jim McCaffrey, wrote an eloquent tribute to Art — unfortunately, space limitations prevent inclusion of the piece in its entirety: "... following Phillips, he attended Princeton, graduating in 1944 with a degree in chemistry. During WW II, Art served in the Army, with distinction, in the extremely dangerous position of liaison pilot, rising to the ranks of Captain by war's end. After the war Art worked for Standard Oil, was director of New Products for American Machine and Foundry, was a former president of Metal Powders, Inc., and most recently operated the NJ management consulting firm of Barker and Co., Inc. He was an accomplished glider pilot, skier, squash player, sailor, and wing shot. His active mind led him to study art, opera, photography, amateur radio; and he wrote a definitive book on celestial navigation. He leaves his wife, Cynthia; children, Alison B. Gilen; Tyler and Shelby Barber; three grandchildren; his mother and brother, David PA '45'."

A short note to Jim from Libby Benepe: "Three classmates in one year. I bet those guys, Art, Johnnie and Bruce, are having a ball up there." One further note — I have just received news from the Alumni Office that Andrew Gibbons passed away recently in La Mesa, California. I know that I can speak for all of us as I extend heartfelt sympathy to the families of all four classmates. "At the going down of the sun and in the morning we will remember them."

Dick Sisson's publication, Outer Banks Pit Stop, received and reviewed. A literary nugget ably illustrated by the author, it records a week in the life of our erstwhile classmate in his splendid isolation in Kill Devil Hills, North Carolina. Get a copy! Dick feels that somewhere Inchie Spencer and Freddy Stott are shaking their heads in amazement.

"Through memories haze." Am I alone in thinking that the musical theme from that rather macabre TV presentation, The Day After, was taken from that stalwart old hymn of Chapel days — How Firm a Foundation Ye Saints of the Lord? Somehow that music took me back many years to Cochran Chapel. For all that remains — a happy 1984 to you all. George Orwell notwithstanding, the best is yet to be!

Had a call from Mimi Calder Dunn shortly before Christmas. She and Jim were visiting their daughter and family here in Illinois for the holidays. Jim recently retired, and from all reports is enjoying his well-earned leisure, while Mimi continues her part-time job with Hallmark. We had hoped to get together, but I was flying around preparing to leave for Florida where we spent Christmas with son Bob. While there, I met with Addie Waterhouse MacKay for a leisurely lunch in Daytona. It was great seeing her again and we picked up where we left off a hundred years ago. She was expecting the arrival of her second grandchild at that point. I've yet to learn the outcome.

Marnie Martin Martin (bless her) sent news she had received from Ellie Rafton Gordon. Ellie and husband Harold live in Swampscott, MA, have a son, Alan, and three grandchildren residing in Londonderry, NH. They are looking forward to Harold's retirement in September with plans to board a 40-foot trawler and head for the Florida Keys where they will spend the winter months. We wish them luck and smooth sailing.

Bob and I are looking forward to meeting our unknown grandson, Nicholas Sherman, this summer. He was born in Bangkok, Thailand a year ago, and will be back for home leave in July with his mom, dad and two sisters. It should be quite a reunion.

As always, I'm crying for more news to relate in the Bulletin. HELP PLEASE!

Till next time . . . my love and good wishes to all. Dorie

How very grateful I am for the good number of classmates who have written me expressing their grief at Obie's death and wishing me well as your Class Secretary. One such is Don Celotto, who continues to sit as Judge of the Superior Court, State of Connecticut, in New Haven. From Los Gatos, California a fine letter from Averill Q. Mix who has closed his law office to practice part-time at home on land development matters. Wife, Ann Marie, does volunteer work for the San Jose Museum of Art and has persuaded Tex to be Treasurer. In 1983, son Gregory received his California architect's license and son Alan, a Ph.D. candidate at Columbia, presented them with their first grandson. A photographic safari to Africa was another high point in 1983 for the Mixes.

A welcome note was received from Bill Coffin who continues as Minister at The Riverside Church in New York City. Both he and Averill Mix mentioned Gilbert and Sullivan and their joys of active participation in performances in the past. Tom Barrow wrote a fine letter explaining that he and his wife have returned to Houston, Texas after ten years in Greenwich, Connecticut. While in Connecticut, Tom was running Kennecott Copper as CEO. Now he is back in the oil business (where he was before Kennecott) as Vice-Chairman of Sohio. He has his principal office in Houston, although the corporate headquarters are in Cleveland. This requires some commuting as well as travel to California where he serves as a Trustee of Stanford University. Three of their four children are married, and they look forward to an increasing number of grandchildren.

From Jim Carrington, a good letter written on Seasonair Management Corp. stationery. Jim is Chairman of the Board of this firm. He writes that he and Joe Leiper had a good evening together in mid-January at the New York Athletic club, reminiscing about PA classmates they would like to see again, particularly Jim Reilly, Bob Hackett and Skip McKinley, all Beanery boys. Joe continues to right the wrongs of the N.Y. subway system. I suspect Jim was at the N.Y. AC either playing squash or refereeing matches. He is Chairman of the Committee on Referees of the U.S. Squash Racquets Association.

Received an amusing holiday greeting from Steele and Patty Blackall, still in Rhode Island. Bill Bentley, M.D., of Las Vegas, Nevada, and wife, Nancy, have provided me with enough news of themselves and family to fill an issue. I shall space it out over a period of time. Bill writes that he and Dick Sheridan got together in November at Caesar's Palace and talked over old times. Dick has retired from Mobil Oil, International Division, for whom he traveled all over the world. He now lives outside San Diego and loves it.

Bill is a PA alumni representative and enjoys interviewing prospective students. He has been in Las Vegas 20 years practicing internal medicine and enjoying the West. He has been on the State Board of Health for 16 years, and the Environmental Commission for four years. He is also president of the Nevada PRO which has to do with hospital administration, utilization review, and prospective payments, etc. Bill has five children and four grandchildren.

Fred Kahn wrote a thoughtful letter from New Orleans suggesting it might be appropriate to create a scholarship or special gift to Andover, from our class, in Obie's memory. Nate Cartmell and I will discuss this subject with the Alumni Office, with Bunny Obermeyer, and finally with all of our classmates to see if we can arrive at a suitable consensus. Fred sent a copy of his letter to Vern Midgley and Midge wrote a fine letter extolling Obie's service to his class and to Andover over the past years.

Bunny has sent me some items received by Obie, but unreported. Trudy Honig writes from West Lafayette, Indiana that her husband, Jurgen, who is Professor of Physical Chemistry at Purdue University, resigned as the Director of the Material Science Program after 12 years, and has become editor of the Journal of Solid State Chemistry. Ken Keuffel wrote in June 1983 from Lawrenceville, NJ that last fall, after 31 years, was his last season as football coach at Lawrenceville School. He will continue to teach English at the school and feels it a great pity that the Lawrenceville-Andover football rivalry ended two years ago.

An important letter was received in April 1983 from Winfield Smith in which he relates some information on our late classmate, Bill Hessey. More of this in a future report. I quote: "I remain most interested in furthering, in any way I can, a class autobiographical publication to be out in time for our 45th Reunion (1987). That would help set things up for the 50th, and I can't forget that infirmities and mortality can mean that the 45th is as high as some of our classmates may ever get. . . . What it needs is some effort and some ability to make decisions about format and procedures. If anyone else has some interest in this, I would love to hear about it." This is a wonderful commitment on Win's part and we thank him for it. For classmates interested in contacting Win, his address is 5825 South Blackstone Ave., Chicago, IL 60637.

Nate Cartmell reports a new record pace of giving to the Alumni Fund by our class.

As of January 1984, we have already gained 80% of last year's total, with many more new givers. Keep up the good effort! Finally, from the 18 December 1983 issue of Parade magazine, we learn that George Herbert Walker Bush in his first 1,000 days as the 43rd Vice President of the United States, established a new travel record for holders of that office. As of 20 October 1983, Bush had logged 406,478 miles in his travels. He had visited 46 different countries, three U.S. possessions, and 48 states. As this is written he is on perhaps the most important mission of his public career, that of representing President Reagan at the Moscow funeral of Yuri V. Andropov. Let us hope and pray that while there, he can help build a bridge of understanding which will lead to full scale consultations between the super powers and eventual mutual respect on human terms.

Please write — it is wonderful to hear from you. Thanks again to all who have.

Dear Class:

Encouraged by one of my sons who is a class secretary, I accepted the challenge of the role.

The first threat of disaster became apparent when blank post cards were coming back to me in the mail because they had become detached from the original addressee section. So much for that. For the next issue I will be wiser and use scotch tape. (Hope you all have stock in 3M.) But all was not lost and I lucked out with some great responses.

Ann Bacon responded with more news on a postcard than most of us could put in a letter. She is still in the DC area. (Washington does not change much she says.) She is a medical technician and has worked for two M.D.s since 1975. She has four children and six grandchildren. (I will not get into that class statistic in this first report.) Her children have a wide geographical spread — Brunswick, ME (rah, rah for New England); British Columbia; Albany, NY; and her daughter Peggy is a R.N. in Charlottesville, VA. The creme de la creme for herself was a trip to Greece last September.

More travelling classmates. Betty Hardy Verdery and her husband are members of the Chatham Chorale Chamber Singers who made an ambitious concert tour of Rumania, Austria and Germany last September. Their daughter Katherine who is an anthropology professor at Johns Hopkins specializing in Romania, was able to join them there. She speaks the language fluently, so what a treat it must have been to have her with them.

Elsie Williams Kelly sends Christmas cards from which I garner her news. At last count, her son Whit had two children and lives nearby and her daughter Lisa was in Boulder, Colorado, but I don't know whether she is a student or a ski bum or neither. Elsie promises more of her news soon.

Barbara Johnson Cowat sent interesting, unsolicited news and pictures which I really appreciated. She was remarried 11 years ago and she and Bob have also joined the "travel set." They like to escape from Florida in the summertime, but also like a white Christmas. They rent an apartment in Ilgs, Austria. (Olympic followers should recognize the location.) They leave their Citroen there, so that when in residence they can breakfast in Austria, lunch in Germany, and supper in Italy. I'm out of breath!

Barbara has two daughters and one son and at least one grandchild, but as I said, statistics on that later.

I forgot to mention that Ann Bacon has an extra bedroom for Abbot friends, and you all know the hotel situation in Washington at cherry blossom time. More next time, I hope. Gratefully, —Ann.

A good response to my postcard requests for news, and I thank you. However, there are still a lot of unused reply cards out there, so please use them.

From the mailbox: Archie Stevenson in Lake Forest, IL, writing on the impressive letterhead of the Marriott Riyadh Hotel in Saudi Arabia, reports three grown children, one of whom lives in Sweden. He admits to being President of the F.P. Smith Wire Cloth Co. Archie sees occasionally Bill Rentschler who recently became editor and publisher of a suburban Illinois weekly newspaper, Our Voice. Jim Moore, Blacksburg, VA, reports four children and five grandchildren all living in his area. Jim was recently honored by becoming a Fellow of the American Institute of Industrial Engineers.

At least one member of the class is in politics. Dave Anderson is a Republican member of the Connecticut Assembly from Norwich, and Chairman of a couple of committees. With nine children ranging from 35 to 2-year-old twins, the Assembly must seem pretty peaceful to Dave. My old roommate, Don Wallace, reported in to say that he is a partner of Whitman and Ransom of New York and attended the recent dinner for Ted Sizer. Eason Cross, an architect in Arlington, VA, says that his fourth child, Susan, is an upper at Andover, his first to attend and also that to further his interest in historical architecture he is spending some time in Central Mexico.

The Wolfboro, NH newspaper reports that Dick deNiord has joined the staff of Huggins Hospital as a thoracic surgeon, coming here from his practice in Minnesota. An interesting card from Ken Davis, ex-Chief Financial Officer of IBM, ex-Assistant Secretary of Commerce, and now in the merger and acquisition business with Tucker Anthony which he describes as "tough, interesting, exciting work." Ken was married, #2, in 1983, to Eleanor Schrummof of Cheshire, CT.

From the long-lost arena: Gene Pantzer, deep in the woods of New Hampshire, retains that active mind that we remember. His interests now include rare birding in Mexico and Japan (Bob Sides was on his Japanese birding expedition), professional investing, his new career after teaching; and writing. Gene wrote the best-selling (10 copies), biography of Gustav Matos. His dog training days are apparently over; as his kennel has dropped from 17 to 0. Palmer Worthen, the low key, Marblehead-based lawyer, seems to have more sense than Sinatra. He gave up singing, but loved it when he did it. From San Francisco, George Ettelson's nice note: George seems to be turning out a family of jocks, with a basketball player son at Deerfield and a cross country and track team star daughter at Santa Catalina School.

Bob Coulson sent in his biography from which it appears that he is a lawyer. As a matter of fact, he is the current President of the American Arbitration Association. No mention of his sailing activities, but it does state that he has five children. Jack Lemmon got a nice mention in Sports Illustrated's article on the Crosby Golf Classic, saying that one of the pleasures of the tournament was to watch Jack frolic in the ice plant [sic]. Jack is much interested in the treatment of Alzheimer's disease, serving as a director of the John Douglas French Foundation.

Don Earnshaw has made an interesting switch in careers, from an executive role with Continental Can, to Deputy Assistant Secretary of Commerce, working on International trade. While with Continental Can, the Earnshaws lived in Belgium for a number of years. Frank Anderson, not heard from for many years, has retired from Chrysler and is now consultant to the Chairman of a small manufacturing company in Michigan. His daughters have presented him with two grandchildren to date. Stu Northrup, still Chairman of Huffy Corp. of Dayton (bicycles), has moved to Haverford, PA. Stu must be one of America's great bikers, commuting to board meetings on his product. Sam Golding, from Hartford, CT, sends in the brief advice that his son graduated from Andover, Harvard, and Harvard Business School. Dave Hoopes has moved to Old Lyme, CT and is a consultant in the communications field.

Bill Kelty is another second career type, having changed from being manager of Winchester's gun division in New Haven to the role of Operating head of a venture capital firm in Phoenix whose interests spread from New Orleans to Salt Lake City. One of Bill's children has just taken on the position of missionary in a very small settlement north of Nairobi, Kenya. Fred Moore has decided to get his hands dirty at the grass roots and has moved from corporate headquarters of Chubb Life-America to the job of regional director for the same company working out of Bloomington, MN.

Wins Bennett leads the active life, running a cattle ranch near Glacier National Park, along with his professional interests in mining and high tech companies. He is also President of the British Columbia Cancer Foundation and would welcome classmates who visit Vancouver.

The most unusual news comes from Jim Munro. In pursuit of his 8th or 10th career (no kidding), Jim enrolled in the St. George's School of Medicine in Grenada and took his family with him. In his words, "the guns, Cubans, and the fear, got us down and we left before the shooting began. We have been counting our blessings." Now that doctoring seems to be out of reach, Jim is hard after another career. We await his announcement with bated breath.

Your secretary, a retired type, is now giving classes in bread baking and loving it. A generous discount is offered to classmates.

sue of the Bulletin. We are, of course, urged to attend the weekend of 8-10 June. As of 1 February we have 32 definites and 31 maybes. You will receive a reservation form and details about our plans in March. Its going to be a great gathering and we want you to be there. Save the dates, and plan to be with us in June. As reported earlier, Chris and Margaret Eatough will be among those present. As not reported earlier, Chris has been elected Captain of the Golfing Society of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, to whom, by the way, he will deliver a stirring address at Claridges Hotel on 17 March.

For those of you who do not regularly read Woman's Wear Daily, Burlington Industries, ably guided by Chairman of the Board, Whitney Stevens, last year made a $300,000 grant to the Philadelphia College of Textiles and Science. How to go, Whit!

A news flash from Pete Stevens indicates that in addition to brother Eatough, the Messrs. Ault, Baker, Berghelm, Cahill, Cartmell, Castle, Collins, Dickey, Grant, Hatton, Howard, McManaway, Parker, Pete Stevens, Whit Stevens, Williamson, and Young will all be attending the reunion.

Roger Strong sends a photograph of Whitney Stevens and Estee Lauder fashionably garbed and obviously enjoying themselves at the Southampton, NY Parrish Museum gala last summer.

Roger Seymour writes that Jerry O'Brian and Ann are lodged in Moscow where Jerry is building a new U.S. consular complex. His address is c/o American Embassy, FBO/M, APO, New York 09862. Mr. Seymour also informs us that Pete Roome is now a full-fledged broker with Prudential-Bache in Darien, CT.

Brother Abrons has a story in the January 1984 issue of Cosmopolitan, "Viable Options."

That man for all seasons, Peter Baker, has joined the ranks of the male models who graduated from the class of '44. He appears as Chicken Man in the Convertech Chicken Chit promotion. While perhaps not as clean shaven as Victor Kiam, he is probably even sexier.

Harry Hall and Roger Seymour report that George and Eunice Canty live in Boca Raton, FL, and are the parents of John Canty, PA class of 1984.

Don Sterling, for many years editor of The Oregon Journal, is now assistant to the publisher of The Oregonian with which the Journal has merged.

Bob Cushing, who has his own executive recruiting business in New York city, saw Fred Meacham and wife Sue last August in Denver. Fred, Bob reports, is still working for Martin Marietta and happily caring for his horses on a small ranch in Sedalia, CO.

Gus Deming continues to provide expertise on foreign news to those wise enough to subscribe to Newsweek. He is based in New York, but specializes in Middle East affairs. He has plenty to write about.

Richard Abrons has recruited Roger Strong for the board of the Council on the Environment, an organization mandated by the mayor to make New York city even more beautiful. Dick Abrons is one of the main movers on the Council.

Leo McMahon and his father, Brig. Gen. Leo T. McMahon '14, also should be among those present at reunion time in Andover. It's Leo's 40th and his father's 70th.

Richard Hatton, whose address is Garfield House, 1-M, 179 President's Lane, Quincy, MA 02169, solicits news of Andover-Harvard men for his newsletter, The Forty-Niner. (Dick was in the class of '49 at Harvard.)

A late flash from Roger Seymour is that Pete and Mary Alice Roome are coming to the reunion.

Harriet Waller Conklin telephoned me as she was passing through Hanover on her way to visit her youngest child, a graduate of St. Paul's and now a freshman at Bowdoin. He must love cold weather. She gave me a full report on their other four children: oldest son, Charles, is a beef cattle farmer in Georgia; daughter Martha is a Ph.D. candidate at Cal Tech in Environmental Studies; twin daughters, Margaret and Alice, are studying law at Harvard, and history at Princeton respectively. A family of accomplishment, I'd say. Harriet continues as Director of the local library using her Master of Library Science which she received a number of years ago. Her husband, Roger, is a manufacturer's representative, but I failed to find out the industry. They spent six years abroad in Oslo and the Hague and are now settled in Kewanee again where both Harriet's parents were born.

Finally received a note from Shirley Woodams Hoesterey who lives in Santa Ana, California. Actually, it would appear that Shirley uses home only to wash and repack. Her itinerary for 1982-1983 was: England and Ireland, November '82; Kenya on safari in March of '83; two weeks in Paris in May; three and one half weeks in People's Republic of China in September. No wonder she missed my request for news. I assume that the rest of you who didn't respond have equally fascinating excuses. Please let us hear from you.

Ricki Stambaugh's letters asking for our 40th reunion gift have prompted a letter from Charlotte Trow Young who has joined us in the north country. Her husband, Earl, was called to serve the First Congregational Church of Brighton in Island Pond, Vermont.

Both Shirley and Charlotte have added their names to the list of those returning to Andover next 8, 9 and 10 June. The others are, Julia Tavares Alvarez, Marge Travis Atwood, "Gil" Rich Ferguson, Molly Hubbard Mercer, Elinor Cahill Georgopulo, Charlotte Leland (our organizer), and Ricki Hinrichsen Stambaugh (our fund-raiser) and me!

Hopefully by the time this Bulletin reaches you, others will have signed up. Call a fellow alumna and ask her to join us. Another ten years and we'll be Old Guard, so come back now while you're still young.

Boy, this has been some winter here in Connecticut! As I write this, on February 15, it is raining cats and dogs and, instead of complaining, I'm rejoicing that it's wet and not white!

My absent-mindedness is catching up with me. I know I received a letter from one of you guys the week after the last notes were submitted, and after the deadline. I put the letter in my file and now I can't find it, nor can I remember who sent it! My apologies, but I've been through each file twice, and no soap! I didn't lose them all however.

Tom Raleigh's first grandchild managed to be born on his mother's birthday 19 June 1983 in Lithonia, Georgia. (Tom doesn't identify the proud parents nor give the young man's name — probably par for a new grandfather). Tom Jr. PA '72 married Charlotte Johnson of Cleveland, TN (home of Magic Chef) in October and they have settled in Orlando where Tom practices law. Tom and Ann's youngest, John, graduated from Princeton in June '83 and spent the summer with the State Department in Saudi Arabia. Sounds like a banner year for the Raleighs.

Good news from pedant King Pfeiffer, teacher of government at Notre Dame. Sally is recovering nicely from the radiation treatments she received to successfully stop a cancer problem in the throat. King completed his Ph.D. in government at N.D. in August. He laments, "no grandchildren yet, despite hints." Obviously his Ph.D. wasn't in biology!

Got a great letter from Dave Space's mother chiding me for listing him among the missing. He is not missing at all, but enjoying his retirement as a Captain in the USN at 92-1248 Kales Road, Makapilo — Ewa Beach, Hawaii 96706. His last assignment was as head of the Navy's David Taylor Research and Development Center in Bethesda, MD. She reports that of the four Space progeny, the oldest graduated from Old Dominion in Virginia and lives in Seattle. The other three owe allegiance to Minnesota State in Bemidji and lives in Minneapolis. Dave's dad, Victor, was PA '14; so Mrs. Space has a long-lasting affection for the old school. Thanks for the update, Mrs. S.

Reg and Lois Collier have visited more places in the last 20 months than Sec'y of State Schultz! Egypt, Jordan, Israel, Greece, Majorca, London, Brazil, Hong Kong, Macao, Mainland China (7 cities), Japan (6), France, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Romania, Turkey and Italy! (Is no one safe?) Favorites were Hong Kong and Ankara. New stops: Antiqua, Tahiti, Australia, and New Zealand. Reg says, "Kids are off on their careers, the cat died, and we're free! Don't call me, I'll call you." The last was unnecessary — I couldn't afford the phone bill nor would I know where the hell to call!

I also received a nice note wishing me a rapid recovery from Fr. Bill O'Shea S.J., long-time chaplain of Brown U. Joe Weix called me out of the blue one Sunday night from Oconomowoc, Wisconsin where he is President of Oconomowoc Canning Co. Joe had read in the class notes about my bypass surgery and kindly called to compare notes on diet and exercise. He suffered a cardiac arrest several years ago. Fortunately, he was in the hospital undergoing treatment for another problem at the time. He was about to take off for Colorado to join his daughter for some skiing. It was great hearing from Joe who had also been on the lost list until he showed up for the 35th reunion. He plans to make the 40th.

Incidentally, it's time to start our planning for the 40th (there'll be only two more editions of the Bulletin between now and then). Two things I would like to ask of you: 1. Please mentally circle the first week in June 1985 for a possible trip back to the Hill. 2. Drop me a line, if you would like to help organize this shindig. I can use all the help you can give. As far as I know our 35th was a record turnout for PA 35ths and I'd love to see us ring the gong even louder for our 40th.

John Blake is still threatening to retire, but so far is still doing the same great job, thank God. He finally got us up to 50% participation last year and is hoping to improve this year. Let's all help.

Drop a line if you get a chance, and I am happy to hear from wives, mothers, or children of classmates with writer's cramp!

Sorry about the confusion between two-Class Secretaries — (Sally Leavitt Cheney and me) but better two than none, so please keep the news coming — it's great to hear from all of you. Sally tells me that she does translation (Spanish to English) and volunteer work at a pediatric clinic for low-income patients in Washington, D.C. She also works at the Washington International Visitors Center. Her children include Dorothy, a research scientist at Stanford Institute for Advanced Behavioral Studies; Margaret, managing editor of the Washingtonian; Drew, a tax attorney in Portland, ME; and Tom, a 1st Lt. in the Marine Corps.

Gretchen Fuller Frazier (Far Hills, NJ), a commercial artist, is now retired but still volunteers "in the field." She writes of her husband, Don, who has just published his first book.

Janet Redman Hill is busy travelling around to various functions with her husband who is head of the University of Alabama at Birmingham.

Helen Norris Stearns spent part of last summer in Vermont, then took a trip to Colorado and Montana. It sounds as though she's still interested in horses, taking two out and bringing two new ones back. She has a granddaughter — probably almost two years old by now.

Barbara Ball Bacon is also a grandmother (for the second time). All three of her children are married; both boys are in the computer programming business with their

dad. Barb is in her second year as President of the United Cerebral Palsy Board of Michigan.

Joan Sweeney writes that she now lives in Mesa, Arizona for eight months (October to June) and in Hampstead, NH for the rest of the year. She retired from Polaroid in 1982 and enjoys "all play and no work."

Also just retired is Biz Marsh Birney who has recently moved to Queenstown, MD. She and her husband have five children and 3½ grandchildren. Their first son is a clergyman in Yarmouth, ME; the second son is a musician, the third an actor, and the fourth a writer. Their only daughter is a nursing student in Boston.

Ann Walen Churchill writes from Cohasset, MA that her husband died and she has moved to a smaller place. She is busy restoring and improving the house as well as being involved in town affairs, ecology, watercolor painting, and keeping track of six grandchildren spread from Boston to Vancouver, B.C.

I am still living in New London, NH (as is Betty Reid Buzby '44) and teach at Colby-Sawyer College. I had the interesting experience of taking my youngest daughter for an interview at PA for possible admission next fall. Details to follow in the next installment!

It's wonderful to receive a letter from a classmate who has been relatively silent since graduation. When it occurs, I go straight to the old, yellowing Pot Pourri and check out the lad's potentials. Such a note from Adolf-Munzer-Strasse, 9 Uttingam Ammersee, West Germany, brightened up a bleak January day. Page 80 of the '46 book revealed: "Choir and Glee Club ('43-'46), Pirates of Penzance (principal), 8-in-1 Octet ('45-'46), Iolanthe (principal). Could there be music in his future? I'll let "Hips" tell it in his own words:

"After many years of silence it seems strange to sit down and write a letter about my activities. I believe my last contact in the U.S.A. was Steve West; and Johnny Wheeler, Jr. visited me once in Frankfurt after a performance at the Opera. I left the U.S. in 1950 after having studied singing in New York. Luck was with me from the beginning, and after a successful audition in Bordeaux, I made my European debut only three weeks after arriving. After singing through the French provincial opera houses, I had a chance to come to Munich ('55) and grabbed it. I have been here in Germany ever since.

"I've been back to the U.S. a few times to sing with the San Francisco Opera and the New York City Opera, but the majority of my work has centered around Munich, Berlin, and Frankfurt. I appeared regularly in the Salzburg Festival from 1964 to 1971 and let forth at the Bayreuth Festival in 1961 in 'Rheingold' with four American Gods and Goddesses. Outside of opera, I do a lot of musicals and have done over 300 performances of Henry Higgins in My Fair Lady (in German) in nine different theatres.

"Life has been good. I have a lovely wife, Claire Watson, who was also a singer in Munich, and we have a son, Tommy, who is two inches taller than I. We live in a small village about 30 miles from Munich, and I commute to rehearsals and performances.

"My memories of Andover are centered around Dr. Pfatteicher and the wonderful musical experiences that he gave us with the Glee Club, the choir and the Gilbert and Sullivan with Abbot. He was one of those rare teachers with a child-like enthusiasm for his subject, and he knew how to get the kids riled up, too.

"All the best." —Dave Thaw.

"Duck" Heard was back in town after the "hols," and we met with the Richard Moses at the Yale Club. Hadn't seen Dick since he went West to Indiana. He and Marilyn look terrific.

Shelia and I were at the boat house dedication last fall, and spent a lovely Saturday and Sunday with Kate and Martin Begien in Brookline.

Bege is still unbelievable to behold. He looks so young — he touches up his sideburns with Grecian Formula, so he won't have to show ID at the country club bar.

Dr. Art Asbury went to the track (Keeneland) last fall with Joan and Charlie Thomas (the very big checkout man — Krogers's) and Susan and Larry Higbe (blue water skipper and S.F. mogul). The Pot Pourri showed that Snake and Dig were old "Open Door" buddies and funny little devils. Right Tunk? Pape was the Big man in the O.D.

Begien heard at length from Don Lazo, Caixa Postal 20896, 01.000, Sao Paulo, Brasil, where he lives with his wife, Sonia, and daughters, Helena and Silvia. Don graced my copy of the PP with "certainly won't forget a great senior class and the greatest class play ever produced. Thanks. The Spic." Good to hear from you, Chico.

I never made Broadway, Pape, but I played four roles in the ACC of NYC production of A Thurber Carnival to enthusiastic houses and mixed reviews.

A fast week in the British Virgins was a welcome diversion for the Thomeses in mid-January. We cruised on the Stevors 47 and had Rod Stephens of S & S (the designers) on board for two days of photography. It was a rare experience I shall never forget.

All the best. Keep the paper flowing.

Mike Suisman sent on a note from Craig Mathews announcing the establishment of his own law practice in Washington, DC. Here's an excerpt from Craig's letter: "... After twenty-five years with a major Washington law firm, I have established my own practice. It offers a welcome opportunity for increased independence and flexibility ... The firm is prepared to handle a general practice, but initially it will concentrate in the four areas I know best: international matters, antitrust, trade associations, and environmental law." Best of luck in the new endeavor, Craig.

Bayard Waring was recently appointed regional representative for the U.S. Department of Education in New England.

Had a delightful dinner with Dick and Liz Dakin when in San Francisco last January. Dick is just as energetic and enthusiastic as ever and he continues to contribute a portion of his skill in reconstructive surgery for the benefit of less fortunate people around the world. He will be spending some time in the Philippines this summer for that purpose.

I missed Herb Briggin who also lives in San Francisco, for he was in Calgary at the time.

Tony Schulte called to convey the sad news that Steve Goodhue's wife, Patty, died on 4 February after a two-year bout with cancer. The sympathy of the class is extended to Steve.

Congratulations to the Class of '47. I'm sure all of you have received Carol McLean Bly's letter stating that we, as a class, tripled our donors in the past year. Also, the total dollar contributed was bigger than ever. Thanks to Carol for all her hard work in reaching all our classmates so we could achieve this goal.

I wish I could reach all of you as well as she does so we could have more news to report to our classmates. There are many of you who have not kept us up-to-date on your lives. Your classmates want to hear from you. Many who do write often, comment on how much they enjoy hearing about classmates.

A personal note to Sylvia Lyford Morgan. I have looked through all my correspondence and cannot find any letter from you. Please write me directly and it will get into the Bulletin. We will love hearing from you.

Got a Christmas card from Lois Derby Taylor with a picture of the family at her daughter's wedding. What a beautiful family! She should be very proud. Her daughter Sandra and husband are in Chicago. Her husband has 18 months to go to finish his training in Internal Medicine. Her son Scott runs the Derby Co. He is #12 in New England racketball, hunts in the fall, fishes in the spring, and does Hodge catting and wind surfing. He and his father are ranked #3 in father/son tennis in New England. Her husband, Bill, is Medical Director of Student Health at Boston University. Lois runs the farm, the condo, and the Cape house. Lois also writes: "Love seeing the Abbot portion of the Bulletin with all the news, and keeping in contact with our youth and dreams."

Mackie Hall Kernan writes: "Christmas flies by faster every year. We were all together which made it nice. Doug was home from California for six days. He has left Lockheed and is now working for a firm called Dialogics — more computers. Les and his wife had just bought a house in Rochester. He is with a law firm there. Connie is still with a radio station in Utica. Martha is at Hartwick College." Mackie saw Mary Rich ('48) in Florida last spring.

I am sorry to report the death of Janice Cole Johnson. On behalf of Class of 1947, I send condolences to her husband, Albert. She will be greatly missed by her classmates. Her husband may be reached by writing to Albert Johnson, 534 Devonshire Court, Severina Park, Maryland 21146.

I am very sorry to have to report that Bob

Yager, M.D. died last fall. He was trout fishing in upper New York state as he had often done before, and apparently stepped in a hole and drowned.

Bob, who was an internist, was director and founder of the respiratory therapy units at Palisades General Hospital in North Bergen, NJ and at Christ Hospital in Jersey City. He specialized in pulmonary medicine and maintained a practice in western New York. From 1958 to 1960 he served as a medical officer in the U.S. Navy. He had been elected to a two-year term as President of the medical staff of Palisades General Hospital in 1978, when the facility was named North Hudson Hospital. He graduated from Harvard College in 1952 and New York University Medical School in 1956, and was an Associate Clinical Professor at the New Jersey College of Medicine and Dentistry. Bob is survived by his wife, Joyce Ann Wheeler; a son, Brian; two daughters, Erica and Lesley; his mother, Jenney; a sister, Helen White of Englewood; and a brother, Ralph, of Englewood Cliffs. The sympathy of the class of '48 is extended to his family.

Ted Este received an MBA recently from Loyola Merrimack University and is absorbed in the Quality Circle Development at Hughes Aircraft Company.

Dick Rubin says he is the only one to have worn Top-Siders thirty-five years ago, and is now President of the company that makes them, and announces that he is happily marketing the Preppy Look. He announces that he has married off all his daughters, who are now living happily ever after in New England and its sufficient proximity.

Al Bress has been elected to the Board of Directors as Vice President of the Corporation at George C. Sharp, Inc. where he is technical director. This is the country's oldest ship design engineering company. His present status has followed a long career in the service, as most of you know. Following graduation from the Naval Academy in 1952, he served on a destroyer out of Norfolk, Virginia, mostly chasing target submarines following which he was selected for submarine training in 1953. After three years on a Pacific fleet submarine during the Korean war, ranging over most of the Pacific, he was ordered to post-graduate school at the Webb Institute of Naval Architecture. Following graduation and marriage he went to the San Francisco naval shipyard then onto the ship repair facility at Subic Bay in the Philippines. With the advent of nuclear power and the Polaris program, he found himself at the Navy's supervisor's office at General Dynamics as design project officer with a new Benjamin Franklin Class for Polaris submarines. While there, he dove the Franklin to test depth, apparently the first submarine to do so since the loss of the Thresher. Ensuing tours of duty involved the Polaris/Poseidon programs and the Trident submarine design, and then an assignment as shipbuilding superintendent at the Mare Island Naval Shipyard in Vallejo, California after which he was designated Director of Ship Design for the Navy. He then went on to be Director of Research and Technology in an Admiral's billet from which he retired in 1979 to take a position in the ship design business as general manager of the Washington office of Designers and Planners, Inc. His most illustrious and successful career continues actively and one can only be left with the thought that the Admiral is admirable.

I have nearly concluded that most of you are working for the CIA and are forbidden to reveal your activities. My heartfelt thanks to the two brave souls who responded to my postcard query. "Tootie" Sinclair Morris is living in Denver and enjoying her family and occasional trips with her husband, Jim. They recently traveled on the World Discoverer from Chile to Antarctica, ending in New Zealand. Her daughter, Katrina, is living in Denver with her husband and stepson. Son Halsted, a graduate of Metro State College, is "job hunting, leading mountaineering expeditions, and teaching rock and ice climbing." "Tootie" writes that her sister, Helen Sinclair Blythe '50, has "1-1/2 grandchildren to the delight of Mom, Mary C. Swartwood Sinclair '23." Toddy Cookman Martel is vice-president of the Fitchburg Art Museum and enthusiastically invites anyone traveling in the area to stop for a visit.

Mary Marton Davenport reports in her Christmas letter that she has two new grandchildren: Heather Larraine, born to son George and his wife Sharon, and Melaine Dawn, born to son Eric and his wife Linda. I wish you all, with and without grandchildren, would send your Secretary a note at Christmas.

"Lish" Cooper Wright expects to become a grandmother in May. All four of her children live in Atlanta, only 65 miles away from Rome, Georgia, her home. Lish's mother died last May. The class extends its sympathy to her and to her family. Very belatedly, we also extend our sympathy to Pat Hammond Duffy and her family. Pat's husband, Bob, died quite unexpectedly in April of 1982. In a letter to "Dodie" Hildreth Detmen, Pat writes that she cannot attend our 35th reunion because of the June wedding of her daughter, Susan. She reports that "my children are scattered from Sun Valley, Idaho, to New Hampshire, and I have an 8-month-old grandson. One son is married and one is engaged. Life is never dull. I keep busy and active by golfing, skiing, playing tennis, and jogging."

Responding to the locate-the-"lost"-

Bob, we'd love to see you again! Ed reported that the two oldest Ryan sons were married three months apart last year and daughter Lucy made her debut in the fall of '83. Ed added, for Barry's benefit, no doubt, that as a result, "color me broke!" Ed also noted that I was the best "slow ball" pitcher PA ever had. Thanks Ed, I thought you were a terrific first baseman, too.

I am sorry to report that Bruce Banta died of complications following heart surgery in July 1983. Prior to his death, Bruce had an important law practice as a partner in the Hackensack, NJ firm of Winnie, Banta, Rizzi & Harrison. Bruce is survived by his wife, Ethel, who continues to reside at 131 West End Avenue, Ridgewood, New Jersey 07450; a son, James PA '79; and daughters Ruth, Alice PA '82, and Katherine; and by his brothers, Peter PA '53, and David PA '56. Our thirty-fifth reunion year!

I spent a recent, delightful weekend in NYC with Pat Bleeker Jones. We talked and reminisced for hours and plotted how to coerce, threaten, bribe or persuade as many of you as possible to show up for reunion as well as part with some money for the Alumnae Fund. Pat tells me we did better last year in percent of contributions, so I'm hoping this generous spirit continues in '84, and that you'll be moved to return in June as well. Lots of good things planned, so please try to join us. By now you have received my first letter and you know I'll just keep nagging, so give up, make the necessary arrangements and come.

I was pleased to see Peg Doane Calvert in San Antonio last October. Her husband, Richard, and my husband, Joe, both serve on the Board of Trustees of Trinity University and we were all at Trinity for the dedication of a new library facility. Peg continues to be an active painter. She is currently taking classes at the McNay Art Institute in San Antonio, and says her preference is for portraits and figure painting in oil. As I recall, Peg and I were both in Mr. Cheever's Studio Art class — she has obviously gone a little further with her art than I have with mine! Rich Calvert is the Chairman and CEO of National Bancshares in San Antonio. Their daughter, a Pomona graduate, lives in California and their son is a student at the University of Texas in Austin. Peg enjoys seeing Tove Dithmer Osterberg and Jane Pope Bertoni when she is in New York. Jane lives in the city and Tove lives in Larchmont.

Elizabeth Bradley Hubbard is a Texan who is permanently in New York. In September 1983 Libby was appointed Associate Director of the Fund for Modern Courts, a non-profit organization concerned with the quality of justice in New York. Libby has been working in this field for some time, having been a director of the Committee for Modern Courts, a vice-chairperson of the Correctional Association of New York, and a member of the Citizens Task Force on Prison Overcrowding. She is the immediate past-president of the League of Women Voters of New York State, and on top of all this, she has a new house! Her new address is: Mallard Drive, R.D. #1, Huntington, NY 11743.

Mandy Bowman Crawford writes that she has lived in Canada for nineteen years now. She has three sons, one of whom graduated last June from Queens University in Kingston, Ontario. Mandy is half-owner of a re-sale business which was started in 1978 and has grown to three stores. Needless to say, Mandy is a busy woman!

Sally Stevens MacMillan and her husband celebrated their 30th anniversary in '83 and marked the occasion by taking a cruise through the Greek Islands in August. Accompanying them were their four daughters and one son-in-law. Their eldest daughter, Sarah, married in June 1983; their second daughter, Kitty, lives in Oklahoma where she and her husband train and show cutting horses. Number three daughter is a Hollins graduate who works as a legal assistant in New York City, and the youngest girl, Alexandra, is a freshman at Lake Forest College.

I don't know what it's like in your town, but in Wichita Falls there is an insatiable demand for willing volunteers and no end of interesting job opportunities. I have just assumed the office of President of the Board of Trustees of First Presbyterian Church, and it looks as though that will be my first priority for 1984.

Looking over our class roster, there are 63 women on the list. Since I assumed this task six months ago, I have heard from twelve of you and received second-hand information about four others. This means that 75% of you are out there in the great unknown. Please drop me a line and let us know what you are doing!

To our class of '51: I wish you all a happy, successful, and a more peaceful new year.

In December I received a sweet note from Happy McConnell Soule in Beaver Falls, PA. It read, "My good news is that my daughter is now a junior at Phillips Academy. The bad news is that although unemployed I'm supporting three kids. Does anyone want a good English teacher? Please drop me a list of '51 alums."

Bet many of us would like each others' addresses, too, for many reasons. It's always fun to know if someone is living near you. The Alumni Office is sending me a new list shortly, as my last complete list is dated 19 August 1981, and there are over 30 names missing. I'm willing to send you out a copy. If you've moved recently and the Alumni Office isn't aware of your new address, please write me (or the Alumni Office) with your new address. Let's put this roll back in shape. Rushing to catch up with '52ers leaves my typewriter smoking and me panting harder than Jim Carter who finished 324th in a field of 592 in the Kailua, Kona, Hawaii Triathlon a year ago. Jim swam 2.4 miles, bicycled 112 miles, and ran a 26.4-mile marathon. . . . Harris Faigel is also running — the Student Health Service at Brandeis (an 8-year marathon). Harris' daughter recently graduated from Michigan, and another is a senior in high school; his boys are at Michigan and Harvard, "and the bills are not any easier to pay!" . . . A voice not heard from for decades, is that of Hal Puffer, happily married with three grown children. Hal is syndicating tax advantaged investments throughout the midwest for P&M, Inc., in Chicago. Hal reports he is in touch with Hayden Higgins '50, and '52's

Peter Kohler . . . Lloyd Farrar speaks glowingly of the "terrific people who make up the Class of '52 among our 30th reunion-ers." Last summer Lloyd took his historical musicians to England and Germany for people-to-people performances. . . . Dave "Itchy" Jones writes: "I was in mainland China awhile back and am sorry to report that I met no PA grads there, but then again I don't meet PA grads anywhere I go. They have too much sense to do what I do, namely hang around inaccessible and unpopular places. Where, pray tell, did I go wrong?" . . . Peter Thompson appreciates the recent visit of PA's new Headmaster and his wife to Kansas City, and approves of all the current activities on the Hill. . . . Enthusiastic reviews in the New York Times and elsewhere should prompt a '52 rush for copies of Gordon Lish's recent book, Dear Mr. Capote, under the William Abrahams imprint with Holt. Gordon says, "When not applauding daughter Becca from my post in the fifth row of Providence's Trinity Square Playhouse and when not fretting over son Atticus' PA prospects in 1985 from my post at the dinner table, I edit books at Alfred A. Knopf and give a workshop in fiction writing at Columbia chiefly and, not as chiefly, at Yale."

From Shawnee Mission, Kansas, Steve Bailey writes of Adriene '81 now at Princeton; Camella '83, and Nathan (PA '88 Steve hopes). . . . Pierce Bullen sends best wishes to all and reports that after completing the Dept. of State Executive Seminar, he has been assigned as Economic Counselor to the U.S. Embassy in Caracas, where he also serves on the school board of the American School his son attends. . . . Kenny Rider slogs through the market at Merrill Lynch in Huntington, NY, while his eldest daughter, Ellen (a Purdue grad), works with CBS in NYC; daughter Susan graduated from Brown in '82 and has joined a program at Merrill Lynch in the city; son Timothy works as a summer counselor; and wife Janet remains active in Mt. Holyoke alumnae affairs.

Don Langmuir has been Professor of Geochemistry at Colorado School of Mines in Golden, CO, since leaving a similar post at Penn State in '78. Don is also President of Hydrochem Systems Corp. and director of a new Denver OTC mineral exploration company, EarthSearch, with world-wide prospects and joint ventures. Don says he was divorced in '81 and has primary custody of Steven (14) and Kathryn (12). . . . Tom Jensen writes from Bethlehem, PA, of daughter Melinda's acceptance at the University of Delaware, 16-year-old Holly's success in local and regional figure skating competition, wife Cinda's work as an educational administrator and as a fund-raiser for Mt. Holyoke, and Tom's active work as a criminologist. . . . Finally, news from our Reunion Director Extraordinaire, Fred Sharf, who is serving a four-year term on the Council of the Essex Institute where he has been a long-time supporter of the Institutes' museum program. Fred is also a Trustee of the Archives of American Art; Beth Israel Hospital, and The Winsor School.

*Bill Kaufmann
295 Madison Ave.
New York, NY 10017*

Once, back around the 15th or 20th reunion, Fritz Ostherr made me an offer I never forgot. "Bill," he said, "if you ever need a place for a class party during one of the reunions, you can use my house."

As it turned out, I never had to take him up on the offer, but it went down on the record — the one I keep in my head — and I was always grateful.

I guess that's what I thought about first when I heard that he had died, on the 20th of January 1984, at the age of 47. He was probably a better friend to the Class of 1953 than most people knew.

The Lawrence Eagle Tribune reminded me that we were also classmates at Harvard. I'd forgotten that, although I knew that he had been an engineer with Avco. The rest I'd not heard before. That he was a former member of the Planning-Advisory Committee of North Andover, and a past chairman of the North Andover Planning Board. That he was a member of the Republican Club of North Andover, and that he was also a member and past secretary of the Friends of Harvard Rowing, and the chairman of the Harvard-Yale Regatta Committee. He is survived by his daughters, Kirsten A. and Gretchen M. Ostherr, both of North Andover; and a sister, Mrs. Margaret Bain Cross of Dublin, NH. We mourn the loss of our classmate and send our condolences to his family.

Joe Mesics, who is always doing something to help me with the task of writing this column, has sent me a letter from the United States District Court of the Middle District of Florida which prominently mentions the investiture of the Honorable Kendall Sharp as a judge of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida. Those of you who might wish to race down for the event should know — in all fairness — that it took place on 29 December 1983. Of course we all hope that he serves better there than he did at the 30th reunion tennis tournament.

Let it also be known that Hank Riggs has recently been appointed VP of Stanford University, responsible for its development program. "Riggs received the Tau Beta Pi outstanding teaching award in the School of Engineering in 1979, and was cited for his 'extraordinary energy, skill and zest' when he received a Walter J. Gores award for teaching in 1980," states the publicity on his appointment. In the late 1960s, while he was president of ICORE Industries in Sunnysvale, he used to teach an 8 a.m. class at Stanford three times a week. "I concealed from them, successfully, that I would have worked for nothing, but they paid me," he once told a campus interviewer.

During 1970-1974, he served simultaneously as vice president of finance for Measurix Corporation and as consulting professor at Stanford. He became an adjunct professor in 1976 and full professor in 1980.

He is the author of a McGraw-Hill textbook, Accounting: A Survey 1981, and The Use of Computer-Based Exercises (Games) in Engineering Management Education (1979), and Bi-mass Energy Options for Hawaii.

Gordon Mackenzie, one of our newest Class Co-Agents, writes to mention that he is still surviving the demands of being the father of a one-and-a-half-year-old and various other children of high school and college ages.

Peter Damon seems to have a new address in Rhode Island. He's an executive vice president of The Savings Bank and Trust Company of Newport. "An exciting and a beautiful place in which to live," he writes.

Skip Kimball has sent a message mentioning that Gerry and Dick Golden, while on a trip visiting their son in Baton Rouge, stopped in to see him.

If we are all very lucky, someone will have recorded the speech that Ted Sizer gave at a New York Andover/Abbot dinner in New York last month. The subject — not surprisingly — was on education, tied in with the release of Ted's new book, but the delivery was vintage Sizer, memorable, quotable, and above all, original. Our classmate, Don Shapiro, who runs the Andover/Abbot group in New York, was also the toastmaster, holding his own with the likes of Sizer and McNemar, who, with his usual enthusiasm, brought us up-to-date on the state of the Academy.

Several classmates sent me a clipping that began with this headline: "Judge Rejects Father's Attack On 'Snob' School." As you can imagine, the school in question was none other than PA. Began the article, "Phillips Academy in Massachusetts is a preparatory school for college with some reknown and an excellent reputation. It also, a divorced father claimed in state court, is turning his son into a 'biggot' and a 'snob'."

"A change in the son's personality, the justice held, does not provide a reasonable basis for withholding. . . consent to allow him to continue his final year at Phillips."

A quote from Variety sent me to All The Right Moves, Michael Chapman's latest film. As the "bible" of entertainment put it, "A smash directorial debut by well-known cinematographer, Michael Chapman, and a gritty script by Michael Kane spiral this teen genre film to a height no other youth pic has achieved this year." I thought the film was great.

May you all have a healthy, happy summer.

I hope 1984 is finding you all happy and healthy. I was delighted that I received two responses to my plea for Christmas news and some additional news from the return postal cards. Dorothy Giles Ham continues to live in Hampton Falls, NH, and has a real estate agency covering Exeter and the seacoast area. Her youngest of four children is now in college and she will leave her "empty nest" and build a new home in the spring. Her marital status is single, but she is open to suggestions. Janet Bowden Wilson sent me her Christmas newsletter which was so appreciated. Her daughter Lisa is a senior, achieving academically at Oldfields Academy. She is one of three students doing an advanced placement course in studio art and is art editor of the yearbook. College applications are being prepared now, and she will let us know next time! Janet's son Mark is 14 and a freshman at Salisbury, and most happy. His cross country skiing helps him train for bike racing. Janet's husband, Claude, has an investment business in Greenwich, and with two Apple computers and a modem, he is happy not commuting to Wall Street. Janet is finishing her last year at Manhattanville College and plans to graduate in May with a B.A. in Anthropology with a focus on Latin America. Between term papers, she finds time for tennis. Vacation time for the Wilsons has been spent in Puerto Rico, Chatham on the Cape, and at Club Med in the Dominican Republic. The Cape experience was accompanied by one Apple computer and Mark's bike!

We have more room in this column to hear from many more of you! Please respond if you get a postal, or if you get nostalgic reading this column.

For lack of other news, I will have to talk about myself (likely to become a bore if the rest of you don't send me something). Our daughter, Linda, 22, spent two weeks in NYC in January and as requested, made contact with Carol Hardin Kimball. True to the spirit of Abbot and the "old girl network," Carol arranged a fun get-together which, sadly, had to be cancelled due to the death of Carol's mother. I know the class joins me in extending our sympathies to Carol and her family. Zoo, (Ann Zuill Williams) can also expect a call from our Linda, who will be traveling abroad after her three-month stint as a mother's helper in Germany. This column is only as good as we all make it, and that means — please write!

Dottie Giles Ham can expect to hear from me regarding retirement properties on the eastern seacoast. How many more of you could benefit by being in touch with old classmates? Send in your news and we will print! Next issue — 15 May deadline!

With the elimination of the winter tabloid (the deadline always seemed to arrive amid the flurry of Christmas wrapping!) I can begin 1 December to leisurely assemble a running dialogue of your news for the spring edition.

A S.O.S. from Carole Cox Hampton in David, KY for addresses and phone numbers of classmates in the surrounding states. Carole, working as a designer for David Appalachian Crafts, would love to hear from any of us.

My Pittsburgh neighbor, Betsey Beeson Owens, writes that she and Jess visited Reese Owens who just completed architectural designs for Stephen Spielberg's apartment in N.Y.C. and is now working on a new complex at Dartmouth. After a Florida visit and a medical meeting in Quebec (Betsey practiced Mlle. Barat's and Mlle. Arosa's francaise!), Betsy returned to her volunteer work at St. Margaret's Hospital and Beechwood Nature Farms.

Nancy-Jean Nelson Smith is home again in Florida after an educational-medical tour in Russia. . . and she continues to operate her Therapeutic Learning Center. . . and how nice it is to hear from Lee Carroll Berckman in Miami, FL. . . Daughter Leslie is a frosh at Trinity in Hartford, CT, while her other daughter, Alle, is a sophomore at Westover. Lee's husband, Bruce, has been working in Madrid, so they have been commuting for two years. Bruce's contract ends in January '84, so they hope to "regroup" in Miami. Lee saw Jane Munro Barrett in September and Lee reports that Jane's own real estate company is very, very successful! Congratulations, Jane.

The Heart of the Artichoke is a unique shop selling antiques and collectibles and its president is Mimi Ludlow Crandall who reports the store has over 200 consignors. Mimi has two sons in college and a daughter.

ter in high school. Mimi is living in Albert Lea, MN now, and amid swirling snow, and cold, snappy wind comes news from Marti Belknap Brenner that she and Bill are busy building their solar home while Marti keeps busy teaching creativity, stress management, yoga, piano, and Spanish classes. Just as busy as Marti is Margaret Johnson. Her note says that she is totally overcommitted to her own private practice, Los Angeles C. G. Jung Institute, teaching, as well as President of the society! She would rather be writing her poetry, but says she is challenged by it all! We certainly are not getting older — just busier!

1984 — OUR REUNION YEAR as well as big election year — Vicky Schwab Aronoff writes that Stan is running for re-election to the Ohio Senate — good luck Stan, you have our vote! Stan and Vicky have moved to a brand new condo overlooking Cincinnati and the Ohio River. Daughter Tracy works in NYC for a large architectural firm and lives in Greenwich Village. When I talked with Vicky this fall she says she is back to her Abbot weight (the days when she could consume 13 cod fish balls and still weigh 90 lbs!)

A nice note from Pat Stainton Rowe full of family statistics: Pat has five grandchildren. Now, is THAT a class first? All of Pat's five children have "flown the nest" and she and Dale are "enjoying living alone." Their eldest daughter just had her third child; daughter Suzanne has two children and lives in Minnesota; son and daughter, Tim and Jennifer, live nearby; and daughter Pam lives in Dover, NH. Pat works at the elementary school and Dale teaches in Hanover, NH. Nancy Donnelly Bliss also is teaching kindergarten and doing volunteer work for the Red Cross. . . . Daughter Sara graduated with honors from Pine Manor College and is a case manager for Southwest Boston Senior Services, Inc. Son Don is a student at Bates.

A wonderful, nostalgic note from Panna de Cholnokey Grady who has been living in France for the past 16 years without a trip home to the U.S. I hope this Bulletin arrives before our 30th Reunion in June so we can encourage Panna to make the trip this year. Valjeanne Brodeur Paxton is doing an excellent job with reunion plans — lets all make it easy for her and attend! Valjeanne is Chaplain of Endicott College and works part-time as a hospice chaplain with the Visiting Nurses Association of the North Shore. Val was ordained last month in the United Church of Christ after five years of formal preparation.

Well, that about wraps it up this cold and windy January day here in Pittsburgh. (I think Terry Bradshaw said that recently.) Ferd and I are busy with six kittens born 1 December '83, Cavalier K.C. Spaniel nee 25 May '83, and Sandy a senior at Shady Side Academy. . . . Ferd says this is no time to begin re-feathering my nest — with Betsey working for Union Carbide in Cleveland and Eric a junior at St. Lawrence University — but with all that and community commitments, I still hope to make our reunion. Remember, we had such a fabulous time five years ago, and we swore we would talk everyone who did not attend the 25th into surely not missing this one, so mark your calendar "REUNION" for 8-10 June and we will see you there!

For years the editor has been trying to impress on me the advantages of brevity. After 28 years he has taken matters into his own hands with a solution so astoundingly simple in its very conception, I would probably never have thought of it: my address has been printed incorrectly since the fall '82 issue and the result is: brevity.

Several items, happily, have breached this barrier: the many readers of Time may have noticed last August Eli Jacobs' new business alliances featured in the Business section. The not-quite-so-many readers of Dotted Line, the house organ of the Drackett Company, were pleased to see a very satisfied looking David Haartz smiling up from the cover over the caption: "It's a triumphant moment for Drackett Senior Research Chemist, David Haartz." Dave's project, the revolutionary new Renuzit Fresh 'n Dry, was recently introduced at a national sales meeting." This was our first inkling that Dave had left P&G, undoubtedly their worst day since the Ivory Soap sank.

Dan Blatt has segued easily from mad dogs (Cujo) to aliens and those of you who enjoyed the six-hour mini-series "V" last season will have an additional 12 hours to look forward to this spring. Jay Precourt has been named Senior Executive Vice President of Hamilton Brothers Oil Company of Denver.

An unexpected surprise was a letter from Peter Hesse '56 whose company, H. Schmincke of Dusseldorf, West Germany, manufactures artists' colors. Peter reports he named his first sailboat after his roommate in Bishop South. The boat was not named Peter Parsons but rather the alliterative nickname Peter couldn't use back home in the Philippines. Pete says he took a stab at a political career recently but the voters changed his mind. He is now concentrating on Third World development. He has begun marketing in the U. S. and hopes to renew some friendships from his year at PA.

Had a fine visit with Dave Driver taking a respite from a Rhode Island winter and doing some business in southern California. We took the opportunity to look back warmly on our Andover-sponsored trip to the Soviet Union last year.

At the risk of appearing crassly commercial in the old school magazine, I will make brief mention of the fact that I intend to evacuate the Los Angeles area during the upcoming Summer Olympic Games and have this nice, centrally located apartment. . . . Y.

Diane Sorota O'Dwyer writes: "After four years residence on the West Coast of Norway, my husband and I have moved to Hampstead, London, just in time for the holidays. We expect to be here for several years. Both our sons are at college in the U.S., the older in Hawaii, the younger in Ohio. We have been fortunate to have done a lot of traveling in the past few years — most recently to Egypt, a few weeks ago — which included a cruise of the upper Nile. At the end of January we will be in Japan, with the possibility of a second trip to the Orient in the spring."

Lee Pelton Morrison '56 and I attended the wedding of our mutual niece, Jane Pelton. Lee and Bill are in the process of building an exciting house on a waterway in Florida. The mother of the bride, Pat Skillin Pelton '54, was radiant, calm, cool and collected at her first daughter's wedding.

This summer I saw Peggy Moore Yoars '56, who is very busy running her own manufacturer's rep business. Her new husband, who incidentally, is also her stepbrother, works with her. Cemmy Kelton Ryland '56 and I often cross paths in Essex. Cemmy has added a day care operation to her nursery school and also sang Beethoven's Mass in C with me (and 150 others) at a concert in December.

We will have a thirtieth reunion in a year. Many of you, including my roommates, have thirty years of news which we would all love to read about. So write now!! Libby Baldwin Crabtree and Peggins Holbrook Birch — I hope you are coming up with some ideas for our big 30.

Gail has been carrying out research on the body's internal clock for the past three years, and we are proud that she has received recognition for her scientific work. Gail has three children and did the bulk of her research at home — one woman's solution to the dilemma of professional work vs. family.

Phoebe Estes Bryan writes that she spent an enjoyable few days in September with Lee Pelton Morrison and her husband, Bill, during the U.S. Tennis Open. Phoebe's own family adds up to five tennis players, and I don't think I'd like to take on any of them. Phoebe's eldest son, John, is a freshman at UVM, while her youngest is still at Eaglebrook School.

Once again Marcia Colby Frame wrote from Littleton, CO, to say that their housing situation solved itself in January (remember, the foundation had fallen in due to endemic soil problems?) with the builder re-purchasing their house, and the Frames are now renting their own place. Daughter Melissa is in her last year in high school and hopes to go to college in the East. Perhaps she and Marcia will go to Europe for a month this summer on an art history tour.

Mary Carter Staniar wrote that she had nothing new to report; then I heard from Glee Wooldredge Wieland that they and the Staniers were going skiing in Alta together this spring! Glee continues to run the Fenn School lunch program and coach 6th and 7th grade boys in soccer, hockey and lacrosse. She hasn't slowed down any. Glee's and Louisa Lehmann Birch's sons play on the same line for Buckingham, Browne & Nichols' 9th grade hockey team. Louisa is still enthusiastic about teaching kindergarten, after teaching for 11 years, and has become so interested in using the computer in her classroom that she has written Introducing Logo to Primary Children to be published by Houghton Mifflin in March. It includes a disk, activity cards and wall charts. Her own children are Sarah, 20, and Chris, 14 (the hockey player). Louisa saw Mary Wellman Bates and Marsh last spring when they came through Boston. Again in the publishing domain, Hope Hamilton Pettegrew reports that Cobblestone has reached 43,000 subscribers internationally, and they've acquired another magazine called Classical Callopie, which focuses on the classics for high school students. I remember several budding writers back in '57. . . who else has turned professional? (Ph.D.s don't count. . .)

Penny Post is prolific. Besides editing books for a living, she is producing and hosting a series of radio programs on different aspects of environmental health hazards: pesticides, fluorescent lighting, VDT (computer terminal) screens, lead, asbestos, industrial and agricultural wastes, including water table contamination; and, her specialty, indoor air pollution. It will become a weekly program in April. She just passed the national exam for biofeedback training, so can tell us all how reduce stress by paying attention to our bodies. I buy that! Now, I am a promotion artist, and will next advertise a daring individual — Jacque Goodspeed. She is co-partner of Jazz Propulsions, Inc., out of Cambridge, MA. Both famous and infamous jazz musicians can be booked for social events, political causes, international expositions, you name it. Call 576-1316.

Helen Guthrie Miller wrote over Christmas while frozen into her house in Butte during -52° weather. No news, just an SOS. . . . Anne Bowden Morris has gotten her degree in Art History and is now working on a certificate in Museum Studies. Her children are both at U. Colorado in Boulder, and Bob is still in industrial real estate. Bev Lord is directing the musical production Working by Studs Terkel in February. Her company is known as "The Festival Within," named after Emerson's line, "What lies behind you and what lies before you are tiny matters compared to what lies within you." This community theater involves people of all ages, talents, and interests who want to explore and act out their ordinary life situation in a theatre context.

Bitsy Leech Jacquette has finished her Ph.D. and has two research articles on press. She is a free-lance educational consultant and, while work is more lucrative and offers flexible hours, she says it takes tremendous self-discipline to organize a day's work. No one, not even her family, thinks she has a serious job. Hmmm. (Make them your accountants.) Anne Luquer Boswell plans to sail a lot in Maine this summer. Husband John is a lawyer in Hanover and judge of the local District Court. Their son Tom is a Freshman at Bow-doin College; children Frances and Charlie are in middle and high school.

Joan Pelletier Isabel began a program at Columbia in the fall and is now an intern in the Office of Business Development in NYC. She is a liaison between major corporations and insurers, persuading businesses to remain in NYC. Joan's daughter looked at the Christmas photo of the Tang family and could not pick out who was the daughter. "Only Frankie gets younger!" Old news from Carolyn Cooper Bird, who moved to Falmouth, MA in summer of '80 where she is a copy editor for the town newspaper. Stephen must be 17 and Aletha 15. Country living includes a big vegetable garden and plenty of animals. Courtney quit teaching at Avon Old Farms school and is now a builder.

Lynne McLaughlin Moughty reports that things continue about the same in Ridgefield. She has two part-time jobs and still some time for all sorts of sports. Beth is a freshman at Wellesley and Ken in 10th grade at Ridgefield High School.

Now that I am near Boston, it is great to meet old friends for lunch. However, trying to meet up with Mimi Ganem Reeder or Penny Holbrook Reid these days requires a computer program. Mimi is getting an MBA at Boston University full-time and I don't think she eats lunch. We're now working on tea time in Kenmore Square. Penny is entering the high-tech writing field and has landed a position where she gets work in large batches. I honor both of them for their courage, wits, and determination.

Briefly on me: my move to Milton has provided all the novelty I'd hoped for — proximity to Boston (which I love), two excellent schools for Ethan and Ben, no youth hockey for a year, a small but manageable house; many old, and hopefully new friends, new directions in work, to include public relations, printing and computer graphics. I am a happy transplant.

Would anyone like to be Class Secretary? The task has many obvious rewards. The old network fascinates me. However, ten-plus years on the bureau is enough. We need a new voice. Call (617)696-0081. THX. Dinah.

When you read this, Alexandria will be in soothing spring time. As I write, the winter Olympics are in progress, and I feel as if I'm on one of those luge sleds careening down the course. Never mind the medal — how do I stay on the sled? Whether you are going for the gold or toughing out a calamity, your classmates want to hear from you.

From her home in Bogota, Colombia, Sylvia Gomex de Caballero writes that Paula graduated from PA and is a senior at Brown. Helena graduated from Northfield-Mt. Cynthia Worcester Shanks has a new career as a paralegal in Boston. She and husband, David, a management consultant with Arthur D. Little, live in a "continuing project" — a 200-year-old farmhouse in Wayland, MA. Their children are Nan, a freshman at the University of Rochester; Kirsten, a sophomore at Wayland High; and Andrew, a sixth grader. Life is "full, busy, and generally satisfactory."

Susie Tidd Augenthaler is still enthused about reunions past and future. She attended a mini one at the home of Betsy Gardner Riley along with Phebe Sherman Elliott, Faith White Hyde, Liz Artz Beim, Caroline Greene Donnelly, Nora Colby Salaway, and Sue Moore Ferris. This summer Susie and Warren went on a fishing trip, spending five days on the Middle Fork of the Salmon River with Lee Pelton Morrison '56 and husband. "What an adventure!"

There is news about two of the husbands who were so very helpful at our 25th. Joe Donnelly has left Mass General to be Vice President for College Resources at Babson. To Mary Steketee MacDonald's husband we send sympathy for the death of his father. Before this happened the MacDonalds had a lovely Christmas ski trip with many relatives in Sun Valley. Idaho is popular this year!

"Another incredible year," says Nancy Russell Curran. Her husband, Michael, has bought his company, Goodwin, Loomis & Britton, in Hartford. Nancy is working in neonatology at St. Francis Hospital. Mike is at Skidmore, Rusty at Tilton School, Jeff and Tim are still at home. The Currans travelled to Japan and to The People's Republic of China and Hong Kong with Nan and Dick Sigal '56.

I heard a rumor that Kristin Walker is doing some extensive travelling. Anyone know where? A Christmas card from Shirley Slater Crosman reported short trips to Iowa, Cape Cod, and South Carolina. We had a short trip over Thanksgiving for a Calhoun reunion in Orlando.

Abbott contacts continue to brighten my life. Jane Christie Smith hand-delivered a college application from our Andrew. This fall I attended an Herb Society dinner with Priscilla Lord, mother of Bevie '57. Bevie teaches French and Spanish in Foxboro, MA and takes her son abroad during the summer. Teaching languages has advantages!

A parting thought to motivate more of you to write: If you could take a mini-course today, what would it be? Time manage-

25th! REUNION

PHILLIPS

David Othmer

71 Grand St.

New York, NY 10013

Wonderful, wonderful responses have been pouring in to the First Non-Comprehensive, Unprofessional, Class of '59 Semi-Semi-Centennial Survey, and, while I cannot divulge too much before the Great Event on 8-10 June, I can tell you that we are a very mobile, reasonably satisfied if not a bit greedy, somewhat prolific group which has been extremely loyal to one sports team, has tried to quit smoking several thousand times, has gained about one ton in the past 25 years, and is virtually unanimous in its feelings about the Ten Commandments. For more details come to Andover in June, and if you haven't filled out your survey, do so now, and if you never got one, let me know immediately.

At a time when most of us are about to throw in the towel on mounting college tuition bills, at least two of us are throwing out the Pampers: Basil and Jayne Cox brought Nellie Adair Cox into the world on 20 December and Jerry and Donna Secundy followed with a second boy in late February. Will Jerry be the father of the youngest child at the reunion? Something tells me that he won't. . . . Jerry is still working in the Treasurer's office at ARCO, and Donna is an interior decorator.

Basil, pushing the anxiety scale hard, also decided to change jobs: he has forsaken Mr. Roger's Neighborhood (he was Executive Vice President of Family Communications, Inc.) to become Director of Marketing for Eat 'n Park Restaurants, a chain of some 44 eateries in Western Pennsylvania.

I ran into Jay Nelson at the Lincoln Squash Club in New York the other day where he was hard at work on 1.) his questionnaire, and 2.) his rails, boasts, lobs, corners and drop shots in preparation for the Nationals in Cleveland in March. By all appearances none of the ton of added weight in the class shows up on Jay's body.

You have all heard from Artie Rogers, Garrett Kirk and Bill Snyder about the class gift for the Reunion — they report that response has been good, but could be better, so if you haven't yet, do it now.

A housekeeping note: at the end of this column, you will find a list of members of the Class of '59 who are lost or missing. If you know the whereabouts of any of them, please let me or the school know, so we can try to get them back in June, too.

About June. Plans are progressing well — the stars of the show are you, however, so be there. Tom Stirling has set the pace by writing in September to say that he was coming — Tom lives in Honolulu, so if he can make it, so can you.

Also about the Reunion — please let me know if there are any special faculty members you would like to see. We'll have the opportunity to invite them to many of our functions, so drop me a line with names.

Finally, two moves, one big, one small. The big first: Jerry Bremer has been Ambassador to the Netherlands since last summer. Jerry has been a career foreign service officer since graduating from Harvard Business School in 1966. He previously served in Kabul, Malawi, and Oslo. The other is my own: Maureen, Rachel and I are about to move South to Philadelphia where I have been working for the local public television station as Vice President and TV Station Manager since November.

So — fill out your questionnaires, fill out your reservation forms, fill out your calendars, and fill us all in on your lives over the past 25 on 8-10 June in Andover. Can't wait.

Please help us locate the following members of the class who are on our "lost" list. Addresses should be sent to Charlotte Buchan, Office of Academy Resources, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

Well, gang, Lolly and I are thrilled with the outlook for 8-10 June. So many of you have signed on already, it can only be a wonderful weekend. Ann Morris Stack plans to be here, Zee Makepeace Douhan and Sue Goodwillie Umphrey will join us, Judy Agor Aydelott and Dearing Ward Johns have accepted, to say nothing of Joan Synnott Ardrey, Ann Travers Butler, Sue Wholley Field, Gale Barton Hartch (hope she brings those three tall, blond, tennis-playing, teenage young men, and Tom, of course), Sherry Weymouth Morison, Cynny Nichols Travers, and Barbie Quimby Gildehaus (who will have a son graduating from Andover the week before). As of this early writing (Feb.), others are pouring in daily and the uncertain will work it out!

Susan Bradley Trayser hopes to be there. Her two very little ones may keep her young but, oh, so tired — but she had some R & R hot air ballooning in France. Hope Mlle. Arosa's mouth exercises in front of that deadly mirror were helpful while landing in someone's Burgundian vineyard.

Lolly Bell Hetherington is moving to Richmond, VA after ten years in wintry Buffalo. Bob has just become minister of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, one of two buildings left intact after the Yankee onslaught. She looks forward to being near our Virginia contingent which numbers Dearing, Sherry, Sue Calnan Bates, and Duncan Moose Ripley.

Chica Evans Gregory sends word that Marilynn Fairfax was remarried last summer and sailed down the Rio Grande on a wedding cruise. Marilynn is a second year med student in San Antonio. Chica has left her husband's company, Gregory and Associates, (except for landscaping) and has gotten her real estate license. She'll let him build homes, then Chica will sell them. Under a pseudonym, Chica has been writing for a Savannah newspaper and has achieved certain local notoriety. (We wish we knew more!) Her son, Charlie Elmer, attends Washington and Lee and Eva Elmer is a junior at Savannah Country Day.

Alma Grew is having a great year tutoring in French and Spanish, and writing, as well as enjoying classical music and opera. She'll try for the 25th. BE THERE!

Peter Brownrigg, who has spent his entire working career in the blast furnace department (until 1980), and now in the data processing department at Bethlehem Steel outside Baltimore, recently wrote the school, "For whatever reason, I've found myself part of the disaffected minority from my class, so eloquently described by Al Fox — but enough is enough."

Not part of any disaffected minority is Michael Scharf, who recently wrote the Class Secretary, "The maudlin and nihilistic tone of your class notes has finally gotten to me, and I am prepared to communicate some of my thoughts to you. . . . I am an unapologetic booster of Andover. . . . I think it was the most rigorous, stimulating and worthwhile educational experience I had. It was better than Princeton and better than Harvard Business School. I may have had more fun at the later places, but Andover gave me more. I honestly feel it prepared me for the rigors and challenges of life. . . . Andover meant so much to me. It pains me to read how you so blithely criticize it and how you comment on it in such a snide and smug manner. . . . The School gave us so much as compared to whatever unpleasant aspects it had, and we should revel in this." Mike has been, obviously, a continuous supporter of Andover, and his recent letter (November 1983) is full of even more praise for the school and for the training it provided him. We've asked Mike to be the Reunion Chairman for our 25th in '85. No acceptance yet.

J. Roger Sullivan writes that 23 March 1983 served both as his 40th birthday and the birthday of twins, Sarah Dorsey and John, bringing the complement to four with Jay, 4½ and Shields, 2; he continues to function as Senior Vice President in charge of the Commercial Loan Group at the First National Bank of Maryland. Gus Walton has quit practicing law after 16 years and bought into Poe Travel Agency in Little Rock, Arkansas. Allan Ross writes that he is practicing medicine and developing a small medical group in Massachusetts; his two children, Emma, 7, and Daniel, 11, are thriving, and Al "runs trails in the woods to stay fit."

John "Tex" Daniel, who for the past year or so lived in the Palo Alto, California area "managing a small bookstore by day and singing in cafes and saloons by night," recently moved to Santa Barbara, where he'll be working for Capra Press, a small, elegant publisher he's always admired. Thom Chirg and Lynne Day were married in Schaffhausen, Switzerland, on 15 September 1983; since, they have been holding monthly "anniversary" celebrations in San Francisco, to which more than one classmate has been invited.

David Dumas was elected to the 43rd District Representative seat in the Rhode Island House in November 1983. Among many, many subjects about which Dave is curious, including Marcus Aurelius, Andover's impact on us, corporate vs. small-town attorneys, the new Andover tie, and the effect of bran muffins, Dave inquires how many of our class hold or have held public office. Larry Gillis? Others? Not many, it seems.

The values of the Class of 1960 change, certainly, and they are probably at least somewhat reflected in the chosen professions of its members. The true focus of the class as we approach the decade of our 40s, not surprisingly, appears to be on the business of making money and, in disparate ways and places, living a life. A full fifth (?) of the class is in the legal profession. Approximately fifteen percent are teachers or professors. Twenty class members are doctors. At last count four (Combe, Lincoln, McCaffrey, Russ) were in the military. Six (Cahners, Collado, Dann, Maxon, Moore, Rhineland) are listed by the school as "Presidents" of something or other (although the two most publicized top chief executives, Evans and Gardner, aren't so identified). At least one (Dubocq) is in the ministry, one (Tompkins) is listed as "Actor," one (Leavitt) is a literary agent, two (Campion, Goldin) are ranchers, one (Mills) is a cellarmaster, one (Cecill) is a cabinet maker, at least two (Darnton, Seifert) are reporters, one (Hardy) is an actuary, and at least one is listed as "retired." Undoubtedly many more are retired, just as many are between assignments, and, in keeping with the value systems and attitudes we've all been harboring in some manner or other, at least a third of our class has refused to communicate at all with the school. A late night phonathon call for money for Andover can do that to you, but it's probably a lot more than that.

The School's information system on alumni is remarkable in many ways, not necessarily one of which is its topicality. If only to inspire some of you to correct or bring up-to-date the school's news of you, here are some randomly chosen, brief descriptions of a few classmates and their doings from the recent Andover archives: Ed Arns is a professor in the department of architecture at Berkeley; Bob Beale is a physician in Lanham, Maryland; Peter Beck is with Cresap, McCormick & Paget, management consultants, in Washington; Jim Bierman is an associate professor at the University of California at Santa Cruz; Joe Castello is an attorney in Tampa; John Chambliss is a partner in the distinguished Boston law firm, Gaston, Snow & Ely Bartlett; Bill Cheng is a director of Commerce Company, Ltd., in Kowloon, Hong Kong; Thom Chirug is a partner of Protasis Trust, Ltd., with a base in San Francisco; Bucky Clark is a M.D. in Portland, Oregon; Moncrieff Cochran is an associate professor in the family studies/human development department at Cornell; Toby Collado is president of Collado Associates in Washington; Duke Courtneil is an attorney in Palm Beach.

Dave Ederly is associated with the Providence Journal-Bulletin in Rhode Island; Richard Filion is owner of Filion Lumber and Fuel Oil Co. in Newmarket, New Hampshire; Richard Goldstein is a professor at Mass. General in Boston; Rick Helbig is a surgeon at St. Luke's Hospital Center in New York; Joe Ingelfinger is a physician at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston; Dick Leete is a manager in the Connecticut Department of Transportation in Wethersfield, CT; Morgan E. Moses is a telephone operator for A. C. Answering Service in Charlottesville, Virginia; Tom Mudd is listed as an engineer at SRI International in Menlo Park, CA; and Dave Olivetti is listed as a designer at Olivetti International in Ivrea, Italy; Chet Opal is a physicist at the U.S. Naval Research Laboratories in Washington; Ed Quattlebaum and Nick Kip teach history and classics, respectively, at Andover; Seth Shulman is a research scientist at the E. O. Hulbert Ctr. for Space Research, Naval Research Laboratory, Washington; J. Roger Sullivan is a vice president of First National Bank of Maryland in Baltimore; Tom Trowbridge is a partner with the New York law firm Donovan Leisure Newton & Irvine; Tony Williams is a geophysicist with Texas Instruments in Dallas; Bill Ziegler is a law partner at Whitnam & Ransom in New York; Karl Ziegler is with Bankers Trust in London; Dan Lincoln is stationed at the American Embassy in Cairo. Write and complain that the news is wrong! Or that you were omitted. Or that you were included. How many of our names do you remember?

In the movers and shakers department, far and away the most highly publicized class member at the moment (he even beats Ned Evans) is Brad Reynolds, head of the Civil Rights Division of the United States Department of Justice. Although twenty years ago we might not have predicted Brad to be the most sensitive of all class members to the civil rights of minorities, his record in the Reagan Administration has received cautiously favorable reviews; one recent weekly legal newspaper describes the Civil Rights Division's record as "successful on paper, but many say its major attempts to reshape civil rights policy haven't fared as well."

Duncan Kennedy, a tenured professor on the Harvard Law School faculty, also attracts considerable publicity on the other side of the political spectrum: recently, publicity described him, among other colorful portraits, as "tall and bearded. . . conventionally rumped — old sweater, slacks, corduroy sports jacket." Duncan declaims "Marxist-offshoot beliefs," condemns the invasion of Grenada, challenges the Harvard administration power system, and defends against charges of incongruity between his secured mode of living and his liberal-radical political beliefs.

Dorsey Gardner, another of the big shots, has relatively recently been named

Chairman of Victoria Station, the national restaurant chain. And Ward W. Woods, Jr., known as Woody to at least one generation of classmates if not the investment banking community, fishes in Alaska, skis in Idaho, plays tennis at Carmel Valley and the Piping Rock Club in Locust Valley, and in his spare time serves as a partner at the prestigious investment banking firm, Lazard Freres & Co., in New York.

Ned Evans, chief executive officer of Macmillan (owns Katharine Gibbs, Gump's department stores, Berlitz language schools, and various publishing enterprises), is being given principal credit by investment analysts for the recent dramatic turn-around of the fortunes of Macmillan on the New York Stock Exchange.

Jeremy Scott Wood, a Senior Associate of the Architects Collaborative in Boston and recently elected lifetime member of the New England Society of Architectural Historians, was Project Architect of Boston's newly completed Westin Hotel, part of the $460 million Copley Place Project which has been described as "the largest and most complicated in Boston's history." Martin Quinn's daughter Alexandra commenced PA in September.

Of the reunion, there have been a host of comments and reactions, among which are: "If you turn it into some depressing introspective weekend, count me out. I am too busy for such nonsense." (Scharf) and "If we can get together, I don't care where or when, although I hope we would not avoid reunion weekend '85 just to be perverse. I gather there is a general distaste, which I share, for cutesy hats — and the Boaters should be real straw, or forget it! We shouldn't have second-rate hats!" (Dumas)

Top honors for bravery go to Amelia Comas O'Brien who was instrumental in preventing tragedy when she negotiated with the man who had hijacked the plane she was on. Amelia, her husband Robert and son Kevin were on their way to Connecticut last May when their plane was hijacked to Cuba. Amelia was the only person on the plane who volunteered to speak with the man who spoke no English. As Amelia demures, "At the time it was very scary; now it's very exciting to think about it."

The O'Briens live in Jamaica, W.I., and have three children, Kevin, 15, a sophomore at Salisbury School in Connecticut (where Maggie Elsemore Sipple's husband, Peter, is the Headmaster); Ana Marie, 13, who is spending a year at boarding school in Malaga, Spain, before entering high school next year; and Marlena, 9, who is at school in Jamaica.

Allison Jennings McCance has been busy too, in fact, so busy dividing her time between her research job at the Harvard Business School, sports, and family, that she has authored a cookbook called The Clockwatchers Cookbook published by Yankee Magazine. The cookbook is written for the active person who wants to prepare good food quickly. Allison lives in Westwood, MA with her husband, Henry, who is with Greylock Management Corp., a venture capital company, and daughter, Ellen, who is in second grade.

Carolyn Kent has "Once more, and for the last time," gone back to school. She reports that she "loves law school; it was a good decision."

Gill Kohler Garbacz writes from Barrington, IL, that she is "Growing roots here in my art studio." After years of volunteer work, she is immersing herself in her art and has had several shows of her sand paintings. Her son Dave, 20, is in his third year of college in California, and daughter Chris, who eagerly anticipates getting her driver's license, is a sophomore in high school.

For the past three years Brenda Walker Hirsch has been working for Psychology Today magazine, but when it moved to Washington, DC, she elected to stay in New York. Last July she went to China for three weeks and loved it. Some of you may have even seen the article she wrote about the trip which appeared in Travel Weekly last fall. Currently job hunting, Brenda says she would love to hear from any classmates. She and her two boys, ages 14 and 11, live at 400 East 85th St., Apt. 17H, New York, NY 10028.

Greetings to one and all! I am pleased to report the following news of our class:

Tom Phelps is, indeed, back in the U.S. after a four-and-half-year stint in Kuwait. He is with an investment company in Boston, but I cannot read the name. He reports that George Houppis also spent some time with the Sheiks.

Congratulations to Craig Whitney who has become Assistant Managing Editor of the New York Times. After many years out of the country as Foreign Correspondent and then after being Foreign Editor, it is nice to know that Craig will be around for awhile.

Bill Drayton is now of counsel with McKinsey and Company, New York, and also Chairman of the Society for the International Public Interest and the American Environmental Safety Council.

Tom Lebach has become General Counsel for the Massachusetts Office for Children. He lives in North Falmouth. John Marks is director of Search for Common Ground, an organization seeking to bring about a fundamental shift in the way nations act. Andy Cohen remains at Hebrew University, where he is now captain of the squash team. Not bad!

Jim Durston, still with the Cosmos, is now involved with the indoor soccer game. In addition, Jim has become co-agent with Dennis Cross. I think we have a fine combination of agents. Jim Barker has relocated to Wayland, MA as Senior Systems Analyst with Monchik-Weber Associates, a financial computer systems firm. Special regards to Pat Westfeldt, who I am informed, obtained a degree in electrical engineering in 1982, and has moved to Texas where he is employed by Texas Instruments.

Thanks to Dave Dumas '60, for his thoughtful letter. I appreciated his comments in that they relate to all of us who have, as he says, "been through the mill." I especially like Dave's thought that, "the country lawyer, not the farmer, is the backbone of America!"

I really got into trouble with Jim Perry's daughter Elizabeth who advises me that she and her sister Leslie tie the record with Dave Murphy for the most kids at PA from the class of '61. The Perry kids and the Murphy kids conspired to let me know, in no uncertain terms, that this is a record of which they and their parents are proud. I agree.

I will be running the Mile Hi Marathon in May, and along with news of yourselves, your friends and your families, please send me your support and encouragement. I need it.

Ann Tevepaugh Mitchell writes: "Being a wife and mother is a lot of fun — for a volunteer job." She and Jerry have two children, Alison, 10, and David, 7. Ann is taking Japanese lessons in preparation for her second trip to Japan this spring.

Another traveling mother is Judy Purser O'Henry Sibley, who is in the publishing business in London and travels quite a bit. Her most recent trip was to Singapore, Hong Kong and Europe. She commented to me that she loves her job but finds it difficult at times to bring up two girls and work full time. Sherry Craig Lowe says she's too busy at home to think of any other occupation right now. She writes, "It's been an exciting year for Bob and me as our two boys are old enough now to go camping. We can begin to see the end of the "toddler" phase. . . . She reports that there are moments she wishes herself back at her old job as a state parole officer, but does find time for stained glass projects. She started and coordinated a new summer program for two thousand Glastonbury children, K-5, which was a huge success and will be expanding next summer. She says it was fun to associate with the professional world, but still prefers being at home with a more flexible schedule and her two delightful little boys.

Debbie Carpenter Thompson writes from Cumberland, Maine: "I am happy where I am. I have a great family, good friends, a stimulating job and interesting hobbies. I do not plan on mapping out a future. I only hope that the future is as good as the present." The present for Debbie includes marriage, two children, Anne, 13, and Joel, 11, a job as Associate in Parish Administration for the Cumberland Congregational Church, golfing and gardening.

Gray Hodges Wexelblat lives in Concord, MA, and is a self-employed attorney. She says that the logistics of being a sole practitioner are terrible. "It's difficult to be in different courts at the same time." She has also started the Graduate Tax Program at Boston University, all of which leaves "negative hours."

Andrea Lynch Cole reports that she has retired from Junior League volunteer work and is training to become a real estate appraiser. She is presently managing two buildings and keeping the books for her husband, Carlton, as well.

Cynthia Eaton Bing is living in New York City and is president of the Parents' League of New York, AND as of October, the new president of the Andover Alumni Executive Council.

Beth Hyde has married George Korski-Popiet. Last spring she received her M.A. in Computer Sciences and is now working at AteX, in Bedford, MA, as a programmer. She has a daughter, Sally, age 10.

A press release from Crocker Bank notes that Steve Kaufman has been promoted to vice president; he's an operations manager for the bank and, presumably, continues to enjoy the San Francisco Bay area. Closer to my home, another press release informs me that John Lansing has just been made a vice president at Armco Financial Corp's Special Funding Division here in Dallas. In the "That's Incredible" department, I was having lunch this past February, when the table conversation turned to unexpected and improbable meetings of old friends. As we rose to leave, I was suddenly face to face with Van Leichter, an attorney with Dupont Pharmaceuticals in Wilmington, who was in town preparing for a trial set for later in the month. He looks as young and fit as ever, but then don't we all! On a sadder note, I also saw Rick and Candy Beinecke, and Tom and Barbara Israel shortly after Christmas when we gathered in New York to help console very close friends who had lost two wonderful children in a fire.

George Andrews will be leaving the University Liggett School to become the Head of St. George's School in Newport, RI. He writes that he and Lil and the girls are excited and look forward to moving East.

Kay and I have started a "second family" with a beautiful baby daughter, Amanda, who was born 2 April 1983. With friends like George Works around (who calls his son, George IV, "Pumpkin" because he was born on Halloween), we could hardly afford to let her arrive on 1 April.

Kathie Krause Iannicelli has done the impossible — she condensed the last twenty-one years of her life on the "standard issue" postcard! After Abbot, Kathie graduated from the Museum School in Boston with the highest honors. She then became one of the first women teachers at Exeter before the school went coed. She developed an interest in the theater while working on a student production at P.E.A. Her first professional theater job was at Theatre-by-the-Sea in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, where she met her husband, Tom Celli. Tom acts, directs and teaches. Kathie still works at the theater as a costume and set designer. The Iannicellis have two children, Angela, age 12, and Alexander, age 9. They have lived in Australia for eight months and in Canada for five years. Kathie has done some large wall hangings for a local church. She also works in a greenhouse in the spring and is a member of the school board.

Karen Grant McWhorter had a second son, Keith, on 30 September 1983. Keith joins Alex who is four. Karen was enjoying a six-months leave of absence from AT&T where she was working on divestiture planning.

I ran into Claudia Kerr Grose in New York this fall. Claudia was also enjoying a respite from the working world, having worked most recently for the city of New York. Claudia's daughters are both at Horace Mann School.

Received a long letter from J. Fraser Himes, an attorney at law for the past 15 years in Tampa. His accomplishments and positions in the local and state bar associations are noteworthy: he "was president of the Hillsborough County and Tampa Bar Associations, and currently serves as Circuit Governor to the Florida Bar." Skiing, racquetball and aspiring to attend our next reunion, round out the letter.

My new position (Director of the MBA program in Health Administration) continues to provide the challenges of mid-career (middle age?) job shifts. I recommend it to most. In addition, I have been elected as a member of the board of directors of the NTL Institute of Applied Behavioral Science. This past holiday season brought back special memories as Josh Miner and I exchanged letters and caught up on the past 20 years.

Ray Marusi's parents wrote to express their gratitude. "Some of Ray's Andover friends lived through the sad days prior to his death. There was Tony King, Brad Zabel and Mark Levine — they made his last days more sustainable." Bill Hartman has left CIGNA for new career opportunities. His efforts as Class Agent represent the type of "behind the scenes" work that makes philanthropy work. Thank you, Bill.

Greetings from Portland! Before I begin recounting the tidbits of news gathered by faithful Abbot rabbits from across the continent, I thought I'd best clarify the Class Secretary arrangement we have for the next five years. As you may be aware, Mimi Dean McBride and I have split the job. You may wonder (as the Andover Bulletin editor did) how we intended to split it up! For the next two years (i.e., until March 1986) I will function as Class Secretary. After that time (March 1986 to REUNION 1988) Mimi will be Ace Reporter.

I'm sure you've all received Ann Harris Furgerson's letter about the Directory, a letter which was also chock full of wonderful post-reunion news. Ann has put together a 20th Reunion Binder with the assistance of many of us, but especially of Mimi, Jackie Sutton Cleverly, Carolyn Holcombe Damp, and Cece Kimball Merriam. This Binder sounds fantastic, full of pictures, notes, and letters from almost all members of the Class of '63. Ann will check the Binder out to anyone for a look-see, if you'd like to experience or re-experience Reunion. Contact her at 9321 Chapman Ave., #1, Garden Grove, CA 92641, if you are interested in perusing the Binder, OR if you want a copy of the latest AA Class of '63 Directory.

Mimi gathered news on the East coast and sent me the following news flashes: Sue Burton followed up AA's reunion with a mini-reunion with Meg Power and Karla Haartz Cortelyou for lunch under the magnolias at the Iron Gate Inn last July. Sue spent Thanksgiving and Christmas in Chatham and has spent more recent weekends painting a friend's farm in the Blue Ridge Mountains in Virginia. At work, she is working wildly on the finishing touches of National Geographic's new building to be completed this year. Karla just returned from Los Angeles where she was recruiting teachers for the Madiera School. This is a year of travel for Karla. She and husband Cliff plan to go to Rio for spring vacation in March. Karla and Mimi are planning a spring picnic on 6 May in McLean, VA for all the Washington classmates and hope everyone in the area will call Karla and plan to come. Karla's number is 703-790-1002.

Mimi says she's going to try to get in touch with Meg Power who was out of town attending a conference in New Hampshire when she called. Meanwhile, she and Jon are "muddling along," planning a kitchen addition to their house and making daily decisions as what to and what not to put in it.

Cindy Sorenson wrote to say that her intended sabbatical for 1984 was sabotaged! Instead, she is on "semi-sabbatical" working as a teacher's aide in a class for children with special needs. She spent the summer teaching sailing, sometimes seven days a week. The highlight was teaching a cruising course to the America's Cup [sic] for the first week of races in Newport, RI. . . . an unforgettable experience!

Cindy also wrote that she had contacted Jan Gleason Perry who raises horses on Bainbridge Island near Seattle. Cindy reached Jan on a walkie-talkie phone in the barn where she was nursing a horse with a "belly ache." Jan has 28 horses at present in addition to a long list of other assorted creatures. Cindy also bumped into Peggy Moore Pagurko over Christmas. Peggy has a kitchen store and catering business called "Fat Fingers."

Way back last fall, I had a letter from Jackie Van Aubel Janssens. Jackie won first place for the AA Classmate traveling the greatest distance for our 20th reunion. It was wonderful to see her. Turns out, she returned home and immediately was asked to become Marketing Manager for D.B.M. Europe (Drake Beam Morin), a human resource consultant. Jackie planned to join them, at least until the family skiing vacation in December, at which point she intended to evaluate her situation.

Carrie Damp wrote at Christmas that all was well in Milton. She was off for New Hampshire for some skiing with son Zander and husband Andy during the Christmas break from her teaching duties at Milton Academy.

Out in Portland, we have hit the "bug" season, that two to three month period of the year when at least one member of the family is functioning at almost zero capacity. We are looking forward to spring! But despite all, we have skied a lot this season and enjoyed the January heat wave after the icy cold of December. Like Mimi and Jon, we are planning a remodel of our downstairs and hope we can weather the disruptions!

Keep sending me news! I love receiving your notes and letters and I am depending on all you reporters out there to keep this column full!

Please help us locate the following members of the class who are on our "lost" list. Addresses should be sent to Charlotte Buchan, Office of Academy Resources, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

By now you have all, I hope, heard from me several times this year. You have read the names of more classmates in my letters than you would in a normal column. This is my excuse in departing today from the usual format. No news here. Just a suggestion that you make the news, and hear the news yourself. Come to your 20th Reunion.

If you can, come early Friday afternoon and stay through mid-day Sunday. If you can't, stop by for a day, a meal, an hour. It happens only every five years.

We'll be at Taylor Hall in the West Quad Friday and Saturday, at the Sheraton Rolling Green Inn in Andover on Sunday. There will be classmates there from California, from Florida and from Texas. It would cost you thousands of dollars to see these people on your own. Don't miss this chance.

See you 8 June.

Susan Localio Ackerly and family have moved to Ithaca from Vermont where husband Spafford is working towards his Ph.D. in Paleobiology at Cornell. They spent the summer in the Titons, Wind Rivers and Swatooth Range.

Kit Jones Prager was once again on the move much of the year. Her itinerary included visits to Peru (Cuzco, Machu-Pichu and Lima), Dallas, New York, Washington, DC; San Antonio, and a return to her alma mater, Randolph-Macon. When she is home, Alice (7½) and Mark (4½) take up much of her time with school activities, dance, swimming, etc. She is also AAUW treasurer and does volunteer work at the school library.

This is the big "20" for us and I hope that many of you will descend on the campus for what promises to be a great time for all. Although none of us may be thrilled with the idea of approaching 40, the big event should be a lot of fun and a great way to see old friends and catch up on each others' lives for the past 20 years.

Kit Meade wrote recently to announce that he is the proud father of Richard, born on 7 September and "already a candidate for the class of 2001." Kit is Vice President of Lamb Technicon in Detroit.

Tom Hafkenschiel married Wendy Hassett 30 September in London. Tom is an emergency physician in San Jose, CA. Dwight Batteau has turned his talented pen towards writing commercials instead of songs, but modestly reports that he did write a song for Bette Midler's newest album. Another well-known pen belongs to Jeff MacNelly whose comic strip Shoe now appears in over 800 newspapers.

Mark Herrmann is now in Tokyo, having moved there last summer after being named a VP and Asian Operations manager of TEL-GenRad, Inc., a manufacturer of electronic systems and instruments. Travelling the opposite direction is Phil Young, named Senior VP and Group Executive, Corporate Banking, at Hibernia Bank in San Francisco. Previously, Phil was with Chase Manhattan Bank for 13 years, of which 10 were overseas, most recently in Hong Kong.

The following items were gleaned from the fall phonathon (it was nice to talk with so many classmates): Peter Andrews is a residential architect in Annapolis; Dick Barnum is a child psychologist in Newton, MA; Dick Boydston and wife, Susan, welcomed their first daughter and third child on 25 September. Dick is a lawyer with Strauss, Troy & Ruehlmann in Cincinnati. Mark Carnevale's oldest child, Valerie, is ready for college this fall (now, how old do you feel?). Mark handles contract negotiations for G.E. and spent quite a bit of time in Washington as a result. Hugh Cuthbertson is a labor lawyer in Hartford, CT, and has been in contact occasionally with Jon House, head of the doctor's union in New York. Pete Dennehy is an attorney with the Rhode Island Department of Transportation. Pete and John Levine got together at the Harvard-Army game last fall. Tom Doherty is with Western Electric in North Andover doing engineering and Marketing. Tony Gibson is with the Paper Division of Champion International in Stamford, CT. Tony and wife Kathy have two daughters.

Don Shepard and wife, Emily Maitin, announce the birth of a daughter, Melissa, on 5 February. Larry Davidson is founder and president of Computers for a new Education, Inc. in Cambridge, MA. . . . Jim Eller is a partner at Finley Kumble in Beverly Hills, practicing corporate and securities law. Anyone traveling to Los Angeles (to the Olympics perhaps?) might want to look Jim up—he would like to hear from you.

Steve Devereux is Manager of Marketing Promotions for Head Racquet Sports in New Jersey.

Here in New York, the sports business continues to keep me occupied, and pending full recovery from knee surgery, I may give the triathlon a try this summer.

Greetings again:

Jim Kunen has finished his second book, How Can You Defend Those People? The Making of a Criminal Lawyer. It is an extremely humorous and insightful account of Jim's experiences as a public defender in Washington. Also in the Capitol, Jim Fabiani was married to Barbara Cook, who is Nancy Reagan's deputy press secretary. Jim is currently a senior associate in the government relations firm of Schlossberg-Cassidy and Associates. Paul Miller was married last summer to Karen Lea Koenig Perez who is a second secretary of the U.S. Embassy in Cairo and director of the American Cultural Center there. Paul is a correspondent for NBC news in Paris and the Middle East. Bruce Walton married Nancy Barton Motley last fall. Bruce is a marketing representative with I.B.M. in Boston and Nancy is in sales with the Fidelity Group. Also married: Ray Healey and Claudia Angelos in New York City. Ray recently joined the staff of Albert Shanker, head of the Teachers' Union, and Claudia is teaching Law at N.Y.U. and working as a public defender. Ray can often be found roller skating from their upper West Side palace through Central Park. Dan Bowler is currently stationed in Pearl Harbor as the chief Staff Officer for Commander Destroyer Squadron 33.

Ann and Andy Oglivie had a third child, Peter Griswald, born in January 1983. Andy recently became a partner in the law firm of Colletti and Ericson in San Francisco. Jon Noll, and wife Pinky, also report having a third child last April, a boy, Daniel Allen. Jon competed in (and more importantly, completed) The Ironman Triathlon in Hawaii. His times were 1:02 for the 2.4 mile swim, 7:32 for the 112 mile bike ride, and 5:00 for the 26.2 mile marathon. A performance that was 548th of 838 finishers.

Lastly, it is with great sadness that I report that Alberto Raurell was shot and killed last July in a hold-up attempt in Mexico City. Alberto graduated cum laude from Harvard where he was editor of the Harvard Art Review. Subsequently he worked with the Wildenstein and Co. Galleries and the M. Knoedler and Co. Galleries. From 1978-1980, he was Curator of the collection of Christopher de Menil in New York City. From 1980-1982 he was Vice-President of the Vesti Corporation in Boston where he managed the acquisition of artwork for such clients as I.B.M., A.T. & T., and Chemical Bank. In 1982 he became Director of the Tamayo Museum in Mexico City and had mounted exhibitions of Picasso and Matisse. Alberto is survived by a son, Miguel, his mother and his sister. The sympathy of the class is extended to his family.

Best regards, Skip Freeman.

Dear Classmates:

"No news is good news" does not hold true when you are the Class Secretary. Some news is better than none, however, so here it is.

Lucy Thomson was married recently to Arthur Peabody. Lucy and Arthur are both working for the U.S. Department of Justice. They are at home in Alexandria following a trip to Europe.

Beverly Armsden Daniel has left her job at Wheaton and is enjoying being at home. Hopefully we'll be able to get together when she's visiting her parents in Kittery Point, just down the road from me.

Melinda Miller Patterson, husband John, and son Timothy, were in Wales on vacation last fall. They have started a Christmas tree business called "Timotree."

Bill and I are planning a trip to England in April. I'm keeping the winter blues at bay by taking piano lessons again after a lull of eight years. Hope to hear from more of you before next issue.

Greetings fellow alumnae, and thanks to the efforts of several of you, I finally have a good bit of news to report!

First off, my thanks to Gail Niziak Strong and Jan Mons Britt for personally sending me news of themselves. Gail wrote to let me know that as of June she will be Mrs. Alexander King Wiggin II. Gail currently lives in NYC and is senior art director in a small ad agency. Her husband-to-be will graduate from Columbia Business School in May, and after their marriage they will either live in NYC or Darien, CT. Let us know!

Jan now hails from Bangor, ME, where she was named "Maine's Outstanding Young Woman of 1983," an honor given in recognition of civic and professional achievement. Congratulations, Jan, on your award. Jan obtained her B.S. in journalism from the University of Kansas, lived in Chicago for many years, then moved to Maine where she is a sales and marketing representative for Maine Today, a business magazine, and is also very active in innumerable civic activities. Jan would love to hear from old friends; her address is, 818 Ohio St., Bangor, ME 04401.

In the quest for more news, I have been able to initiate a cooperative venture with Elizabeth Bonan Bertin-Boussu (Liz). As our new Class Agent, she calls you for money and sends the news you provide on to me. Unfortunately, some of the news got lost enroute this time. So, if you expect to see your name in print and don't, please be understanding and re-submit your news. At any rate, via Liz, I have the following to report, from West to East:

Maggie Wilde is living in Los Angeles and is an independent producer. Across the continent, in Valatie, NY, Warren Osborn Collins is among the ranks of working mothers. She continues to be a microbiologist at Sterling Drug Co., and her husband, Leonard, is a teacher. At home is James, who turned two in October of 1983.

In NYC, Susan Stichnoth Brackett is also a working mother of two young boys. She stays busy doing free-lance writing and editing for Reader's Digest. I guess those all-nighters spent putting Cynosure together were worth it!

Liz also obtained news from two classmates in the Boston area. Jean Haley Hogan lives north of Boston, in Arlington, with her husband, Dan, and two-year-old Matthew. Dan is a lawyer and psychologist, and Jean has struck out on her own in real estate investment.

On the south shore, in Cohasset, lives Elizabeth MacGregor Bates with husband, Jeffrey, and their one-year-old daughter, Melissa. Elizabeth commutes into Boston to take courses at the Boston Architectural Center.

But wait! I'm not through yet. On a recent vacation to NYC (what a change from Louisville!) I was able to rendezvous with Antiss Bowser Agnew and Claire Moore Dickerson. Antiss was very pregnant at the time, and soon after, in December, delivered Christopher. Antiss has already gone back to work as a psychotherapist at a mental health clinic in Scarsdale. Her husband, Jonathan, works for Dustin Hoffman.

Claire is also a new mother of Caroline, born last fall. What a cutie! And Claire, too, is back at work as a partner at Coudert Bros. Tom, her husband, is an attorney and recently received an MBA as well.

During my NYC trip, I was able to stay with Liz Bonan Bertin-Boussu and her two sons, Pierre and Anthony, in their beautiful Park Avenue apartment. Liz received an MBA from Concordia University in Montreal, and is involved in commercial leasing with William A. White. She was a wonderful hostess, and we had a grand time reminiscing.

Finally, I recently had a long phone conversation with Alison Hurst Mikel in which we also did a lot of reminiscing. Alison is married to Rusty Mikel, and they live in Columbia, MD. Rusty works in Washington, D.C. as a technological consultant, and Alison keeps very busy with Emery, age 5, and Jory, born in July '83.

Unfortunately, I also had to call Alison to gather information about the tragic death of Wendy Morrissey Scannell on 26 December 1983. Wendy and Alison had been roommates at Abbot and had remained in contact over the years.

Wendy died in an auto accident that also killed her 18-year-old step-daughter. Her five-year-old son, Benjamin, was injured, but is recovering. Wendy's husband, Joe Scannell, head of the art department at St. Anslems College in New Hampshire, and their one-year-old daughter, Caitlin, were not involved in the accident.

Wendy and her family lived in her native Goffstown, NH, where Wendy had recently been elected to the school board. She also had an M.A. in counseling psychology and was active in mental health and social services. I remember Wendy as one who made friends easily, both at Abbot and at Mt. Holyoke, where we both went to college. Both a dedicated worker and one who appreciated fun, she really seemed to take full advantage of life. Having lost my sister this year, I can only say that I understand the pain her husband, parents, and siblings are experiencing. Time will hopefully lessen the pain, though not the memories. A scholarship fund has been established in her memory. Contributions can be sent to the Wendy Morrissey Scannell Scholarship Fund (to benefit a Goffstown High School senior), c/o Amoskeag Savings Bank, Goffstown, NH 03045.

I guess we have reached that age when it's time to settle down. That's what most of you — at least those who write in — seem to be doing. Scotter Libby and I seem to be about the only holdouts.

Rusty Chapman, for example, who is practicing emergency medicine at Emergency Trauma Center in Greenville, SC, got married three years ago and had a daughter last year. Another doctor, Sam Craft, planned to re-marry in January, then return to his new job in a group practice in a south-east Milwaukee suburb. Yet a third MD, Ted Kohler, is ensconced in Seattle, enjoying the rain as he performs vascular surgery at the University of Washington. He wants to know when Ken Blake's record is coming out.

The lawyers are settling down, too. Better than litigating, no doubt. Tom Kidde sends news of the birth of his second daughter, Elizabeth, in October. Ken Krier is now a partner in Cummings & Lockwood and has moved his wife and two children to Naples, FL. Ed Moulin, a lawyer for the New York Stock Exchange, is the proud papa of one-year-old Aaron. And Baxter Lanius, after spending years with such large firms as Shearman & Sterling; and Dewey, Ballantine, got smart and joined a small New York law firm launched by a law school classmate of mine.

Bankers have nesting instincts as well, of course: Carlos Gonzales has a new son, Carlos Alberto. So do teachers: Don Olson reports that he and his wife are renovating a 100-year-old Queen Anne home in Winona, MN, where Don is athletic director, cross-country and hockey coach at St. Mary's College.

Finally in the news, George Billings has left Communications Satellite Corp. to join a cellular telephone company in a Washington suburb. And Jeff Hansen writes that Scott Brande has joined him on the faculty of the University of Alabama in Birmingham. Scott joined the Geology Dept. and apparently is specializing in the micropaleontology of muds in Mobile Bay, Jeff says.

Keep the new material coming in.

Some new voices heard: Hubert Crouch writes to say that he's been living in Dallas since law school. He's with the firm of Gardere & Wynne, has been married for eight years, and has two kids. He asks about Rob Reynolds. If my memory is working, Rob was with an energy-environmental firm doing work off the New England coast. Maybe in June, Rob will be among those at Andover for our 15th Reunion to correct any inaccuracies this column may have perpetrated over the last few years.

Another off-shore representative is none other than Manuel Tavares, who writes to say that he is married, has two kids, and is now the president of his family's construction materials business. He lives in Santo Domingo, the Dominican Republic, and says he'd enjoy seeing any classmates visiting the Caribbean.

But the guy who's really been off-shore is Fred Strebeigh. Fred succeeds in beating all competition for this edition's Exotic Foreign Travel Award. He sends a postcard from the Falkland Islands, where he arrived last summer from New Haven via London and Ascension Island — with various planes, trains, and boats in between stops. "It's cold when snow falls in August," says Fred. I assume that Fred is there on one of his writing projects, and that he finds the Empire's rule congenial in the Falklands.

By the time this arrives, spring may be arriving even in Ithaca, where Jeff Claus will be receiving his Cornell Ph.D. in Anthropology of Education. Jeff's been publishing "radical critiques" in academic journals, "and wondering if they mean anything." He's been playing with an old-time fiddle band that performs a music that Jeff describes as "the primitive ancestor of bluegrass — but not bluegrass." The band (and/or its music) is called "Dustball," and they played in Europe last fall. Check the Enigma label, for whom they have recorded a 45.

Jeff reports spotting Tom Sperry in Manhattan, and says he's kept up with Per Bro who recently received his engineering doctorate in water systems. Per is married to a woman from Iran, has two kids and, says Jeff, "has his head on straight." Persists in calling Andover, "high school."

I, too, have taken an interest in what you might call "water systems," and have decided to say bye-bye to white collar work. Last fall I joined Boston's Local Union #12, Plumbers and Gasfitters, as an apprentice. Eventually may run a plumbing/heating/renovation contracting business, but in the meantime will be learning the trade and working with a union shop that does major construction and renovation. Right now I'm working on the renovation of the Harvard Bio Labs. On the writing front, the publisher of the book I did last year on real estate finances, John Wiley & Sons, has been talking to me about another book contract. I'm thinking it over. But, as I've grown older, I've been overwhelmed by the amount of junk and smug pomposity in the world. The usefulness of yet another opus on "management" is in doubt, at least in my mind. Plumbing, heating, and housing on the other hand, are indisputably necessary. You don't have to con anybody, and you make a reasonable living.

Leaving the political culture of Washington was not difficult. It's a good town if you don't mind living on coffee and booze, and can refrain from removing your cordovans in 100° summer heat. The best part was working with Jim Shannon. I'm biased, of course, but Jim truly has become one of the most insightful, affective, and inspiring members of Congress. His skill as a politician and legislator impressed me again and again, just as it has impressed the heavies on the Hill. And as this goes to press, Jim has announced his candidacy for the seat in the U. S. Senate that Senator Paul Tsongas was forced to vacate because of ill health. Jim will get a well-deserved campaign contribution from me next fall.

Before leaving D.C. I saw Alex van Oss, who spent the summer at Middlebury's program in intensive Russian. Fortunately, Alex returned to Washington to find his job at National Public Radio's "All Things Considered" still in existence. Evan Thomas, whom I saw too little of while in D.C., is heading for Time's HQ in New York. Evan has also landed a fine book contract. . . . the subject of which will be, U.S. foreign policy during the earlier eras — Dulles, etc. Closing the loop is David Funkhauser, who is now an editor and bureau chief for the Middlesex News, a major paper in Jim's Congressional District just north of Boston. Dave mentions that he's married to a rival editor for the Worcester Gazette.

By the way, did you see Gavin O'Herlihy in Superman III? What a scoundrel! Art Oller is an oil man in London, Steve Parcell is the director of a project for the Friends of Wildlife, based in DC. Peter Olney, who has moved to LA, spent part of January doing union lobbying on Capitol Hill, and Peter Gallett, of Brooklyn, writes to say he is an itinerant soothsayer. It was in Brooklyn that I spent a roaring New Year's eve with Larry Uhl and his wife, Valerie. Larry has recently been made a director of the investment-banking firm of Warburg, Paris and Becker. For those of us uninformed about these things as I was, being a Director means you're one level above that of a Senior V.P.

A final note: If you have some grey hair, have been promoted in your job or been fired or married, sired a child, etc., you may also have realized that we are now 15 years older than we were back at you-know-where. This June we'll be having our 15th Reunion. And believe it or not, there are people out there between Rio and Fairbanks who every now and then wonder about you. They actually think how pleasant — or at least worthwhile — it would be to sit down and talk to you and find out what kind of creature you have become.

You can give them — and yourself — this sort of opportunity by being at Andover over the weekend of 8-10 June.

About a year ago, I got a wonderful letter from Dave Sedgwick, whose thoughts seem apropos: "I think about seeing people from the past. I never know whether to hide or seek. Nowadays, I've learned enough to enjoy my nostalgia and my grief — anyway, I can't escape it. So, I usually seek . . . People are full of surprises."

I want to thank all of you who have either answered my post cards or returned my phone calls. Having just moved, I hope that I haven't misplaced any notes. Any news you can send on down here would really be appreciated.

There's a lot to write about. Joe Zager is still enjoying hospital administration in Myrtle Beach, SC. More importantly, his '53 Studebaker and '73 Norton "are still running great!" Rob Christie, still in Houston, is now the Assistant Secretary and a Director of the Enterprise Oil and Gas Co. Don't know what he's hinting at, but he adds that the OTC listing is ENTR. Jon Besse resides in Jerico, Vermont. He's a consulting forester, working mostly under contract to the U.S. Army. Peter Fox, Illinois' top salesman, was the subject of the cover story in the premier, winter 1982 issue of Illinois Business. The "young Department of Commerce Director applies business practices to the bureaucracy."

Rob Stearns joined Merrill Lynch last year as a vice-president in the Mergers and Acquisitions area. After earning both an MBA and a J.D., Rob went to work for Booz, Allen in Chicago. He then built his own holding company, which was engaged in business start-ups and turnarounds, before moving on to Merrill Lynch in order to help America's oligopolies become monopolies. Ethan Stapleton is also working in New York, in the International Private Banking Division at Chase Manhattan. He reports that his roommate from Will Hall, Chris Tow, is on the staff of his Congressman from Rhode Island, and does extensive work for the House Banking Committee in D.C. Tim Langworthy is part of a small law firm in downtown Los Angeles, and lives in Culver City.

Alex Donner is a member of the prestigious New York law firm of Saxe, Bacon, Bolan; and also is still very active in the music business — The Alex Donner Orchestra features Alex on vocals, backed up by six pieces, and is very popular at weddings and benefits in the tri-state area. In fact, Alex played at Helen and Larry Rummel's wedding last June. Larry is a New York lawyer, and plays rugby for exercise. . . . sounds like he's had a little time over the past four years to fall into Andover nostalgia (defined in Webster's as a "wistful or excessively sentimental, sometimes abnormal yearning for return to . . . some past period or irrevocable condition.") By the way, Alex reports that Romerio Perkins is becoming a well-known, free-lance writer in St. Petersburg (the one in Florida), and is about to develop his own TV talk show.

Tony Carroll is enjoying the perspective gained by moving to a small, midtown law firm, where he is the second person on the corporate side. Michael Smertzler has gained over six years of domestic and international corporate finance experience with Lehman Brothers in NYC. Jim Longley has his own law practice in Lewiston, Maine, and was prominently involved in a recent state squabble over milk price support.

Clark Mitchell has recently moved to Petaluma, California after six years in San Francisco. Clark has been successfully expanding sales of his artwork, while also running a gardening and landscaping business. Rich Samp now works for a D.C. law firm. This past year he visited Guy Dempsey in London. Guy, meanwhile, was married to Nancy Shaw, and has returned to the White, Case offices in Manhattan. Ken Colburn made Vice President at First Boston, and is building a new house in Westport, CT. Harry Riggs returned to Boston after five years in Chicago. He is an editor with the D. C. Heath Publishing Co. Zephyr Twombly now lives in Jacksonville, Florida, by way of Santa Barbara, Amherst, and New London. He teaches at a private school, plays conga drums in a trio, and continues his playwriting. (He changed his first name some years ago.)

George McLellan works as a stockbroker with Roten, Mosle in Houston. Mitchell Sweet is a clinical instructor in the Surgery Department at Brown. Jim Rodgers, after clerking for judges in Mississippi and D.C., has joined a Washington law firm.

Ned Bently and his wife have a new family member named John. They also socialize frequently with Mr. and Mrs. John Russo in LA. James Robinson, as assistant vice president at the National Bank of Detroit, has had his hands full handling the firm's Mexican loan portfolio. Dave Diamond has accepted a position as staff physician with the Mt. Auburn Hospital in Cambridge. And finally, some news that will make Mr. Everett Sherrill, class of 1904, very happy — his grandson, Sam Skinner, was awarded a Doctor of Philosophy degree from the University of Utah, and will be doing post-doctoral research at Wisconsin.

Hello Class of 1970!

Not a lot to report in this issue — we're slowing down here! Let's get with the news from now on!

Here's what I have — Amy Baldwin Bratten now has two children, Paul, 5, and Tyler, 14 mos. Amy continues to work at the hospital in the intermediate care nursery taking care of premature babies. Margaret Cheney McNally was married to John McNally in December 1982. John is a partner in the law firm of McNally and Noterman in Washington, DC. Abbot alumnae attending the wedding included Pauline Cerf Resnick and Leslie Breed. Margaret continues to be the managing editor of the Washingtonian magazine. Sue Cleveland Jacobson has finally deserted the wilds of Gillette, Wyoming for the metropolises of Texas. Quite frankly, I can't remember the name of the town at the moment — that news later. Trust me, I'd never heard of it!

Well, that's all folks. Nothing new to report from me — so until we meet again, have a good summer.

The following is a paid announcement from the academy — if you know the whereabouts of any of these people, please write to me or the Alumni Office. Thanks.

Kerrigan (Tim) Black replied to a card from Switzerland, while ending a five month tour of Europe. He graduated with a master's in music from Berkeley in '79, concentrating on ethnomusicology and especially Afro-American music. From that time he's worked as a performing artist, writing songs and playing guitar, piano, and singing as a soloist and studio musician. He's returned to the Bay area (POB 756, Berkeley, CA 94701), and hoped to hear from Luis Buhler and Cameron Nims.

Bill Cahill surprised me one night with a phone call to announce that he and Wendy were the proud parents of a son, Peter, born in October. Congratulations!

The New York Times announced the wedding of Walter Haydock to Constance (CeCe) Turner last October. CeCe was a classmate of Walter's at Princeton, before getting her master's degree as a landscape architect. She is no stranger to Andover, having been a teaching fellow during the '75-'76 school year. Walter is an associate in the securities sales department of Goldman, Sachs & Company in New York, while CeCe is a landscape architect for Innocenti & Webel on Long Island.

Alison Galusha Squires writes from Peter-sham, MA — "I started working for Simplex in summer, 1981 . . . last month I got promoted again — manufacturing planning. It's all very high-tech, state-of-the-art, and changing daily. Sam has his own studio and has spent the last 1½ years preparing for a big show." Bob and Joan Liver-side Drucker are at Duke completing infectious disease fellowships.

I had the pleasure of bumping into Bea McConnie Strohmayr at the supermarket recently. We discovered that we are neighbors. Bea continues to work in bilingual education; Mark is now a house-husband. They have two tiny sons, the elder of whom was shopping for toothbrushes when I met him. Bea reported news of Lucy Pope who had recently, successfully passed her 30th birthday. Lucy is living in Boston, teaching violin at the community music center. Another chance meeting took place in a Vermont Inn where I spotted Dori Streett and her husband celebrating their anniversary. I was so flabbergasted that I didn't manage to pull out my reporter's notebook, but I'd love to hear further from Dori, as well as from anyone else reading this column who hasn't been heard from in recent decades.

Fellow Travellers:

Short notes this time around. Am grossly busy here in law school. Wretched life. Curse of Mammon. Money the drug of the eighties 'n all. To wit, a letter from Mike Costin now of Middlebrook Road in the picturesque hamlet of Ferrisburgh (as in Pitts), Vermont, writes: "after Middlebury and some grad work in natural resource planning, I have been actively exploring the question: is life possible for an Andover grad without a law/medical/business degree and/or a $100,000 income?" (Sure, Mike, but girls laugh at you.) Mike is a self-proclaimed "housewright" and is "putting finishing touches on a building for spring sale — the Fed willing. "But, of course, that last caveat is ontologically relevant for us all. Mike includes several questions: Does Jocko MacNelly still dig James Brown? (Emphatically, yes, but Jocko lives in California now — more on that next issue.) Has Mark Lawrence rehabilitated himself? (No way. He works for Manny Hanny now — the Fed willing, of course). Has James Firth Martin cut his hair yet? (No data at this time: JFM, please send photo.) Further photos: a picture showed up in the mail from the ever-ebullient Mace Yampolsky. In it (I'm serious now, Mr. Regan, I only report the truth) Mace is wearing make-up, tights, stockings, and garters. His arm snakes around the shoulders of an attractive young woman in a Gold's Gym t-shirt. Mace now lives in Venice (where in the middle ages they once had a lovely castrati choir — nuff said). Russ Perry writes (on one of those notes that gets attached to a contribution), "Jeannette and I have been seeing Bijan Amini regularly since he moved down here from (illegible) over a year ago." As Bijan is one of the "lost" alumni (see below), this is of interest. We suspect that Russ is still in Washington, so the mystery of Amini narrows to manageable geographic bounds. Russ further informs that Louis Tenenbaum is about to engage in spiritual nuptialities with a young woman named Debbie Greenspan of reputedly high moral character. Bob Soule writes to chide. Insists that the building he works in in Washington has eight sides, not five as previously stated in this column. (Sorry, Bob, I was using pre-Reagan defense statistics.) Bob asks after Doug Hinman (New York/Rock'n'roll/writes the occasional letter to Jodie Foster), and wonders whatever happened to Gerry Treshinsky (so do I). Finally the alumni office has denominated certain of our number as "lost alums" meaning no one knows where to ask them for money. Herewith the names — and get those wallets ready, you've got a lot of giving to make up for.

Next issue: Chapter I of My Secret Life, by Frank Cregg, or, Mayberry S&M. Keep those cards and letters comin' in. Sincerely, Bartleby

Life in the big-time, after 9 p.m., riding the commuter train. Homeward bound in the dark. Time to speculate about the lives you all are living.

Riding the train does have its advantages (she says, knowing it took her more than three hours and two trains to go about 35 miles yesterday). One commute a while ago, I bumped into Libby Spader Naficy's former boss at BBD&O, who told me Libby had forsaken her Madison Avenue advertising role and was now teaching at a chic upper East Side school.

I also heard, again one day on the train, that Sandy Reynolds was in love again, but that's a story in which the details lie beyond the scope of this column.

Yet another train ride led me to reunion with Joy Beane Briant, who, along with her husband, Charlie, is going to put the Australian sailing team to test next year as they ply the waters of the Hudson in their new "old" Highlander. Joy, an attorney, has been working for the special master assigned to the Agent Orange case, and was just awarded a clerkship with Federal District Court judge, Jack Weinstein, the judge assigned to the case. Charlie, also an attorney and clerk, is presently writing decisions for a State Supreme Court Justice and is destined for a Wall Street law firm this fall.

Toni Holden is married to a French Canadian, and little "Antoinettes" abound, or so it is rumored. Joni Blaxter has married and settled (for the moment) in Burlington, Vermont. Meanwhile, Sally Jo Gilbert criss-crossed the country by bus and train, visited with Lucy Gorham in Washington, DC; stopped to see Joni in Vermont, decided not to go to engineering school, and returned to Seattle to teach special education. Sally Jo has become the ultimate jock, I'm told. She participated in the First Seattle Triathlon, swimming a half mile in Lake Washington, followed by a 22-mile bike ride, topped with a 6.2 mile run — all accomplished in under three hours.

Sarah Pendleton has started a "nature-life" school in New Hampshire offering courses in hiking, canoeing, ski-touring, and minimum-impact camping for adults and young people. "The emphasis is on learning by experience; learning to live on nature's terms," she says. (She is also knee-deep in producing woolcrafts.) Sarah encourages all interested alumnae/alumni to write for brochures to, Nature Life, Box X, Jackson, NH 03846.

Linda Rawson spent some time not too long ago mountain climbing in Colorado. In her position as attorney for Harper & Row publishers, Linda has been working on a big, hoopla case regarding President Ford's memoirs. While I believe her case won in the Federal District court, I think her side was shot down on the second circuit.

Elly Mish, curator at the Rye Historical Society here in Westchester, has joined Linda and K. T. Nourse (our class retailer) as Class Agent. When any of these three call or write, please listen and help to preserve the very special educational opportunity PA students have.

Dini Price married Paul John Votta, Jr. on 8 October. The two met while at law school. (Yes, more lawyers.) Dini was granted her Juris Doctor in 1982 and is expecting to receive an L.L.M. in Taxation this spring from Boston University. She works as an attorney for the Dept. of Housing and Urban Development in Boston and lives in Sharon.

Wonderful missive from Kris Brainerd Innes. She is now working in Newton, MA for Mutual Bank (largest savings bank in the state). She is an Assistant Manager in the Savings Bank Life Insurance (SBLI) Dept. Husband Daniel Andover and Middlebury graduate, teaches French and Spanish at Sharon High School. "We live in Brockton," Kris writes, "which is a once thriving-now-dead-but-trying-to-resurrect itself shoe city." And on 26 November 198 Margaret Grace Innes, a towhead weighing in at 7 lbs. 2 ozs., 19 inches, was born, adding to the Innes household of two dogs and a parakeet.

You know who else is a banker? Sam Butler PA '72 — but that story is better left to Walter's column.

In closing, this Wall Street commute (nearing the end of her train ride) wishes to quote from Kris's letter: "I am, and always have been, an abominable correspondent! However, even someone as habitually tardy as myself has to admit that 11 years is a long time to owe a letter."

"There's a reason though. As a typical identity-crisis-stricken child of the sixties, grew up with a hefty inferiority complex which I am only now, on the threshold of the big 3-0, beginning to conquer. The reason I never wrote was because I never believed that anyone would remember who I was. Ditto for the reunions. I was afraid that no one would remember me, and didn't want to end up reminiscing by my self on the steps of Abbot Hall."

So writes Kris, Abbot class of '72, Vassar Class of '76. How many of you feel the same way? Indeed, 12 years (now that it's 1984) is a long time to owe a letter. Let's hear from you.

Good morrow, pals. It's the dead of winter on Cape Cod, and the hammer is cocked. No worry — only good news to report on all fronts.

I received a card from Francisco Tourreilles, all the way from Montevideo Uruguay. He had been fiddling around with the world's financial stability at the International Monetary Fund for some time, but recently returned to Uruguay with wife and daughter to become Director of Transportation for the capital city. If you're ever in Montevideo use his name and the cabbie won't burn you.

Also from afar (in the sky, it appears comes word from Seymour House. After reading the post-reunion notes, he now heavily regrets standing us up. Some of us still regret going. Seymour has a special offer: As of 1 October 1983, he is at 15 Sconnic Rd., St. Andrews, Fife, Scotland, and offering any wayfaring mates the use of his spartan quarters for the catching of foreign diseases. He's doing a Ph.D. in Philosophy of Religion, and reports that he is happy to see Stu Sawabini is getting as bald as he is.

Dave Harsch sent me a card from Weston, MA with a great photo of reunion from Gene Dallago. What's going on in the Apple, Geno?

A late report that Dave Downs and wife Alexis were joined by little Ashley Chapir Downs as of 8 August 1983. Pretty name. I he looks like her mother, pretty child. If she looks like Dave . . . I'm dropping it.

Dr. George M. Mackor married Jill Malnim in September down in Hinesville, Georgia. George is a dentist and an Army Captain. Great combo — your patients cooperate or get K.P.

Jim Hackett left his staid quarters at Brown Brothers, Harriman (Boston) to join Gilbane Construction Co. in Providence. His first project is to coordinate the financing, construction, leasing and management of a huge office building in Providence. Some people do the strangest things for excitement. He and I will try to rendezvous in Miami this winter. Any classmates practicing law in So. Florida? Bail bondsmen?

I was up in Kennebunkport, ME on New Years Eve, and ran into Tom Beaton and wife at a rowdy restaurant. Tom was not being rowdy. Tom reports seeing Ken Ehrlich, Esq. (Ropes & Gray, Boston) in the shower at the Harvard Club. I don't know what he saw, but he didn't say much about it, so I didn't inquire. Tom's at Harbridge House, consulting whoever pays to listen. His mother lives in Sandwich, which is in my voting district, and he promises he'll get her to vote for me twice.

Tom reports that Scott Mead spends time travelling to the far east in a private jet on behalf of the Chairman of the Board of Occidental Petroleum. Sounds far too exotic for Mead, and I was tempted to withhold reporting of this fact pending verification from Occidental. However, Tom is such a straight shooting gentleman, I believed him. He also says Mead works too hard. Private jet. Hong Kong. No such thing as working too hard.

I'm going to marry Brooks Roscoe's sister, Elizabeth '75, on 12 May in Hingham. You may call Crate & Barrel in Boston. Ceramic and glass. No food processors except Cuisinart. My campaign announcement occurs 26 March — going once again for the Mass House of Reps. As of this writing, I am unopposed. Make checks payable to Committee for Morin '84. As of Jan. '85 call me "Sir."

Why don't I hear anything from all the folks on the West Coast? Hey, you guys! Wake Up!

Given the sparse news inflow this quarter, I will not spare you any details which I have been able to collect.

Times of tragedy also provide opportunities for reunions among friends. Such was the case at the memorial service for John Oldham. I neglected to take notes (at the risk of leaving someone out), but it was great to see Kate Gass, Elizabeth Philip, Ted Maynard, Jack Gray, George Ireland, Howard Carter, Betsy Evans, and Ann Blumberg. They're all doing some neat stuff. Without notes, my insights may be faulty.

Will Noel reports that his second child, Laura Anelle, was born in November. He's just finishing up his clerkship with a Houston judge and will start with a local firm in September. Will says that Chris Killingstad is working for Pepsi in the Philippines.

John Brady is also down Will's way. Back in his home state, Texas, John set up his own political consulting firm as well as a software development company in Austin. He would like us to send contributions to PA in memory of Jay Metcalf, a 1975 graduate. He also hopes to make it to the reunion.

Also in the baby department is Jon Drake's new son, Nathaniel. Congrats.

See you at the old school on 8-10 June?

Hello again from west of the Mississippi! News first from those to the east of the great divider:

Deborah Rogers was married last January to Joseph B. Doherty, Jr. of Andover. Deborah is working at the child care center in Draper Hall at Abbot. Kurt Silverman and Virginia are "practicing advanced cash flow management" at MIT where Kurt is teaching and also taking computer science at the Sloan School of Management. Recent work includes an attempt to improve the efficiency of the US Postal Service with computer-aided technology. David Purta, in electrical engineering at Carnegie-Mellon, was married in June to Lindsay Jean Cole of Pittsburgh. Mac DeCamp started his residency in June at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston and is one of the few doctors whose handwriting is legible on their Class Notes messages. Bob Thorndike is into seafood wholesaling, catering, lobster fishing, and probably eating, too. He also is the caretaker of the Glades Club in Scituate, MA. Peter Dorsey runs Sears Cleaning Services out of Rhode Island. Dan Ristuccia is running Border Buick — AMC, Renault — in Methuen. He and his wife, Beth, have a baby girl. Holly Vickers, hopefully, attended the business school of her choice last fall. She has been working in San Francisco and more recently in Boston handling third-party litigation against the manufacturers of asbestos products. Kimberley Patton is launching her doctoral work in religion and classical archaeology at Harvard this fall. She taught Early Christian History at Harvard last year.

Winn Gaynor is living in Arlington, VA doing optical research for the Navy. Lt. Gaynor says that life is fine with no responsibilities to depress him. Anne Rollings has left the New Yorker to take a position as Promotion Manager of Ad Week, a trade magazine for the advertising industry.

To the west of the Mississippi there are fewer correspondents, but just as varied pursuits: Ruth Cogan and I may yet ski together this winter, as she is up the road in Vail, Colorado as the Environmental Health Officer. Not only does she get to go skiing at lunchtime, she loves her job, too! Sandy Smith Macartney is married to a geologist named Hal, and the two of them are the terror of the Colorado 505 fleet — virtually unbeatable on the race course. Sandy is back in school, full time, pursuing an MBA at the Univ. of Denver. Lewis Butler graduated from the Harvard School of Architecture in August and is presumably working on the construction of a house for his folks on Stinson Beach, north of San Francisco. His design, of course. Wrenn Reed is living in Berkeley and working for Greenpeace in SF. She has bumped into Dori Hale, working on a degree in English (?). Wrenn reports that Michael Krumpke is working in Boston for Filene's. Lori Gross will graduate from medical school at the Universidad Autonoma de Guadalajara in Mexico this December. She'll spend her last semester at Michigan. Frank Lee of scenic Wichita Falls, Texas, is recently married to Judith Oliver of Dallas and they are living in Houston where Frank is in portfolio management. Frank, when working in NYC in days past, frequently ate out with Steve Sun. "In 2 years . . . I could never persuade him to teach me how to say 'I want a date with your mother,' in Cantonese," says Frank.

And finally, Jim Rice, a recent graduate of Tulane Law School, is now with Vinson and Elkins in Houston. He looks forward to seeing everyone at our tenth in 1985 and "I'll give everyone a ride in my Lear Jet!"

So long for now, keep writing from wherever you are or wish you might be!

Greetings! Hopefully, you all received my epic update that went out in January with Sarah Moore's reunion letter. Since then, more people have found time to write to me now that they are out of school. Many thanks. There are still numbers of 79ers from whom I've never heard, and a select few who are considered "lost" by the alumni office. Please let us know where you are. Help from others in locating these lost souls is more than welcome.

Josh Kaufman is in Med School in New Orleans after fantastic travels last summer to India, Singapore, and Hawaii. Tom Edmonds is in the Marines. Don Thompson, who is taking time off from UVA where he has been a cartoonist, is currently a banker in Lawrence, but he says that he can't promise low interest rates. Edda Klink is now a graduate student at the University of Stuttgart-Hohenheim after graduating in June from the University of Bonn with a

B.A. in political economics. She hopes to work in Italy this summer in her field of business administration. Edda says hello, sends her best, and welcomes any visitors to Stuttgart.

The Chicago contingent is thriving. Wynne Morris, Bryan Pendleton, and Michael Moore continue at U. of C. Peter Let-sou is also in business school there. Brian Linse graduated from Northwestern where Dave Morimoto is still in Medical School. These six are all buddies from Hale House (junior year at Andover) and send their regards to their four other dormmates, Chris Smith, Andrew Gilmour, Dan North, and Peter Grover. Also in Chicago is Marie Krane at NU Law School. Carol Davies will join her there. Jim Tappan is in Business School. Whitney Blake has headed East.

Beth Dirusso is now in a Motorola sales training program in Arizona and will return to Boston to work. Beth says that Steve Chernow and Karen Albert are both in law school somewhere. The Del Fuegos (Tom Lloyd and Dan Zanes) rock on with a favorable review in the Boston Globe and maybe another recording soon. Willi Cooper is also big on the music scene here as a member of The Peter Dayton Band. Guy Chirico, now in law school, is reported to be a rising politician. Helene Holbrook is living near Charlottesville, VA, where she works in a backpacking store and at a wildlife treatment center. Margaret Best is enrolled in the Northeastern U. nursing program. Sean Wolfert is in Cambridge and on his way to Med School(?).

Matrimony continues to infiltrate our class. Charlie Dean and Didi Schweitzer have announced our first inter-class engagement. Didi is taking the year off before (hopefully) beginning a graduate program in Psychiatric Social Work at UNC. Lieutenant Dean is on a three year assignment at Fort Bragg, NC. Wedding bells will ring in June for Tia Doggett. Tim Regan is getting married in May, and will return from his honeymoon just in time for our reunion. Tim is now working in the Andover Alumni Office, and will help to produce a play in the spring. Tim, and co-class speaker Charlie Wiseman, will be entertaining us all at the reunion. Alison Whitlock Paly was married in December, and is now a research assistant at U. Mass studying bird communication. Alison says that Andrew Nyhart is doing well (and still single, I think). Carroll Bogert will bring her kids to the reunion.

Bernie McKinnon works in Boston? Brad Holmes is working developing and managing free-standing emergency centers. Presently he is based in Akron, OH where the sun rarely shines. Brad says to check out the article that he wrote on his boss, PA '68, for the Bulletin. James Marquand continues at Harvard. John Leede has returned to Texas to be an oil man. Anne Cavett is finishing school at the University of Louisville and is into politics. Walker Humphries is in law school — maybe in Maryland. Margaret Shuwall and Mark Mulvaney are both experiencing the agonies of job hunting in Boston, but will soon be gainfully employed. Kris Timkin, who is engaged, is also in Boston. And finally, Greg Cleveland is also engaged. Congratulations.

Philosopher Peter LeCompte is concerned about the state of the world, as am I. Peter sends passionate, purple greetings saying that like weeds, we grow and wither and then go dormant, but we all come back!

So withered or thriving... PLEASE COME BACK IN JUNE. The Big Events are in the planning. Your class chums are all expecting YOU. Encourage (or threaten) old friends to be there, too. Whether you can make the trip or not, PLEASE WRITE to your Class Secretary to let everyone else know what you are up to. I look forward to hearing from you, and especially seeing you! BE THERE! —yours, Gretchen.

Please help us locate the following members of the class who are on our "lost" list. Address should be sent to Charlotte Buchan, Office of Academy Resources, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810.

Once again, it's time for "Name That Class." I hope you didn't try to play last issue, because if you had tried to "name that class" in even one note, you would have failed because there was nary a note to be found. My apologies.

Doug Gollin graduated from Harvard last June, and, having had enough of school, but not yet ready for the cold, cruel world, has decided to take a tour around the world via horse farms in Kentucky, England, Ireland, Australia, Hong Kong etc. His plans are "... pleasantly vague and my schedule is casual."

Other letters that I've received include one from Nadia Mirica, who is now Nadia Mirica McNally, as she was married this summer. She has been working for Wang Labs in Lowell, in International Marketing, since March of '83, and has decided to stay in the U.S. Congratulations on everything.

Ian MacAuslan is getting a BA/MA from the School of Advanced International Studies in Washington and Bologna. His only major decision so far is that he is not premed. He heard from Bill Adams who's at Bowdoin and majoring in history with a minor in art, "a far cry from the chemical engineering it seemed he would be pursuing at graduation, Ian writes." Ian also mentions the possibility that Brian Cordischi is dating female mud wrestlers, and that David Kite has lost his voice as no one has heard from him.

Susan Getgood graduated a year early from Wesleyan, and was unemployed for a while, but now she is working for PC Week, a new computer magazine located in Newton. She reports that Tony Nicosia is still living in New Haven; that Lisa Posey is still at Harvard; that Marty Soloman seemed fine at Wesleyan; and that David Weil worked for a lawyer in Boston this summer. David also ran in the NYC Marathon last fall.

Jamie Curtis plans on going to law school after graduating from Vassar this spring. He saw John Abbot, who spent last year in Barcelona and last summer in Boston; he talked with David Sherman who was a counselor over the summer at Tamarack Tennis Camp. Jamie spent last summer in a law firm writing wills, etc.

Other highlights include William McDonough, who was one of 80 people invited to try out for the U.S. Olympic hockey team, and will be captain of the '83-'84 B.C. hockey team; Tim Goss and Benjamin D.

Duke, are taking the year off from Williams, and travelling (separately) through Malaysia, Indonesia, Thailand, Nepal, etc.; and Holly Helliwell who is a Wheaton scholar, thereby enabling her to include economics, international business, and German under one degree.

On my way up to the Head of the Charles last fall, I stopped overnight at Yale where Jon Dee was so grateful that I stopped by that he gave me his living room for the evening. He is presently on Tome III of "Jon Dee's Greatest Works" and expects to publish it this summer through a small Greenwich Village press. Mike Lee was debating career options, intra-mural football or Med School. Good luck on the decision Mike. Robert Anderson has realized something that everybody else knew all along: He wants to sail ships. Go for it Rob! Molly Pyle played on varsity field hockey this fall as did Ann Cummings. Later, when I saw Molly over Christmas break, she was getting ready for job interviews. She's hoping for something in Washington. I didn't see anybody else at Yale, probably because I went to the Yale-Penn football game at the Bowl to see the outcome of the game.

Back in Boston the next day, I bumped into Heather Richards and Martha Johnson. Both seemed extremely happy when I saw them. The only thing that I could discover about either of their future plans was that Heather wants to go to California and make her hair blonder.

Over Christmas break I talked with Marianna Gracey who has graduated from the University of Wisconsin and is presently working in Boston. She's hoping to get over to Europe in the near future, possibly going with Ashley Gratz.

Here at Penn, I've seen Elizabeth Daley, who spent her junior year in England and is planning to go to law school; Elizabeth Okun, who says that she isn't sure what she wants to do next year, and who reports that Kathy Moss is not going to work for I.B.M.; and Peter Hill, who also has decided that the corporate life is not his style. Rich Gasperoni has been accepted into a Navy engineering program which will start after he graduates from the University of Vermont.

The only other news comes from the Brookline Chronicle Citizen which notes that Allyn Burrows participated in the Boston University Summer Theatre Institute where students gain experience by working with professionals.

I would like to mention at this time that it is probable that I will be in France all of next year. This being the case, I would like to find someone who would be interested in taking over the Class Notes for that time. Preferably, it would be someone who is in touch with some of the people from whom I never hear. I might add that this upcoming year will also be our fifth reunion and could be a really fun time to get in touch with old friends. If you are interested, please let me know. Thanks for the letters!

While letters sate my extraordinary need for attention, they also (and more importantly) help make the Notes more interesting and colorful.

Take, for example, the postcard I just received from Bayard Chapin. Currently traveling around the world on an 8-month, 8-country study-tour with the International Honors Program out of Cambridge, MA, Bayard writes from Indonesia: "Sporting a Japanese crew-cut and a month old beard while living in a palace with a family of royal descent, I'm reverting back to my primal instincts."

Tom Efinger, majoring in English at the University of Vermont, spends much of his time acting and playing his electric guitar. Tom is planning on studying in Salzburg, Austria this spring. He is hoping to travel and ski with Roland Hoch, who will be attending school in Vienna.

Buddy Terranova sent a note explaining that he is studying electrical engineering at Carnegie-Mellon University. He worked for Gillette last summer in Andover, where he had a chance to see Ernie Costello (at Duke). Ernie and Buddy drove to Dartmouth a few times to visit John Parolisi.

Joy Anderson participated in Dartmouth's Language Study Abroad program and spent five months in Europe, much of the time in France. After indulging in croissants, baguettes and eclairs, she regrettably remarks: "All the aerobics in the world can't help me now."

Amanda Tepper sent me a letter supplying all the details of life at Brown. An avid DJ at WBRU and President of the Brown Applied Video Organization, Amanda is concentrating in "Mass Media and the Modern Historical Memory." Equally busy, Grace Curley is on a special program in Washington, DC, interning for a government agency and receiving academic credit. And Tammy Glumicich is back at Brown studying international relations after taking a year off to work in real estate.

Some of us seek fame, or at least fortune, in rather risky ways. Jack Liebau doesn't bother with school any more; he splits his time between betting at the racetrack and playing with stocks and bonds. And Carlo Cannel, aka "Mr. Princeton", has assumed the position of chairman of Tiger Magazine, Princeton's humor magazine, which was disbanded last spring after publishing a scandalous article on Brooke Shields.

Sam Kim spent last summer representing the U.S. in Tokyo as a member of the Japan-America Student Conference. The program includes symposiums and field trips and its purpose is to promote peace and understanding between the two nations. Sam says it "is such a great, worthy, educational program, I hope other Andover alums apply for it."

Not too much news from Princeton University, except that Annie Yates has earned the name "cupid" . . . details at eleven. Kenny Cline is playing varsity basketball for the Princeton Cagers and should soon be a force in Ivy League hoops. I am still trying to hit a small green ball around a white box (squash), and our team will be making another run at the national title this year. I am very sorry to report the death of one of our classmates. Kim Hillier died on 7 January 1984 in a car accident in Princeton, NJ. She was a student at Cornell University, studying architecture. Full of enthusiasm, vigor and zeal, Kim epitomized the SPIRIT of '81.

Kim's family can be reached at 87 Ridgeview Circle, Princeton, NJ. 08540. On behalf of the class of 1981, I extend to the Hillier family our deepest sympathies and prayers. We shall miss her.

Hello! I am sorry, but do to my constant moving and disorganization, the Bulletin office sent your little notes and pieces of info to my old address. This is old, but better late than never.

In the fall of '83, I joined the throngs of college students at the Head of the Charles. While wandering about the banks of the Charles, I bumped into Fannie Iselin who seemed to be doing the same thing as everyone else there — wandering around looking for people . . . I also saw Trina Sorenson who was cheering on Matthew Weatherly-White who was rowing for Dartmouth. She told me that Hadley Soutter had transferred to Harvard from Princeton. Sarah Anderson was also there with a large Yale crowd; Patti Doykos was cheering on Dartmouth; she is presently studying in Germany on Dartmouth's foreign study program, as is Larry Chang who is studying in France. Later that evening I bumped into Susan Toothaker who is at Wesleyan after a year in England. While in the Yard I saw Peter Palandjian who is now at Harvard.

Another jaunt to Boston in November was on Andover's Parents' Weekend. Mona Lim, Mary Ann Somers and I all have younger sisters presently at Andover. Mona said that Jon Frank is alive and well at Yale. Courtney Starratt is studying German and is "much calmer now." (She said it not me.) Amy Starensier and Ross Solomon are also at Tufts and are reportedly doing well. Ruth Flanagan is at Oberlin and was in Boston a bit this past fall visiting Drea Maier. Rosy Elliot also went to visit some old PAers — Hilary Krane and Wesley Weissberg who are in California these days. Dave Work is also out there, I bumped into him this past summer on Nantucket, and Kevin Bates was in Nantucket working as a lifeguard.

Martha Lane transferred from Skidmore to Wheaton and Susan Philipp from Ohio Wesleyan to William and Mary where she sees Chandri Navarro. Melissa Scharer studied art all summer and plans on taking next year off and going to art school. Kathleen Kinsella is at Mt. Holyoke and she mentioned that Ritchie Banker, Betsy Biemann, and Devin Mahony are all roommates at Harvard.

In between swallowing goldfish, Lynn Snyder reported that she saw Mike Stoddard playing soccer, and she also bumped into Doug Benedict and Ned Moulton in New York.

Calista Woodbridge wrote that life at Duke is good, though she misses her East Coast friends and she saw Chris Dean over Christmas break. Louis Thayer dropped out of Northwestern but will soon get a degree in Engineering Science and is waiting tables in Minnesota. Nicco Freccia is studying theatre at Northwestern. Chad Rosenberger is in Zeta Psi with Dave Lampert, Brooks Elder and Brian Dunham at Dartmouth. They are all planning for a spring-break-college-style-a trip to Florida. Melissa Perkins went to Russia over Christmas.

Karen Prochniak wrote a long letter and filled me in on various people's lives. Karen is in an internship with a radiologist at Salem Hospital, and frequently sees Nancy Katz who is at Amherst, and a member of the Chi Psi fraternity. Judith Mulvihill came up from UNC to visit them over Thanksgiving and Stefan Wennik also saw Karen over Thanksgiving. He is apparently hiking, skiing, and getting into the outdoor scene. Liz Sigler saw Karen in Peabody over New Year's. Liz has transferred from Union to Sarah Lawrence. Nancy, Liz and Karen all met Ruel Little for dinner in Boston. He is at Johns Hopkins and is very busy these days. Amy Baker is a freshman at the Big D. and is "now reveling in the joys of Dartmouth winter sports." G. Townsend Zwart is also at Dartmouth, busy preparing for crew. Rick Kimball is into computers and the stock exchange and was being initiated into DKE at Yale when Karen saw him. Juanita Gonzalez is at Pomona working hard and "very much enjoying Cal fun in the sun."

Two nights ago I went out to eat with Peter Pedulla, Tom Luongo, and Liz Vinciguera. Keith Lowery, unfortunately, got tied up so he couldn't make it. Peter is majoring in English, Tom is planning on going to England next year, and Liz is working for the Alliance for World Hunger here at Columbia. Liz told me Jean Keamy was having a great time at Princeton.

Please write to tell what you are up to — I hate to keep putting the same people in, so those of you who have not sent in info. about yourselves, I hope to hear from you. Space is limited, but write anyway. Have a good spring. XO — Steph.

Here they are, folks. The official class notes of the 1984 Winter Olympics.

Three of our classmates went "down under." Cindy Reid and Polly Warner have recently left for a stay in Sydney, Australia to be followed by travels through Southeast Asia, and Aborigines recently chased Jason Bernhard out of Australia, where he worked this fall. He's headed now for Bali and Singapore. Anne Ree, however, is back in the U.S.A. After a semester in England, she has begun classes here at Brown. Hilary Blake, Sarah Rosenfield, and Chris Thompson started off '84 with great tans, after spending part of their winter vacations in Puerto Rico. They are all enjoying Dartmouth. Hilary recently starred in her first college drama production, Portrait of a Madonna; Sarah plans a dual major in Russian and Government, and Chris reports to have seen a lot of Mia Kelly. Mia's book about Andover came out in December. Speaking of Dartmouth, Mark Vita reports to be very happy there. Rachel Abramowitz had a good first semester at Yale and spent winter vacation in Europe with her family.

Todd Ongaro spent a fantastic semester in Switzerland, and started classes at Middlebury in February. Steve Blackwell reports to have "had a great summer spinning pizzas high in the air." Way to go, Steve. He's now loving Conn. College and rowing crew. Rachel Simmons likes U. Penn. quite a lot and is involved in crew as well. Cori Field is enjoying Stanford and the change the West Coast offers and may even spend Summer '84 out there. Also on the West Coast are Alison Beaumont and Quincey Tompkins who spend a lot of time together at Berkeley. Quincey spent Christmas vacation with Matt Gilligan in Reading. Matt's doing very well at West Point and seems to find the experience there very rewarding so far.

Down South, Tammy Snyder is very happy at UVA, and Liese Cochran misses the northeast, but really loves William and Mary where she has joined Tri Delta. Collette Devine seems busy and content at Georgetown.

Laura Culbert adores New York and really likes Columbia. Here at Camp Bruno, Andrea Feldman is playing lacrosse, Jon Wetherbee is playing sax in one of Brown's hotter bands, and Gil Maymi is happy to be out of West Point.

Enough from Amy. Very strange rumors have made their way to Providence. Becca Bennett told me that she had heard that George Caulkins had an interesting weekend last month. His date just couldn't hold down dessert. In other news from what Josh Steiner calls the Andover of New Haven (that's Yale, by the way), Andrew Siderowf played on the golf team last fall, Aimee Wolfson is currently playing on the squash team, and Tamar Gendler and Sheri Caplan are working hard for the Yale Daily News.

Up at Harvard, Scott Gwozdz seems to be enjoying himself, playing a lot of squash and catching an occasional class. Jeff Rossman and Ned Rosen have apparently recuperated from the weekend that Rob Sherman and I visited them on Martha's Vineyard (sorry about the mess, guys), and both are reported to be active in Harvard's swinging social scene. From Bill Storey, I received this tid-bit of information: "Spent the summer harvesting truffles in Mt. Sinai, prior to arriving at Hahvid [sic] this September. Hosted weekend kadzoo Frisbee tournaments for visiting alums Dave McGann, Rich Wooley, and Truffy Mugeridge."

In Washington, DC Jamie Hedlund reports that he is enjoying Georgetown, while spending his weekends on Capitol Hill with the Pages. Michael Landrum, now living and working in DC, is enjoying himself and trying to avoid a crazed Rob Sherman on the weekends.

At Penn., Kenny Rader has won a trip to Europe, winning a dance marathon. Donna Hoitsma has made the women's crew team, and Jeff Koffman has made the tennis team, and rooms happily (?) with Bob Butera. Elsewhere, Eamon Roche has moved off campus with Rich Wooley, who is close to signing an alleged six-figure contract to write Richard Pryor's biography. Ted Mufic enjoyed a solo tour of Europe after some wild times in the USSR. Anne Rickenbaugh played on the women's rugby team this fall at Dartmouth, and I received an unintelligible postcard from Laurie Nardone and Kit Arrington.

Well, that's all for now, kids. Keep those cards and letters coming; we love to hear from you. Love and cheers, Tom and Amy.

FACULTY EMERITI

The Coastal Journal of Bath, Maine, reported last September that Bill Brown served as co-commentator in a production entitled The Women of G. B. Shaw — A Commentary on Fabian Feminism at the Chocolate Church Rotary Room in Bath. This was followed in October by Bill's participation in the dedication, in his honor, of part of the new PA boat house on the Merrimack, and his fine sweep-swinging in the exhibition crew race after the ceremony.

Clare Gillingham's pre-Christmas journey took her to Ahmadnagar, India, for a visit with her daughter, Daphne, and her husband. They are engaged in service to the inhabitants of the area that has become a center for the followers of the late Meher Baba, a religious leader best known in the U.S. for his warnings against the use of psychedelic drugs in the 1960s. Clare's travels took her from country villages to some of the world's elegant bird sanctuaries. She and Allen are now preparing for early spring planting in Berwick, Maine.

Jim and Alma Grew gave a royal reception at their Boston home in October for Juliet Kellogg and her fiancé, Hollis French. Many were the Emeriti present at this happy occasion to greet the couple who were later married in Andover.

In December, Bart Hayes participated in a ceremony in Windsor, Vermont, where the "Governor's Award for Excellence in Arts" was presented to one of Bart's former students, George Tooker '38.

Noel news from Floyd Humphries tells us that he and Sarah plan to avoid Maine's chill in Venice, Florida, for a couple of months.

Dick and Norma Pieters have completed their "first full year of retirement" and are thriving in Sun City, Arizona. Dick has taken up silvercraft and chair caning. His major project, however, has been "tape recording a 1200 page textbook in Calculus for blind college students." Son Rick is now a resident in "Radiation Oncology" at the New England Medical Center in Boston.

It is with great sadness that the deaths of Ed Harris and Con Banta are reported. Their obituaries appear elsewhere in this section. We extend our sincere sympathy to Ed's wife, Alice, and Con's widow, Lorene. We are also sorry to report that on 14 February Harriet ("Hat") Chase Benedict, the widow of Gren Benedict, died in Providence, Rhode Island.

The View from Grub Street

Bulfinch Hall

We were sitting watching a track meet one afternoon, when a young lady of about seven years of age — a faculty daughter — sat next to us. As we conversed, it became obvious to us that the wisdom of our adult words did not capture her attention half so much as our mature hairline did. A moment's thought reminded us that her father is burdened with a full head of hair, and that baldness was something of a phenomenon to her. After we made the usual defensive jokes that are in the universal repertoire of the bald fraternity, our companion responded without a second's pause, "But it must be so cool in the summer!"

Well now. Mercy. We have met many charming women in our day, but this one had elevated charm to a height that left us speechless. And she meant what she said; there was not the least hint of insincerity or formula. When our vanity finally settled down, some time later, to mundane reality and allowed us to think rationally, we pondered what a lubricant such charm and courtesy are to a world bent on sensing friction even when there is none. And we are convinced that if there are at least a few other seven-year-old prodigies like our friend, the world in the next generation will be in very fine hands indeed.

We think she ought to be elected president. This November.

A true story from the Abbot reunion: On a winter's day in 1923 or 1924 when the PA hockey team was practicing on Pomp's Pond, some Abbot girls were also skating on the pond when one fell through the ice and would have drowned if it had not been for the courage of the hockey player who rescued her. Mary Harvey Kindel '24 has never known the name of her rescuer; if he would identify himself to us, she would dearly like to express her gratitude now that school rules don't restrict Abbot-PA conversation. What makes this story even more of a phenomenon of history is that when Mary returned to her dorm, Principal Bertha Bailey came up and sat with her as Miss Bailey administered appropriate medication — a significant portion of the contents of a bottle of whiskey.

Out of all the virtues that make us proud of PA and Abbot, it took Denny Hatch '53 in our spring edition to put it into words for us. After thirty years of separation from most of his classmates, he "realized there was an extraordinary common denominator among the people I met. All of them . . . were deeply committed to what they were doing. Each was filled with enthusiasm and determined to make a success of whatever he or she had taken on in life."

Along those lines we have been so profoundly impressed by our graduates in the arts that we have quietly commenced, in our previous edition of the Bulletin, a series of profiles on Andover Artists. The artists we have selected not only have chosen an untraditional path in life, but have followed curious and remote branches of art, removed even from the oils and watercolors and sculpture studios we associate with the profession. Our cover story in the spring was about Jed Dixon '69, a woodworker who uses both his artistic talent and higher mathematics to create sublimely curved staircases, among other things. In this issue we introduce you to Bryce Muir '64, who creates ingenious toys for adults in his Jonesport, Maine, workshop. Yet another graduate conserves and repairs rare documents and pictures in the Library of Congress.

These gifted people have taken what Robert Frost called "the road less traveled by." A few of them feel alienated from Andover, some because of bad memories of a regimen uncongenial to an artistic adolescent, some because almost every syllable they receive from us implies our healthy respect for financial success (understandably, we hasten to add — an editor's salary has to come from somewhere), and few goals could be less important to them.

Ironically, even in their occasional alienation from us, they are some of our most precious products: individualistic, idealistic, tough, imaginative, talented. We hope you enjoy the series. □

Commencement 1984

"... all the diplomas had found their owners in the Circle"

by Andrew Peter Podolsky '84

"We shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet."

—I Corinthians 15:51-52.

How appropriate that the Brass Ensemble played at Commencement when, indeed, it was in the twinkling of an eye that the magic words of Melville Chapin '36 changed us from high school students to alumni of Phillips Academy.

The week before graduation provoked many changes which added a new dimension to Andover's usual intensity. Suddenly, life was no longer centered on a particular test or paper. High school was about to be over, and there seemed to be a thousand things which had to be done: books and gym clothes to be returned (or paid for), dorm hallways to be cleaned and, of course, rooms to be emptied. One discovered such relics as the Winter Term English paper that one tried to forget; the official reminder stating "report to the Infirmary by Thursday" (last Thursday, of course); and a seemingly random sheet from the New York Times of 12 October.

More important than these changes, though, was that we could finally see teachers as fellow Beings on the Hill. One could smile as they passed, safe in the knowledge that these people would never push one beyond one's limits again. I think of one of my former math teachers and I especially enjoyed our ice cream together on one of the last days before The End since we didn't have to feel guilty about taking time from official PA pursuits.

The release from academic pressure brought a release from emotional tensions, too. Where there had been grumpiness came patience; frowns were exchanged for smiles. At the Baccalaureate Service, English Instructor Lou Bernieri said that he couldn't be cynical; nothing but heartfelt emotion would come out. It was healthful for everyone to be joyous, to be jumping wildly when Dr. McNemar announced that all the diplomas had found their owners in the Circle. These shouts were certainly a welcome change from the usual anguished cries of "It's 2 a.m. and I've still got three papers to write!"

Speaking of 2 a.m., in the early hours of the morning before our graduation the Seniors in my dorm were given the chance to visit with our housecounselors. We were allowed to share food and ideas with them. For the first time, we felt that we were truly being treated as adults. Everyone really enjoyed this experience of being together in the difficult yet very exciting period just before Commencement.

Perspectives on friendships were another change I felt in my last days. Suddenly, these people would not be right there when needed. I realized that I wouldn't be able to bother them whenever I wanted to and that they wouldn't be able to make me laugh whenever I needed it. Fortunately, my fear that most individuals wouldn't be seen for eons was quickly dispelled. Wandering through Government Center in Boston the day after Commencement, I found a friend who, I thought, had already returned to Oregon. For now, though, the friendships will be mostly letters and visits. Actual meeting must be the exception rather than the rule.

The last (and, at the time, easily the most important) change we saw was the weather. It had rained for six days without stopping — the worst storm in New England in twenty-nine years. We had prayed, begged, and cajoled all week, yet it kept coming down. We were heartbroken and a bit disillusioned; we would have thought PA could show even the weather how to act. And, in fact, at 7 p.m. Saturday night something very strange happened. Not only did the torrential rains stop, but the sky even brightened a bit. By 11 p.m., after the Baccalaureate Service, a friend of mine noticed that the sky was clear and that the stars were out. Sunday proved to be perfect. The sun shone dazzlingly, the grass was dry and even the birds were chirping. My reaction to the weather, the Event of the Century, Andover, and all the changes I've seen during four years on the Hill is best summed up in another Biblical passage Handel set to music for the Messiah: Hallelujah! □

Reunions — in which the heat is overcome by the warmth

We broke records, and the most obvious one was the heat (three days in the 90s), but the warmth of feeling was deeper than the discomfort of heat for the more than 1150 alumni, alumnae, and their families who were back for their reunions — another record, if we discount the Bicentennial.

Annual Meeting of the Alumni/ae

After the service in Cochran Chapel Saturday morning, with a talk by the Reverend Valjeanne Brodeur Paxton '54, the traditional reunion Parade with the Clan MacPherson Bagpipe Band proceeded from the Art Gallery to the Gymnasium for the annual meeting. President of the Alumni Council Stephen B. Clarkson '55 announced that his successor for a two-year term will be Cynthia Eaton Bing '61. The two new Alumni Trustees are Sybil P. Smith '61 and Morris E. Zukerman '61. Miriam Ganem

Reeder '57 accepted reappointment for another year as Co-Chairman of the Alumni Fund with Clinton J. Kendrick '61. Stuart J. Sawabini '73 succeeds J. Kenneth McDonald '50 as Co-Chairman of Reunions with Carolyn Butler Lisle '61. A graduate of the University of Vermont and a former Admissions Officer at PA, Mr. Sawabini is currently a Director of the Abbot Academy Association, and an Admissions Office Representative for Burlington, Vermont, where he resides. He is employed by the Rossignol Ski Company in Burlington.

The generosity of our graduates continues to inspire everyone who teaches or studies at PA. As of reunion, 1063 Abbot alumnae donated $92,600 — $9,000 more than last year, and the first time the number of donors has passed 1,000. With three weeks to go, Mimi Ganem Reeder expressed hopes they would pass the $100,000 mark.

By June the Class of 1959 had raised $106,000 as their twenty-fifth reunion gift, under the leadership of Garrett Kirk, Jr., Arthur M. Rogers, Jr., and William P. Snyder IV. Contributions continued to come in after the Annual Meeting.

The Class of 1934, under Head Agent Thomas B. Campion and his assistant William H. Harding and their loyal network, broke all records for fiftieth reunions by raising $165,700 by 9 June with contributions from 78% of the class — another record for PA. They were heading for their goal of $175,000 at press time. By mid June, with two weeks to go, total alumni giving for the fiscal year had just surpassed our goal of $1,425,000.

We are grateful and almost speechless.

Seminars, Marathon, and Tea

Saturday afternoon the offerings were rich. English Instructor Emeritus Frederick A. Peterson '34 moderated a seminar on "Education: A Discussion of the Public vs. the Private School Experience," featuring former Headmaster Theodore R. Sizer, Art Instructor Robert A. Lloyd, Teaching Fellow Laura N. Hammons, Flagstaff Cluster President Milisa Galazzi '84, and Short Term Institute student Kristine Guay. A seminar on Foreign Affairs (and how Andover is teaching foreign affairs) was moderated by Headmaster Donald W. McNemar, and included President Emeritus of the University of Hawaii Harlan Cleveland '34, Paul Marcy White '34 (Peace Corp Volunteer in Central America 1978-80, and Director of International Trade of SCORE), and three PA members of the class of '85: Kate Flather, Tom Murtagh, and Jason Reeder. Yet a third seminar — on computers — was conducted by Lewis C. Robbins, PA's Director of the Computer Department. The Class of 1959 offered a panel that reviewed the results of the twenty-fifth reunion survey, lightheartedly beginning with the question, "Is There Life After Prep School?"

Twenty-eight runners finished the 2.2 mile Mini-Marathon around the athletic fields in the humid 90-degree heat. The winner was Douglas H. Greeff '74 in 11:33. In a different mood and at a more civilized pace, the Abbot Tea at Morton House brought together not only alumnae, but many former Abbot faculty for one of the most nostalgic hours of the weekend.

Attendance at reunions this year was phenomenal. The fiftieth reunion class had 69 returnees, 38% of the class, for which they won the 1891 Memorial Trophy. Other graduates returned from France, Finland, West Germany, England, and Hawaii, but the winners for coming the longest distances were Mary Woodman O'Hagan '39 from Grahamstown, South Africa, and Paul Tittmann '69 from Taiwan.

The Andover Artist — Expanding our View of Art

II: Bryce the Toymaker®

Editor's Note: Bryce the Toymaker® is Bryce Muir '64 from Jonesport, Maine. He creates wooden toys for adults ("children seem interested only in the gift wrappings"), each one an original, designed with the profession, personality, hobbies, and habits of the recipient in mind. Ranging in price from $50 to $500, the toys are frequently commissioned by a spouse as a surprise gift to celebrate a birthday, anniversary, or other significant occasion. The captions to the pictures will perhaps give a clearer notion of his methods.

The following comments are Bryce Muir's responses to our inquiries: Exactly what is his art or craft? Did PA influence his choice of career? What effect did our art courses have on him? Can we do more for the future artist?

My toys need some explanation for the uninitiated. Essentially they are wooden cartoons (a la the Okefenokee School of Art). My original interest was to capture an idea in wood and produce a playful object. How do you make a tractor in wood? Basic toymaking. My imagination and all the immediate feedback of face-to-face marketing soon broadened the scope. How do you make a yawning pig in a straw hat on a tractor? As I developed my idiosyncratic techniques and made fundamental esthetic decisions, a style began to emerge. I use domestic and exotic hardwoods chosen for their natural colors — no paint, stains, or metal parts. I want to reveal the visual and tactile qualities of wood. I do use nylon fishing twine for rigging, and part of the fun is figuring out how to make the darned thing work with just twine

Made for a dentist: when the crank is turned, the moose yanks the tooth with his pliers and the bear kicks his feet and wooden parts. I do virtually all the rough carving with a bench-mounted disc sander — a very facile technique, with practice. The result after hand-finishing is a curvilinear object which is a pleasure to the hand.

Indeed — my first concerns were tactile, mechanical, and (let's call it) verbal. A pleasure in the hand, how to make it work, and how to capture the idea — with a laugh, if possible. How to make a house-master beat his head against a blackboard?

Ever so slowly I began to train my eye as well. What does a kangaroo really look like? Getting a camera to record the work crystallized my visual perceptions, and now I'm as concerned with the image as I am with exciting grain, the feel of the piece, how it works, and what it says. Now that I'm producing such personal, custom fantasies, the product is increasingly whimsical.

But is it art? Gee, I guess not. It's not overly serious, and the foolish things move, and people play with them and want to touch them. So I call myself a toymaker — a master craftsman on balmy days. I'll natter about artists below, but you must understand: when it comes to this one, his tongue is firmly in cheek.

You intimated the question: How did PA influence my trajectory into the arts?

I'm not quite sure. Certainly the Andover experience didn't encourage me to consider art as a career. There was the occasional virtuoso performer among my schoolmates, but their precocious professionalism left the impression that artistic ambition must be nurtured from infancy. An "artist" recognized his genius early and was in full flower by adolescence. By the time I got to PA it was too late for me.

Perhaps there is no way of measuring artistic aptitude in an applicant to PA. An admissions officer can only see artistic achievement. Those special few who are admitted because of their artistic abilities are already proven performers, and they skew both the teaching process and the perceptions of the other students.

Are the others encouraged to try out the arts? Perhaps only as a sort of intellectual athletics. PA doesn't expect to produce professional football players, nor does she anticipate any working artists among her graduates. Physical fitness and art appreciation are attributes of the liberally educated, but sports and the arts are casual entertainments at best.

There are three prejudices at work here. The first is career. We were all being groomed for careers. Art, however, is a way of viewing the world, a process, a way of life. For the artist it is the work which matters — career is incidental. The work may not pay the bills for years, if ever. Indulging in such romantic foolishness is beyond the scope of the Andover experience, where measured reward for product delivered is the highest standard of performance. Andover prepared us for success, not the endless cycle of creative aspiration.

Another prejudice is the perception of art as a product. Art is something rich people buy in galleries or is collected by museums. It is a commodity — out there. Some is "good," some is "bad," depending on market fashions and learned academic standards. Perhaps I'm being unjust: after all, I didn't take a studio art course — but I was never exposed at PA to the notion of art as a process — in here — a dialogue with materials, a struggle between an individual perception and the limits of technique. In short, art was something an artist made, something to categorize and evaluate — not an act of communion and discovery.

The third prejudice is against the solitary vision. Yes, PA is sink or swim, and we all had to struggle alone to measure up to her standards. Those standards, however, were corporate. Is the loner really welcome on the Hill? How can the idiosyncratic misfit be encouraged in an environment dedicated to training adolescents how to succeed in an increasingly corporate society? Yet most artists are reclusive outlaws — sand in the gears of an orderly world. How do you tell the goof-off from the young artist? I'm not sure you can.

I am sure that my Andover education missed some specific opportunities:

I might have had some manual training. Why so many intellectuals sneer at knowledge in the hands is beyond me. When you consider human history, it's hard to escape the value of hand craft. Inspired genius may envision the wheel, but it takes practiced hand-eye coordination to produce one. More than that, it is the dialogue between hand and mind which produces the innovative insight at least as often as abstract reasoning in a vacuum. Yet an Andover education is exclusively abstract — or mine was.

This foot-high cellist bows his instrument when his tail is worked up and down

Small wonder our society is short of engineers.

I might have taken studio art. It never occurred to me. Now I realize that drawing is as useful for communication as writing is. Isn't it curious that, in a time when images have overwhelmed concepts in the popular consciousness, we moan "Johnnie can't read," but think it normal that he can't draw?

It needn't have been drawing, though. Any course requiring hand-eye coordination might have awakened the gift I found later. Auto mechanics, carpentry, electronic repair, whatever. Sounds like a horrid litany of vocational courses, doesn't it? Nonsense.

The essence of a "shop" course is twofold: trouble-shooting and manual dexterity.

Trouble-shooting is simply the scientific method applied to problem solving in a technological system. Once the basic approach has been mastered, you can trouble-shoot any system — from designing a bookcase, to fixing your carburetor, to debugging your Apple software — and the methodology is most readily learned with simple mechanisms where everything is visible and obvious.

Manual dexterity is just thinking with your fingers, and can only be learned by experience. Playing an instrument can substitute for a shop class in this regard, and trouble-shooting can be taught in computer programming, but the sense of physical/mental mastery which comes from workshop manual-training is hard to beat. I'm sorry I didn't get some of that stuff at PA. I had to come by hand knowledge much later and by happenstance.

Along similar lines, at Andover I was never challenged to design anything more substantive than an essay. God knows we need innovative designers, inventors, engineers. Why aren't we trolling lures for such creatures? If I have a talent, it is for design; but it took me until I was 25 to discover that gift. Might a design course at Andover have revealed it sooner?

I also wish I'd had a course in small business economics. Maybe I can only learn in the school of hard knocks, but it's been awfully slow coming. So many adolescents dream about running their own business, and so few adults try, or succeed — much to the detriment of our society and the national economy. We don't even have any heroes such as Horatio Alger any more, let alone courses on how-to. Small Business 101: what a chance to teach basic economics to a bunch of hotshot kids. For a working artist-craftsman like me a bit of that rough and tumble early on might have saved me some bruises later.

Should Andover become an Art School? No. I'm particularly grateful for the liberal education which rubbed off on me at PA. It was, after all, the last formal schooling I sat still for. I only regret there was no mechanism in place to identify my peculiar talents and point me to a shorter path.

Does this mean "career counseling"? Looking back, we had precious little guidance. That made us self-reliant, no doubt — a good thing for a potential artist — but it made us all IT in a game of blind-man's buff.

OK. I was a hardhead then, too. I intended to be a journalist come hell or high water, and preferably both. Could anyone have pointed out anything to me? Probably not. Had I been less willfully self-assured, would my idiosyncratic gift have been lured out into the open? I tend to think not. I suspect that Andover has no way of discovering her artists until after they turn up at reunions.

PA did teach me some useful lessons for this road. The Addison was my first exposure to the variety of the visual arts. I was attracted to the familiar images of Winslow Homer, but I was excited out of my orbit by Klee. Diz Bensley's art appreciation course opened the door, and the works we studied left footprints all over my linoleum. The passing cavalcade of performers gave a taste of excellence in the arts.

Other lessons are less easily attributed. Where does a school instill values, and where does it merely reinforce our character? How much does a teacher "teach," and how much does he enable us to learn? I came away from PA with a sense of self-responsibility and self-reliance, a willingness to run risks, and I valued high standards of performance. Now who's to blame for that?

Andover is a terrible place for the young artist to spend his adolescence — and I can't think of a better one. □

Editor's Postscript: Visual Studies 10 is now a requirement at PA. We quote the Course Description: "In its emphasis on visual observation, interpretation, and organization, the basic course is designed to provide an understanding of how visual information is made and transmitted. Along with discussion of design problems, the student receives experience in photography, drawing, two-dimensional design, and three-dimensional construction. Previous experience in art is not required."

Though we do not yet have a course in small business economics, the History and Social Sciences Department does offer a more general and more theoretical "Introduction to Economics" elective for seniors.

Celebrating Ten Years of Coeducation

by John A. Gould

(Boys:)

Old man Phillips
That old man Phillips
We're just young schoolboys
Who will know something
If we keep rolling
We just keep rolling
Along.

(Girls:)

Sarah Abbot
Got in the habit
Of having lasses
Come in for classes
And that's how we came,
We just came rolling
Along.

—Nancy Sizer, to the tune of
Old Man River

It was only ten years ago that Sarah Abbot and Old Man Phillips joined their forces. After 145 years of separate femaleness and maleness, the Abbot girls were invited to climb the Hill to join the Phillips boys in their rarified atmosphere. Ten years may not seem like a great span in the context of such a long tradition, but on the first weekend of May the Andover community looked back to determine precisely how momentous that decade has been.

It's been busy, first of all, as a quick summary of the weekend might suggest. "A Celebration of a Decade of Coeducation at Andover" presented a variety of perspectives on what has happened since PA went coeducational: panel discussions of history, coeducation committee findings, and curriculum changes; speakers and performers in Cochran Chapel and George Washington Hall; and festive activities in the forms of dancing, dining, and dunking (these last at the Abbot Bazaar, which also included lots of other frivolities as well).

(Girls:)

Mother says that it's my turn to have a little worldly power.
Boys are loaded with testosterone and they will shout and glower.
They'll destroy with cruel rapacity
All my leadership capacity.
Can I really run against them in a race?

(Boys:)

Now I study, play, and sleep with once-a-term a small excursion.

What if all those women constitute a really huge diversion?
Learning all about the female
Doesn't help you get into Yale Life upon this noble hill won't be the same again.

—Nancy Sizer, to the tune of Life Upon the Wicked Stage

It ought to be obvious to most of us that historically men have dragged their feet when asked to share the wealth and power with women. For those who might have forgotten the truth of this observation, actress Tulis McCall presented her one-woman show What Everywoman Knows, a vibrant recreation of five women from America's past, ranging from Sojourner Truth, the ex-slave who proclaimed that all women were not freer than she had been in slavery — "and ain't I a woman?" — to Calamity Jane, the raunchy, rough lover of Wild Bill Hickock, who died alone and alcoholic and poor.

In a panel discussion "Andover

Then and Now," faculty members Jean St. Pierre, Paul Kalkstein '61, Tony Rotundo, and Natalie Schorr '62 were joined by graduates Jeanne Nahill Kempthorne '74, Carroll Bogert '79, and Rob Long '83 to recall the years when the girls and boys were slowly, tentatively learning to live together.

(Boys:)

I try to hold the door;
She just gets wicked sore.
I try to pay for her but she insists on "Dutch,"
And some day, what will androgyny
Do to our progeny?
New women worry me so much.

—Nancy Sizer, to the tune of
Goodbye, My Lady Love

In a series of panel discussions, students, faculty, and interested alumni heard the story of how and where coeducation has been going. Three members of the faculty Coeducation Study Group — Jon Stableford '63, David Cobb, and Nat Smith — reported their findings about the athletic, residential, and academic life for boys and girls at Andover. "We were asked to take a look at boys and girls at PA," began Mr. Smith. "We encountered a lot of tensions and insecurities as we started poking into things. It was a wide-ranging inquiry."

The Coeducation Study Group reported a number of facts, some surprising, some not. Mr. Stableford described a significant rise in girls' involvement in sports, especially after the Borden Gym was renovated. Mr. Cobb noted a dearth of females in leadership positions on campus. Mr. Smith demonstrated once again the predilection of boys for math and science, of girls for languages and humanities — but went on to observe that there has been virtually no difference between the grade point averages of boys and girls during the last three years. Such observations invite speculation — why hasn't Andover had more young women editors or school presidents? — but more importantly they also indicate directions for the future.

In fact, the coeducation weekend wore the head of Janus, scrutinizing both behind and before. In another panel led by Susan Lloyd members of the community looked at a "Curriculum for a Non-sexist World." "Changing curriculum has been described as moving a graveyard," Mrs. Lloyd remarked. "Nevertheless, attempting to reorganize our ways of thinking has a way of changing the thinkers more than the thoughts." She went on to present a series of stages that curricula seem to pass through as they move toward "transformed, balanced" states. The discussion that followed applied several Andover departments to this model.

After ten years is over,
This is the school to be.
Dialogue's always better
Than empty fantasy.
Girls can be more than pin-ups,
Boys can be worthy peers.
Many the changes we've made here

In the last ten years.

—Nancy Sizer, to the tune of
After the Ball is Over

Finally, the weekend was a celebration. Speakers in Cochran Chapel — Molly Bidwell Radley '61 at an ecumenical vespers service, and Elizabeth Minnich at an all-school meeting — raised and celebrated our spirits and expectations and goals. And we celebrated ourselves, too. On Saturday night 1200 members of the community gathered in the Case Memorial Cage for a dinner of cordon bleu and cake. The Chamber Orchestra, Fidelio, All that Jazz, and the Eight 'n' One played and sang. Ten bemused faculty members costumed as Andover/Abbot students of the past (Assistant Headmaster Peter McKee was there, for instance, in dark glasses and a long blond wig) stood up before the multitude and sang a series of songs Nancy Sizer had written on issues of coeducation. And then the entire company, teachers and students alike, retired to the gym to rock the night away. It was a fine time. □

The Tenth Anniversary of The Abbot Academy Association

by Sylvia Thayer '54

On Friday evening, 6 April, the members of the Abbot Academy Association gathered at Newman House, home of Carroll and Elaine Bailey, to honor and celebrate the Association's ten-year history. We were joined by former and newly-elected members, Abbot Academy Affiliates, Abbot and Andover Trustees and Headmasters, and present members of the Phillips Academy administration. After cocktails and an elegant dinner, Melville Chapin '36, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, proposed a toast to the Association's generous funding of many worthy "venture" projects and its success in keeping the memory of Abbot Academy very much alive in the merged school.

School, a history of Abbot Academy, and Instructor in Music and in History and the Social Sciences on the Marguerite C. Hearsey Foundation, regaled those assembled with poignant and amusing anecdotes, as she wove an historical overview of Abbot's commitment to educating her students into lives of service. She was followed by Jean St. Pierre, former Instructor at Abbot and presently Chairman of the Phillips Academy English Department, who shared some very evocative musings on "Time Present and Time Past" at these two schools, now one.

The evening was filled with warmth and appreciation for Abbot Academy and her ongoing presence in Phillips Academy through the Association, and because Jean St. Pierre captured those sentiments, I asked and received her permission to share a portion of her words with you, our Alumni and Alumnae.

Jean St. Pierre's comments

Moments, events, like schools, merge/converge. And so tonight I find myself, as I have so often during this past year, aware of a personal convergence.

This year marks my twentieth year of teaching at these two Academies. Reasons abound, obviously, for me to pause and to ponder what it means and what it has meant to teach, to be, and to share with the students and the faculty at these two schools for the past two decades.

Time present and time past
Are both perhaps present in the future.

And time future contained in the time past.

The words are T.S. Eliot's.

I shared last year in a production of Hamlet, one that was breathtaking at moments in its beauty and its innocence — those questions on the lips of seventeen-year-olds have a particular purity. I sat in the balcony on the last night; and as the lights went up and the audience rose in applause and I saw the tears on more faces than my own, I realized what I had sensed throughout: that the experience could never have taken place before the merger, or probably not even in its early days, that the clarity and the incandescence of that creation came because those students and faculty, male and female, lived together and shared so many more aspects of their lives than just a two-hour daily rehearsal. We trusted each other and we created together. That's what it means. In May of 1973, many of us in this room stood on the stage of Davis Hall for the finale of The Faculty Follies. You may remember that it was loosely drawn from My Fair Lady and that its subtitle was "Woman Child on the Promised Hill." The last words which we sang were "with a little bit of luck, we'll make the whole damn thing worthwhile." We have . . . and it is. □

Martin Luther King, Jr.: The American Dilemma and the American Dream

An address for the Headmaster's Symposium on Race Relations in America, delivered in Cochran Chapel on 15 January 1984

by The Reverend Peter J. Gomes

I am honored by the invitation to address you on the occasion of your winter symposium on race relations. That you should take time from your academic pursuits and the pursuit of leisure for such a symposium is a testimonial both to your high purpose and the seriousness of the matter of race in our time. But of this neither you nor I should be surprised. It was the express intention of your pious founder and benefactor, the melancholy Samuel Phillips, that nothing less than "the promotion of true piety and virtue" was to be the object of this school, and that its teachers "should point out to their pupils the great and real business of living." I can think of no better contemporary expression of that concern than in a conversation we begin this evening on the birthday of Dr. King. And there is no more appropriate place in which to gather than in this school chapel dedicated to the worship of almighty God. For, as I hope to demonstrate throughout the course of my remarks, I believe it is utterly impossible to understand in any significant way the American dilemma of racism or the American dream of Martin Luther King, Jr., apart from an understanding of the role of the Christian religion in the formation of the American experience. Thus, while I understand that you do not expect this to be a "religious" service, and that we are in Cochran Chapel only because of the convenience of its size, we are, nevertheless, in the right place at the right time. For it was religion which nurtured the young King, it was religion that supplied him with his visions, and ours. It was religion that transformed a movement into a crusade, and it was religion, a Godly ideal, rooted itself in creation, that would serve as a means of drawing the nation to affirm its ideals in the treatment of all its citizens.

Racism may be many things: it is certainly a social and a political disease, many of its manifestations are now illegal, and all of it is evil and self-destructive. But it is more than this: racism is not simply wrong; it is sin, a crime against God and against the dignity of the creation.

It is no accident that the most significant moral leader in modern America, a claim I am bold to make, was both black and a Christian minister. There is not simply "a religious significance" to King; the only significance there is in King is religious. While acknowledging the tactical debt owed the great Mahatma Gandhi in King's life, we must acknowledge that Martin Luther King is much more the prophetic heir of Cotton Mather and the Puritan piety that in the eighteenth century stimulated the Phillips family to establish their academies to reform the soul and mind of the nation. Whether you want to or not, you share with Martin Luther King, Jr., the Puritan vision of a Godly commonwealth, a city set on a hill.

Scholars of American intellectual history remind us more often than not that our founding metaphors, the vocabulary with which our Puritan ancestors spoke and thought, are essentially Hebraic ones, drawn from the Christian understanding of the Old Testament. This rich tradition which we share with the Jews is the one element that binds us all together, Christian and Jew, black and white, native and foreigner. Martin Luther King understood that phenomenon when, in his last sermon, he talked about having been to the mountaintop, an unambiguous reference to Moses' trip to the top of the mountain to chat with God. Moses was taken up and showed the land into which his people would now be led. But he himself was not to enter into it. He was not to share with the people he had led so long and faithfully the fruits of his leadership, for God had other plans for Moses. Dr. King understood that, and he would have been with those Puritan preachers of old who applied the ancient stories of redemption and slavery and freedom to themselves and to their circumstances.

"... the melancholy

One such story which always has such a special poignancy on this day is that of Joseph. Joseph had a coat of many colors: we all know about that. But more importantly, Joseph also had a dream which so upset his brothers in the telling that they determined to destroy him. And, as we read in Genesis, chapter thirty-seven:

They saw him afar off, and before he came near to them they conspired against him to kill him. They said to one another, "Here comes this dreamer. Come now, let us kill him and throw him into one of the pits; then we shall say that a wild beast had devoured him, and we shall see what shall become of his dreams."

Dreamers are thought to be harmless, slightly distracted folk who can do little damage. They are always speculating about things that are not, instead of attending to the things that are. Ask the dreamer next to you, and see for yourself. At least, that is our picture of dreamers. And yet, when dreamers and their dreams are taken seriously, they are among the most potent and dangerous forces on earth because they compel us to see things that are not yet: and most of us have enough trouble with the things that are. Dreams upset the standing order, they irritate the status quo, they unleash the imagination, and they refuse to acknowledge the limits of what simply is. They destroy the neatly worked out balance between who we are and what is. It was true for Joseph's brothers, and it was true for a nation roused by the dreams of Martin Luther King. And the response was the same: "Come, let us slay this dreamer, and then we shall see what will become of his dream."

Joseph's story ended better than Dr. King's. He was not slain, but rescued, and eventually had the last laugh on his scheming brothers. He overcame their jealousy and treachery with love and generosity. Joseph is called in the Bible "a lucky fellow," and all's well that ends well. I must confess that when I think of Dr. King and his dream, I think not of success, but more of failure, and a story that has not yet ended. But before we speak of that, we ought to speak of what his dream was about. Where did it come from and how was he able to express it?

One of the great paradoxes of life in America is that the ideal of the American experience, our founding myths and hopes, the American dream, has been maintained and believed in by those who have suffered most from its failure. Agents of social reform and revolution among black people in America have always complained that black people lack the capacity of true Marxist revolt in America because they believe too much in America: black people have taken the mythology of their oppressors and made it the instrument of their own sustenance and liberation. The audacity of Martin Luther King, Jr., and nearly all of the black leaders before him, known and unknown, was that they believed in America: they believed in the Pilgrims and the Puritans, they trusted the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, and they believed fervently in the Christian religion. Long after America had given up its founding dreams as too costly or too difficult, and long after America was willing to compromise its moral integrity for financial and material gain, black people held out for the vision of a new and just society, fashioned in the cabin of the Mayflower at Plymouth, nourished in Boston and Cambridge, fought for at Lexington and Concord, and expressed in the aspirations of a new and lively republic.

And what is more, black people not only held onto that vision, they used it as a means to encourage the powerful to measure themselves by their own standards. The revolution for black equality in America had always been a moral one, where the powerless preach to the powerful and encourage them to use their power to conform to their dreams for justice and equity. King's dream was not his alone: it belonged to all America, and it was rooted in the Mayflower. It was he who was able to redeem that dream, and like the prophets of Israel, make America see both how far it had strayed from the first vision, and how far it had to go to recover it. He was not so much interested in passing bills and getting legislation on the books, important as that was. He was interested in something far more significant than that: he wished to save the nation's soul that it might once again be true to the ideals and hopes of its foundation.

It is interesting to note that the American dream and the American dilemma began within one year of each other. For as you know, the first slaves were brought to Virginia in 1619, and the Pilgrims landed at my native Plymouth in 1620: from the beginning the dilemma and the dream were intertwined — the one would not be resolved until the other was embraced. King was not simply a phenomenon of the mid-twentieth century, a creature of the sociopolitical upheavals in American society that began in the wake of the two world wars. He was the most articulate successor of those men and women who saw from the beginning that if there was to be any hope in America, America could not be permitted to rest until its first hope, the ideal of a just society under God, was brought to fruition. It becomes one of the grandest paradoxes of all history that this message of reconciliation between bright hope and sad experience should be brought to pass by the son of slaves.

Yet we do him and ourselves a grave disservice if we believe, in fact, that the work has been accomplished. It is far too easy, and indeed too frequently an expressed sentiment on this day, to suggest that we simply have to live off the investments earned for us by Dr. King and his generation. Somehow, the failure of his dream is the very thing that will keep it alive. Certainly there are accomplishments and achievements to be both acknowledged and celebrated. It would be churlish and dishonest not to do so. But if the truth be known, it must not and cannot be King and his dream whom we celebrate: it must be that which animated him and his dream which we seek and celebrate. As the Buddhists say, "Seek not to follow in the footsteps of the men of old; seek what they sought."

And where do we find that? Certainly for America in the rich traditions of Judaeo-Christian tradition in which we see God and his will as active participants in our history and our future. Certainly in an appreciation of the genius of the American experience at its best as an expression of civic idealism, justice, and fair play. If the American dream is simply to share the American appetite for more consumer goods, more expendable capital, and more self-destruct and self-indulgent amusements and diversions, then indeed the American dream is the American nightmare.

Rooted in the experience of America's Christian past and the hopes for all that would spring from it, King recalled the nation to moral purpose and reminded it that it cannot be true to itself and be untrue to its professed ideals. His was not a profound philosophical or sociological theory that set the nation on its ear: it was the modest hope that for God's sake, men and women would treat each other as the children of God. Character and integrity were to be redeemed from the history books and made to do new service in aid of the republic founded upon them both. His was a simple truth that motivated men and women once again to attempt great things armed only with the conviction of truth and the hope of justice. Such a movement, such a cause, is not measured as the world takes such measure, by means of what we call progress: the accumulation of points, the achievement of goals, quotas, and objectives. For these, important as they may be, tell only a part of the story, and the least interesting part at that. We rather measure such a man and such a movement not by progress, motion: but rather by purpose, which is concerned with direction and constancy. Renewed in purpose and made constant in it, we are reminded by the example of Dr. King of not how far we have come: but indeed of how far it is we have to go. This is no bad thing, for we are reminded once again that we are a pilgrim people, and such people move not by sight but by faith.

You can never hope to reform a man until you love him enough to make the effort. And you can never give that love until you have known that love. This is the lesson we have learned and need to learn yet again from King, our nation's moral tutor. In this fine old academy, itself the expression of the young America's bright hopes, devoted to "the promotion of true piety and virtue" now for two hundred years, one can only hope that in our understanding America's dilemma, the dream may be embraced and expressed in "the great end and real business of living." Our hope and our prayer is that this greatest of all moral lessons and opportunity will not be lost upon you. □

The Headmaster's Symposium II: the American Dilemma

by Louis M. Bernieri and J. Derek Williams '65

Focusing upon the history of race relations in the United States since the Civil War, The Headmaster's Symposium 1984 was entitled "An American Dilemma Revisited," after Gunnar Myrdal's landmark study published forty years ago. Using the black-white context of race relations as its primary framework, the Symposium engaged some 220 students and 30 faculty in a six-week program that included speakers, films, and seminar groups, each led by a student and a faculty leader. In addition the participants read from a booklet which focused primarily on the works of various historical actors in American history; essentially, the readings as well as the speakers and films served as a lens through which to view contemporary issues of race relations. Keeping in mind how subtle and complicated these issues are, the Symposium was designed to offer many different (and differing) viewpoints.

Late in the fall term John Jacob, president of the National Urban League, came to Andover to launch the Symposium. Elucidating the present plight of minorities in America, Mr. Jacob used facts and figures to argue that America's poor are increasingly becoming trapped in a swelling lower class.

On 15 January at PA's service commemorating Martin Luther King's birthday, Reverend Peter J. Gomes, Harvard's Plummer Professor of Christian Morals, spoke about the life of King. His speech precedes this article.

right: James Meredith

Following Reverend Gomes, the Symposium gathered on Wednesday, 18 January, to view two movies about the lives of Martin Luther King, Jr., and Malcolm X. From Montgomery to Memphis chronicled the life of Dr. King's leadership of the Civil Rights Movement, and El Hajj Malik El Shabazz depicted the life of Malcolm X from his birth to his assassination.

On 25 January the whole Symposium gathered again to see Birth of A Nation, D.W. Griffith's powerful and influential 1915 movie which glorified the Ku Klux Klan. This disturbing film was then examined in its historical context by Joel R. Williamson, the Eudora Welty Professor of Southern Studies at Millsaps College. Mr. Williamson came on 29 January to discuss race relations from Emancipation to the First World War, explaining the social and psychological phenomena that spawned such abominations as lynching, Jim Crow, and Birth of a Nation.

After a week of respite, the Symposium heard Sanford Katz and James Meredith, attorneys and civil rights activists. Mr. Meredith, the first person to integrate the University of Mississippi, riveted his audience with tales of growing up in the Jim Crow South. Mr. Katz, one of the lawyers who defended the Black Panthers, shared his experience as a white who assumed an active role in the courts to achieve justice for blacks.

On 12 February the Symposium's most controversial speaker, Clarence M. Pendleton, Jr., spoke about his vision of government's role in race relations. Mr. Pendleton, President Reagan's choice as Chairman of the United States Civil Rights Commission, articulated the present administration's stand on issues such as quotas, affirmative action, and welfare benefits.

On 17 February, Carlotta Miles, a Washington psychiatrist, addressed the psychological aspects of race relations. Her talk, entitled "The Importance of Being Here Together," illustrated the special advantages of racial diversity in a community like Andover, and also illuminated the peculiar psychological issues that such a community must inevitably confront. Charming her audience with her warmth and moving them with her insight, Dr. Miles touched our community — both faculty and students alike — in some profound and heartening ways.

The Symposium's final speaker was Eleanor Holmes Norton, professor of law at Georgetown University and former chairperson of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. On 29 February Professor Norton, this year's Stearns Lecturer, spoke about race, ethnicity, and gender. With an incisive and provocative speech, she offered her vision of the critical economic and social problems of the poor and needy in the United States today.

The success of the Headmaster's Symposium was due largely to the great sacrifice of time and effort by a number of faculty and the generous financial support of Headmaster Donald McNemar and the Abbot Academy Foundation. However, undoubtedly at the heart of this Symposium were the 220 students and 30 faculty who, despite their numerous other commitments at the school, chose to participate in this non-credit educational venture. □

Louis M. Bernieri is Instructor in English. J. Derek Williams '65 will assume the Chairmanship of the Department of History and Social Sciences in September.

Andover in the Southern Hemisphere — The Alumni Trip to the Galapagos Islands

The Andover group at noon at the equator (note the shadows). Left to right, seated: Paul ('42) and Marietta Schumacher, and George Edmonds; standing: Vic ('37) and Debbie Clark, Bill ('33) and Ann Wigton, John Bennett '27, Don Ballou '24, Pat Edmonds, faculty, Diane Grieco P'86, and John Bennett '67.

Have you ever seen an iguana climbing a tree to eat the leaves and flowers?

Or seen a great frigate bird inflate his brilliant translucent red pouch to woo his mate?

Or seen orange-red Sally Light-foot crabs by the dozen scramble over black lava rock?

Or eaten a potato-cheese pancake with peanut sauce called a llapingacho?

Or tasted a purple sweet potato?

Or seen the Southern Cross?

Or seen swallow-tail gulls "dancing" and mating during the day, although they feed only nocturnally?

A group of twenty-one Exies and Andies spent spring vacation in the Galapagos Islands learning about Darwin's Theory of Evolution firsthand and experiencing life south of the equator. We felt as though we had been to the edge of the earth and back by observing and "getting to know" volcanic moonscapes, marine iguanas, Darwin's finches, flightless cormorants, lava cacti, and waved albatrosses.

We met in Quito, Ecuador, and started our thirteen-day adventure together by taking a trip into the Andes, seeing the world's highest volcano, Mount Cotopaxi at 19,347 feet, and visiting the Indian market. Tourists can purchase woven hangings, rugs, and blankets, whereas natives purchase alfalfa, roosters, and feed buckets made from old automobile tires. One market stall even sold cats to assist with rodent control.

Shopping for folklore crafts and sightseeing in the colonial city of Quito kept us active at the 9500 foot altitude. Another day we took a bus tour out of Quito through a rain forest to a jungle area where tropical plants abounded, the varieties of the house plants that North American homes and offices covet. In the span of two hours we observed 37 birds in the jungle: among these, a bat falcon, a squirrel cuckoo, a masked water tyrant, and a crimson rumped toucanet.

One evening we were entertained by the former Ecuadorian Ambassador to Washington, Richard Crespo, and his wife, who gathered together a group of influential Ecuadorians for the Andover-Exeter group to meet in their home overlooking the capital city.

After four days on the mainland, the group boarded the M/V Santa Cruz at Guayaquil and sailed 600 miles west into the Pacific to the Galapagos Islands. There we visited nine of the thirteen major islands that Darwin made famous. To expedite the shore excursions, the ship's passengers were divided into four groups and the Andover-Exeter contingent became the BOOBIES, fish-eating birds that inhabit most of the Galapagos Islands and appropriately sport bright blue or bright red feet!

Overnight and at lunch time the ship traveled to new islands and crossed the equator four times during our week aboard. Well-trained Darwin Research Station guides helped us understand what we experienced and prepared us in a nightly lecture for the next day's expeditions.

Binoculars and cameras around our necks, a variety of hats on our heads, and lathered with creams to protect us from the intense equatorial sun, we ventured forth each morning and afternoon in a rubber panga — a large raft — to a different island to see the different species.

Despite their proximity to each other, the islands of the Galapagos are dramatically different. In the eons of time, the Galapagos are "modern" islands and the effects of volcanic action are even as recent as the 1960s and 1970s. One island, lacking vegetation, presented a "moon-scape" appearance to us. Some were formed of black lava rock; one is covered with red volcanic dust — where the flamingos live; one, white coral, a favorite nesting place of the great frigate birds and lava herons as well as red-footed boobies. Some sport ribbons of lava tubes from top to bottom; others test one's scrambling skills over rope lava; some have developed various kinds of vegetation including trees; others barely grow lichens. Most have a variety of endemic birds and other animals; only one we visited was inhabited by human beings — the island of the Darwin Research Station, where a few tortoises — the Galapagos, for whom the archipelago is named — live now in captivity.

To snorkel amidst penguins — the Humboldt current keeps the water cool — and sea lions (I momentarily mistook a sea lion's fins for an Andie's black flippers) and consciously avoid stepping on a booby's eggs or a lava lizard made us realize we were not looking at nature from afar.

It is impossible to capture the feeling in words that a visit to the Galapagos gives. The wildlife is so tame, it's as if we are all in the same zoo without cages or keepers. □

BOOKS

The Andover Bulletin takes pleasure in announcing the publication of books by its graduates and its faculty. Because of the undependability of the projected dates for publication, however, we do not announce a book until we have a copy in hand. All books sent to us will be shelved and catalogued in the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library with the Alumni Collection.

'24 Barth, Alan, The Rights of Free Men: An Essential Guide to Civil Liberties, edited by James Clayton, Foreword by Eric Sevareid, New York: A. Knopf, 1984, 329 pp. $17.95. The author, who died in 1979, worked for the Department of the Treasury before he joined the editorial board of the Washington Post in 1943. The articles reprinted here, many of them anonymous editorials for the Post, show a faith in democracy and a level-headed reasonableness in times of national stress such as the McCarthy era, the Civil Rights struggle, and the debate over the powers of law enforcement agencies.

'26 Newhall, Beaumont, In Plain Sight, Foreword by Ansel Adams, Layton, Utah: Gibbs M.

Smith, Inc. (Peregrine Smith Books, PO Box 667, Layton, UT 84041), 1983, 66 pp. $27.50. A large format volume, this collection of fifty-nine photographs by Mr. Newhall, America's premier historian of photography, shows what an exquisite master of black-and-white imagery he himself is. Especially poignant are his portraits of friends and artists and his studies of urban architecture.

'32 deMare, George, (with Joanne Summerfield) 101 Ways to Protect Your Job, New York: McGraw Hill, 1984, 297 pp. $15.95. Besides the 258 techniques and strategies listed in this book for protecting one's job, the volume is also a guide to analyzing one's own competence, strengths, and obligations.

'40 Hayler, William B., (with John M. Keever and Paul M. Seiler) The Cornell Manual for Lifeboatmen, Able Seamen, and Qualified Members of Engine Department, Centreville, MD: Cornell Maritime Press, 1984, 165 pp. $5.50 paperback. Replacing the now out-of-print Coast Guard publication CG-175, this small handbook covers the official requirements for certificates of service for the various ratings, and offers multiple-choice questions and answers from the examinations for lifeboatman and for able seaman. Illustrated.

'40 Jennison, Peter S., (with Christina Tree) Vermont: An Explorer's Guide, Woodstock, VT: The Countryman Press, 1983, 306 pp. $10.95 large paperback. For each of five areas of Vermont the authors list sites, recreations, accommodations (with phone numbers and prices), and emergency services, and offer a commentary on the region. The book also has a 30-page essay on the entire state. Illustrated. Maps.

'41 Luce, Stanford L., (with William K. Buckley) A Half-Century of Céline: An Annotated Bibliography, 1932-1982, New York: Garland Publishing, Inc., 1983, 366 pp. $39.00. This bibliography of French writer and doctor Louis-Ferdinand Céline (1894-1961) includes about 2300 reviews, articles, and books, and is divided into three general sections: Works by Céline, Critical Studies on Céline, and Céline's life.

'41 Luce, Stanford L., A Glossary of Céline's Fiction, With English Translations, by University Microfilms International, 1979, 317 pp. Professor of French at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, the author has compiled a large-format paperback glossary of difficult words found in Céline — slang, neologisms, and idioms that are not found readily even in modern French dictionaries.

'48 Dewey, Jane Kenah, editor From My End of the Log: Francis Henshaw Dewey's Letters from Williams College 1836-1840, privately printed for Jane Kenah Dewey at the Commonwealth Press, Worcester, 1982, 52 pp. These letters about an established, highly educated family of central and western Massachusetts provide a wealth of social and family history from the period.

'48 McHugh, Paul R., M.D., (with Phillip R. Slavney, M.D.) The Perspectives of Psychiatry, Baltimore: The Johns Hopkins University Press, 1983, 162 pp. The authors, both of whom are on the staff at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine (Dr. McHugh is Director and Psychiatrist-in-Chief) have written for medical students an introduction to the basics of all psychiatric practice, principles that obtain no matter what "school" of psychiatry one belongs to. It is particularly distinguished in its avoidance of jargon and in its clarity of definition.

'48 Ordeman, John, Frank W. Benson: Master of the Sporting Print, a limited edition privately printed by John T. Ordeman, St. Paul's School, Brooklandville, MD 21022, 1983. Illust. 96 pp. $37.00. This monograph and catalog of Frank Benson's prints and etchings is handsomely printed (on 80lb. stock), bound, and illustrated with 38 plates. The Appendices include two essays by Benson, and quotations from his diaries.

'57 Darnton, Robert, The Great Cat Massacre, and Other Episodes in French Cultural History, New York: Basic Books, Inc. 1984, 298 pp. $17.95. On the premise that "nothing is easier than to slip into the comfortable assumption that Europeans thought and felt two centuries ago just as we do today We constantly need to be shaken out of a false sense of familiarity with the past," Princeton History Professor Robert Darnton mingles the methods of anthropology with those of history in these six essays on Eighteenth Century France. The subjects range from the gruesome peasant tale of Little Red Riding Hood, and the massacre of cats at the printing shop of Jacques Vincent, to the romantic sensitivity of Rousseau. The author, who is a MacArthur Prize Fellow, writes lucid prose, devoid of the jargon one frequently associates with such scholarship.

'57 Smith, Philip Chadwick Foster, The Empress of China, Philadelphia: Maritime Museum, 1984, 331 pp. 101 illustrations. $35.00 cloth-bound, $17.50 paperbound, plus $2.50 for postage. This is the first detailed history of The Empress of China, the ship that initiated American trade with China in 1784, sailing from New York to Canton, financed principally from Philadelphia. In the seven years before she sank in the Irish Sea, her history is rich. This stunningly produced book is printed on acid-free paper in type that was first cast about 1796; even the dust jacket, a painting of the ship by the author, is exquisite. Klaus Gemming of New Haven designed the volume.

'59 Webb, Lee, (with William Schweke), Putting America Back to Work: What States & Cities Can Do, published by the Conference on Alternative State and Local Policies (2000 Florida Ave., NW, Washington, DC 20009), 1982. 74 pp. Despairing of any major steps by the current federal administration to alleviate unemployment, the authors analyze a series of state and local programs, with suggestions for further implementation and improvement. Paperbound, large format.

'59 Webb, Lee (editor, with David Jones), America's States: A Citizens Agenda 1983-1984, The Conference on Alternative State and Local Policies, 1983, 239 pp. This handbook of 36 essays by different authors covering such topics as banking, the elderly, tax reform, and handgun control is directed at "liberals and progressives" who perceive the growing role of the states as the federal government makes massive cuts in its domestic programs. Paperbound, large format.

'59 Webb, Lee (editor, with David Jones), America's Cities and Countries: A Citizens Agenda 1983-

84, The Conference on Alternative State and Local Policies, 1983, 261 pp. Similar to the above text, 39 authors contribute essays appealing to "the new Progressives" to confront on the local level such issues as arts and culture policy, cable TV, property tax reform, safety programs, and landlord/tenant relations. Paperbound, large format.

'60 McCance, Allison Jennings, (with Judy Duncan) The Clock Watcher's Cookbook, Dublin, NH: Yankee Books, 1983, 126 pp. $8.95. Spiral-bound. More than 175 recipes for quick meals, each with a timetable stating the time needed for preparation and cooking. Besides the breakfast, lunch, and dinner sections, there are recipes for snacks, cocktails, chocolate specialties, and low calorie dishes.

'62 and Faculty

Schorr, Natalie Gillingham, En Revue: Le français par le journalisme, Lexington, Massachusetts: D.C. Heath and Company, 1983, 201 pp., large paperback. Organized in the style of a French magazine (handsomely illustrated), this intermediate French text of journalistic readings offers hundreds of writing assignments in different genres, from restaurant reviews and interviews to editorials, sports columns, and even crossword puzzles. The exercises stimulate conversation as well as good prose style. It is even appropriate to use on one's own, as a self-teacher.

'64 Seligson, Tom, Doubles, New York: Dell Publishing Co., 1982, 382 pp., paperback. This novel about four men who play tennis every Saturday and who are climbing in their respective professions of acting, publishing, TV production, and the law focuses on the tensions and the tragedies of achieving in the competitive world of New York City.

'64 Seligson, Tom, Kidd, New York: Dell Publishing Co., 1983, 315 pp., paperback. This is a thriller about the dangerous pursuit of treasure reputed to have been hidden by the pirate Captain Kidd in New York City. The landmarks and lore of the city are factual; the plot is fast moving.

'66 Kunen, James S., "How Can You Defend Those People?": The Making of a Criminal Lawyer, New York: Random House, 1983, 270 pp., $15.95. The author of The Strawberry Statement (1969) tells his own story as a Public Defender, and the stories of his clients, with a legal system that has profound strengths and weaknesses. His conclusion: "I am proud of the role I played in the process."

'68 Spears, Andre, XO, A Tale for the New Atlantis, New York: Pangaea Press (P.O. Box 2790, NY, NY 10185), 1983, 63 pp., paperback. A short epic poem, handsomely printed, about war, and the ending of all war.

'69 Kelleher, Hugh, (with Garth Marston) Creative Real Estate Financing: A Guide to Buying and Selling Homes in the 1980s, New York: Ronald Press (John Wiley & Sons), 1983, 209 pp. On the theory that "successful real estate transactions depend upon having a clear understanding of basic financial principles," the authors divide the book into four sections: the background of home financing, recent alternative mortgage programs, seller-assisted financing, and how mortgages, tax laws, and condo agreements work.

'73 Sheahan, Richard Casey, Sports Illustrated: Cross Country Skiing, New York: Harper & Row, 1984, 186 pp. large format paperback $6.95, clothbound $9.95. Profusely illustrated, this handbook covers everything from the history of the sport and instructions on the required skills, to chapters on conditioning, avoiding winter hazards, and winter camping and racing.

Faculty

Sizer, Theodore R., Horace's Compromise: The Dilemma of the American High School, Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1984, 241 pp. $16.95. This is the first report on A Study of High Schools that former PA Headmaster Theodore Sizer and his staff have been working on for more than two years. From his personal observations while visiting schools across the nation, Mr. Sizer describes in anecdotal form the confusions, contradictions, and cumbersome bureaucracy that have obscured our sense of what education is all about: that good teachers are central to successful education, and that basic skills are vital (the title of one chapter is "Knowledge: Less is More"). The Horace of the book's title is Horace Smith, a hypothetical high school teacher of talent and seniority, who has to compromise to accommodate the system.

Just, Ward, The American Blues, New York, The Viking Press, 1984, 205 pp. $15.95. The narrator of this novel — a middle-aged journalist who is haunted by the Vietnam War, which he had covered as a correspondent — seeks escape from his confusion and from his bruised marriage by going to his friend Quinn's house in Vermont. The conversations, the parties, and especially the affair he has with a young woman who is in many ways his antithesis all serve as the metaphorical map by which he finds his way to a resolution — ultimately by a return to Vietnam.

Sewall, Gilbert T., (former Faculty) Necessary Lessons: Decline and Renewal in American Schools, New York: The Free Press (Macmillan), 1983, 206 pp. $16.95. A former PA history instructor and former education editor at Newsweek, Gil Sewall reviews the trends that have weakened American public education, and proposes reforms that include orderly classrooms, an emphasis on cognitive education, strong administrative leadership, and frequent accountability (examinations, grades, reports) from both students and teachers. □

Shirley J. Ritchie

Shirley J. Ritchie was appointed to the faculty at Abbot Academy as a member of the Physical Education Department in 1950. She had interrupted her undergraduate career at Trenton State Teachers College (NJ) to serve as a Specialist 3rd Class in the Navy during World War II, but returned to graduate in 1948. Prior to her arrival at Abbot, Shirley taught in the Education Department of the Trenton YMCA. She continued her interest in "Y" work during her Andover years and was honored several times for her many hours of volunteer work at the Andover-North Andover YMCA.

By 1961 Shirl had been named the Head of Abbot's Physical Education Department, and it was under her direction that the school instituted a formal schedule of interscholastic athletic competition in team sports. Her own coaching specialties were soccer, basketball, and softball, but in the latter days of her career she demonstrated her versatility by substituting lacrosse for softball in the spring. When plans for the merger of Abbot and Phillips Academies were announced, Shirley and her staff worked closely with the PA Athletic Department to insure a smooth transition into a co-ed program. She was responsible for the scheduling of the girls' interscholastic competition in all sports, as well as serving as their varsity coach in soccer, basketball, and lacrosse when the "New School" opened in 1973. Shirley J. Ritchie became the Assistant Director of Athletics at Andover in 1979. Her duties included scheduling the outside competition for all the school's teams as well as assigning officials for those events. While her new obligations necessitated her relinquishing her varsity coaching posts, she still found time to be on the soccer field and the basketball court helping her successors as often as possible, and her red moped became a familiar sight on the playing fields of Andover as she checked athletic contests on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Although her interest in physical education had many facets, Shirl's devotion to teaching students of all ages how to swim will be long remembered. Many PA graduates have reason to be grateful to her for the extra hours she spent making it possible for them to pass the school's required swimming test.

Even when they were willing to give up, she was not, and her patience and determination were rarely unsuccessful. The community will miss her conscientious performance and loyalty to Phillips Academy, but we wish Shirley much happiness in her well-earned retirement at her new home in Temple Hills, Maryland.

John Gibson Tomlinson

Jack Tomlinson has had at least four careers — soldier, businessman, teacher, and administrator — and he has distinguished himself in all of them.

Born and educated in Bernardsville, New Jersey, Jack attended Drew University until he entered the Army as a private in World War II. His appointment to the United States Military Academy in 1942 led to a B.S.M.E. in 1945; Jack graduated in the top quarter of his West Point class. He served as a commissioned officer until 1954, when he retired as a captain. Among his varied assignments over the years was teaching Spanish, mathematics, and military subjects at West Point from 1950 till 1953.

Thanks to his experiences not only at West Point, but also at the institutions where he habitually enrolled in graduate courses (like the University of Madrid in 1949-50, and Duquesnes University 1954-60), Jack was prepared for multiple roles in industry. After his retirement from the Army he was employed in a variety of managerial and budget offices of such corporations as U.S. Steel, Westinghouse, ITT, Avco, and Block Engineering.

But the appeal of the classroom was hard to resist. Teaching Spanish at the Pike School in Andover from 1966 till 1968, Jack also taught part-time at PA until his appointment as Director of the School Year Abroad Program in Barcelona from 1968 till 1971 — a role he filled even more efficiently because he had been Military Attaché in Madrid in 1949-50 when he was still in the Army.

On Jack's return to Andover in 1971, Headmaster John M. Kemper appointed him Director of the Physical Plant, a post he held for nine years. From 1980 till his retirement this summer Jack served as Director of Energy and Conservation at PA. It is this fourth career of his, that of a PA administrator of the physical plant and of energy conservation, that has meant so much to Andover. During these thirteen years in which we have witnessed the skyrocketing of the price of oil, Jack Tomlinson's conservation efforts and management skills have saved Phillips Academy just a little under one million dollars, according to Business Manager George Neilson.

Norma and Jack Tomlinson will retire to their Andover home, close to the school they have served so well.

Elections and Appointments

Alumni Trustees Elected

The alumni have elected Sybil P. Smith '61 and Morris E. Zukerman '62 Alumni Trustees, each to serve for a term of four years. Sybil P. (Smith) Smith '61 lives in Wellesley, MA, and is Assistant to the President of Wentworth Institute of Technology in Boston, where she is Director of their International Programs and Affirmative Action Officer. She formerly served as Coordinator of the Transfer Scholarship Program for the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities in Massachusetts (1978-80) and as an educational consultant with the Exxon Company. Earlier she founded a family day care business and was supervisor for Adult Education for the Massachusetts Department of Education. She graduated from the University of Vermont with honors in 1966 and spent a year as an exchange scholar with the English Speaking Union in London. She has also attended Radcliffe Management seminars. Community activities include membership of the Board of Trustees for the Cambridge Friends' School (1976-81) and teacher and vice chairperson of the Board of Christian Education of Wellesley Congregational Church.

She has just concluded seven years as a Director and four years as President of the Abbot Academy Association. Other Andover activities include positions on the Executive Board of the Alumni Council and Co-chairmanship of its Academic Affairs Committee; she is also a member of the New England Executive Board. She is married to Donald Smith and they are the parents of two children.

Morris E. Zukerman '62 lives in Brooklyn, NY, and is Managing Director of Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. in New York City. He formerly served as an economist with the Office of Management and Budget, Washington, DC (1970-72), and before that as a research economist with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development in Washington, DC (1968). He is a graduate of Harvard, class of 1966, and has an MA from King's College, Cambridge (1968) and an MBA from the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. He has served as a member, Committee on Governance, Harvard University Board of Overseers, 1969-70. He has also authored various articles on African Affairs, Journal of African Studies (Cambridge University Press).

Mr. Zukerman's Andover activities currently include Director, Andover/Abbot Alumni Association of New York; member, Alumni Council Executive Committee and Co-chairman, Budget and Finance Committee; member, Board of Trustees' Finance Committee. He has also served on the sub-committee on the Selection of Investment Managers for Andover Endowment (1982-83) and on the Major Gifts Committee, Addison Gallery Campaign. He is married to the former Karen D. Solomon and they are the parents of three daughters.

Appointments

Director of Alumni and Parent Affairs
Secretary of the Academy Joseph C. Mesics '53 has announced that Denis R. Tippo has been appointed Director of Alumni and Parent Affairs. He comes to PA from the Association of Yale Alumni Office,

Tippo

Graham

Bing

where he served as an Associate Director for University Relations.

Mr. Tippo graduated from Loomis-Chaffee in 1962 and from Yale in 1966. He received an M.Ed. from the University of Massachusetts in 1972. Prior to his position at Yale Mr. Tippo served as Administrative Assistant to the Dean of Hampshire College, and Administrative Assistant to the President of Warren Wilson College. At PA he succeeds Mary Comfort Stevens, who moves full time into College Counseling.

Director of Foundation and Corporate Support

Lynda E. Graham has been named Director of Foundation and Corporate Support, succeeding Patricia H. Edmonds, who becomes Director of Capital Development. A 1967 graduate of Brown University, Mrs. Graham has served as Senior Editorial Assistant for National Geographic Magazine; Assistant to the Vice President for Research and Exploration, National Geographic Society; Department Head for Research and Interpretation, Shakertown at Pleasant Hill, Inc. (Harrodsburg, KY); and Assistant to the Coordinator of Research, Brown University. Mrs. Graham joined the PA staff in early June.

Alumni Council President

Cynthia Eaton Bing '61 has been selected President of the Alumni Council effective 1 July for two years, a role that makes her ex officio an Alumni Trustee for the term of her office. A 1965 graduate of Connecticut College with a degree in European History, Mrs. Bing is also Head of the Board of Trustees of The Day School in New York City and serves as President of the Parents' League of New York City. She has been Vice President of the PA Alumni Council for the past two years and is on the Executive Committee of the Andover/Abbot Alumni Association of New York, where she lives with her husband and three children.

Andover-West

At the 1 December board meeting we elected new officers as follows:

Hobart Birmingham '62
President
Beverly Tuller P'81, '82, '85
Vice President
William Sherman '60
Vice President
Wayland Bonbright III '45
Treasurer
Tom Pollock III '61
Secretary

On 29 November Andover-West held its annual meeting. The approximately 25 members in attendance elected eight new directors of Andover-West for two-year terms as follows:

Hobart Birmingham '62
Charles Daly '58
Jonathan Harris '78
William Lynch '38
William Ming-Sing "Billy" Lee '51
William Sherman '60, P'82, '85
Beverly Tuller P'81, '82, '85
Nancy Unobskey P'81

Jennifer Sherman '82 and Greg Simon '82 were guest speakers from U.C. Berkeley and Stanford, respectively. They both felt exceedingly well prepared for college by their Andover experience and described two primary elements of college culture shock: the change in class size and the absence of the close personal relationships with instructors they had enjoyed at Andover.

On 14 December Andover-West hosted a luncheon for returning students home for Christmas vacation. Nine students attended along with sixteen other parents and alumni. Alumni present represented every decade back to and including the 1920s and three generations of one family were represented by Don Harris, Sr. '32, Don Harris, Jr. '50, and John Harris '78, and his sister, Catherine '84.

New admittees for the fall of 1984 attended a dessert gathering at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hobie Birmingham on 19 March 1984. At least ten of the current Northern Californians attending Andover were present, being home for spring vacation.

Great Lakes

In September of 1983 a group of Detroit and Ann Arbor and area alumni gathered for a luncheon meeting at the Michigan League and developed the first Council of this Association.

On a breezy November football Saturday Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sawyer ('24 and '26) and Ann Doty Savage '68 invited the Council and recent Andover/Abbot graduates now attending the University of Michigan to brunch in the conservatory at the Second Chance Restaurant in Ann Arbor. We compared and re-appreciated experiences while at Abbot and Andover and talked about current jobs and goals. With a prevailing sense of gemutlichkeit everyone agreed to pursue organizing other gatherings of this sort. Then off to the football game for most people — Go Blue!

Connie Goodyear (Richard '59) organized an 11 March date at the Detroit Institute of Arts for "Brunch with Bach," listening to the Newberry Consort of Chicago play 13th and 14th century French music. Nearly thirty alumni attended, and the gathering was concluded with a discussion on the next embarkation of the Great Lakes Andover/Abbot Association. It looks as though we'll be heading south to Toledo or try sailing on Lake St. Clair.

New York

By the time these notes are in print, the New York Alumni Association will have concluded this year's activities with a gathering at Shea Stadium for what may be the first annual "Andover Night at the Mets." Some 51 members with their families and guests had dinner in one of the stadium's private dining rooms and then watched the game from a block of seats at the press level. Having Andover's name flashed on the stadium message board as a greeting to the group may or may not have been good public relations, depending on one's view on how the group behaved itself.

Also in June, we hosted our annual get-together for newly admitted students. This year the backdrop was New York's very own Central Park, where several alumni and current students greeted many of our matriculating students and their families.

Regional Visits from PA

Headmaster Don McNemar and his wife, Britta, together with Dean of Admissions Josh Miner, were Andover guests of the Mid-Atlantic Regional Association in Philadelphia on Monday, 2 April 1984. The event for Phillips Academy alumni, parents, and friends was arranged by John P. (Pete) Stevens III '44 and his Mid-Atlantic Council, with the featured speaker former Headmaster Ted Sizer. Ted informed the gathering of his high school study and discussed his book, Horace's Compromise.

The McNemars then winged their way to Cincinnati, where they were joined by Secretary of the Academy Joe Mesics '53 and his wife Sandi. A luncheon meeting, cocktail reception, and dinner were scheduled on Tuesday, 3 April for alumni, parents, and friends from the Southwest Ohio area, who had an opportunity to meet the McNemars and be briefed on new developments at Phillips Academy. The events in Cincinnati were arranged by Henry W. (Bish) Hobson, Jr. '39. The Andover travelers were hosted overnight by Kay and Fletcher Nyce '26 and Judy and Arnold (Tom) Shoop '53.

Courtesy of Edward T. Bartlett II '25, Edward D. (Ned) Yost '47, Betsy Fauver Stueber '73, and other Andover alumni, the McNemars and Mesics spent the next day in Cleveland. A small luncheon gathering was followed by a large reception and dinner at The University

David Smith P'87, Bradford Westerfield P'86, and John S. Mason, Jr. '59 at the Hartford reception

Club for alumni, parents, and friends.

W.R. (Tim) Timken, Jr. '56 hosted a luncheon in Canton, Ohio, for alumni and parents in April. The Andover travelers were warmly greeted by our Canton contingent and also enjoyed a brief tour of the Timken Company plant facilities.

Robert B. Williamson, Jr. '44 and Josephine W. (Dodie) Detmer '48 arranged for a large gathering of Andover alumni, parents, and friends in Portland, Maine on Monday, 30 April. Josh Miner and Joe and Sandi Mesics attended the reception and dinner in honor of Don and Britta. The presence of retired faculty Bill and Lee Brown '34, George and Fonty Sanborn '24, Litsa Merriam, and Alston "Doc" Chase, a surprise guest, helped to make the evening particularly enjoyable.

The Spring 1984 school travel concluded with a reception and dinner in Hartford on Tuesday, 8 May. Associate Headmaster Peter W. McKee, his wife Jean, Andover Bulletin Editor Thomas J. Regan '51, his wife Gerri, and the Mesics accompanied Britta McNemar, while Don McNemar, temporarily incapacitated, was not able to attend the reception and dinner in honor of the McNemars. Courtesy of Charles L. Miller, Jr. '35, his wife, Ginna, J. Read Murphy '38, Pam Richards '76, and Rick Keppelman '61, a marvelous, warm welcome was extended by a large group of our alumni, parents, and friends from the Connecticut area. The group was joined by several grandparents of current students, as well as college students graduated as recently as class of 1983.

The opening of spring term received mixed reviews. During vacation the top floor of Chapin House was destroyed by fire — a gigantic loss, though we were relieved that no one was injured. On the happier side, "Handsprings," the crafts fair, was an immense success in the Cage on an otherwise gloomy Sunday in early April.

Celebrities appeared weekly to speak to surprisingly large crowds for a spring term. NBC-TV correspondent (and PA parent) Bernard Kalb spoke on "Traveling with the Secretary of State." The English Department's Writers Series continued this year with such notables as poet Allen Ginsberg, novelist Gloria Naylor (who read from her soon-to-be-published novel Linden Hills), and our own Ward Just, who has been the Roger F. Murray Instructor in English and Writer in Residence for the past two years.

May was the month of Big Week-ends. "'A Celebration of a Decade of Coeducation at Andover'" occupied the weekend of 4-6 May, filled with such events as seminars, dramatic performances by actress Tulis McCall, a Saturday night banquet, a dance, the Abbot Bazaar, and an ecumenical chapel service. John Gould's article about the weekend elsewhere in this magazine captures the spirit of the celebration with style. On the weekend of 18

May the Theatre Department presented a splendid performance of Pajama Game, and 26 May was the Senior Prom here on campus.

The Faculty

Some of the faculty personnel shifts of particular interest to alumni include Nancy Sizer's retirement after eleven years in the History Department. Now that husband Ted has become Professor of Education at Brown University, they will move to Providence, where Nancy will teach at the Wheeler School. Having completed his five-year term as Cluster Dean of West Quad South, English Instructor Jonathan Stableford '63 will take a leave of absence next year and will be succeeded by English Instructor John Gould. Dr. Claire Wilson leaves her position as School Physician and Medical Director of Isham Infirmary after three years to become a member of the pediatrics staff of the Lahey Clinic. Her successor has not been named at press time.

J. Derek Williams '65 succeeds Thomas T. Lyons as Chairman of the History Department for the next five years. Britta McNemar, who leaves the College Counseling Office to establish a program to organize summer jobs opportunities for students (see Abbot Academy Association grants, below), has been named Chairman of the Board of Trustees of Connecticut College. English Instructor Kelly Wise, who is the Boston Globe reviewer of photography shows, has also become the reviewer of photography books for that newspaper. Kelly, who has just been listed in the most recent edition of Who's Who in America and The International Directory of Critics and Scholars, has a monthly portrait column in Boston Magazine.

Several years ago Shirley Ritchie started a girls' basketball tournament under the auspices of the New England Prep School Athletic Council. Though the tournament is now thriving, it has never had a trophy to award the winning team. On Friday, 8 June — the day after Shirley retired — she was called to the Athletic Office, where Athletic Director Joseph B. Wennik '52, Athletic Director-elect Paul Kalkstein '61, and Headmaster Donald W.

McNemar surprised Shirley with a properly inscribed cup named after her as the annual trophy. Shirley was able to present the cup immediately to Robin Timothy-Foakes (coach of this year's victorious Northfield-Mount Hermon team), who had graciously made the trip from Northfield in the early morning hours to honor — and surprise — PA's very special and beloved coach.

English instructor and poet Bruce Smith has been awarded a significant and prestigious grant from the National Endowment for the Arts for his poetry. The award is competitive, and a candidate is eligible only after the publication of his or her first book of poems.

AAA Grants

In April the Abbot Academy Association made a second disbursement of funds to faculty for projects that will benefit the school. Physics Instructor Victor C. Young, Director of the (MS)² Program, received a three-year grant to search for and fund a faculty counselor for minority students. Britta McNemar received a grant to establish a summer jobs opportunities program for PA students. English Department Chairman Jean St. Pierre and English Instructor Elwin Sykes will investigate the feasibility of establishing a summer institute for English teachers from urban schools. Another grant enables French Department Chairman Natalie Schorr '62 to make a study of the cultural content of the French courses. English Instructor John Gould received a grant to support the Dickinson Singers, a quartet of PA English teachers who magically introduce students (and Alumni and Trustees) to poetry and meter through song. Biology Instructor Lydia Goetz received funds for the Search and Rescue Program, to train faculty in white-water river-running techniques.

Roger F. Murray Writers in Residence

The Roger F. Murray Foundation position for Instructor in English and Writer in Residence will be shared next year by a married couple, Margaret Gibson and David McKain. The two poets have been teaching at the University of Connecticut, where Mr. McKain has been honored with an award for excellence in teaching. Margaret Gibson's poetry collection, Long Walks in the Afternoon, won the Lamont Poetry Prize in 1982; Mr. McKain's volume, The Common Life, was runner-up.

Alumni Miscellany

Alumni Athletic Contests

Set aside Sunday, 23 September, for the fall alumni athletic day. The men's soccer game will start at 2:00 pm on the boys' varsity game field. Those returning to play are requested to call Coach Meredith Price at the Admissions Office (617/475-3400, Ext. 196).

The women's soccer game will start at 2:00 pm on the Old Campus field. Those returning to play are requested to call Coach Sherm Drake (617/475-6301).

The crew race on the Merrimack River will begin at 2:00 pm from the new boathouse. Those returning to row are requested to call Coach Peter Washburn, mentioning their year and side so that he can set up the boatings. (617/470-0761).

There will be a reception for all returning alumni and alumnae at Cooley House following the athletic events.

Christopher Bensley '76 (dark helmet) checks vigorously for the Alumni in their win over the Varsity

An abundant turnout of graduates for the Alumni vs. Varsity Lacrosse game on 19 May gave the alumni such a powerful team with depth that they defeated the PA varsity 12-6.

All Volunteer Weekend

Anyone who has done any volunteer work for PA during the past year can expect an invitation to the second annual All Volunteer Weekend on 28-29 September, with appropriate meetings, workshops, and entertainment — not the least being a repeat of last year's splendid lobster/clambake at the Log Cabin. If you have any questions about the event, please call Denis R. Tippo in the Office of Academy Resources (617/475-3400, Ext. 283).

Underwriting Individuals

Director of Annual Giving Cornelia Weldon LeMaitre '53 announces a new concept in supporting PA. Currently any donor who gives $1,000 or more becomes a Non Sibi Associate, and that category will continue. Those who can afford to be even more generous are encouraged to consider supporting a specific scholarship student or a specific Teaching Fellow for the year. A donor of $5,000 or more can choose to underwrite a scholarship student, and the donor becomes a Non Sibi Scholar. A donor of $10,000 can underwrite the entire cost of a Teaching Fellow for a year (we need at least ten such generous gifts next year), and the benefactor becomes a Non Sibi Fellow. The personal element of corresponding with the student or the Teaching Fellow being sponsored perhaps offers a satisfaction that is frequently missing in the traditional anonymous giving. And the sense of pride and responsibility of the recipient, who is able to thank a person with a name and an identity, is a privilege we are eager to restore.

Interested donors should write Mrs. Cornelia W. LeMaitre, Director of Annual Giving, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810 or call her at 617/475-3400, Ext. 161.

Announcing:

The Andover Cookbook, Vol. II

The Ladies Benevolent Society is planning a companion volume to the best-selling Andover Cookbook, and we need your help. We invite all members of the Andover community to submit both favorite old recipes and newer adaptations for microwave/food processor cooks as well as low calorie recipes. Recipes need not be yours originally.

The first volume has been an overwhelming success; we know that the new version will be a welcome addition to the libraries of all cooks and hosts. Because the compilation, testing, and tasting will take about a year and a half, the deadline for submitting recipes is March 1985. The book is scheduled for publication in the fall of 1986.

Join us as we launch the making of the The Andover Cookbook, Vol II. Submit your recipes to:

Math Prize Exams

Any graduate who was not a complete washout in mathematics will be interested in a new book called The Phillips Academy Prize Examinations in Mathematics, compiled by Mathematics Instructors Donald T. Barry and J. Richard Lux. The volume contains representative copies of the Convers Examination, primarily in algebra and geometry (first administered in 1898), the Bailey Examination in second-year algebra (first administered in 1946), and the Watt Examination in advanced algebra, trigonometry, calculus, probability, and related fields (first offered in 1954). The book is not only a testimony to the history of mathematics at Andover, but a useful tool for prospective students who want some idea of what is expected of the best mathematicians at PA. We are extremely pleased to report that the last two-thirds of the book is dedicated to detailed solutions to all problems.

The book may be ordered from Dale Seymour Publications, PO Box 10888, Palo Alto, CA 94303, Order Number DS01467. The book itself costs $14.95. Shipping and handling are $2.00 for one volume, or 10% of the order for two or more.

In the Service of Youth: a Seminar

During his final year as Dean of Admissions, Joshua L. Miner will undertake the special responsibility of offering public seminars on the topic of "creating the curious child."

In keeping with Andover's tradition of being a school in the service of youth, Headmaster Donald W. McNemar has asked Josh to share his perspective on youth developed from his thirty-three years of teaching and counseling at Phillips Academy, including twelve years as Dean of Admissions and as a Founding Trustee of Outward Bound.

The seminars will be directed to educationally concerned parents who have children in grades one through nine. Varying in format according to the size and needs of the audience, the give-and-take presentations have nothing to do with recruiting for or enrollment in Phillips Academy, but are meant to be a guide to parents for making sound decisions about their children's education.

These seminars will be held as Josh and colleagues visit cities with regional associations for their traditional meetings with alumni, par-

SPORTS

by David Chung '85 and Peter MacDonald '85

Phillips Academy sports had a very good spring term as many inexperienced teams achieved successful seasons. Andover teams had a total of 85 wins and 46 losses.

Boys' lacrosse, coached by next year's Athletic Director Paul Kalkstein '61, was the highlight of the athletic program. The team finished with a record of 11-2 and captured first place in the Northern New England Division. Powered by the strong defense of All-American Captain Charlie Welch and goalie Paul O'Boyle and the midfield domination of senior Tad Davis, the squad defeated state champions Long Meadow and perennially powerful Concord-Carlisle and St. Paul's. Girls' lacrosse, however,

Cyclists round the curve from School Street to Central Street in the N.E. Prep Federation race on 13 May was not as successful, finishing 5-6. The team opened the season by defeating Northfield Mt. Hermon, Proctor, and Holderness with outstanding play and clutch goals, but later lost several close games despite the players' steady improvement.

Girls' softball, led by the pitching of upper Nan Khayatt and the hitting of Arianne Duddy, finished a successful season with a record of 9-2 and a victory at the AISGA championships. Veteran Kathy Mulvey and upper Nancy Colbert also contributed excellent performances as they combined to score a fourth of the team's runs. Boys' baseball, on the other hand, slumped to a disappointing 6-8 record after a strong 5-1 beginning. The versatile and potentially powerful squad displayed productive hitting and solid pitching. Plagued by inconsistency and forces beyond its control, however, the team failed to qualify for the divisional tournament. While Coach Hale Sturges will miss senior stars such as Buddy Boyda and veteran Sean Flanagan, he looks forward to a promising year in '85 when eleven players will return and lower sensation Pete Burns will captain the team.

Girls' Varsity Lacrosse Captain Melinda Pierce breaks away in the Pingree game

Boys' crew had a winning season of 7-3. With only two returning varsity oarsmen, the 1984 crew season looked bleak for first and second boats. Nevertheless, thanks to an intense training program and the leadership of Captain Steve Hochman and Arthur Muldoon, the Blue was victorious over Tabor and St. Paul's and qualified for the finals at the Interschols. The girls' crew team also faced a rebuilding year but managed to finish 4-6 with excellent performances by Allison Smith, Tina Smith, and Sara Hazelwood.

Paced by Captains Chris Schille and Stefan Kaluzny, boys' track captured an Interschol victory for the fifth straight year by miraculously coming from behind to edge Exeter. Track's season ended impressively at 5-2. Though girls' track, finishing 2-5, did not do as well, the squad performed better than the record implies. Mary Hill and Captain Jennifer Wertz had exceptional seasons and led the team to four new school records.

Both boys' and girls' tennis came up with winning seasons, with the boys finishing at 5-3 and the girls at 7-3. While the boys were led by number-one seeded Sean Stone and Captain Rob Cantu, the girls showed great depth as Jahna Malitsky, Trilby Sheeser, and Stephanie Hunt proved to be invaluable assets.

The golf program racked up a record of 12-7 with the superb scores of Captain John Pickett and John LaFave leading the way. Jim Israel, Fran Sullivan, and Paul Van Houten also had a great year with best scores of 75, 78, and 76 respectively.

The Andover cycling team had its best season in its four-year history, finishing first or second in every race. Powered by captain Phil Schumm and senior Chris Yerkes, the cyclists placed an extremely close second at both the Interschols and the three-day stage race.

David Chung '85 is editor of the student magazine Andover Scoreboard. Peter MacDonald '85 is co-president of the Press Club.

After graduation he returned to Arlington, MA, his hometown, to enter his father's business, Frost & Higgins.

Mr. Frost was a well-respected, successful businessman and was held in high regard by his community. At the time of his retirement in the late 70s, he was Chairman of the Board of his company, Frost Co., Inc., distributors of lawn and garden power equipment in Woburn, MA. Active in Arlington community affairs for many years, he was a past member of the Arlington Chamber of Commerce, director of the Menotomy Bank, the Harvard Trust Co., and the Robbins Library. He was also a member of the Arlington Board of Selectmen and the Winchester Country Club. He was a co-founder of the Arlington Boys Club which was started by Mr. Frost and a group of businessmen with their own personal finances.

He and his wife, Margaret, retired to Vero Beach, Florida in the late 70s where they raised citrus fruit on a 50-acre orange grove near their home. He and his wife were the parents of three sons, Stephen B., Edmund L., Jr. '58, and Thomas C. His wife, sons, and seven grandchildren survive him.

Mr. Kidder, a well-known archaeologist, received his bachelors degree magna cum laude from Harvard in 1933 and also his Ph.D. in anthropology there in 1937. He later became a faculty member in the anthropology department at Harvard, traveling to Venezuela and Peru on expeditions for Harvard's Peabody Archaeology Museum. He was the son of archaeologist Alfred V. Kidder who was brought by the Trustees to Phillips Academy and under whose auspices the famous Pecos, NM exploration and dig was conducted from 1915-1929. When a child, Mr. Kidder accompanied his father to Pecos.

In World War II he served as a major in the Army Air Corp and received decorations from the Brazilian, French and Chinese Governments.

In 1950 he became chairman of the editorial board of the magazine Expedition published by the University of Pennsylvania; he was also named curator of the American section of that University's museum. At that time the University also produced the Peabody Award-winning television series, What in the World? and Mr. Kidder became the narrator of the show. He was made a full professor at the University in 1962.

Mr. Kidder's wife, Mary Barbour Kidder, predeceased him in 1978. He leaves two brothers, Randolph Appleton Kidder of Washington, DC, and James Kidder of Niantic, CT, and a sister Faith Fuller of Concord.

John R. Newell, Boca Raton, FL; 11 February 1984 (see class notes) John Newell, an outspoken convert to the fight against nuclear energy, died of cancer after a five-year battle with the disease.

Mr. Newell, a native of Bath, Maine, led efforts to shut down all nuclear power plants, especially the Maine Yankee plant at Wiscasset believing that if an accident occurred, it could be of catastrophic proportions.

Although Mr. Newell was one of the first builders of nuclear powered destroyers in the late 40s at the Bath Iron Works — the Maine shipbuilding firm he headed for 15 years — he became a vigorous critic of the high cost and dangers of nuclear power after he retired, calling the effort his "preoccupation." He lectured widely across the country on the development of solar energy as the ultimate source of all energy for the future use of mankind.

Mr. Newell began working summers in the shipyard while still a student at Andover. At that time his father, William, who had been president of the yard since 1927, headed the company. He earned his bachelor of science degree in naval architecture and marine engineering at MIT in 1935. He then worked three years with the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Division in Quincy, Mass. and in San Francisco. He returned to Bath in 1938 and became assistant General Manager of BIW in 1944. He took military leave to serve as a lieutenant in the Bureau of Ships at the Navy Dept. in Washington, from 1944 until 1947.

He was president of the Bath Common Council and headed the Pine Tree Society for Crippled Children and many other professional and civic organizations in Maine. ("When a resident of Maine, John Newell was one of the most generous and thoughtful citizens in the state," remarked Navy Undersecretary James F. Goodrich, who succeeded Mr. Newell as BIW president.) He was a trustee of Bates College and director of the Shipbuilders' Council of America. He was also a member of the Defense Industry Advisory Council and the Atomic Industrial Forum. He was director of two anti-nuclear organizations, Safe Power for Maine, and Floridians United for Safe Energy.

Mr. Newell is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Paul Tiemer of Brunswick, and Mrs. Eastman Guild of West Bath; two nieces and a nephew.

ABBOT

- 1905 Georgia Harris Stearns, Alfred, ME; 1982 (date unknown)
- 1906 Anna Steckel Cole, Brookline, MA; 3 June 1983
- 1908 Lucy H. Kilby, Eastport, ME; 23 April 1984
- 1910 Ruth Wetmore Newcomb, New London, CT; 9 March 1984. Miss Newcomb died in her sleep, quietly and peacefully, two weeks prior to her 94th birthday. She was well both physically and mentally up until the time of her death. The Abbot "Parting Hymn" was sung at her funeral at her request.

She was the daughter of Fredric Newcomb and Harriet Chapel Newcomb, an 1876 graduate of Abbot Academy, whose booklet, Journal of an Abbot Girl, written and illustrated by the author on the occasion of her 50th class reunion, is a prized possession of the Abbot archives.

From 1919 to 1922 Miss Newcomb attended Connecticut College, studying pottery and design. She also attended Columbia University's Teacher's College, Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, and Alfred (NY) University, again studying pottery, the craft that she loved and worked at a great part of her life, and at which she was talented, skilled and dedicated.

Many of her summers were spent at camps teaching small children the art of clay modeling and pottery. She taught clay modeling as well to New York city's underprivileged children at the Christodora House, a settlement house in the city, and for thirty years at the Lyman Allyn Museum in New London.

Miss Newcomb was a well-known and supportive Abbot alumnae throughout the many years since her graduation. She was a Class Secretary and was at one time chairman of the Connecticut area fund-raising committee. She was also an active alumna of the Williams School, a school she attended prior to Abbot.

Her community interests were many including the New London Chapter of the American Red Cross, the Camp Fire Girls, the Hempstead Family Association, through which she established New London's first playground for children, and the Antiquarian and Landmarks Society of Connecticut.

Survivors include a brother, Theodore; a sister, Clara Newcomb Back; three nephews, two nieces and twelve grandnieces and nephews.

1913 Doris Elizabeth Furber, Milton, MA; 20 March 1983

Helen Danforth Prudden, Roseland, NJ; 8 June 1983. Word has reached us that Helen Danforth Prudden has died at the age of 92. The Alumni Office had not been aware of her death until now. Marion Brooks '15, from whom we learned of Mrs. Pruden's death, said "Helen was a tremendous figure, a wonderful influence on the school, and a loyal alumna."

Two things become evident when looking at the material available on Helen Danforth Pruden's life — her love of her family and her talent as a poet. A tribute written by her to her late father and mother entitled "Companionship Still Young and Gay," is filled with loving and tender recollections of their life together. "... I have set down some of my memories here, partly for the poignant joy of reliving them, partly in the hope that others who loved mother and father may be stirred anew to an awareness of a companionship still young and gay." The tribute is in the form of a paper-bound booklet, published at the author's own expense, which includes photographs of her father, Franklin Simpson Danforth, and her mother, Carrie Elizabeth Danforth. It is a charming, warm insight into both the lives of Mrs. Pruden as a child and her parents.

Approximately 35 of her poems were published in national periodicals, among them, Contemporary Verse, Christian Century, Commonweal, as well as the New York Times. Her book of poetry, entitled, Look on the Fields, illustrated by her two daughters, Margaret and Carol, was privately printed in 1954. Her poetry also appeared in Braithwait's Anthology. In her file were numerous poems and it was difficult to pick a single one. This one was written in 1939 and was published in the Abbot Bulletin:

Ready For Winter

We're ready now for winter.
Cold and secure on northern slopes
The apple orchards sleep
And fields where green corn, row on row,
Grew taller than a hired boy
Are buried deep
In snow
And ribbed like corduroy.
Beneath white padded roofs the warm
Moist breath of cattle steams,
And safe from storm
Geraniums press
The frosty farmhouse window. . .

Yes—

We're ready now for winter.

A play, entitled Madame Abbot Returns was written by Mrs. Pruden first in 1946, then revised and performed on 3 June 1939 at the Alumnae Banquet. With a cast of 14, including the "Voice of the Abbot Spirit," the play looked back with humor and sentiment on Abbot girls from 1879 to 1939, with each year represented by an Abbot girl of that particular era. It was received with enthusiasm.

She held many offices in Church and social service organizations. She began her interest in welfare of others early, doing voluntary social work the first year after graduation. She took an active part in community food conservation enterprises for the benefit of the needy in Montclair at the time of the depression. She was editor of the Montclair Women's Club magazine and was Chairman of the Metropolitan New York Division for Second Century Building Fund in 1938, and was Vice President of the Abbot Academy Alumnae Association from 1934-1938. She was married in 1915 to Halsey George Pruden who predeceased her. They had three children who survive her: two daughters, who also attended Abbot, Carol Pruden Dinkel '35, with whom her mother lived, of Roseland, NJ; and Margaret H. Pruden '36 of Landing, NJ; and a son, Peter Danforth Pruden. A memorial service was held shortly after her death at St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Essex Fells, NJ.

As I write these notes I am looking at our 1910 class picture taken a few days before we all left Andover Hill. How young and how hopeful we all looked and how formal in our high starched collars. And how eager to get on with our lives.

Now only seven survive. And we survivors look on this brave new world with wonder and not a little apprehension. We have a vague uneasiness that science may have opened a Pandora's Box that may destroy all life on this planet. We must hope that somewhere out there in the generation of our grandchildren is a leader who will save us from annihilation before it is too late.

Since my last notes I have learned of the deaths of two of our classmates. Henry J. Lucey died at his home in Norway, Maine on 21 January 1984. Henry was born on 10 July 1889 in Natick, Massachusetts. After graduating from Andover, he went to M.I.T. and got his degree in chemical engineering. Henry was employed by the E. B. Badger Company and United Chemical. During World War II he was a member of the War Production Board in Washington. He is survived by his wife, Muriel, with whom he celebrated their 65th wedding anniversary last year.

And Brownell Carr, nephew of Charles A. Brownell, has notified the school of the death of his uncle on 13 January 1984. Charles was a pilot in the Army Signal Corps in World War I, and was later involved in his own business. He is survived by his wife, Sarah, of Cleveland, Tennessee.

Reunion Notes: This year two members of the class planned to attend the Reunion in addition to your Secretary-Agent and wife, Mimi. As it turned out, only one other classmate, Donald K. Wright and his wife, Frances attended. Helen Hamblet Dyer of the Abbot class of 1914 also attended. It was good to see them.

I got a swell letter from John Erving who had planned to come up from Hartford, but at the end of May two granddaughters from "far off" planned to come to Hartford just at the time of our Reunion, so John had to cancel.

Gen. Leo McMahon wrote that he had specifically planned to come up with Mrs. McMahon and his son, and I had really looked forward to seeing them. Unfortunately, Leo wrote that his son suffered a fracture of his left leg on 21 April and though they had hoped it would be well enough for him to drive Leo and his mother to Andover, his doctor said, "No." We hope that son John will soon be fully recovered.

Joe Mesics missed Leo, too, because they come from the same section in Pennsylvania.

Ben Richardson writes, "At 87 I'm in good health, active in my life's work (farming), and thankful to be a graduate of Andover. My memories of my years at PA with Al Stearns, Cecil Bancroft, Charlie Forbes, and all the rest are still vivid, and were without doubt the best years of my life."

Your Secretary received a swell letter from George Sawyer of the Class of 1919, suggesting that since the class of '14 would have so few members returning that we should join the "nineteeners." I want all of the members of the class to know of this thoughtful gesture. I was happy to see George to thank him in person, though none of the class of 1919 were at Andover when the class of 1914 was there.

Our Alumni fund raising efforts were quite satisfactory from a money standpoint, but we were sorry to see the percentage of contributors down to 68%. We just hope that the good Lord will spare us to help the fund again next year.

I had expected to complete the reports from the 20 remaining replies of Classmates, but I only have one piece of good news and one sad note to report at this time. I received a friendly card from Harold Ellis just after our last closing date for Class Notes. He made his annual pilgrimage to Bailey's Island, Maine, and enjoyed the sixteenth consecutive visit from the Harold Shermans. Ellis is benefitting from an eye transplant in one eye and is looking forward to another eye transplant in the near future. Congratulations from all on your new sight, Harold.

We received the sad news that Austin C. Smith of Rockville Center, NY passed away on 16 January 1984. Our sympathy goes to all of the members of the family. His son Austin, Jr. graduated from PA in '42.

I hope the remaining 18 PA '16ers who receive the Bulletin will at least send me a card. We want to know that they are carrying on.

Reunion Notes: Our 65th reunion is over, and it was a rewarding and congenial affair. The class also hosted the "Old Guard," which we will now be joining and which gives us the privilege of attending reunions whenever we wish. We were sorry that our 1919 alter ego, Grace Kepner Noble, lived a little too far away to be with us, but we were pleased to have the Hamblet sisters, Helen Dyer '14 and Kay '20.

Lee Poor and Mary Margaret drove from Rossmoor in Jamesburg, NJ. He is in charge of Planned Giving for our class. This offers a number of palatable avenues for investing in Andover's future; and Leo gave us a succinct synopsis of this constructive program. He has only recently retired as a worldwide authority on railroads, his most notable achievement being in Australia. Also, he was active in natural gas development in Canada.

Friday's cocktail party at 1924 House

Milman Linn and Helen arrived from Zanesville, Ohio. Like your Secretary, he is a retired banker, but they keep active. Among their accomplishments are a full-length tour of the Amazon, and they relived this experience at a documentary on that region shown for reuners. It was good to have them with us.

Dwight Colburn and Priscilla also had interesting backgrounds and have been faithful attendants at our reunions. Following Dwight's career in banking, we recall their educational project in Korea, an outstanding mission.

Leonard Bishop's wife, Edith, died last February. Both have been regular participants at our reunions, and our sympathy goes out to him. He joined us with his neighbors, Charles and Frances Burgess, congenial and helpful additions to our group. It was good to have Leonard with us. By the way, he still practices law at Westhampton Beach, Long Island.

Whit Smith and Lydia also have a long record of regular attendance. They commuted from their long-time base in Concord, Mass. Another banking retiree. A party is always fun when Whit and Lydia are there.

George (Jim) Hewitt is one of a few, if any, of our class who was at the front in World War II, in the African and Italian campaigns. He participated in the liberation of Rome, an event which did not get the publicity it deserved, since it occurred simultaneously with the Normandy landings. Jim got his start in the military as Major in our PA ROTC. Accompanying him was his son George A. (Tony) '72, who was applying for admission at our 50th. Needless to say, both Hewitts are very good company.

Sherry Logan made the longest trek, coming from St. Joseph, Missouri. Temp Brown grew up there with Sherry, who gave us some interesting and amusing sidelights on Temp's career. He paid tribute to Temp as one of the most brilliant men he had ever known. This carries a lot of weight, since during his careers at First National Bank of New York and the George F. Baker Trust, he had contact with many important people.

Joe Chatman had hoped to come, but a conflict developed, and we missed him. Bill Prendergast wrote from Sao Paulo, Brazil, that he could not fit the reunion into a trip he made over a month ago to the States and sent us his best wishes. Bill's Andover influence spans a good many years; during the reunions, Grahame Enthoven '29 told me that Bill was responsible for his going to PA and sent Bill his warm regards, which we all do.

Henry Penfield is another close friend of Temp Brown's, an across-the-street neighbor in Winnetka, who, like us all, will miss him very much. Now Henry lives in Paradise Valley, Arizona. I believe he would have liked to come to Andover, but couldn't make it; we would have liked to have seen him and Henrietta.

Jim Serven also lives in Arizona. He has just bought a new house, presumably in the Tucson area, and refitting it has kept him busy. We regret that it's a long time since we have seen Jim, but he keeps in touch.

Mike Young and I both took a year out between school and college, so we are PA '19 and Yale '24, where five years ago we got together at our New Haven reunion. Unfortunately, Mike was not well enough to make it to Andover this June, but he is a valued friend, and we keep in touch.

Our class has done itself proud, both in percentage of participation and dollar amounts in the Alumni Fund; and in my dual capacity as Alumni Fund Agent, this is to express my appreciation. I was lucky to have the momentum developed by Temp Brown.

A telephone call reminded me of a benefit concert in Orleans of the Andover Jazz Band headed by Duncan Robinson '84, a local boy. While we were not able to attend, my memory did stretch back to my senior year, when I dutifully listened (with some pain) to my roommate, Ben Cutler '22, learning to take the squeak out of playing the saxophone. (It is obvious that he did, as a recent article in the Andover Bulletin indicated.)

Charlie Gage tells me that he and Maggie spent a happy two months in Florida this winter, at Lantana, which is south of Palm Beach on the east coast.

In a note, in answer to mine, Ben Spock told me some of the sad, sad story of his grandson's tragic death some months ago in Boston. And a telephone call to Tucson developed the fact that Bill Serat, being taken care of by an efficient live-in nursing service, was just about the same as I had learned at Christmas time — he has bad emphysema.

For the last six or seven years, Kay and John Cushman have joined us in Sanibel, Florida for a few weeks in March, to enjoy the beach, the shelling and birding. This year, one of their daughters joined them for a week, while we were visited by my only niece who lives in Miami.

Judson Smith's death on 22 January occurred on Long Island, NY. He was 79, and had spent most of his business life in the New York area in the field of landscape architecture. He is survived by his wife, Marion, a son and two grandchildren. The class extends its sympathy to his family.

In writing of his father's death, Frank III who lives in Manhattan Beach, CA, says that those who follow swimming might be interested in watching the rise of Frank E. Wattles IV, age 13, and Alison Wattles, age 12, the grandchildren of Frank, Jr. Both are rated in national competition and Frank IV has been rated #1 nationally and is a national record holder in his age group. "Chips off the old block" says Frank III in writing of his children.

According to his brother Joseph, Elie Weeks "died with his boots on in the fields with his beloved cattle at Rochambeau Farm" in Manakin-Sabot, VA on 15 February 1984.

The first reply came from Millicent Bartlett Holmberg and reads: "No great news. My shop, The Glass Bottle, is flourishing and keeps me very busy. I made my usual trip back East last fall and hope to go again this year. Love to see the autumn colors."

Next came a card from Kay Damon Kletzien's sister, Edith Damon Bugbee '23, to report that Kay has been ill, so she offered to write for Kay's daughters who are very busy and attentive to their parents. She is a wonderful patient, quietly and patiently hoping to get better. Kay sent her greetings to the class and reports that her son Ralph, living in Homewood, Illinois, has a second son. This brings the total up to ten grandchildren! Thanks to Edith we are up-to-date. Make a great recovery, Kay, and enjoy a fine summer.

Bubbles Hutchinson Matthews says the Washington, DC area is warm and blooming, the dogwood and shrubs are in flower. Unfortunately glaucoma is curtailing her driving and craft work. While she regrets this she feels lucky to be so well cared for; her children and grands give her lots of time and affection. There are three great-grands now. Her husband, Doc, is about the same. Bubbles is an enthusiastic gardener, with a real green thumb.

Word has come from Betty Ohnemus Hicks that Laura Beggs died on 8 February 1984 in Newark, Ohio, where she has lived at the LPN Geriatric Center for the past two years. She had led a busy life in several fields, both professional and volunteer. Laura was the founder and a member of the 20th Century Club, and for several years was the Executive Director of the Licking County Society Museum. You will all remember the four girls that roomed together: Alex Wilkins Talmadge who died last July, Ohnemus, and Mary Rudd '23, who is in a nursing home suffering from Alzheimer's Disease. These are sad and distressing bits of news, but I appreciate receiving all available news of the D.O.G.'s of '22. Thank you Ohnemus, and I hope to see you and Clyde when you come from Florida to Brewster on the Cape at the end of this month (May). Maybe we can plan a mini-reunion of ME, NH, and MA girls during the summer.

Although they did not contact me I am sure many of the class send their greetings and love along with mine! Have a happy, healthy summer and let me hear from you any time. As Ever, Olivia

The deadline for Class Notes has a tendency to get away from me. I sent out pleas for news in ample time, but then a whirlwind of activity, too much for this old fogey of nearly 79, blustered about me, so that in order to get any entry for PA 1923 in this number, I will have to limit myself to a statement that I had two newsy letters — one from Jack Van Duyn and one from Red Cleveland. Excerpts from those epistles will appear in the Bulletin following this. The editors of ye Bulletin will not regret the brevity of this set of Notes. The reuniting classes will swamp them with news.

I am sorry to have to report the death of Owen R. Garfield in January of 1984. Unfortunately, I have no details about his career other than that he was connected with the Bell Labs. For the class I express to his widow, Harriet, and to his family, deepest sympathy for this loss.

I thought by this time I would be retired from this job, but here I am again with not much to report. If your part of the country is like mine, maybe some of you are still in Florida, or on your way back, which is true of many of my friends here. Or maybe you are like Peggy Scudder Marshall who wrote that she had absolutely no news — just more of the same — and thankful to be alive and kicking. Knowing them, I am sure they are growing older gracefully. They also miss the trips to B Pond which I miss too. Not many Abbot people come up this way.

Recently I talked with Martha Buttrick Rogers who had a great piece of news. Her first great-grandchild, a girl, was born 30 March 1984. Her name is Katherine and they call her Kate. She weighed 8 lbs. and 4 oz. and Martha was thrilled.

M.C. Swartwood Sinclair wrote a note with the Alumni Fund plea. She went to Poland Spring, ME for two weeks in February and then on to visit a great-granddaughter (that I reported about last time) and her family. She says Megan (GD) is a lively twenty-one months, adorable and fun to be with.

My grandson John White is still living and working in Florida. He will drive up in June to visit us. We are looking forward to that. My granddaughter Shireen Shahawy will be a senior at Colby College in Waterville, Maine this fall and will work here in Guilford this summer. Her January Plan job this year was at the educational TV station in Lewiston, ME which she enjoyed very much. She was asked to go to Skowhegan by the station and help with an interview on Senator Margaret Chase Smith which was a real thrill for Shireen. My two daughters, Mary Lou Shahawy '47 and Betsy White '56, are here for the summer, which I like. Mary Lou has a camp at a nearby lake.

This is it girls, and I am sorry it isn't more. I want to thank you for your help all these years — and I say again I hope there will be more next time. Put on your thinking caps. Love to you all.

Reunion Notes: The Class of 1924 House received plenty of action during our 60th reunion weekend. Friday, three classes, '19, '24 and '29 had their social hour there before the barbecue at Flagstaff Court. Saturday, cocktails were served at the house before our class dinner at the Elbridge Stuart; and brunch Sunday noon was also held in the memorial room dedicated to our own deceased classmates. Many thanks must go to Cluster Dean, Stephen Carter, for his tremendous help all weekend.

There were 46 at dinner Saturday. Bob Redpath was our able M.C. and introduced Fred Stott as our keynote speaker. Fred reviewed all the changes in the school during our six decades.

Polly Bullard Holden spoke for Abbot and did her usual fine job. Laura Scudder Williamson, Abbot '24's Secretary, was able to bring back seven of her classmates — a great showing!

Keith Smith received the long distance prize. Coming all the way from Flaming Gorge Acres, Dutch John, Utah. He was presented with an Andover mug with the statement that he didn't know he was going to be mugged after coming so far. Johnny and Marge Lockett from El Paso, Texas were runners up, and Bob Redpath presented them with Mia Kelly's book on Andover.

We had several honored guests at our dinner. Of course, Jack and Helen Barss have never missed a reunion. There was Susan Stott whom we were glad to meet, and, we added two more honorary members to our class: Leo Daley '23 and Helen. Leo could name about every member of 1924. He has been "Mr. Class of 1923" and 1927 (at Harvard) since the beginning. The vote was unanimous.

There was a solemn interlude at the end of dinner when Bob Hamilton presented the Larsens with a plaque — designed and composed in El Paso, Texas by Art Tait — for their 19 years as Secretary and Secretariat. As Bob read the words on the plaque we could feel he thought of Art who was in intensive care at the time. Both he and Frieda were the first to sign up for our 60th.

On Saturday afternoon Bob Hamilton also dedicated the oak tree, planted near the 1924 house — a tree raised from an acorn of the famous Charter Oak in CT. After Bob told the interesting story of the original Oak, both Abbot and Andover '24s shovelled in the loam.

Sunday brunch was attended by several guests: our new Secretary of the Academy, Joe Mesics and his wife, Sandi; Helen Bronk, of the Alumni Office, who's been my main support all these 19 years; and John Witham of the Class of 1925 who was taking mental notes to pass on to his chairmen for their 60th next year.

The following were present during the weekend: Blank*, Bolster, Booth, Brown (Gardner), Brown (Gordon), Connor, Danforth, Dickerman*, Hamilton, Harri-man, Hocking, Jennings, Larsen*, Leach*, LeCompte*, Lockett*, Redpath*, Sanborn*, Sanford*, Sawyer*, Smith (Keith), Smith, Joe* (*With wife).

It was hard to say our goodbyes after such a wonderful weekend with such great camaraderie between the Abbots and the Andoverians. We all parted with the same words "See you at our 65th, if not sooner!"

The Larsens attended a memorial service for classmate Dick Chace in Tiverton, RI two days later. Dick died in San Deigo on 8 March.

The Larsens arrived home in Newton, 8 May after a 3000 mile trip. Made our annual visit with Bob and Sissy Wood in Decatur, IL and the former President of Bunny's Wheelock College. Bob was planting rose bushes when we arrived.

Bob Hamilton reported reading Charlie Sawyer's article in the Addison Newsletter and was so impressed he sat down and wrote Charlie. "It was as though he were talking to a small intimate group before an open fire on a Saturday night." We had lunch with Bob on our way home.

Bob Redpath has agreed to be our M.C. again. He sent along news about a new high-jump record. The best news was the way we had to jump — feet first. Igor Pakline, the Russian, broke the record the hard way. I was pleased to see the government agreed with me that head first is for women, as illustrated in the 13¢ stamp. Ed Renouf would be glad to hear this. I was sorry to hear his wife, Cathy, died in 1982. Ed writes, "Thanks for your Newsletter. How I wish we could all bring you nothing but good news all the time."

I also heard from Tommie Thompson James, Bill's widow, who is now Mrs. Irvine English. Bill was another of our high jump team. Tommie was sorry to hear of Morry Skinner's death as Bill and Morry roomed together three years at PA and four years at Princeton. Tommie was Abbot '24.

Bud Mordock wanted to know how to get from Boston to Andover without getting hit by a drunken driver which happened at our 55th to his rented car. Bill, didn't you see any bumper stickers saying, "Caution. Boston Driver"?

John Dixon reported putting his sailboat in the water and sending in his reunion card saying "yes." John is excited over the new invention he has patented for the storage of hazardous liquids. Says there is over a million underground tanks which could leak into water supplies for which oil companies are being sued. "The market is so large. . . visions of sugar plums," says John.

Fred Collins was all signed up for our 60th. First there was no room at the Inn (sounds like a Bible story), then "intractable circumstances" made it impossible. Bill and Min Dickerman thought we were wise to stay in Arizona until May. Then a 10" snow storm in NY kept them house-bound. Their winter in the Caribbean meant swimming every day. Bunny swam the 141 days in Green Valley, so the two ought to enter the Olympics together. Berry Grant underwent surgery in November after we visited him, and is still getting back his strength. He had to give up on reunion, unfortunately. My Newsletter story of Charlie Wade '23, brought a response from his daughter. "My mother is in poor health and it (the story) gave her a lift when I read your handwritten note to her."

Bob Clark and Ester have signed up for the North Cape Cruise after our reunion. They received Mia Kelly's book, Andover - The Face of Phillips Academy, thought it was beautifully done and "brought back happy memories."

George Sanborn received a letter from one of his students which said he had a "funny feeling" about attending his 20th reunion. "Red" didn't know whether his feeling was one of maturity or senility. He wrote back, "My 60th must be three times as funny." Red and Fonty started on their annual birding/sightseeing and sunning excursion. They did Disney World and two days at Epcot. "The crowds were almost as bad as when George Bush ('42) comes home to Kennebunkport."

Chick Peck up in Montreal, had plenty of snow. He and Jean did some golfing but 10" of snow made Chick get out the skis again. Says he's in good health but hears some creaking here and there. Bill and Lucy Keator have both a grandson and granddaughter graduating the first week in June and their presence is demanded. . . "That effectively kills reunion," says Bill.

Gardie Brown said news of Al Foot's death in March was very sad. He saw him in January and he looked poorly then. Dick Vaughan, when he heard the news said, "that's like a piece of me going." Your Secretary had a very fine letter from Al's wife, Jane. We were sorry to hear "Grogan" and Jan O'Connell wouldn't be able to make reunion. We stopped by to see them with Rodge Batchelder '22 after our Yale 55th.

It was Harry Brandman '22 who wrote about our classmate Alan Reinhardt being hospitalized. I wrote to Lillian to learn Reiny had three operations in a six week period — all major! Myron Burton's widow reported the death of Myron's twin, Malcolm (PA '23). Esther said he died on 29 Feb. '84. The death of Dick Chace on 8 March was quite a loss. He and his wife, Mary, had so many things in common, especially the theatre. George Mumby and Mary, Ken's widow, often attended plays and dinners with them. Dick wrote wonderful letters which Bunny and I will miss.

Gige and Mary spent a week with the Larsens in March and we all agreed to make it an annual event. Ed Wells has moved to 684 Bernicia Drive, Apt. 16, Santa Rosa, CA. Ed's wife, Mary, wrote to say Ed was not well. Bev Thompson visited them in Tiburon last year. Joe Smith and Ruth have signed up early for the 60th. Joe always sends clippings, cartoons, and humorous trivia which I need when I hear the deadline for the Bulletin notes. Laura Williamson, Abbot '24 scribe, wished we were home to see Nick Danforth officiate at the baptism of his grandson at King's Chapel in Boston. It was Nick who told me of Al Foot's death.

While in Andover Bunny and I visited the Jack Barsses.

Reunion Notes: Back in 1924, even if Orwell had predicted it, we would have never believed we could or would reunite with Andover boys in 1984. And eight of our classmates returned (three hadn't been back since graduation 60 years ago — Jane Allen Kilby, Mary Harvey Kindel, and Marion Shryock Wagner) and we had a very happy time with all of them.

The eight of us just fit into little bedrooms clustered around a cheery little living room in one of the new dorms, where we happily reunited at all hours.

Jane Allen Kilby, from Kingston, RI, says, "It has been a wonderful reunion in every way. I am looking forward to 1989." She was a cheerful and indispensable chauffeur, for it was too hot to attend the various programs without her air-cooled car.

Sybil Bottomley Talman wrote, "What a wonderful time — seeing our dear classmates. Would not have missed this for anything. Good luck for the next five years."

Polly Bullard Holden said, "Every moment was memorable and bright — it is serendipity. Eight of us amazingly eager, loyal, lovable, wonderful Abbot girls remembering all the fun for 60 years. Delighted to be coeds with the famous class of PA '24, led by Swede and Bunny Larson and Laura too." (Polly gave a brilliant talk at our class dinner.)

We could scarcely believe Mary Harvey Kindel's "Abbot" story! Miss Bailey brought liquor to her room to warm her after her return in a horse blanket from a crash through the ice at Poms Pond. She read this tale again at our Andover '24 House, hoping to discover the Andover hockey player who saved her.

Kay Hart Mitchell still creates lots of fun. She was so hot one evening, she drove three negligeeed classmates down route 125 at a cool 25 mph. Suddenly, a cop signaled her to stop and wanted to arrest her for going only 25 mph. The cop's flashlight showed up our three negligeeed classmates, and when he learned they were back for their 60th reunion, all was gleefully dismissed.

"Age has only mellowed us," Marion Shryock Wagner wrote. "I only grieve I had missed the 12 other reunions." AND she had some unusual stories of our Andover neighbors 60 years ago.

Ruth Larter Eveleth even had a 63-year-old photo to authenticate her story. This showed Miss Jenks sitting next to her and my Harvard Med. student brother, Dr. John Scudder, and myself. We had to be chaperoned! My brother and his friend never picnicked with us again!

Laura Scudder Williamson's only complaint was the severe "India-like" heat which prevented us from attending some of the programs. We did not go to the Abbot tea down the hill at Morton House or see the gay red and orange Abbot gym! "Our" chauffeurs did drive us around that beloved campus, when it was cooler. What splendid memories! We relished the cool champagne at the Addison Gallery party, though some of the present paintings made us "hot under the collars!" Polly and I went to two of the lectures to hear the students participate. We learned so much from Ted Sizer, we plan to order his new book, Horace's Compromise (Houghton Mifflin). I think we all felt most grateful to Andover for planning so interesting and varied a reunion.

Madeline Shepard Curry sold her home in Boca Raton to return North after her husband died, but she returned to Florida for she found so many of her friends were no longer at home. A fire destroyed many of her possessions, so she now lives in an apartment. She likes driving friends when they need transportation and even stayed with a friend 13 weeks. . . . Ruth Hawley Damon's husband, Roger, said Ruth had had a severe stroke. But she came to the phone to say she was sorry not to be able to see friends, for she cannot express herself very well. . . . Ethel Thompson English regrets terribly that we will have to hold our 60th reunion without her as they must return to repair their two houses in Pawling, after a fine winter in Pebble Beach, after the severe winter weather smashed down a 90-foot maple on her house! . . . Polly Bullard Holden, our perennial class president, will be at our 60th with her John. Her back is much better, though she can't, as yet, drive until she has an automatic shift. It has been "heaven" to have her daughter, a California lawyer, house-sitting less than a mile away. Polly's letters enclosed some of her "crusades" such as Action Alert, and she especially "Toots" Andover.

Mary Harvey Kindel can't wait for our 60th and wants to stay on to explore Boston with me. She is happy she sold her large house and can live in an apartment, still overlooking the beautiful lake. . . . Betty Bragg King says she "is all in one piece and trying to stay that way for our incredible 60th. The years have hurried by. Our two sons have four children, one at Mt. Holyoke. None, alas, at Andover." . . . Barbara Loomer "keeps out of mischief as much as possible" by keeping busy with town politics (she is on the school committee), and the performing arts center in the new high school — all that besides building a house and a flower garden on her acre of land. . . . Elsie Phillips Marshall is so happy at Daytona Beach, she returns there from November to April. Her two sons are in far parts of the U.S., but her daughter keeps busy in a wonderful hospital in Daytona Beach. . . . Kay Hart Mitchell is no longer baking all those cakes for ill friends, but is now busy with landscape men and painters to remedy her storm damage. She has to wire up her enormous horse chestnut tree. She, of course, is planning a trip irrespective of all physical problems and even plans to drive back alone from a trip to Michigan in July. Wish we were going to Russian again!

Priscilla Draper Mansfield regrets our 60th, for she will be in Maine with her son and three grands. She would like to come to a mini-reunion in the Boston area in the fall.

Ruth Kelly Perry and Elwyn have had fun at our mini-reunions, but cannot make our 60th.

Mary Elizabeth Ward came to our last Abbot reunion in Morton House. She told us of living happily, alone, far from civilization near Good Heart, MI . . . "A Happy memory."

Thanks to our phonathon and to Kidder Peabody, classmates reveal much more than they ever do in a letter. Frances Platt still plays the organ — she started with Miss Friskin in the '20s. She was not previously chosen to play in a recital, but at the last minute she was called upon. While playing, a surprise thunderstorm broke and turned out all the lights. To everyone's startlement, Frances played on and on without one error. . . . Susanna Smith Lockheart is her jaunty self, this time comparing her heart failure to her fractured vertebra. She says "give me heart failure anytime, for there is no pain, it is just hard to breathe." She also called some of her neighbors "non-compatible chemical[sic] cats." (Perhaps I could not read her handwriting correctly?)

Syb Bottomley Talman continues with "my quiet country living, and loving it, except for a treat at Christmas with my little family and a visit in Edgartown. I have had fun reliving my Abbot years in my memory book. I even have a piece of curtain from my room." Several of us hope you won't be so quiet, that you'll not have another mini-reunion in Attleboro. Peg Colby Williamson sends regrets for our 60th. She said she and Bob had such a good time at our 55th. Syb T. and I just lunched with her in Norwood and planned a mini after the 60th. Marion Shyrock Wagner said she was in the throes of selling her house and moving into a condominium. Even if this exhausts her she wants to come to the 60th "to the scenes of her youth, but wonders if we will recognize each other!"

Laura Scudder Williamson . I am so delighted to have my daughter Elleda Katan working in Boston in a most interesting position, as a coordinator for the Cultural Education Collaborative. Its fun now commuting to her home in Mattapoiet on weekends. Her son and daughter are both finishing colleges this year. ESL and the International Institute occupy me two night a week, but I have lots to learn still.

A note from Dorothy Converse tells us that she is now fully retired. "Am keeping up my study of languages — French, German, Italian, and Spanish. Best wishes to all my classmates, and hope to see you at the 60th Reunion."

A most interesting letter from Rev. Al Keedy. "We're engaged in the ministry in the large, sparsely populated island of Andros in the Bahamas. We have four churches with a total membership of 150+. Once I had 54 people in church, another time, two. They are quite uneducated, but have a lot of sense. Our biggest problem is knowing what to do after we've knocked ourselves out talking to them! We spend a lot of time on the road: 1½ miles to the P.O., open 10 a.m. to 12 N; 20 miles to the bank, open Tues. and Fri. 10 to 4 p.m.; 15 miles to the grocery, regular hours; 20 miles to a good beach. Eating oranges, lemons, grapefruit and bananas off of native trees.

"In addition to a perfect little house with air conditioning, we have free utilities, a free car and $800 a month! I wish I could be certain I'm earning it. Have seen two issues of an American newspaper in six weeks and from what I read I'm glad to be isolated. One Sunday morning I drove 20 miles and didn't see an auto enroute. You should see the pot holes — 16 inches deep!"

Norm Flowers reports that his son James '66 is now resident-surgeon at the Virginia Mason Hospital in Seattle and his wife is resident-pediatrician at Children's (Orthopedic) Hospital in the same city. Mirabile dictu! . . . I continue to substitute in high schools here — sometimes unpleasant and frustrating, but on balance worthwhile!

After countless years in Connecticut, Bill Curtis and Janet are leaving Southport for a retirement community in Kennett Square, PA as of 1 July. Bill writes, "Janet and I have found a place to roost for the rest of our days on this earthly sphere. We think it is best for us, as we have no children to push us in places when they think it is time."

Your scribe has the unique experience of seeing his wife and self on Station WTNH New Haven last April. It was on a half-hour program devoted to honoring the five recipients of the Jefferson Awards in Connecticut for community service. This unexpected honor came about through a recommendation by the South Central Connecticut Chapter of the American Red Cross for my work in Guilford.

Classmates are already talking about our 60th. Let's keep our engagement books open for early June in 1985. Why not combine a trip to New England with all the pleasure that a PA Reunion affords. It will be our last big one and the last opportunity to renew old friendships, so do plan ahead.

Her daughter lives in Santa Fe, New Mexico and has two sons and a daughter, all in college. Elizabeth has been a hospital volunteer for over 25 years.

Fran Howard O'Brien thoroughly enjoyed a trip to Russia "with the Andover group" in May 1983. Now she is living in an attractive retirement village just outside of Kansas City, Missouri and tries to take at least one trip a year out of the country.

T. Jova Howell says "Bill and I lead a quiet life in our little mountain top hamlet of Cragmoor, New York. They have eleven grandchildren whom they entertain — especially in the summer.

Dorothy Beeley Marsh went to the celebration of Leonard Bernstein's 65th birthday held in Lawrence, Mass. in August 1983. From "Cam" Blaikie: "... Old 'Bitch' Freeman was one of the voices that caused me to leave Andover a bit ahead of the rest of you — I had a hard time trying to adjust to his method of looking up accounts of events in works that he cited. I would later flunk (twice) the College Boards in American History, but over the past dozen years, I have been using the New York Public Library and others as well to research my family geneology and the histories of nearby towns and counties in the states of New Jersey and New York. I have also been called upon, as a member of the Englewood Historical Society, to lecture on some of those topics. I suspect some folks aren't sure if I am a history researcher or one of the exhibits. I keep busy as a deacon in my church and as a liaison between the church and the Boy Scout Troop it sponsors. I don't know if this letter is even a fair example of grammatical purity and clarity as taught by Messrs. 'Inchie' Spencer, 'Hook' Stearns, Schimmel, and 'Freddy' Stott." You still have not told us, Cam, how you got the Ford car up to the choir loft of the chapel. How come?

Frank Spinney sends along a book review on In Plain Sight, the Photographs of Beaumont Newhall. The review mentions that he has been described as one of America's foremost photography historians, and in this collection, he presents what he considers to be his best work. A contemporary and friend of some of America's great photographers like Ansel Adams and Edward Weston, Newhall has a style of his own, much of it focused on architectural subjects and city-scapes.

A report from Fletch Nyce that "Dud" Lewis . . . still living in Hawaii where he came from originally to attend Andover in 1924 — is Chairman of the Executive Committee of the First Hawaiian Bank.

Our congratulations on the marriage of Jack Weldon to Penny Ogle on 14 February 1984. He says he still hopes to see some grandchildren in Andover. Jack and his bride visited Bangkok to see his son and family and then around the world. "Almost as much fun as working."

Word from Dave Shepard from God's country, Vancouver, British Columbia. He and his wife, Margaret, attended their son's wedding at the Old North Church, Boston, in February followed by a dinner-dance reception at the Parker House. Dave says it brought back many happy memories of nearly sixty years ago. Unfortunately, time did not permit visiting Andover. Save it for our Sixtieth in '86, Dave.

From Ed Steimle: "I celebrated the 50th Anniversary of my ordination at a special service in Arlington. Preacher for the occasion was Dr. John W. Vannesdall, currently chaplain at Yale. I retired from Union Theological Seminary in 1975. I keep active through occasional preaching. . ."

It is with regret that we report the death of Charles (Chuck) Langmuir. Born in Los Angeles, California, he grew up in Englewood, NJ. He spent three years at Andover, was graduated from Yale in 1930, and received his master's from Harvard Graduate School of Education in 1935. During World War II, Chuck co-invented an electronic device used by the Navy that broke the Japanese Navy's secret code. He also worked with the U.S. Navy on the development of sonar. In 1954 he co-founded the Psychological Corp. of New York, an academic testing company. In 1965 he was sent by the U.S. to help the president of Malawi in Africa establish a public school system during Malawi's first year of independence. From 1966 to 1971 he was associated with Haile Selassie University in Ethiopia for the preservation of Ethiopian Art. He taught at Salem State College from 1972 until his retirement in 1974, after which he volunteered at the Peabody Museum in Salem, which has the Langmuir Collection of Ethiopian Art. He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth, whom he married 50 years ago in Winchester, MA; a daughter, Margaret Jager of Rye, NY; and a son, Thomas F. of Stamford, CT. On behalf of the Class of '26, our deep sympathy is extended to his entire family.

Bill Merrill reports "Celebrated my 75th 26 March with a beach party. Very festive with inscribed balloons, etc. but a bit more subdued than the 70th pool side tea dance. Summer trek to Williamstown, Mass. starts 23 May."

Card from Bob Kimball says "Still enjoying life in Charlottesville, Virginia . . . a little golf and gardening. Our son Richard is employed by Coldwell Banker Real Estate Company in Washington, D.C., and daughter Amy is 'into real estate' on the West Coast. Doris is fine and working as a 'docent' at Michie Tavern Museum in Charlottesville. Young Bob (PA '51) is still with Paine Webber in Reno, Nev., & R.S.K. IV is a sophomore in high school. We have a strong lobbying group with whom it's fun to work."

The following is proof of the recent activities of Mark and Jo Mason: "Most important, our granddaughter Jodie Porter joined Andover for her Upper Middle year and loves the place. Later we motored through Scotland and England where another granddaughter was spending a semester off from Ohio Wesleyan in Wroxton College — really an interesting old castle."

This winter we visited friends in Naples, FL after sponging on others on the way down. With all going well we leave next week for Switzerland and northern Italy with our three children and respective spouses, hopefully to hike some alpine trails."

Regretfully, we report the deaths of three classmates, the first being Arthur S. (Jim) Lull on 21 December 1983. He is survived by his wife in Oakland, CA, but we have no other details.

Edmund L. Frost of Arlington, MA died on 14 February, 1984 in Vero Beach, FL, following a long illness. After graduating from the University of Massachusetts he returned to enter his father's warehouse business and had a long and distinguished career there both as a businessman and community leader. One of his major contributions was as co-founder of the Boys Club in that city, also a selectman, director of the Red Cross, Philharmonic Society, Menotomy Bank, Harvard Trust Co., and served in so many responsible positions that he was once described in a newspaper article as "All-Arlington" and described by friends as a great "public servant." In an unusual activity, he was a member of the state championship team in the U.S. Men's Curling Assn. in 1966. He is survived by his wife, Margaret, three sons and several grandchildren.

Philip Dater, a resident of Cummington and Ashfield, MA, died on 19 April 1984. After graduating from Yale he moved to Cummington in 1944 where he established a registered Jersey herd, had a maple sugaring operation and served as a director of the Hampshire County Farm Bureau before taking a position with the Farm Family Life Insurance Co. in 1956. He was very active in school, church and community affairs. He is survived by his wife, Edith; two sons and four grandchildren. The sympathy of the class of '27 is extended to the families of these deceased classmates.

By way of indubitably immodest, autobiographical ice-breaker, Yr. Secy. reports varied Tar Heel activities, including continuing volunteer devoirs at N. C. Memorial Hospital, and recent delivery of stirring address to coterie of local oldsters (aren't we all?) on the subject of "Preppies Past and Present," in which assorted memories of the Days of our Giddy Youth were evoked and there was the inevitable reference to Calvin Coolidge as Father Figure of Phillips Academy's Class of 1928. Painstaking research for this magnum oratorical opus served to underscore the extraordinary changes that have taken place in pre-collegiate academia in the course of lo, these past, well nigh three score years. In the current vernacular, some of them are veritably "awesome" and worthy of an incredulous "Oh Wow!" And now for chronidings of greater import: Paul Reardon, per Patriot Ledger item out of Hingham, MA, was chosen last December as a "Distinguished Jurist" to head the Boston Commission on Safe Public Schools, which recently came up with a series of recommendations for reducing violence in the schools. Appointed C.J. of the Massachusetts Superior Court in 1955, Paul served on the state Supreme Court from 1962 to 1976, and in 1964 he chaired an American Bar Assn. advisory committee on implementing the recommendations of the Warren Commission, particularly in the areas of fair trial and free press, which led to the so-called "Reardon Report," advising attorneys not to comment on evidence or confessions before a trial. Eric Smith, now permanently resident in Concord, MA, after 48 enjoyable years divided twixt New Haven and Maine Central R.R.s, is "working on a charitable drive, writing a couple of papers . . . find scarcely enough time in each day." Over the years he has engaged in extensive global meanderings, from Greenland to Galapagos, and he hopes for more of same to "out-of-the-way places." He recalls warmly his days on Andover Hill, and "our excitement when Cal Coolidge came to PA's 150th."

Al Evans, still in Petal, MS, reports "excellent health despite insulin-swilling diabetes, state of mind surprisingly relaxed in view of the world's mess, feelings toward PA still warm and nostalgic, even tho' I have opposed many of the changes over the years." Al, Ed Coyle, and Dave Dudley continue as '28's three Mississippi-mud-foot-beaters, but from nearby Metairie, LA, Hort Smith wrote of four rugged '83 hospitalizations for bladder tumor surgery, regaining of health and weight ("my clothes fit me like Charlie Chaplin's but, as the saying goes, you can't win 'em all"). He may have parted company with bladder, but courage and sense of humor are obviously very much in residence. From Don Macleay a cheerful advisory: "As we went aboard a ship in Newhaven, England, for a cruise of the rivers of western Europe, I saw a face that looked familiar — and was. You can't get away from the Class Agent. To his credit, he did not hit me for an increase in my modest annual contribution. The presence of the Rowlands added considerably to the pleasure of the voyage." . . . Ed Poor, after career in paper industry, writes from Augusta, ME, of "some work in the chicken industry after retiring, married late (1948), daughter in NYC, son in Portland. . . my latest joy, two golden retrievers, brother and sister." . . . John Cole, eschewing the Kennebunkian Chill Factor in Ft. Myers, asserts, with well nigh excessive modesty: "Our grandson recently received his doctorate from U.N.C., which proves that good brains are not necessarily inherited." . . . Bill Farley, who with Louise, is (are) still the #1 L.A. Purveyor(s) of Superior Hospitality to itinerant PA Brass, enthuses re. the rewards of interviewing applicants, most especially those who are admitted and take the trouble to express their gratitude therefore in missives telling of the joys and values of the Andover experience. For many promising LA area candidates Bill and his slide tape presentation offer their first exposure to Royal Blue Nirvana. Son Mike recently returned to Tucson business career after an "exciting adventure" traipsing around the globe on Air Force II, as V.P. Bush's #1 "advance man."

A recent letter from Frank Schroeder brought word of Ginny's loss of a two-year battle with cancer and revived warm memories of a lovely lady whose presence brightened so many of our reunion gatherings. On 27 May Frank planned remarriage to Charlotte Yost, who lost her husband from the same affliction Both Yosts were longtime friends of the Schroeders, and we wish Frank and Charlotte the very best in their years together.

Frank's letter, received simultaneously with a communication from a Pittsburgh law firm, conveyed the shocking news that Jim Reed (Frank's Princeton roommate) and Judy lost their lives in a mid-January automobile accident near Washington, PA, Judy surviving Jim by less than two weeks — a tragic reminder of today's highway hazards, which make the use of seat belts so important. . . . Our class sustained another significant loss in the 8 February death in Oklahoma City of Bev Edwards after a prolonged illness. Retired three years from the oil business, Bev was a leader in many city and state civic and cultural activities. He is survived by wife Dorothy, two sons, and three grandchildren.

Reunion Notes: While we only had fifteen at our 55th (most with wives), it was a fun and successful weekend. Most had checked in in time for our Alumni-Faculty Barbecue in Flagstaff Court in front of Commons, preceded by a cocktail reception and singing by the great 8 'n 1 singing group. Then on to the reception in the beautiful Addison Gallery and ending with a "bull session" in our Headquarters in Day Hall.

All were present for the simple and moving Memorial Service in the Cochran Chapel early Saturday a.m. — then the Parade and annual report from Don McNemar in the Memorial Gym. Art Rogers, Jr., class of 1954, announced a new record for the 25th Gift!

A fine picnic lunch around the Bell Tower — then the afternoon devoted to good seminars, Andover movies, tours of Andover and the new gym, and a 6-mile marathon. George French and Gil Wright almost entered!

Another great cocktail party was at the home of Rachel and Fred Kimball then to the Andover Inn for our Class Dinner. Phil

Allen repeated his Mr. Dooley and his "Goluf Clubs" — Just terrific! At our business meeting it was voted to authorize the School to use the $50,000 held over from our 50th to aid in refurbishing the Library.

On Sunday, another hot, humid day, we ended our 55th at breakfast, looking forward to June 1989!

Present were — Phil Allen, Elmer Bull, Bill Chamberlin, Mort DeWolfe, Grahame Enthoven, George French, Bob Gaston, Ben Gualt, John McGauley, Fred Kimball, Tom Lasater, Mac Taylor, Frank Townend, Joe Ullman, Gil Wright.

—by John M. McGauley

By the time you read this the fifty-fifth reunion will be past history.

Only a few items to report in May: two of our most stalwart classmates have died since my last notes. Alfred Kidder and Al Newfield both died in February. Alf Kidder received both bachelor and doctoral degrees from Harvard. He was a well-known archaeologist. He had been an assistant professor at Harvard and later at the University of Pennsylvania, where he became a full professor. He was well known as the television narrator of the Peabody award-winning series, "What in the World." Alf's wife had predeceased him.

Al Newfield went to Princeton after Andover. He was a life-long resident of Hartford, CT, and like so many of our classmates, actively engaged in community affairs. He served as a member of the executive committee of the chamber of commerce in Hartford, the Big Brothers, the United Way, the American Jewish Committee, etc. He was also active in Princeton alumni affairs. Al was Chairman of the Board of the Hartman Tobacco Co. and founded the Connecticut Shade Tobacco Growers Assn.

Al is survived by his wife, Joy, who can be reached at 73 Sycamore Rd., West Hartford, Ct. Also surviving are three children and a granddaughter. The sympathy of the class is extended to the families of these deceased classmates.

Dear '29ers:

Certainly did hate the thought of missing our 55th Reunion but a trip to England took precedence. I do hope that Barbara, Charlotte, Betty Hulse, and maybe even Deppy were able to make it. We had a nice response from Mary MacDonald who is "Going strong. . . enjoy birding, boating, and mowing from 1 May until 15 November. Then I retreat to Northern Illinois where I have a winter base from which I travel — Florida in January, England and France in March-April." Sounds great! Deppy reports she is still travelling, but less, this year — Egypt, Switzerland, Italy, and Puerto Rico. She sends cheers to you all and good wishes for a healthy, happy '84. Barbara Folk Howe will be in New England for the summer and definitely hopes to move to a North Andover retirement home soon.

We are all pleased when we hear from any of you; it brings back happy memories and we are really grateful to those who responded generously to the Annual Appeal. Keep the notes coming — we love them!

With sadness we tell you the news that John Monro's wife, Dottie, died on 28 March. She shared with John his activities as a PA Trustee and will be much missed on The Hill.

On a brighter note, Lee Thurber and Daphne Hardoon were married last 20 December and are now at 31 East 12th Street, New York, NY 10003.

Dick Sachse co-author of Names of the Land, a compendium of Cape Cod area proper names with derivations, is now busy preparing a bicentenary history of Barnstable County, Massachusetts for publication in 1985.

Ted Murray's retirement gift was an Apple IIE Computer, mastery of which is evident in a recent letter. Despite a ruptured tendon he is planning to attend his 50th Reunion at "Old Nassau." Your Secretary retired (mandatory) on 19 April as a Director of United Jersey Banks but still manages to keep busy in Marketing and various PA and Yale activities.

There's got to be more class news out there but you've got to tell us, please. It's too long a wait until our 55th Reunion.

We have recently learned of the death of John Newell in Boca Raton, Florida. John, formerly of Bath, Maine, was the former president of the Bath Iron Works, the Maine shipbuilding firm which built more than 80 U.S. Navy destroyers and 270 Liberty ships during World War II. In his 15 years as president he led his company from near bankruptcy to world prominence. Despite his efforts to see that his firm was among the first to build a nuclear powered destroyer, he became, in retirement, an outspoken convert to the fight against nuclear energy. According to a newspaper article, he called it, "the worst corporate mistake in the history of the world."

John earned his bachelor of science degree in naval architecture and marine engineering at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and held honorary degrees from three Maine colleges. The sympathy of the class is extended to his two sisters, Mrs. Paul Tiemer of Brunswick, and Mrs. Eastham Guild of West Bath, who survive him.

We here at the Alumni Office have gathered, over the past year or so, news of Abbot '30. It is not of the freshest vintage, but we are including it here in the hope that reading news of your fellow graduates, will spur someone on to volunteer to be the Class Secretary for your class.

Midge Turner Fisher is living and loving South Carolina life. She spends a month in New England during the summer — Maine and Massachusetts. Her husband, Dick, plays golf (as does Midge) four times a week and he works part time for the Pines Plantation. Their family includes six grandchildren who visit them once a year.

Katherine Bigelow Heberton, in Chatham, MA, writes that she has five grandchildren scattered all over the country. She also is a great-grandmother of two. She is on the board of overseers at Old Sturbridge Village and has recently retired from 25 years of working on being in charge of the Chatham Bloodmobile.

Christine Hollands Struck took a three-week trip to Italy in April of last year. Her son Stephen is a Lt. Colonel in the U.S. Air Force stationed in Naples, Italy. While in Italy, she and her son's wife and their two daughters enjoyed a cruise in the Mediterranean.

When "Pat" Brewer Dericks wrote many months back, she and her husband, Hank, had returned from a two-weeks Indonesian Islands cruise. "Friendly people, beautiful scenery; and the Kowodo Dragons are real! Wish our cities were as beautifully clean as Singapore and Hong Kong." On their way home, they made a stopover in Hawaii to see two of their three grandchildren.

Evelyn Hamilton White writes, "Bob is still District Manager of State Farm Insurance. He was very happy when they extended the retirement age to 70." They are happy to have their two children living near them in Salisbury [MD]. Son George is an attorney and her daughter Debby's husband is also in the insurance business. They have three "beautiful grandchildren." Evelyn also says in her note that she "enjoyed reading about classmates in previous years."

Katie Fellows Leiserson writes from Sarasota, FL that she has two grandchildren in College in Florida and that they are a "huge plus in my life as they spend the Thanksgiving holidays with me." At the time she wrote she was looking forward to a Sarasota reunion with Donna, Marianna and Libby. "If others come this way, we would love to see you."

Betty Quinby Parmelee wrote that "we are well, busy and happy. Had visits with Det Seiler and Bubby Healey Holland last summer — great to see them both. Our oldest granddaughter is showing great promise in art, which delights me."

A note dated April '83 from Wantagh, NY from Grace Hadley MacMillan: "We spent Christmas with our daughter Carol and family in Wisconsin and then we went to Iowa City for the wedding of our younger daughter, Shirley, on New Year's Day. . . It was a memorable wedding." She also relates that hers is a very busy life and that she "won't bore you with a list of my activities — but I'd almost welcome a few dull moments."

No date on Barbara Lord Mathias' note, but I'm sure it was many moons ago, nevertheless her brief message reads, "No news, thank goodness! Same husband, same house and same two little grandsons growing very nicely."

Another note, written in the recent past, is from Ruth Baker Johnson who writes, "I sold my home in West Dennis and moved to a new one nearer my younger son and his family in Centerville [Cape Cod]. I am enjoying Amy, 6, and Ryan, 5, who drop in to see Grandma . . . also have a granddaughter who has been teaching in Africa with her husband for two years."

Janice Lovell Jenkins writes a newsy note that she has five great-grandchildren and another was due in June of this year. She and her husband are grateful to still be able to remain active in church and community affairs. "We visit often in our favorite state, New Hampshire, since two children have homes there in Goffstown and Conway. See Christine Hollands Struck at least once a year." Janice lives in Dallas — Pennsylvania.

It is obvious from these communications, that the Abbot women of the class of 1930 want to keep in touch with one another. A volunteer is need to perform the valued service of Class Secretary. Do we hear a volunteer out there?

Georgia summer sunshine is here after a cold, erratic winter and a rainy, unpredictable spring. Many of the old and beautiful camellias in our yard were killed by a plummeting temperature at Christmas.

Gertrud Van Peursem Bell announces that they are the proud grandparents of a new grandson, their fifth grandchild. Michael was born 8 December 1983 to their daughter, Margaret Mason, who lives in Virginia. The young family visited them when the baby was only two weeks old.

Dorothy Hunt Bassett writes that she didn't have any particular news but admits she does keep busy with meetings and social events. She was able to get away from the extreme weather this last winter to visit her sister-in-law in Florida.

Helen Richardson Coughlin states that with respect to marriage, the quotation "Grow old along with me" is a wonderful philosophy even though it doesn't always happen. Unfortunately, Helen lost her husband in June 1982. Our heartfelt sympathy, Helen. She does keep busy with a large house and garden in Wenham, Mass. She feels blessed with kind family and friends who have helped her cope. She is gradually getting back to her painting and music to which she is deeply attached. She has lost two brothers within the last three years, both of whom were Phillips Academy graduates. The oldest, Benjamin, passed away in November 1983 at the age of 88.

New associations are occurring for Elizabeth Sharp de Sieyes, as she is enjoying new friendships with members of the Soviet Mission to the U.N.

Because of an incredible mental typo I put the due date for class notes on my calendar two weeks late, an error I discovered when I was preparing to send out cards to everyone about two days before they were due back. By the time you read this you will have received them, and I hope that sometime during the summer you will record your activities and return them to me by 10 September — please don't let them get buried.

There is one letter to report: Miye Hirooka says she has returned to her maiden name, which makes it easy for us (her husband died last year). She says she is semi-retired but still goes to the office regularly and manages an apartment building. Her address is: 3-3, 3 Chome Aobodai, Meguro-Ku, Tokyo, Japan F04799 and I'm sure she would welcome letters from those who knew her way back then.

The last week of April I had a delightful visit with Dorothy Rockwell Clark in Washington. We did almost no sightseeing, although I did wave to Winston Churchill each time we drove up Connecticut Avenue. We did, however, explore Georgetown and Alexandria briefly, and we also took an overnight into the Pennsylvania Dutch country where I have an elderly friend. At 92 she still runs her independent telephone company which serves five towns around Ephrata, wears 3" spike heels and complains that there is nothing to do on weekends.

Dorothy is now really retired but has plunged into the Treasurer's job on the board of the apartment complex where she lives — the Mighty Westchester. One evening we went to dinner at her favorite Chinese restaurant and to my astonishment discovered that our waitress and her brother come from the city where I was born and raised — they left there only four years ago — and knew all about our campus and hospital.

To those of you who may have felt that our last column was a bit out of season, we must humbly confess — we missed the deadline (woe!) for the Fall issue of the Bulletin, and the editors very kindly saved our last effort for spring. (Meanwhile to our everlasting chagrin, our space was empty in the fall.) For our grievous omission we have been sentenced to wear our green eyeshade backward for the next year — which we do in a state of near-terminal mortification. We promise, never again!

The Class of '34 on the step of Bulfinch

Meanwhile, however, PA '33 has been scurrying hither and yon, and salt in our wounds, some have even paused in mid-scurry to drop us a note about it.

Murray Sanders has completed his assignment at the Management Office of The Grace Commission (with support from Andy McWilliams PA '66), after serving a year-and-a-half as Communications Officer. Although the report is now public, Murray notes that much of the implementation lies ahead. One fervently hopes for said implementation. In the meantime we are sure Martin Marietta has welcomed Murray back to his post with joyous shouts.

Ham Wilcox still winters in Mira Loma, CA, returning for summers in Levittown, PA. Ham sounds like the mainstay of several bowling leagues in southern California in the winter, while summer finds him supporting his "Phillies" who can use all the support they can get this season (That ought to draw a letter in time for our next column!). Phillies or no, Ham's note ended with a heart-warming anticipation of our Fifty-Fifth.

It remains to be seen what affect President's Reagan's trip to China will have, but we feel most comfortable about Sino-PA '33 relations. Hugh Samson writes of a coming trip to China (in early April). We look forward to details on his return. Wonder if he got a contribution from Deng Xiaoping toward PA '33's Alumni Fund gift for 1984?

We must correct some information in one of our earlier columns about Harvey Le Bow, in which we placed him with Mainstream magazine in San Diego. Harvey writes to say that he is now a marketing consultant with the C.W. Singleton Co. of Los Angeles. Harvey still lives in San Diego, however. We apologize for our sloppy reporting and accept our punishment of thirty lashes with a wet noodle.

Steve Smith and Shirley celebrated his retirement last July with a trip to England and Scotland. No word on Steve's planned activities, although we can guess at some of them. Steve reports the arrival of their first grandchild, a son, born to their daughter in April. We also note with warmth a reference to our Fifty-Fifth in 1988.

We see Dave Haviland frequently, still a walking advertisement of the joys of retirement. Dave reported gleefully at our last meeting that his grandson, Dwayne Hutchins, has just been admitted to PA for the coming fall. By our calculations, Dwayne will graduate — how did you guess? — in June 1988!

We regret once more having to report the passing of two classmates: Robert M. Cooke, who died 17 December 1981. He is survived by his wife, Codie, who lives at 3780 Old Pali Road, Honolulu, HI 96817.

Breard Snellings. Breezy died 19 October after a long battle with A.L.S. (Lou Gehrig's Disease). We had not seen him since PA, but we have always remembered his enthusiasm. He is survived by his wife, Emilie, and five children. Mrs. Snellings lives at 1647 Dufossat St., New Orleans, LA 70115.

On behalf of the class of 1933 we extend our sympathy to the families of both of these classmates.

Reunion Notes: What to say about a 50th reunion? The less the better? No, surely the more the better. Anyhow, I'll only have to do it once. Those present, in addition to ten ladies of the Abbot Class of 1934, who brought charm, elegance, and beauty to the festive occasion, and in addition to the beguiling wives of our lucky classmates, were Badger, Banzhaff, Belcher, Bill Brown, Chamberlin, Cleveland, Cushman, Warren Davis, Bill Davis, Durant, Faithorn, Foreman, Fox, Dave Gordon, Hadley, Harding, Barbara Hartman, widow of Garland Patten, Hay, Horner, Johnson, Johnston, Keeney, King, Dave Knapp, Latham, Lowe, Martin, Marvin, McDuff, McMahon, Middlebrook, Bill Miller, Mitchell, Munroe, Off, Peterson, Phillips, Platt, Ed Porter, Ross Porter, Powell, Powelson, Sanders, Sargent, Seymour, Shean, Paul Shirley, Sides, Simpson, Snell, Smith, Joe Stevens, Stewart, Laura and Gordon Thompson, children of Dave Thompson, Thatcher, Urick, Vincent, Wallace, Weis, West, Whipple, White, Woolsey — a grand total of 65, which, though we haven't yet received confirmation from the Alumni Office, we confidently expect it is an all-time record-breaking number of 50th reunion participants. Combined with Abbot's ten, the Class of 1934 won the 1891 Memorial Trophy silver bowl for the greatest percentage of participants among all classes this year. All this in spite of the fact that last minute hospitalizations kept away Tom Campion and Buzz Knowlton, who had fully expected to be there and were most sadly missed.

It also appears that the Class of 1934 broke every other all-time record there was to break: the greatest ever percentage of 50th reunion participants, the largest 50th reunion gift, still growing, but at last count, $166,000, and the greatest percentage of donors to the Alumni Fund, i.e. class gift, in the 50th reunion year. If I've forgotten any records out there, you can be reasonably sure we smashed them too.

I suppose it's possible that I'm overemphasizing the statistical side of the reunion, but I cannot contain my pleasure at the astonishing amount of time, effort, and thought put so effectively into the reunion by our Steering Committee members: Fran Belcher, Tom Campion, Bill Harding, Fred Peterson, Bob Sides and John Woolsey. It's impossible to single out any one of them for special honors, but I can't help mentioning the all-out effective campaigning of Tom Campion, Class Agent, and Bill Harding, Class President, in raising that incredibly large class reunion gift. But enough of these sordid details. No doubt both those of you who did not attend, and more than a few of those who did, would like to know what happened.

At the Friday night get-together at reunion headquarters, after Thor Martin had raffled off a week's cruise in the Caribbean on his 40-foot ketch with the enthusiastic help of Laura and Gordon Thompson (somebody from the class of 1964 won it!), we elected the following slate of officers: President, Bill Harding; Class Agent, Tom Campion; Assistant Class Agents, Rocky Keeney, Howie Johnson, Bob Sides, John Woolsey, Soapy Chamberlin, Bill Ulrich, Ed Seymour, John Mitchell and Vic Hugo. Class Secretary and Reunion Chairman, Fred Peterson; and to serve with the above as members without portfolio on the Class Council, Dave Sargent, Dick Powell, and Sig Weis.

Well, it was quite a party, unquestionably the greatest reunion spectacle of all time held in the hottest weather ever — over 96° each of the three days! Nevertheless, the seminars Saturday afternoon were attended in every instance by crowds that exceeded capacity. Particularly terrific was the one on foreign affairs, organized and staffed by the Class of 1934, moderated by Headmaster Don McNemar and assisted by three Upper Middlers who served as 1934 reunion aides, Kate Flather, Tom Murtagh, and Jason Reeder. The principal speakers were Harlan Cleveland and Paul White. In the evening 130 of us sat down to a formal dinner preceded and followed by the music of Hart Leavitt's band, with Josh Miner, Dean of Admissions; Patty and Mary Minard, widow and daughter of our old history teacher Ken Minard; Jane Sullivan, former Abbot Alumni Secretary; and Headmaster Don McNemar. Bill Harding, Barbara Hartman, Bill Platt, Bill Brown, and Ruth Stott Peters, Abbot Reunion Chairman, spoke with fire, magic, and enchantment. Soapy and Ann Chamberlin celebrated with all of us their fourth wedding anniversary. Dinner was followed by dancing, of course, but the grand feature of Saturday night was the remarkable and remarkably moving recitation from memory in the original Greek, by Steve Powelson, of the 169 lines of Homer's Iliad describing the final parting of Hector and Andromache. Steve dedicated his recitation to his two greatest teachers, Zeus Benner and Dirk van der Stucken.

The following morning we repaired to the lovely home of Kate and Bob Sides, on the rocks and on the sea at Marblehead, a party and setting of never-to-be forgotten splendor. Harding, Foreman and Sides, took on all comers on the tennis court, many of whom like the Sargents and the Thachers, made formidable opponents. No one wanted to leave, and probably some classmates are still there. Let's all be back in 1989!

The saddest and most serious moment was the Alumni Memorial Service in the Chapel Saturday morning before the grand parade up the Elm Arch. Here is the prayer that was offered with our own departed friends especially in mind: "Dear Lord, hear our prayer. We accept, as we must, the bitter loss of the companions of our youth: classmates, friends, husbands, wives, students, teachers. We give thee thanks for the joys they brought us, but we cannot forget. The poet well expresses our feelings:

With rue my heart is laden for golden friends I had,
For many a rose-lipt maiden And many a lightfoot lad.

By brooks too broad for leaping The lightfoot boys are laid;
The rose-lipt girls are sleeping In fields where roses fade."

— A. E. Housman

I write on May 8; it's hard not to talk about the 50th reunion — which by the time you read this will be a happy if somewhat faded memory — but I won't.

Trev Cushman writes: "Being late is not one of my strong suits, but am able to blame it all on Soapy and Anne Chamberlin whom Joss and I chaperoned around Mexico just recently for some 16 days (and nights!). Juarez, Chihuahua, Los Mochis, Mezatlan, Guadalajara, Guanajuato, San Miguel Allende, Queretaro, Pascuala, Taxco, and Mexico City. We did arrive back in Tucson safely and wrinkled on the 16th of April."

Seeing what Tom Campion has accomplished in raising 1934's 50 reunion gift, Bob Adamson writes wistfully and with a modest degree of well-earned pride: "Can you loan Tom Campion to me after June for raising funds for my College at Sixty Program, Fordham at Lincoln Center? We are about the most profitable division at Fordham now, I suspect (since seniors over 60 who can do college level work also are relatively affluent, and we charge tuition), but Tom could make us the envy of all college eyes. Anyway, I have no sons for Andover, but great memories of one year there, and in addition to contributing to Fordham, I am obligated to Harvard College and the graduate schools I attended, Harvard Divinity School, Union Theological Seminary, and Columbia (Ph.D.) and my wife's college, Smith. Thus, note what Tom has done — not 50 perhaps, but 25 times of all college eyes. Please release him in June."

A number of things went wrong during the organizing stage of the 50th. Bill Torrey lost his name to an interloper named Ed. Paul Shirley had a legitimate beef, as the contents of his postcard reveal: "Dear Fred: Let's get and keep the record straight! Some time ago I sent you my $25 check and hat sizes. You wrote to thank me but said you did not have the hat sizes. I sent you the hat sizes and now you thank me for that but say you did not get a check? Did you use the word 'heckle'?"

Ruth Gibson, widow of Bob Gibson, phoned just before the reunion to say that she is well, and traveling: Greece, Alaska, Spain, Egypt and China — two trips a year since 1978. Their daughter Diana, now a Ph.D., is married to a Bryn Mawr professor of Spanish. Sam Gibson is about to take his M.B.A. at B.U. Barbara Hartman, widow of Garland Patteson, and the mother of four children, stepmother of three more, and a grandmother three times over, resides happily but busily in West Newton. She has been Massachusetts Mother of the Year, director of public relations for the Joslin Diabetes Foundation, church-school teacher, member of the church Altar Guild, den mother, and PTA activist. Barbara says, "There are no problems, just challenges."

John Foreman has reached semi-retirement "after 44 years in the manufacturing of men's custom tailored clothing. Sold the business in 1975 and moved from Chicago to Cincinnati to work for the new owners for seven years. Built a racquet ball and fitness club in Cincinnati before we moved to Florida in 1982. We still have a retail men's custom tailoring store in Chicago, so between the store and club we keep somewhat occupied. Took up tennis seriously in 1982 and finally made the first 10, ranking #9 in the 56's nationally."

Charles Dawson is now in Djakarta, Indonesia, and because of that had to miss the 50th: "SRI International — yes, I'm still at it almost full time. Am momentarily expecting a contract to continue some aerial mapping work in Indonesia. My wife and I would go for several months while I introduced the local professionals to our software and got everything running smoothly on the computer end. I was looking forward to seeing the Class of 1934 although time has certainly dimmed my memories of those days. On the other hand, I must admit I will not miss being in some kind of reunion uniform!"

Reunion Notes: It was hot in Andover — all records broken: The weather, the number of those returning in the '34 class, and the amount of the class gift. The Abbot group was divided — Sandy Kinsman Dexter, Ruth Stott Peters, Mary Rockwell Stewart and Nancy Marsh Gares in a dorm, and Kay Damon Reed, Sally O'Reilly Loria, Molly Savage Van Stone, Ada (Sandy) Carlson Prescott at the Andover Rolling Green. We managed to stay together with the exception of Friday night when Sandy, Molly and Kay went to the hotel to straighten out a room problem and the rest of us went to Friendly's for dessert after a delicious chicken barbecue in Flaggstaff Court. Kay wouldn't let go of her "peeve" that she had been left out when we had had those big ice cream cones until the next day when her former roommate and your secretary treated her to the biggest dish of pistachio ice cream with chocolate sauce and whipped cream.

First event Friday evening was the garden cocktail party for '34ers at Headmaster Don McNemar's house. We were greeted by blue and white (Abbot blue) balloons and the personable headmaster himself on the front steps.

Later that evening our small group had a chance to share and catch up at Morton House. The downstairs rooms are furnished with some lovely old pieces from Abbot. A dormitory is upstairs. On the way we stopped at Abbot and drove around the circle and saw the state of deterioration of Draper and McKean. Certainly, these buildings have no future, but we all agreed that Abbot Hall should be placed in the hands of the National Trust. A letter-writing effort should be made to the Board of Trustees of Phillips. Saturday morning we Abbot girls led off the traditional parade following the Lawrence bag-pipers. We wore an extra badge, saying "Abbot '34" to distinguish us from the PA wives who had the same hats and tote bags. The badges were provided by our PA helpers — gofers, aides — what can we call those three terrific young people from the class of '85, Tom Murtaugh, Kathie Flather, and Jason Reeder, who were always at our sides, helping in so many ways? We all wanted to take them home. If they are typical of Andover of today the school is in great shape.

At the Alumni Council meeting, Miriam Ganem Reeder '57, who is Jason's mother and co-chairman of the Alumni Fund, announced the super contribution of over $165,000 and the new president of the Alumni Council, Cynthia Eaton Bing '61, was introduced. For lunch afterwards we found a shady spot under trees where we were joined by Peggy Morrill Wilkins and her husband. We had the pleasure, too, of seeing Damon Reed, Kay's daughter, and Kay's sister Pat, who was also at reunion with her class.

At one of the afternoon sessions, a symposium on Foreign Policy and how it is being presented to students (represented by our three, Tom, Kathie and Jason), Nancy Marsh Gares was one of the speakers. Nancy and her husband, who has had many years experience in the French foreign service, now make their home in Paris, with a summer base in Nantucket. Such a lot of catching up we did: one of our returnees said she was afraid we wouldn't have anything to talk about. Was she wrong!

Saturday, the '34 class dinner was held in Commons. There was a slight problem when the caterer's truck was in an accident and dinner delayed an hour but Fred Peterson kept things going with introductions aided by the music and the open bar. An impressive report from admissions, 3400 applying and 447 admitted. 76% of them chose Andover. Ruthie spoke for us and she deserves a great big "thank you" for all the advance preparations and her constant attention all during the weekend as does Mary Rockwell Stewart for her fund raising. We were glad to see Jane Sullivan, Patty Minard (Miss Patton to you) and her daughter Mary Minard who now teaches history and coaches crew at Andover. Also two husbands, Molly's Fred and Ruthie's Pete.

Fred had such a good time with Pete, who took him home with him, that he almost did not get back to us Sunday morning as we prepared to go to Marblehead and the beautiful and generous brunch at the home of Bob Sides. Kay's husband, Carroll Reed, came there and we had our last visit together looking out at the water. Again, our new friends, Tom, Kathie and Jason, were on hand to pass food and see that all was well.

We parted with a firm intention not to wait another ten years for an Andover reunion but to keep in touch every few years.

Sandy Dexter took me to the airport but not before Ruth, Molly, Sandy, and I sang "Abbot Beautiful" by the side of the road. We can only hope that the "visions true" in that song are being passed along and not lost in the computer.

With that wish I take my leave as Class Secretary. Sandy (Ada) Carlson Prescott has consented to take it on. Please let her hear from you. Her address is: Mrs. Philip Prescott, 330 Wareham Rd., Marion, MA 02738. Abbot lives in you. We want to hear about you. I thank you all, especially those who wrote the nice long letters before reunion which we all enjoyed at our sharing Friday night. —Sally O'Reilly Loria

[We have learned through the Alumni Office that Mary C. Dake, former gym teacher at Abbot, is now legally blind, and it has been suggested that she would enjoy receiving cards. Her address is: Mary C. Dake, c/o Valley National Bank Trust, P. O. Box 1008, Green Valley, AZ 85621]

In response to the pre-reunion cards, I have some news of classmates. Both Ann Place and Barbara Ritzman Devereaux had planned to join us in Andover but were not able to do so. Ann rented her houses on Cape Cod and took off for Europe and the Orient Express with her daughter. How could we compete with that? Barbara, who has had two Andover sons, Rick '68 and Stephen '65, says Andover has been a great part of her life. She also has a daughter who graduated from Princeton in 1981 and asks, "Do I have the youngest child in the class?" Barbara's plans changed because she and her daughter had just been to Europe and a business trip to New York was coming up. Her daughter is starting Columbia Business School. Son Rick and his wife had a little girl last November, a first grandchild for Barbara and her husband who have lived for 27 years in Ponte Vedra, FL.

Dot Lambert Robinson wrote from Sarasota that her Wheaton reunion will be at the same time as ours. "Can you believe it's been so long? As far as I'm concerned they've been beautiful years. George and I have had 43 years, this summer, together and loved every minute. 'Children' George, Jr., 40, and girls Marilee Ann Fontaine and Bradlee Ellen Troy, 37. Grandchildren, George III, 16, Margot Katherine, 13, Derek Robinson Troy, 8, and James Sutherland Fontaine, born last August, are just great." They go to their cottage in Maine from late April to early November and do a lot of traveling — a cruise on the coast of Norway last July. Dot's father, who would have been 95 in June, died last fall "after a long and lovely life."

From Bermuda comes news of Beverly Sutherland Midgett with a new address — 10 Morgan Hill, Sandys, Bermuda. Reunion was not possible for her because of Elmer's illness. "We have bought a house in Virginia Beach to have a stateside place when we go that way. You'll all have to come see me in Bermuda."

Marion Rogers Wheat has been in and out of hospitals and has had to "resign all her jobs. Didn't know I had so many. What wonderful friends I have, cards galore and all sorts of things done for me."

Sarah Dean Farley, writing from her home in Portland, Oregon, reported that she would be on a South Seas Cruise at reunion time. Her husband, a patent attorney with a Ph.D. in Chemistry, thinks that retiring is just taking time off to travel. They met at Rollins and were married in 1939. "Lived in New Jersey for awhile, then Los Altos, CA for two years so my 'Awful Truth for Seniors' (to end up in California) came true. We arrived in Portland about the end of WW II, and are now confirmed and devoted Oregonians. We think it's the greatest place to be in spite of a lot of rain. We have one daughter and three sons and I'm happy to say they all live within a few minutes drive, nine grandchildren, including twin granddaughters, make for plenty of activity."

Now for the returnees: Mary Rockwell Stewart who has done a super job as our Class Fund Chairman, "Bob and I still live in the same house we have lived in for 30 years in Wellesley Hills. Our two children are married, Ann in 1975 to David Stillman. They and their one year old daughter live in Rowayton, CT, and are expecting another child in August. Paul and his wife, Lora, live in Southern New Hampshire after a four months trip all over the Far East last year. They are expecting a child in September so that will make three grands for us. Bob and I are still active in tennis and have had fun playing in the 130 year [sic] age group. I still play squash in the winter — we are happy and active and grateful that our health is so good. These are really the golden years! If we can't enjoy the 60s then how will we manage the 70s, 80s and 90s?"

"Yes indeed, I'll be there" from Betty Flanders Cleveland. "News? Much baby-sitting this year with three grandchildren under two; one nearly life-size portrait of Wm. Harman III in riding 'pinks' on exhibit at the Copley Gallery in Boston; son Mark finishing his Ph.D. at Columbia U.; and 100 roses in need of attention."

Sandy Kinsman Dexter had more surgery last summer but her "new hip is holding up beautifully. Climbing in and out of a tender on the trip to California and a day cruise of Anacapa Island, gave it a real test. A scramble over the volcanic rock to the south shore was achieved with a great feeling of satisfaction."

Another Sandy and another successful hip operation. Sandy (Ada) Carlson Prescott had a total hip replacement in 1982. "Best thing I ever did, but it took me a year to get back to normal." Her husband died in 1940 and she retired three years ago. "Sold my home and moved into a small apartment in Marion. All this at the same time was really too much, should have spaced it a bit." Last November her daughter Nancy Ann was married, the same day as her best friend. They were honor attendants for each other in separate ceremonies held an hour apart in two churches. Then a joint reception. The logistics of this must have been something, but Sandy says it was great. "Now all of my four are married and doing their own thing." This year, in January, her mother died at the age of 93. "She had been in the nursing home for the past 1 1/2 years so I have really been tied down. Sold her home last June so have been up to my ears in disposing of two lifetimes of possessions. Now I am on my own although I am pretty much involved in local organizations, all volunteer." And your Secretary persuaded Sandy to take over her duties after reunion. Always ask a busy person.

Molly Savage Van Stone and husband, Fred, stopped in Vero Beach to see me and make preliminary reunion plans. She had had lunch with Kay Damon Reed. They are both "West Coasters." The Van Stones spend the winter in St. Petersburg and the summer in Maine. The Reeds winter in Boca Grande and return to North Conway for the summer. Kay's daughter Steffi, Mrs. James Markham, is married to a New York Times correspondent and has lived in many of the exciting and sometimes trouble-spots of the world. Kay makes a trip almost every spring to see them. This year it was West Germany. Kay is playing a lot of golf and feeling better than a year or so ago.

The only report I have from Ruth Stott Peters is that she is a busy lady, and bless her heart, the chairman of this reunion. My latest word from her was that she had a nice chat with my brother Frank (PA '32) at a Yale dinner held in Washington recently. Andover does keep us together in many ways.

My life here in Vero Beach is pleasant, but with a daughter in Pennsylvania and one in Colorado my traveling has come down to visits with them. Spent Easter in Denver with Ann and will be in State College with Francesca and her girls, Sarah, 14, and Elizabeth, 11, in June. Then back to the West in August and September to miss the hurricanes and see something of that part of the country. I had a chance to say "hello" to two Abbot girls at a Smith luncheon in Stuart — Ruth Tyler Smith and Helen Allen Anderson of the class of '32, both of whom spend the winter in Vero.

Our fine Class Agent, Stew Leonard, sent out postcards with his letters asking about your intentions to attend our 50th Reunion 7-9 June 1985. So far I have received 24 affirmative replies. Among them are Bird, Burdick, Cochran, Cross, Cushman, Davis, Dickey, Donnelly, Estes, Francis, Griffin, Henry, Kellogg, Leonard, McGown, Mullin, Minde, Perry, Reed, Toohey, Twombly, Vines, Ward, and Woodbridge. Almost all promise to bring their wives. A good initial response. We know of a number of others who are planning to come but are not listed above. Also by now you will have received a letter from Norm Cross, our Attendance Chairman, urging you to set aside those dates and come.

A short note from Charlie Rockwell says he's had a busy year. In addition to son Charlie '67 and son Steven '72, he has picked up a PA '64 son-in-law, Dr. John Gage. Son Steven was married in April '83 and son Charlie has had a daughter.

Ord Preston writes on a recent postcard from the Far East — Penang to be exact — that he and Midge are visiting English friends there, and will return home soon to California via Japan. Ord promises more news at a later date.

Monk Roosevelt has succeeded the famous Mary G. Roebling as Chairman of the National State Bank of Elizabeth, one of the largest independent banks in New Jersey. Monk was first named President of the National State Bank in 1950 at the age of 32. Wow!

We haven't had any news of Bob Sears for many years. You will recall that Bob was captain of our football team and many times VP of our class. I have just an iota of information. At the end of 1983 Bob retired from the Neurological Institute of Central Georgia at Macon and "is off sailing somewhere" per his secretary. His plans are to sail to Maine this summer. Down Mainers, be on the alert!

Norm Cross reports to me that Bud Higbie is again wintering in North Palm Beach from early January through April, and is always ready for a golf game with a classmate.

I have been favored with a rather comprehensive letter from Colburn Coe which I shall try to condense. Coco is President of Coe and Payne Co., Atlanta, GA, which does construction work. He is past President of Georgia Branch, American Sub Contractors, and Atlanta Builders Exchange. He has a wife, Nancy, and a son and a daughter as well as two grandchildren. His hobbies are a daily tennis game and skiing in North Carolina or in the Western Rockies. He has lived in Atlanta since WW II except for one year spent in Leominster, MA. He does plan to be at our 50th. During the war he lost all his personal possessions including his Andover memorabilia and addresses of his classmates. Maybe that's why you haven't heard from him, classmates.

We have received a great letter from George Hook, which I shall repeat verbatim. "Your note finally caught up with me here in Naples, FL as we are sort of 'nomads.' When I retired from Armco several years ago, my wife and I didn't want to leave our farm in Normandy which I restored some 25 years ago. At the same time we were not particularly overjoyed with the thought of double taxation, so we now have to be out of France for more than six months of the year. As a result we left Normandy 1 November and have been living out of a suitcase for the past 2½ months. In April we shall return to France.

"I'll have to admit it would be great to see Andover again. Believe it or not, I haven't been back since we graduated a thousand years ago. I did see Emory Bassford once in a while when he was living and teaching in Rome."

For classmates who have been searching for an address of Hook, here is one of his two French addresses: 9 Rue d'Artois, 75008, Paris, France, 723,97,93.

We are sad to report the passing of Al Adams on 19 February. What an interesting and varied career he had. After Yale Al became a newspaper man; then a FBI agent in WW II; then a banker first with the Mellon Bank and then with Bankers Trust. He left Bankers in 1963 to devote full time to writing and to conserving the environment. He was President of the Nature Conservancy in Washington, DC from 1960-62. His literary output included nine books on natural history, conservation, and the history of the American Southwest. Adams is survived by two sons, a daughter, and his second wife, Jean. Memorial contributions may be sent to the Lucy D. S. Adams (his first wife) Memorial Fund, Box 322, Green Farms, CT 06436.

A few more cards arrived after the Bulletin notes had been mailed in January. To date 25 classmates have indicated that they expect to return for reunion in June '85. I would say that is a good start.

Jane Dawes McClennan writes that retirement means that she and John have been able to take some trips or just plain leave the snow. All their nine grandchildren (7 boys, 2 girls) now live in Massachusetts. Their get-a-way place in summer is on an island in Maine.

Eliese Strahl Cutler wrote she had no news, just getting older, then added, "Did have a marvelous trip around the world via Trans-Siberian Railway at the time of the Korean plane incident. All went quite well, no adventures." That's news!

Joining the ranks of grandmothers is Claire Oppenheim Marum who announced the arrival of her first grandchild, Maria Marum, now two years old. son Andrew (father of the child) has just given birth to his first book, 20th Century Fads & Foibles. Date for being on the shelves was April. Her daughter Deborah (Abbot '69) is to graduate from med school in May and plans to intern in Philadelphia where she and her husband live. As Claire's husband is only semi-retired, their time is divided between Manhattan and Brewster, MA.

Having returned from "rainy" traveling to Martinsville, VA for a few days to babysit for our grandchildren, Wes and I gathered strength the next night (8 May) to attend the Phillips Academy dinner in Hartford, CT put on by none other than Charlie Miller, our PA Reunion Chairman. The evening was well worth the rainy trip up and back. It was especially rewarding to see and chat with Ellen Rivinius Hill and her husband. In the absence of Donald McNemar, PA's headmaster, who was incapacitated with a back problem, Britta, his wife, spoke to us filling us in on many aspect of Phillips today. She is a dynamic speaker. Hope you may have an opportunity to hear her.

Frannie McTernan Coan and Pres visited us recently. Reviewing the 1935 yearbook Frannie laughed at her remarks in my book. Hadn't the slightest idea to what she was referring. I suggest you get yours out and have a laugh or two conjuring up some memories.

"Denny" Coursen continues to work for Coursen & Company, consultants on government affairs, in Washington. "I see Wes Oler regularly, socially and medically. Had three grandsons in a row." He then adds a nice touch, "Thoroughly approve of work of classmate Mel Chapin as Trustee Chairman." As they say, let's hear it for Mel!

Should you need any visual proof of this fine work, look at a copy of Andover: The Face of Phillips Academy. It is a magnificent photographic tour of Andover Hill. If you want to take a good walk down memory lane, this book is published by the Ipswich Press, Ipswich, MA 01938, and is available through the Academy. You'll thank your secretary for telling you about it.

Jim Robjent, just retired from Scott Paper Company, Waterville, ME where he had been purchasing manager for many years, writes "We have weathered the winter while catching up on all those things that seem to get postponed, and are now looking forward to some traveling."

Your correspondent played bridge recently with Jerry Bradford and spouses (respected and respectively). Jerry and Bev, moving from Bermuda, now live in Old Lyme, CT which is very, very nice.

A "catch-up" note from David Schulte is a fine example of NON SIBI (Not for One's Self). He has been active in numerous civic and philanthropic endeavors which can only be partially illustrated with these three examples: Served on the New York City Board of Correction since 1960; addressed the senior members of the Israeli Government on United States-Israel relations; Member of the Board of Directors of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. And one more which appears to go beyond NON SIBI, he is a permanent panelist on the nationally syndicated Barry Farber radio talk show. This public service participation is from midnight to 3:00 a.m. several times a week.

Bill Mennel — "Retired over ten years ago to Escondido, CA from INA (now CIGNA). Do tax consulting part-time in season to keep my hand in and earn some golf and bowling fees and support a little handicapping at Del Mar Race Track. Seem to be a perennial church treasurer and vestry man. California living is surely a long way from the discipline of Mr. James and Mr. French, but I am still thankful for the experience; they did indeed prepare us for reality. If anyone wanders out this way, be sure to call."

From Tampa we hear from John Mullen as follows; "Haven't been back to PA since our 40th. Looking forward to the 50th in '86. Still plugging away — 28 years now as the Purveyor of Pious Paraphernalia (Mullen's religious supplies that is). Not too many class of '36 folks around here, but we'd be glad to have a visit from any who come by. (That's the second offer you guys have had — what other column offers such values?)

Good to have notes from a few of you. Lucy Hawkes Winship writes that Steve retired last year, but keeps busy writing historical pieces for the Concord (NH) Monitor. The Winships are traveling a lot so that they can play tennis year round and ski "here and there" in the winter.

Other travelers include Jack and Betty Sargent Crandell who had a wonderful trip to France last fall. Phyllis Fisher Tobey and Ed divide their time between Vermont and Florida, and Frances Mahoney Stewart writes that she and her husband have sold their house in Connecticut and moved to North Carolina where they are now settled "on the 5th fairway at Carolina Shores Golf Club."

I surprised myself this winter by traveling via Amtrak to Arizona to visit our younger daughter in Phoenix and college friends in Tucson. A wonderful trip.

Do let me hear from more of you before the next Bulletin deadline.

Your 50th Reunion Gifts Committee (Fran Dowd AA '37, Jacobs, Quinby, Ware, and Rounds including spouses Ann, Connie, Jane, and Winnie-Lou respectively, met at the Inn one January Monday for a luncheon meeting with Secretary of the Academy Joe Mesics '53 and Director of Annual Giving Connie Le Maitre '53 who reported on the status of our 50th Reunion account. A tentative and arbitrary goal of $100,000 was set several years ago. As of 31 January 1984 our total cash received equals one-third this amount and pledges also one third. It is a magnificent start on our 50th Reunion Gift effort but much remains to be done in the next three years. Now is the time to pledge if you have not already done so, and honor your pledges made so that income earned will be added to principal and we'll have reached our goal without scrambling feverishly and painfully at the last moment.

Class Agent Ware has unveiled his CO-AGENT NETWORK. As of 9 February class lists have been sent out to all who agreed to serve as Class Co-Agents: Kim Loring, Jim Marsh, Phinney Baxter, Ed Macomber, Pat Deming, Paul Grinberg, Gordon Brown, Ed Chapman, Jack MacDonald, Wally Liverance and Joe Machell. Congratulations and thanks to these classmates and to Ware who deserves some help after seven years carrying the ball alone.

Wayne Anderson writes of his children from Tanzania while camping in the Serengeti National Park: "Sandy has started her own business in LA. Pete is an underwriter in Chicago. Reb is tenured at Duke Medical." He muses: "How can anyone retire in 'Taxachusetts?' " — a good question some of us in the Bay State have been asking ourselves lately.

Winnie-Lou and I managed a mini-reunion of sorts one night last February. To dinner came Gusta and Gus Thorndike, the Wares, and Budge Bump. Given such provocative Phillipians as Gus and Budge you can imagine it was a lively evening replete with animated if not heated discussion of old PA, past present and future. Budge lost his Frannie (nee Kelley) suddenly 21 November 1983. Fran and I attended the same grade school in Winchester. Fran later attended more than one Andover prom. Our heartfelt sympathies go out to Budge who lives on Dutch Hill Road in Duxbury, MA 02332.

Also received from Bill Quinby news of Doug McAvity's death on 1 March at his home on Buckfield Road, Greenwich after a long bout with cancer. Doug and Bill as Senior Preps roomed together in Van der Stucken's entry of Paul Revere Hall and again at Princeton and later married sisters and both lived in Greenwich.

All of us in the Class extend our deepest sympathy to Peggy, sons Malcolm (PA '69) and Jim (PA '70), daughter Priscilla, and Doug's brother John.

One of the sad but still nice side lines of being class secretary is the occasional communication from the widows of classmates. I had both a call and letter from Dexter Richards wife, Anne, with a clipping from what appears to be a news organ of an organization at Lake Sunapee, Dex's home for so many years. It describes the work Dex did in conserving the Sunapee area; a bit of biography — sailing, owning an Inn, the restoration of a lighthouse, a real estate development, investments, banking interests, and more. It told of his dislike of waste and upon clearing some land, he advertised for sale, a used privy!

Bill Lynch, an oil exploration consultant, in Graton, CA writes of being a West Coast Andover alumni representative; enjoying children and grandchildren; heading for a Fossil Fuels conference in Geneva in June (think of the potential for wretched puns); and back to CA to raise apples. He wanted — and got — Fred Kent's address, which I forgot to tell Fred when I saw him at an Andover dinner in Hartford, 8 May. The dinner, by the way, was to introduce Headmaster Don McNemar, his wife, Britta, the Mesics, McKees and Regans, all of the administration/staff. Our disappointment at Don's absence with a pulled muscle was outweighed by Britta's lively and fascinating description of the School, her reactions to and involvement in it, and their aims. She made a host of new friends and admirers as did the rest of our PA staff guests.

Endecott Osgood, whom, unhappily, I have not seen since 1938, writes of retirement three years ago from Mobil after 35 years service with that firm. He is involved with church work, golf, and travel "we never seem to have time for." Their two sons are in electronics and law. Ozzie lives in Brookfield, WI. Similarly, I've not seen, but have heard from Beverley Thompson, a retiree from chairmanship of Texas Steel Co., Ft. Worth, TX, now managing a foundation, Texas Educational Association. He was widowed in April, 1982, for which we send our belated condolences, Bev. I'll start now to urge their return in 1988, to our — yes! — 50th.

Harry Adriance, who easily qualifies as one of my best correspondents, was doing a travel show in Pittsfield and drove past the late Church Davis's place. This and a recent night at the Andover Inn, and a drive past Draper Cottage, Bancroft and Foxcroft Halls, all left Harry with a flood of memories. I spent my lower year in Draper, rooming with George Partridge, but I'm afraid I remember it as a distant, dismal, dingy and dwarfed by the neighboring power house. (I do like alliteration.)

The longest letter came from the Rev. Dick Rising, who moved in 1983 from Dolores, CO to 1391 Avenida Sebastiani, Sonoma, CA 95476. Colorado was great, apparently, except for remoteness and snow shoveling. Sonoma's history was laid out for me. It is 37 miles north of San Francisco, and the Risings keep a sailboat on San Pablo Bay. He is one of our four retired priests who celebrate the Eucharist in the adjacent Episcopal Church once a month. His physical life is very active and enjoyable. He asks for news of Theo Hagedorn. I have none, but if Theo reads this, armed now with Dick's address, please write him (and send me a copy).

Reunion Notes: The 45th Reunion was a great success, full of warmth (and I am not referring to the 100 degree temperature), humor, and the spirit of friendship. Let's not hear any more nonsense about advancing age. When we lined up by class for the Saturday march from the Addison Gallery to the gym to hear Headmaster McNemar's splendid state of the school address, the number of reunioners ahead of us was greater than those behind. By that yardstick, we are just approaching middle age.

The loyal attendees included Pete Anderson, Ollie Barres, Sid Breese, Eli and Annie Clark, Dick Conant, Oz Day, Tom Flournoy, Bob and Diana Hearne, Bo and Jane Hinman, Bish and Betty Hobson, Marsh and Jacquie Kates, Tom and Janet Kelly, Jim Kittredge, Al and Pearl Levine, Charlie Liddell, Hank Loeb, Hap Mason, Paul and Norma Murray, Junie O'Brien, George and Gert Oliva, Joe Padon, Bill Pugh, Barney and Cherry Rafferty, Pete and Barbara Strauss, Hank Terrie, Jack and Sally Walsh, and Holt and Kate Webster, plus a most welcome contingent of Abbot contemporaries (see Barbara Bellows Kaiser's notes).

Smooth operations like this don't just happen. We were the beneficiaries of the superb planning and execution of Marsh Kates and Bob Hearne. The lead event was the elegant class dinner at the Lanam Club, which was graced by the presence of Frank and Dine DiClemente, Ted and Marge Harrison, and Steven Whitney. Steve spoke for our guest and gave a delightfully witty talk, reminiscing about the old days.

Jim Kittredge, who will replace Bish Hobson as Class Agent, will be calling on eight or ten of you to lend a hand as co-agents with the annual fund drive. Please respond affirmatively. Marsh Kates and Junie O'Brien will co-chair the 50th reunion committee, and, because no one else volunteered, I will continue as secretary.

Bish did a fine job in his five-year term, but, despite popular demand that he continue, asked to be relieved. He leaves office with our gratitude. It was announced at the Headmaster's meeting that we had raised $44,000 as of 9 June — hopefully it will be more as of 1 July when the annual drive closes. This amount looks good from just about every perspective, until compared with 1938's gift last year over $70,000. We still have a way to go and will need plenty of solid organization before we overtake them at the 50th.

I am grateful to Holt Webster for collecting an abundance of class news — so much in fact that I will have to run it in installments over several issues of the Bulletin. For starters:

Sid Breese is just completing a 5-year appointment at the University of Virginia, and he and Elaine will return to their home in Southold, NY, out where the Sound and Atlantic join. Oz Day, whose sail across the Atlantic was aborted by storms, thus washing him up on our shores, is looking great and reports that wife Tess and their four daughters are all well. Tom Flournoy, the consummate Manhattanite, has moved his office from the city to downtown Perth Amboy. He didn't elaborate as to whether this is progress, but noted that he was near Kearney Street, which must be a classy neighborhood because it's named after one of Oz Day's ancestors.

Bob Hearne retired in May from his position as Assistant Counsel in the Defense Legal Services Agency in Washington and has returned home to Dedham, MA. Bish Hobson is now the senior-most partner in his Cincinnati law firm, one of those positions of honor that brings with it a load of administrative responsibilities. He and Betty are taking their family, and there are lots of them, to Ireland for the month of August.

Tom Kelly retired from the steel business in June 1982; he and Janet divide their time between Chicago and Santa Barbara, keeping fit with golf, tennis, fishing, swimming, travel, and getting together with old friends. Someone suggested that Marsh Kates come out of retirement and put his extensive experience to work as a consultant for prep school and college reunions. His plans at the moment, however, seem to be giving top priority to a trip to Greece which he and Jacquie are planning for August. Al Levine reports that he was born in Lowell and still lives there, running the family business along with his brother and 83-year old father. As befits a respected citizen of the community, Al serves on a number of boards, including the St. John's Hospital and the Lowell Savings Bank. He and Pearl, his wife of 42 years, both look so youthful, it looks as if they were married in grade school. They have two children, a daughter-attorney and a son-psychiatrist, and one grandchild.

Charlie Liddell has had a distinguished career in social work, including service in settlement houses, as a public welfare administrator, and currently as Executive Director of the Boston Travelers Aid Society. He is planning retirement in September and a move to Tampa to be near a first grandchild. Hank Loeb has lost none of his political touch as he demonstrated at the class meeting by promoting a shadow candidate (I use the term loosely to describe Bill Pugh, who was out playing golf with Terrie and Walsh) to high office with duties yet to be defined. Hank and his wife, whom he describes as "the same lucky girl I married 33-years ago" (she was not present to rebut), have three children and are expecting a first grandchild.

We all enjoyed seeing two classmates who have not been back in many years, Paul Murray and Adrian (Joe) Padon. Paul, who recently retired after 33 years with the U.S. Corps of Engineers, lives with his wife, Norma, in Winsted, CT. The Murrys have a married daughter and a son, who recently graduated from Syracuse. Joe is a geologist in oil and gas operations, a widower with four children, and traveled from his home in Buffalo, Wyoming, to attend reunion.

Letters and calls, expressing regret at missing the reunion, were noted at the class dinner from Harry Anderson, Dick Besse, John Blum, Frank Campion, Jim Grinnell, Ernie Holthausen (the class joins me in sending love and best wishes to Sallie); John Kebabian, Joe Phelan (via Kates), John Reid, Tom Whalen, and Art Williams. Most all of the above pledge attendance at the 50th. The prize for the best reason for non attendance goes to Jim Grinnell, who was in Edinburgh attending the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Royal Navy Fleet Air Arm Nightfighter Squadron in which he served as a pilot during the war.

I owe a most sincere apology to Dick Mintz and his wife for two errors that I made in this column in the 1983 Summer Bulletin. Dick's wife's name is Evvajaan, and it is his father's name that is first on the law firm's masthead, not Dick's, although he is now one of the most senior partners.

I received from Neil Campbell last September, just a few days after the Bulletin's deadline, the following tribute to Robert E. Christie III:
